13.206 Where the occupier is evicted as a result of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, the reason for the bringing of the proceedings will have been the occupier’s accrued arrears under the mortgage, and the local housing authority will be entitled to consider the reasons for those arrears and for the decision to take out the mortgage in the first place¹.

Leaving accommodation because of violence or abuse

Violence or abuse

13.207 As a matter of law, if the local housing authority finds that it is probable that, if the applicant had continued to occupy his or her accommodation, he or she or a member of his or her household would have been subject to violence (England) or abuse (Wales), the accommodation cannot have been reasonable for the applicant and members of his or her household to continue to occupy¹. The applicant was already ‘homeless’ and was therefore able to leave without a finding that he or she has become homeless intentionally.

13.208 For applicants to local housing authorities in England, ‘violence’ (which includes ‘threats of violence’) can include sexual or physical abuse from another member of the family¹ or any other form of actual or threatened violence. The courts have held that ‘violence’ (whether domestic² or otherwise) should be given a broad interpretation including ‘physical violence, threatening or intimidating behaviour and any other form of abuse which, directly or indirectly may give rise to the risk of harm¹’. For applicants to local housing authorities in Wales, ‘abuse’ under H(W)A 2014, s 57 is defined in similar terms².

13.208 Becoming Homeless Intentionally

2 Defined by reference to the relationship between the perpetrator and the victim (HA 1996, s 177(1A) and s 178), see 10.85 and 10.96.

4 H(W)A 2014, s 58(1).

13.209 A failure to pursue legal remedies against the perpetrator because of fears of reprisal, or because the applicant was unaware of the remedies available, should not generally be considered a deliberate omission if the applicant was acting in good faith⁴.

1 English Code, paras 21.27 and 21.30 (reminding local housing authorities that such remedies are merely an ‘option’ and may not be effective); Welsh Code, para 17.26(i).

13.210 Where a woman leaves her accommodation because of domestic violence, and goes to a women’s refuge, the refuge will not be reasonable to continue to occupy indefinitely⁴. Consequently, in determining whether she became homeless intentionally, the local housing authority should look back to the reasons why the woman left her accommodation, and whether it was due to violence or abuse, as defined at HA 1996, s 177(1) and H(W)A 2014, s 58(1) respectively.

Harassment not amounting to violence or abuse

13.211 If the applicant says that he or she left accommodation due to harassment, on a scale that does not amount to violence or abuse, the local housing authority should determine whether, in all the circumstances, including (if it chooses) taking into account general housing conditions in its district, the accommodation was reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy⁵. Many of the cases that considered this point were decided before the enactment of the current statutory formula, ‘reasonable for him to continue to occupy’ in respect of violence or abuse⁶. Those cases now only apply to a lower level of harassment, one that does not amount to violence or abuse.

1 English Code, para 6.39(c).

2 HA 1996, ss 175(3), 177(1); H(W)A 2014, s 55(3), s 57(1). See 10.79–10.98.

13.212 When considering non-violent, and non-abusive harassment cases, local housing authorities are entitled to make inquiries into whether or not the applicant could have arranged to move away (eg by arranging a sale or through a transfer), and the extent to which it might be reasonable for the applicant to have continued to occupy the accommodation whilst that move was arranged⁷. Similarly, local housing authorities are entitled to consider whether it would have been reasonable for the applicant to have continued to occupy the accommodation with police protection rather than to have simply left⁷.

Particular scenarios 13.215

13.213 Once an applicant has raised the issues of violence or abuse and/or lower-level harassment, the local housing authority has a duty to make all necessary inquiries of all agencies that have been involved. The English Code stresses that great care must be taken in interviewing applicants in these circumstances. The burden rests on the local housing authority and not on the applicant. The local housing authority must make a finding of fact as to whether or not it accepts the applicant’s account of events. If significant matters are to be held against the applicant, they should first be put to him or her for comment. Having made that finding of fact, the local housing authority should then consider whether it was probable that continued occupation of the accommodation would have led to violence or abuse against the applicant. If it was probable, the accommodation was not reasonable to continue to occupy and the applicant cannot have become homeless intentionally. If violence or abuse were not probable, the local housing authority should consider whether, in all the circumstances, it was reasonable for the applicant to have continued to occupy the accommodation. If the applicant’s account is accepted, the local housing authority should give proper, adequate and intelligible reasons if it concludes that the accommodation was, in any event, reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy.

2. English Code, para 21.23.

13.214 The question for the local housing authority is whether it was reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy the accommodation. If the violence or abuse was directed against a member of the household, rather than the applicant, the accommodation will not have been reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy. Where the behaviour is harassment which does not amount to violence or abuse, and is directed against a member of the household rather than the applicant, the local housing authority must take this into account. Such accommodation will generally not be reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy.

2. HA 1996, s 177(1), H(W)A 2014, s 57(1).

13.215 Where the applicant has actually been responsible for violence, abuse, harassment or nuisance behaviour and has lost his or her home as a result, he or she will generally be considered to have committed a deliberate act leading to the loss of accommodation\(^1\). An applicant who has not directly participated in nuisance behaviour carried out by another household member may have acquiesced if he or she failed to take any steps to prevent the behaviour\(^2\).

\(^1\) English Code, para 9.20(f); Welsh Code, para 17.23(vi). See also Devenport v Salford City Council (1983) 8 HLR 54, CA, and R v Swansea City Council ex p John (1983) 9 HLR 56, QBD.

13.216 However, if the accommodation has been lost for any other reason, not related to the applicant’s deliberate act, even though the applicant has also been guilty of violent behaviour, he or she will not have become homeless intentionally\(^1\). If the applicant’s own behaviour has led to the harassment, that behaviour can constitute a deliberate act, and he or she could be found to have become homeless intentionally\(^2\).

Exclusion by friends or relatives

13.217 Where people are living with friends or relatives, but are not themselves the tenant or owner of the accommodation, they are usually bare licensees or tenants with no statutory protection\(^1\). Their host will be entitled to require them to leave, provided that the licence or tenancy is terminated upon reasonable notice, which might be 24 hours or even less.

\(^1\) Such as the protection normally provided by the Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 3.

13.218 The local housing authority is entitled in these cases to consider the reasons for the host’s decision to exclude. It is not unusual for guests in these circumstances to have been staying with their hosts in overcrowded accommodation and for the accommodation therefore not to have been reasonable for the guests to continue to occupy\(^1\).

\(^1\) See 13.162–13.180 for ‘reasonable to continue to occupy’ and 13.222–13.227 for unsatisfactory accommodation.

13.219 It might, however, have been the applicant’s own conduct that led to the decision to exclude him or her from accommodation that would otherwise have been reasonable for him or her to continue to occupy. In Denton v Southwark London Borough Council\(^1\), the Court of Appeal held that a 21-year-old had become homeless intentionally after his mother had excluded him because of his unreasonable conduct. Arden LJ said:

‘it is essential when people live together, that they show appropriate respect for each other’s needs and follow any requests that one reasonably makes to the other. This is not a case where the mother was laying down inappropriate rules.’

The situation would be different if the mother’s rules had been unreasonable\(^3\).

Particular scenarios 13.224

13.220 The fact that accommodation was unreasonable to continue to occupy when the applicant left, will not save him or her from a finding that he or she became homeless intentionally if the accommodation had become unreasonable to continue to occupy as a result of his or her behaviour.

13.221 Perpetrators of domestic violence or abuse who are excluded from, or lose, their family home as a result of such violence or abuse could be found to have become homeless intentionally.

1 English Code, para 9.20(f); Welsh Code, para 17.23(vi).

Unsatisfactory accommodation

13.222 When considering the accommodation from which the applicant became (or is about to become) homeless, a local housing authority should consider the property’s physical conditions and any overcrowding when deciding whether the accommodation was reasonable for the applicant (and members of his or her household) to have continued to occupy.

1 English Code, paras 6.26–6.27 and 6.39(a); Welsh Code, para 8.27. See further 10.117–10.123.

13.223 Local housing authorities are entitled to have regard to the conditions prevailing in their district when considering the question of reasonableness of continued occupation. This is the case whether the relevant accommodation is in the local housing authority’s own district, elsewhere in the UK, or outside the UK. The local housing authority should not rely on assertions as to the general level of overcrowding or unfitness in its district, but should address itself to the particular degree of overcrowding or unfitness experienced by the applicant.

1 HA 1996, s 177(2); H(W)A 2014, s 57(3)(b); R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Bariise (1999) 31 HLR 50, CA.

13.224 Overcrowding which may render accommodation unreasonable for continued occupation is not restricted to statutory overcrowding. If there are any medical needs arising as a result of the overcrowding or the physical condition of the property, they are relevant to the question of whether it would have been reasonable to continue to occupy.

1 R v Westminster City Council ex p Alouat (1989) 21 HLR 477, QBD.

13.225 Even when taking into account general housing conditions in its district, a local housing authority would normally be wrong to conclude that it would have been reasonable for a husband, wife and four children to have continued to occupy one room. However, a local housing authority’s decision that it would be reasonable, taking into account the shortage of accommodation in its district, for a separated husband to continue to occupy the same accommodation as his wife and her new boyfriend was not wrong in law. In addition, where three children had satisfactory accommodation with their mother, and their father permitted them to leave that accommodation and live with him in his one-room accommodation (so that his landlord required them to leave), the father’s actions in permitting his children to leave satisfactory accommodation so as to reside with him were held to be deliberate and he had become homeless intentionally.

2 R v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council ex p Moncada (1996) 29 HLR 289, QBD.

13.226 It is not appropriate for a local housing authority to conclude that the applicant has become homeless intentionally where the accommodation had become overcrowded (and is no longer reasonable to continue to occupy) as a result of the applicant’s deliberate acts in having more children, or otherwise expanding his or her family.

13.227 Other issues arising on the question of whether accommodation might not have been reasonable to have continued to occupy include the adequacy of fire prevention and escape facilities at the property and/or whether the accommodation was fit for human habitation.

Medical needs

13.228 An applicant’s medical needs can render the accommodation that the applicant has ceased to occupy unreasonable to have continued to occupy.

1 See further 10.119.

13.229 Where medical issues are raised in relation to whether or not accommodation was reasonable to continue to occupy, the local housing authority is under a duty to inquire into them. The local housing authority must consider the medical needs of the applicant and of all members of his or her household, together with any other factors which may, cumulatively, have resulted in the accommodation having been unreasonable to continue to occupy.

1 R v Wycombe District Council ex p Homes (1990) 22 HLR 150, QBD. The Welsh Code advises that local housing authorities should also consider a person’s vulnerability: paras 17.17(iii).

13.230 It has been held that where an applicant leaves accommodation that he or she anticipates will in the future become unreasonable to continue to occupy (such as where a pregnant applicant has been told that the property will not be suitable for her baby), he or she may still have become homeless intentionally if, at the particular time when the applicant left, the property was then reasonable to continue to occupy at least for some further period. It is likely that such cases will be decided differently following the decision of the Supreme Court in Haile v Waltham Forest London Borough Council. A supervening event, following the loss of accommodation, which would have rendered the accommodation unreasonable to continue to occupy will be sufficient to break the causal chain between the applicant’s deliberate act and his or her current homelessness.

13.231 The location of the accommodation and its effect on the applicant’s state of health, or the health of members of his or her household, can be relevant and can render accommodation not reasonable for continued occupation, although in making its assessment the local housing authority would be entitled to take into account general housing conditions in its own area.

13.232 The question for the local housing authority is not whether an applicant’s medical needs, or those of his or her family members, would be better served elsewhere, but whether their medical needs rendered the accommodation unreasonable to continue to occupy at the date when the applicant left it.

1 R v Wandsworth London Borough Council ex p Nimako-Boateng (1984) 11 HLR 95, QBD.

Employment and other social or economic prospects

13.233 The opportunities for employment (and any other financial prospects) that were available to the applicant at the accommodation may need to be taken into account in determining whether it would have been reasonable for him or her to have continued to occupy it. Relevant matters may include employment prospects, any available capital or savings, debts, the availability of social security benefits and any other means of support, as well as the extent to which the applicant was socially isolated and any effect on his or her health as a result.\(^1\)

\(^1\) \(R v\) Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council ex p Bayani (1990) 22 HLR 406, CA.

13.234 Frequently, cases on this point will relate either to applicants migrating to the UK from elsewhere in the world for economic reasons, or to UK residents deciding to emigrate and then returning to the UK, again for economic reasons. The question for the local housing authority is not whether it was reasonable for the applicant to seek to live in (or return to) the UK, but rather whether it would have been reasonable to have continued to occupy the accommodation overseas. Local housing authorities should avoid decisions containing such phrases as ‘you brought your family to the UK without making reasonable provision for their accommodation’, as they suggest that the wrong issue is being addressed. The true focus of inquiry is whether it would have been reasonable for the applicant and his or her household to have remained in their accommodation overseas. The issue for the local housing authority is not why the applicant has left a particular country to come to the UK, but why he or she has left the particular accommodation in that country.\(^1\)

13.235 Where the applicant raises the issue of the lack of employment prospects if he or she had continued to occupy his or her previous accommodation, the local housing authority is bound to make inquiries into that issue to see whether it would in fact have been reasonable for the applicant to have remained in occupation.\(^1\)

13.236 If the applicant has lost tied accommodation as a result of his or her employment having come to an end, the local housing authority is entitled to consider whether his or her deliberate act or omission (in resigning or on being dismissed for misconduct) led to the loss of employment and hence the loss of accommodation.\(^1\) Even if it finds such a deliberate act or omission, it must of course go on to consider whether the accommodation was available to the applicant and reasonable for him or her to have continued to occupy.

Ex-prisoners

13.237 The courts have held that the commission of a criminal offence, where the reasonably likely result is that the applicant will be sent to prison, can constitute a deliberate act as a consequence of which the applicant’s accommodation may have been lost. As a result, local housing authorities are entitled to find that a prisoner who loses his or her accommodation during the period of imprisonment because of inability to keep up payments for an unoccupied home has become homeless intentionally. This conclusion was held not to be wrong in law even in the case of a prisoner who made arrangements with his sister that she would pay the rent and a contribution to the arrears (required under a suspended possession order) during his sentence, when she then failed to honour the agreement.

1 R v Hounslow London Borough Council ex p R (1997) 29 HLR 939, QBD; and Minchin v Sheffield City Council (2000) Times, 26 April, CA. In Minchin v Sheffield City Council, the fact that the applicant had moved house after the commission of offences was irrelevant to her subsequently being found to have become homeless intentionally. In Quaid v Westminster City Council (2008) February Legal Action, p 41, Central London County Court, the applicant had not become homeless intentionally because he had committed offences when street homeless. It was not reasonably likely at the time that he had committed the offences that he would lose accommodation acquired after the offences had been committed. See also English Code, paras 23.21–23.22.

13.238 The Welsh Code advises that applicants who have just served a prison sentence and who find themselves homeless on release should not be considered to have become homeless intentionally unless the offences were themselves breaches of their previous tenancy agreement and led to the loss of their accommodation.

1 Welsh Code, para 17.26(ii).

Becoming homeless intentionally from accommodation provided under the prevention or relief duties

13.239 The amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7 introduced by the HRA 2017 include two important new duties:

- the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty, to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that suitable accommodation does not cease to be available for his or her occupation; and
- the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty, to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation for at least six months.

Neither of these duties requires a local housing authority to accommodate an applicant. However, a local housing authority has a power to provide accommodation under either of these duties.

13.240 Where accommodation is provided, HA 1996, Pt 7 provides that the duty in question shall come to an end where the applicant becomes homeless intentionally from that accommodation.

13.241 It remains to be seen how frequently, if at all, applicants will be found to have become homeless intentionally from such accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 195(2) prevents duty has not yet become homeless and that an applicant who is owed the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty has not yet become homeless and that an applicant who is owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty and appears to have a priority need will already have been provided with interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(1). These two cohorts will not, therefore, have an immediate need for accommodation. In view of this, the number of applicants who are owed the HA 1996, s 195(2), or HA 1996, s 189B (2), relief duty, and whom the local housing authority consider it appropriate or necessary to accommodate, is likely to be small.

3 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. It is well-established that an applicant who is occupying interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(1) is still homeless: See 10.13.

4 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.87–15.137.

5 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

13.243 Second, accommodation provided under the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty or HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty is likely to be short term in nature, and therefore probably precarious in tenure. This is evident from the fact that these duties are typically expected to come to an end after 56 days and so accommodation provided in performance of the duty would not be expected to last longer than this. Accommodation of this nature is relatively unlikely to be considered be reasonable to continue to occupy.\footnote{As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.87–15.137.}

As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

HA 1996, s 195(8)(b) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 15.110–15.112. HA 1996, s 189B(4) and (7)(b) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 15.166–15.168.

See 13.162–13.180. Pursuant to HA 1996, s 191, a person can only become homeless intentionally from accommodation which is available for his occupation and which it would have been reasonable for him to continue to occupy.

Third, and by the same token, if by any chance accommodation were to be provided pursuant to either of these duties for a longer period, and that accommodation was both suitable and likely to be available for six months or more, then that by itself would have been sufficient to bring the duty in question to an end.\footnote{HA 1996, s 195(8)(a) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 15.105–15.109; HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 15.162–15.165. See English Code, para 14.30: ‘In most cases where such accommodation has been secured the housing authority will already have notified the applicant that the prevention or relief duty has come to an end’. The Code goes on to suggest that the applicant might become homeless intentionally in these circumstances if he or she surrendered or was excluded from the accommodation prior to being notified that the provision of accommodation had brought the duty to an end.}

This precludes the possibility of the duty subsequently being brought to an end by the applicant becoming homeless intentionally.

Fourth, and finally, in connection with the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\footnote{HA 1996, s 188(1)\textsuperscript{2} is still to be regarded as homeless. One of the reasons why the legislation is interpreted in this way is to avoid absurdity. If an applicant were not to be considered homeless then he or she would ‘lose the protection of Pt 7\textsuperscript{4} since the interim accommodation duty is a temporary expedient to accommodate applicants who appear to be homeless and eligible and have a priority need, while the local housing authority makes the inquiries necessary to determine whether a longer-term accommodation duty is owed. All of this would become redundant were the applicant to lose his or her status as homeless once placed in interim accommodation. The same points might be made in respect of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{4} relief duty. If the accommodation offered is suitable and reasonably likely to be available for at least six months, the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{4} relief duty can be brought to an end under HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a). If it is not, then the applicant remains entitled to the benefit of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{4} relief duty. How, though, can a local housing authority meaningfully be expected to take reasonable steps to relieve the homelessness of someone who is no longer regarded as homeless? And how} relief duty there is a policy consideration which might make it necessary to interpret the legislation is such a way as to make it impossible for an applicant to become homeless intentionally from accommodation provided under this duty. It is well-established that an applicant who is occupying interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(1)\textsuperscript{2} is still to be regarded as homeless. One of the reasons why the legislation is interpreted in this way is to avoid absurdity. If an applicant were not to be considered homeless then he or she would ‘lose the protection of Pt 7\textsuperscript{4} since the interim accommodation duty is a temporary expedient to accommodate applicants who appear to be homeless and eligible and have a priority need, while the local housing authority makes the inquiries necessary to determine whether a longer-term accommodation duty is owed. All of this would become redundant were the applicant to lose his or her status as homeless once placed in interim accommodation. The same points might be made in respect of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{4} relief duty. If it is not, then the applicant remains entitled to the benefit of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{4} relief duty. 13.246 Given this, in order to avoid absurdity it might be necessary to adopt an interpretation of the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty which has the result that an applicant is still to be regarded as homeless whilst in interim accommodation provided under the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty. The consequence of this would be that an applicant can never become homeless intentionally from such accommodation.

1 Legislation should generally be construed so as to avoid absurdity. See Bennion on Statutory Interpretation (Lexis Nexis, 6th edn 2013), at para 312.

3 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.
4 A court might be reluctant to adopt such an interpretation lightly as that would mean that HA 1996, s 189B(7)(d) is redundant. This would run counter to the well-established principle of 'effective interpretation' which stipulates that legislation must be construed so that its provisions are given force and effect rather than being rendered nugatory: Bennion on Statutory Interpretation (Lexis Nexis, 6th edn 2013), at para 198.

13.247 The answer to this conundrum is by no means obvious. But, in view of the practical reality that accommodation is likely to be provided under the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty or HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty only rarely, it may be that this issue is of no more than academic interest.

Accommodation withdrawn by a local housing authority on completion of its homeless duty

13.248 An applicant is still homeless while occupying interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(1) or H(W)A 2014, s 68(1). As such he or she cannot be regarded as having become homeless intentionally from any such accommodation. Similarly accommodation provided by the local housing authority under the various short-term accommodation duties or powers, may well be of such limited duration and precarious tenure that it is not

13.249 However, where an applicant loses accommodation provided under the HA 1996, s 193(2)¹ or H(W)A 2014, s 75¹ main housing duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4)² accommodation duty owed to those who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate, the question may subsequently arise of whether that accommodation was lost as a result of the deliberate act or omission of the applicant⁴.

⁴ For repeat applications see 9.77–9.91. Acceptance of the application, however, does not prevent a local housing authority from determining that the applicant has become homeless intentionally for such a scenario, see R (Dragic) v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2012] EWHC 1241 (Admin), (2012) July Legal Action, p 42, Admin Ct.

13.250 That was the situation in the landmark case of R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Awua³. The House of Lords held that there was no requirement that the accommodation lost by a person who had become homeless intentionally should have been settled accommodation. As a result, Ms Awua had become homeless intentionally because she had lost the accommodation temporarily provided to her under the main housing duty as a result of her having refused an offer of other accommodation⁴.

people aged 16 or 17 years old refuse offers of accommodation provided under Children Act 1989, s 20 duties, statutory guidance advises that they should not be considered to have become homeless intentionally when accommodation is subsequently withdrawn as a result of that refusal: Prevention of homelessness and provision of accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation (MHCLG and DoE, April 2018), para 4.21; Social Services and Well-being (Wales) Act 2014 Pt 6 Code of Practice (Looked After and Accommodated Children) (Welsh Government, 2015), para 587.

13.251 This type of situation can easily arise as the HA 1996, s 193(2) and H(W)A 2014, s 75 main housing duty and the HA 1996, s 193C(4) accommodation duty owed to those who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate, can all be brought to an end as a result of an applicant’s refusal to accept certain types of offer of suitable accommodation. An applicant faced with such an offer but concerned about the suitability of the accommodation would be well-advised to accept the offer accommodation and then request a review of its suitability, lest he or she find that the duty owed to him or her has come to an end and that any subsequent application for homelessness assistance results in a finding that he or she became homeless intentionally. However, in that scenario, the local housing authority could not simply infer from the refusal that the applicant had become homeless intentionally. It would still need to satisfy itself that the six elements of the statutory test were satisfied.

WALES: DECIDING TO ‘HAVE REGARD TO INTENTIONALITY’

13.252 For applicants to local housing authorities in Wales, the foregoing sections of this chapter will only be of relevance if a decision has been made by the local housing authority to whom the application is made, to ‘have regard to intentionality’. If no such decision has been made, the question of whether an applicant has become homeless intentionally will not arise for consideration. This is one of the key innovations of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The explanatory notes to H(W)A 2014 state that:

‘It is intended that local authorities will be allowed to apply the intentionality test for all applicants, or none, or for certain priority need categories. This will allow for a gradual reduction in the application of intentionality to vulnerable groups’.

2 This feature of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 might conceivably provide a motivation for applicants to direct their applications to local housing authorities in Wales rather than England. However, at the time of writing it is understood that most local housing authorities in Wales have signalled their intention to ‘have regard to intentionality’ to some extent.
3 Housing (Wales) Bill, Explanatory Memorandum (Welsh Government, November 2013) p 162. See also Welsh Code, para 17.1.
In order to have regard to whether an applicant has become homeless intentionally for the purposes of H(W)A 2014, ss 68 and 75, first, the Welsh Ministers must, by regulations, specify a category or categories of applicant for that purpose. The relevant regulations are the Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015 which came into force on 27 April 2015. The categories mirror precisely the categories of persons who may have a priority need under H(W)A 2014, s 70.

A local housing authority is then entitled to have regard to whether an applicant has become homeless intentionally if and only if three conditions are satisfied:

1. the applicant falls within a category specified in the regulations;
2. the local housing authority has decided to have regard to whether or not applicants in that category have become homeless intentionally; and
3. the authority has published a notice of that decision which specifies the category. The written notice must specify the list of specified categories of applicants and the reasons for having regard to those categories and be provided to the Welsh Ministers no less than 14 days prior to the implementation of the decision. The notice must also be published on the authority’s website (if it has one), and at the offices where homelessness applications are received, no less than 14 days prior to the implementation of the decision. A local housing authority must also take reasonable steps to notify its decision to applicants and their advisers, and to such public or local authorities, voluntary organisations or other persons as it considers appropriate, and must make a copy of the notice of its decision available, without charge, to applicants who will be affected by the decision.

Whether or not such a decision is made is a matter of discretion for each local housing authority: a local housing authority is not obliged to make a decision to ‘have regard to intentionality’. But where such a decision has been made, and where a local housing authority has published a notice under H(W)A 2014, s 78(3), the local housing authority must consider whether the applicant has become homeless intentionally in every case unless and until a decision is taken to stop having regard to whether or not applicants falling into the category specified in the notice have become homeless intentionally\(^3\) and a notice of the decision specifying the category has been published\(^4\). Where a local housing authority has not made such a decision, or has not published a notice of that decision in accordance with H(W)A 2014, s 78(2)(b) and Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015, regs 3 and 4, then the local housing authority is not entitled to have regard to whether the applicant became homeless intentionally\(^5\).

INTRODUCTION

14.1 The referral provisions in the Housing Act 1996 (HA 1996), Pt 7 as amended by the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017)¹ and the Housing Wales Act 2014 (H(W)A 2014), Pt 2 ensure that responsibility for accommodating those who are homeless is spread fairly between local housing authorities. Without a coherent set of rules governing which local housing authority owes a housing duty, homeless applicants would end up in the same position as their predecessors under the Poor Laws, when:

‘ . . . each parish was responsible for the relief of those who were poor and unable to work. When a poor man moved from one parish to another, the question arose: which parish was responsible? The disputes, Blackstone tells us, “created an infinity of expensive lawsuits between contending neighbourhoods, concerning those settlements and removals”’.

14.2 In order to avoid intractable disputes (including ‘expensive lawsuits’), HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pr 2 lay out the conditions under which local housing authorities can transfer responsibility for applicants by referring them to other local housing authorities.

As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.3 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, there are two stages during the application process at which the conditions may be satisfied and a homeless applicant may be referred to another local housing authority. The first is at the point where it has been established that the applicant is homeless\(^1\) and eligible\(^2\) for assistance\(^3\) and that, unless his or her case is referred, he or she would be owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\) relief duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation\(^5\). The second is at the point where the relief duty has come to an end and it has also been established that the applicant has a priority need\(^6\), did not become homeless intentionally\(^7\) and, unless his or her case is referred, would be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2)\(^8\) main housing duty\(^9\).

\(^7\) See 16.94–16.199. An applicant who is homeless, eligible for assistance, has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally will be owed the main housing duty unless the relief duty came to end by virtue of the applicant having refused a ‘final accommodation offer’ (see 15.181–15.184) or a ‘final Pt 6 offer’ (see 15.185–15.188), or having been given notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate (see 15.196–15.221): HA 1996, s 193(1A) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
\(^8\) HA 1996, s 198(1). A referral at this stage can be made to another local housing authority in England or to a local housing authority in Wales. See 14.155–14.163 and 14.166–14.175.
For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales, there is only one stage during the application process at which the conditions may be satisfied and a homeless applicant may be referred to another local housing authority. That is at the point where it has been established that the applicant is homeless and eligible for assistance and that, unless his or her case is referred, he or she would be owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73 relief duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation.

But, in contrast to applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England, the application may only be referred at this stage where the local housing authority has also decided that the applicant has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally.

In very broad terms, there are three sets of circumstances in which a local housing authority in England can refer an applicant for homelessness assistance to another local housing authority. These are:

1. where the applicant and his or her household have no connection with the area to which the application for homelessness assistance has been made but do have a connection with another area to which they can safely be returned;
2. where an applicant had accepted a private rented sector offer from one local housing authority of accommodation located in the district of another local housing authority, and the applicant has made another application for homelessness assistance to the other local housing authority in England within two years of the date of acceptance; or
3. where the applicant has been recently placed in the local housing authority’s area by another local housing authority in England or Wales acting under its homelessness functions, but has become homeless again.

Local housing authorities in Wales may only refer a homeless applicant to another local housing authority, in either England or Wales, where the first set of conditions for referral are met.

If the statutory conditions are satisfied, responsibility for a homeless applicant can be transferred from one local housing authority to another.

Several judges have remarked on the parallels with the Poor Laws.
14.8 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

‘. . . it is all very reminiscent of the operation of the Poor Law of the nineteenth century and before, all dressed up in modern language.’

‘Given the pressures on many housing authorities, the natural tendency would be to try to export the homeless whenever possible. Moving the needy beyond the parish boundary has a long history.’

‘. . . there are echoes of the old Poor Laws, under which parishes contended that paupers were settled in a parish other than their own: see Holdsworth, A History of English Law, vol X, p 257 et passim.’

1 R v Hammersmith and Fulham London Borough Council ex p O’Brien (1985) 17 HLR 471, QBD at 474 per Glidewell J.
2 R v Slough Borough Council ex p Khan (1995) 27 HLR 492, QBD at 496 per Mr Roger Toulson QC.

14.9 Local housing authorities are not required to use these provisions. They are free to accept all those who apply to them. So, although they have power to make inquiries into an applicant’s connection with another district if they wish, there is no obligation upon them to do so.1

1 HA 1996, s 184(2). Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities (Department for Communities and Local Government, 2018) (the English Code), paras 10.15 and 10.32. For local housing authorities in Wales there is no equivalent provision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 governing the making of inquiries into the applicant’s connection with another area. However, the power to make such inquiries must be implicit in H(W)A 2014, s 80 since the referral mechanism contained in H(W)A 2014, ss 80–83 would be inoperable without it. And since there is no express duty to make these inquiries in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 it must be the case that these inquiries are discretionary. See also Code of Guidance for Local Authorities on the Allocation of Accommodation and Homelessness (Welsh Government, March 2016) (the Welsh Code) on the CD Rom with this book, paras 18.1 and 18.6.

14.10 However, if local housing authorities do choose to make those inquiries, the tests that they must apply to determine whether a referral can be made are strictly defined at HA 1996, s 198(2), (2ZA), (2A), and (4) and at H(W)A 2014, s 80(3) and (4). If the conditions are not met, no referral to another local housing authority can be made and the first-approached local housing authority must perform either the relief duty1 (England and Wales) or the main housing duty2 (England) (depending on the stage the application has reached). If the local housing authority decides that the conditions are met, it retains a discretion, even at that stage, as to whether or not to make a referral. There is no obligation to do so.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(2) as inserted by the HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018; H(W)A 2014, s 73(1). See 15.138–15.189 and 17.73–17.117.

14.11 Accordingly, there are potentially three decisions for a local housing authority to make in relation to each applicant:

(1) whether or not to make inquiries into the question of any local connection at all; if so, whether the conditions for referral as defined at either HA 1996, s 198(2), (2ZA), (2A), and (4) or at H(W)A 2014, s 80(3) and (4) are met; and, if so,
(3) whether or not to notify another local housing authority of its opinion that the conditions are met.

As explained at 14.3–14.4, for applications made to local housing authorities in England there are two stages at which a referral can potentially be made and where a local housing authority may be called upon to consider these three questions. For applications made to local housing authorities in Wales there is only one stage at which a referral can potentially be made, at which point these questions may be considered.

14.12 For applications made to local housing authorities in England, if the referral is made at the first stage, where the relief duty would otherwise be owed, the applicant has a right to be accommodated throughout the decision making process only where there is reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need. Otherwise there is no duty to accommodate the applicant. The duty to accommodate falls initially on the first-approached local housing authority and then on the local housing authority to which the referral is made.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(2) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.
2 HA 1996, s 199A as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, ss 199A(2) and (5) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and 188(1) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018). See 14.166–14.171.

14.13 If the referral is made at the second stage, where the main housing duty would otherwise be owed, the applicant has a right to be accommodated throughout the decision making process. Again, the duty to accommodate falls initially on the first-approached local housing authority, and then on the local housing authority to which the referral is made.

2 HA 1996, ss 200(1) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and (4) and H(W)A 2014, s 83(2). See 14.166–14.171.

14.14 For applications made to local housing authorities in Wales at the stage where the relief duty would otherwise be owed, the applicant affected has a right to be accommodated throughout the decision-making process, initially by the first-approached local housing authority and subsequently by the local housing authority to which the referral is made.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 73(1). See 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, ss 82(4) and 68(3); HA 1996, s 201A(2). See 14.172–14.175.

14.15 Applicants are most likely to seek assistance from the local housing authority for the district in which they want to live and so would be expected to dispute a decision to refer them to another local housing authority. It is therefore no surprise that applicants are entitled to request reviews of several of the decisions involved in the referral process.

14.16 For applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England, where the referral is made at the first stage, where the relief duty would otherwise be owed, the applicant has only limited review rights, restricted to the issue of whether the conditions are met for the referral of his or her case. If the decision on review contains an error of law then the applicant may appeal to the county court.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(2) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

14.17 In contrast, if the referral is made at the second stage, where the main housing duty would otherwise be owed, the applicant may request reviews of any decision that he or she should be referred to another local housing authority, any decision that the conditions for referral are made out, and any decision as to the duties owed to him or her as a result. Again, if any of those review decisions contain an error of law, the applicant may appeal to the county court. Applicants for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in Wales have a similar range of review and appeal rights.

2 HA 1996, s 202(1)(c), (d) and (e). See 19.49–19.58.

14.18 It will be seen from this that, for applications made to local housing authorities in England, there is a lack of parity in the review rights available as between referrals made at the first and second stage. The reason for this lack of parity is not clear. Presumably, an applicant who is dissatisfied with any decision that he or she should be referred to another local housing authority, or any decision as to the duties owed to him or her as a result of the conditions for referral being satisfied, would be entitled to seek judicial review. However, in practice it seems likely that the majority of disputes in this context will fall within the ambit of HA 1996, s 202(1)(d), which provides a right to review of any decision under HA 1996, s 198(5) as to whether the conditions are met for the referral of the applicant’s case.

1 See 19.306–19.327.

14.19 In order to avoid applicants being caught in ‘a game of battledore and shuttlecock – with the homeless the shuttlecock and the housing authorities wielding the battledore’, local housing authorities are obliged to accept a referral if the conditions for referral are met. If the local housing authority, which has been asked to accept a referral, disputes whether the conditions are met, a referee can be appointed. Those arrangements are described in detail in Procedures for referrals of homeless applicants to another local authority (the Local Authorities Agreement). The local housing authorities involved are then bound by the referee’s decision. However, the applicant still has the right to request a review of this decision (and subsequently to appeal to the county court on a point of law) 4.

2 This process does not allow the local housing authority which has been asked to accept the referral to challenge the referring local housing authority’s assessment of the underlying issues such as whether the applicant is homeless or eligible for assistance. Any such challenge would need to be brought by way of judicial review. See 14.180–14.182.
3 Guidelines agreed by the Local Government Association, Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, and Welsh Local Government Association. The guidelines are referred to in the English Code, para 10.2 and in the Welsh Code, para 18.27–18.30 and can be found at Appendix 2.

14.20 There are special additional rules concerning former asylum-seekers who occupied accommodation provided by the Home Office in Scotland and subsequently made applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England. In those cases, local housing authorities in England will not be subject to the main housing duty 1 when the relief duty 2 comes to an end, but instead may provide accommodation for a limited period and provide advice and assistance to help the applicant apply to a local authority in Scotland, or make other arrangements for accommodation 3. These rules are discussed towards the end of this chapter 4.

14.21 Throughout this chapter, we use the statutory terms of ‘notifying local housing authority’ and ‘notified local housing authority’ to indicate respectively the local housing authority first receiving the application for homelessness assistance and subsequently making the referral (the ‘notifying local housing authority’), and the local housing authority receiving the referral (the ‘notified local housing authority’).

14.22 The chapter concludes with a review of cross-border referrals and the circumstances in which applicants may be accommodated outside the district in which they sought to be accommodated but without the local housing authority invoking the statutory referral procedure.

THE RIGHT TO MAKE AN APPLICATION FOR HOMELESSNESS ASSISTANCE TO ANY LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITY

14.23 A homeless person is free to apply to any local housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland (or to the Housing Executive in Northern Ireland) for assistance with accommodation. There is no prior condition that the applicant must apply to the local housing authority for any particular district. There is no filter that prevents an applicant who has no connection with a particular local housing authority from applying to that local housing authority. Once the application for homelessness assistance has been made, and there is reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, the local housing authority must conduct inquiries and make its decision as to whether or not the applicant is eligible and, if so, whether a duty and (if so) what duty, is owed to the applicant under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Any local housing authority that tells an applicant that he or she has applied to the wrong local housing authority, that he or she cannot apply to that particular local housing authority, or that no inquiries will be made because he or she does not appear to have a connection with its district, is acting unlawfully.

As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

POWER OF A LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITY TO MAKE INQUIRIES INTO THE CONDITIONS FOR REFERRAL

Introduction

14.24 As soon as a local housing authority has ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant for assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, it must make inquiries (England) or commence an assessment (Wales) to satisfy itself whether the applicant is eligible and whether any duty, and if so what duty, is owed to the applicant. It may also make inquiries into whether the applicant has a ‘local connection’ with the district of any other local housing authority in England, Wales or (for applicants to local housing authorities in England) Scotland. However, there is no obligation to make those latter inquiries. Even if the applicant self-evidently has no connection with the local housing authority to which he or she has applied, and has an obvious connection with another local housing authority, the first local housing authority can choose not to make inquiries into that connection.

1 HA 1996, s 184(1); H(W)A 2014, s 63(1), (4) and (5). See 9.1–9.14.

2 HA 1996, s 184(2). See 9.28–9.30. For local housing authorities in Wales there is no equivalent provision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 governing the making of inquiries into the applicant’s connection with another area. However, the power to make such inquiries must be implicit in H(W)A 2014, s 80 since the referral mechanism contained in H(W)A 2014, ss 80–83 would be inoperable without it. And since there is no express duty to make these inquiries in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 it must be the case that these inquiries are discretionary. See Welsh Code, paras 18.1 and 18.6.

14.25 Applicants cannot insist that the local housing authority to which they apply makes inquiries into their local connection. If the local housing authority decides not to make those inquiries, the applicant has no right to request a review of that decision, as it is not a decision that falls within one of the categories of decisions capable of review. Any legal challenge could only be brought by judicial review. Although many local housing authorities, anxious to reduce pressure on their resources, will want to consider the possibility of

referring an applicant to another local housing authority, local housing authorities are also entitled to assume that an applicant has applied to the local housing authority in whose district he or she would want to be housed.\(^1\)

What inquiries can the local housing authority make?

14.26 If the local housing authority does choose to make inquiries into the applicant’s local connection, the results of those inquiries will only become relevant once the local housing authority has concluded that it would otherwise owe the relief duty\(^1\) or the main housing duty\(^2\) under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^3\) or the relief duty under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2\(^4\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 189B(2) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

\(^3\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

\(^4\) H(W)A 2014, s 73(1). See 17.73–17.117.

14.27 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales, the conditions for referral only apply to those applicants who are homeless, eligible, have a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally. As such it may make practical sense for a local housing authority in Wales not to make inquiries into any local connection until it has completed the remainder of its inquiries and made decisions upon them. If an applicant appears to have become homeless intentionally or not to have a priority need, there is no point devoting additional resources to making wasteful inquiries into the question of local connection. In contrast, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England, the conditions for referral can apply to any applicant who is homeless and eligible, to whom the relief duty would otherwise be owed\(^5\). Local housing authorities in England might therefore properly inquire into an applicant’s local connection at an earlier stage then would be the case if the application had been made to a local housing authority in Wales.

England

14.28 A local housing authority in England may only make inquiries into whether the applicant has a local connection with the district of any other local housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland.\(^1\) A local connection with a local housing authority elsewhere is not relevant\(^2\). In particular, a connection with other parts of the UK (eg Northern Ireland)\(^3\) would not trigger the referral provisions in HA 1996, s 198\(^4\).

3 See Box 1 at 11.28. See also 14.239.
4 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.29 Curiously, HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) limits the subject matter of the discretionary inquiries to whether the applicant himself or herself has a connection elsewhere. A local housing authority which confined its inquiries only to that question would find it impossible to determine whether the conditions for referral to another local housing authority were in fact satisfied or not. As the remainder of this chapter indicates, the referral conditions are detailed and complex and go well beyond the question of whether the applicant personally has a local connection with the district of another local housing authority. The local housing authority which receives an application for homelessness assistance, and wishes to pursue the possibility of referring the applicant’s case, will need to know whether:

- (1) the applicant or any member of his or her household has a local connection with its own area\(^3\);
- (2) the applicant or any member of his or her household has a local connection with another local housing authority’s area\(^4\);
- (3) the applicant had been placed in its area as a result of having accepted a private rented sector offer\(^5\) from another local housing authority and subsequently made his or her application for homelessness assistance within two years of the date of acceptance\(^6\);
- (4) the applicant (or any member of his or her household) would be at risk of actual or threatened violence if returned to another area\(^7\); and
- (5) the applicant had been placed in its area by another local housing authority acting under the homelessness provisions of HA 1996, Pt 7\(^8\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2\(^9\).

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 184(2).
8 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. HA 1996, s 198(4).

14.30 Self-evidently, inquiries into those matters would go well beyond the scope of those expressly mentioned in HA 1996, s 184(2), and so the power to make these inquiries must therefore be implicit in the scheme of HA 1996, Pt 7 since the referral mechanisms would be inoperable otherwise.

14.31 Accordingly, where the local housing authority has received an application for homelessness assistance, has opted to make inquiries into the matter and has discovered that the applicant has a local connection elsewhere, it cannot simply assume that all the other ingredients of the conditions for a referral are made out. It must go on to explore whether the other conditions for referral are satisfied1.

Wales

14.32 In contrast to local housing authorities in England1, a local housing authority in Wales has no express power to make inquiries into any element of the conditions for referral. However, the power to make inquiries into whether the conditions for referral are met must be implicit in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, since the referral mechanism contained in H(W)A 2014, ss 80–83 would be inoperable without it. Since there is no express duty to make these inquiries in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 it must be the case that these inquiries are discretionary. In line with the principle that any discretion conferred by statute must be exercised to promote the policy and object of that statute2 the scope of these inquiries must therefore be limited to England and Wales since there is no mechanism under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 to make a referral elsewhere3. It follows that a local housing authority in Wales which receives an application for homelessness assistance, and wishes to pursue the possibility of referring the applicant’s case, has the power (and will need) to inquire into whether:

(1) the applicant or any member of his or her household has a local connection with its own area4;
(2) the applicant or any member of his or her household has a local connection with another local housing authority’s area5;
(3) the applicant or any member of his or her household would be at risk of actual or threatened violence if returned to another area6.

THE CONDITIONS FOR REFERRAL

Introduction

14.33 For applications made to local housing authorities in England, the preliminary condition for any referral is that the local housing authority in receipt of the application for homelessness assistance is satisfied that it would itself owe the applicant either the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1 relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty2. For applications made to local housing authorities in Wales, the preliminary condition for any referral is that the local housing authority in receipt of the application is satisfied that it would itself owe the applicant the H(W)A 2014, s 733 relief duty and the applicant has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally4.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

3 See 17.73–17.117.
14.33 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

4 H(W)A 2014, ss 73 and 80(1). Note, the explicit requirement that an applicant to a local housing authority in Wales should have a priority need and should not have become homeless intentionally was originally intended, prior to the enactment of HRA 2017, to ensure parity across the referral mechanisms between England and Wales, since these requirements are essential to the existence of the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(2). Following the amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7 made by HRA 2017 there is no longer complete parity across the referral mechanisms. In particular, the case of an applicant who is owed the relief duty contained in HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) by a local housing authority in England can only be referred to another local housing authority in England. See HA 1996, s 198(A1) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.34 Beyond that, the detailed conditions for referral are set out in HA 1996, s 198(1) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5) and H(W)A 2014, s 80. There are three separate and alternative sets of conditions for referral. The first set of conditions applies to referrals throughout England and Wales. The second set of conditions applies only to referrals between local housing authorities in England. The third set of conditions applies to referrals by local housing authorities in England to local housing authorities in England and Wales.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.35 The first set of ‘conditions for referral’ are found in HA 1996, s 198(2) and (2A) and in H(W)A 2014, s 80(3) and (4). It applies to referrals throughout England and Wales. The conditions are that:

(1) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has a local connection with the district of the local housing authority to which the application for homelessness assistance was made and

(2) either the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has a local connection with the district of another local housing authority in England, Wales or (for applications to local housing authorities in England) Scotland; and

(3) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant will run the risk of domestic violence (England) or domestic abuse (Wales) in that other district; and

(4) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has suffered violence (England) or abuse (Wales) in the district of that other local housing authority; or,

(5) if violence (England) or abuse (Wales) has been suffered, it is not probable that a return to that district will lead to further violence or abuse of a similar kind against that person.

1 HA 1996, Pt 7 uses the phrase ‘district of a local housing authority’. This has the meaning given in Housing Act 1985 (HA 1996, ss 217 and 218). H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 uses the phrase ‘area of a local housing authority’. The phrase is undefined. It must be the case that the two phrases are intended to have an identical meaning; consistency is needed for the cross-border referral mechanisms to work harmoniously. The word ‘district’ will be used throughout this chapter for the sake of simplicity.

14.36 This set of conditions requires additional consideration of the concepts of ‘local connection’, and ‘violence’ or ‘abuse’ (domestic or otherwise).\footnote{See \ref{14.43-14.106}.}

\footnote{HA 1996, s 198(3); H(W)A 2014, s 58(1) and s 99. See \ref{14.107-14.119}. There must also be a determination by the local housing authority as to those persons with whom the applicant ‘might reasonably be expected to reside’ – a phrase that is not confined to those with whom the applicant is, or has been, living immediately prior to the application for homelessness assistance. See \ref{10.29-10.30}.}

The conditions for referral \ref{14.41}

\begin{itemize}
  \item[(1)] the applicant accepted a private rented sector offer made by one local housing authority (authority A); and
  \item[(2)] within two years of the date of acceptance, the applicant makes an application for homelessness assistance to authority B; and
  \item[(3)] neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant will run the risk of domestic violence in the district of authority A; and
  \item[(4)] neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him or her has suffered violence in the district of authority A; or \item[(5)] if violence has been suffered, it is not probable that a return to the district of authority A will lead to further violence of a similar kind against that person.\footnote{HA 1996, s 198(2ZA) and (2A). See \ref{14.123-14.137}.}
\end{itemize}

The second set of ‘conditions for referral’ is to be found in HA 1996, s 198(2ZA) and (2A). It applies only to referrals within England. The conditions are that:

\begin{itemize}
  \item[(1)] the applicant accepted a private rented sector offer made by one local housing authority (authority A); and
  \item[(2)] within two years of the date of acceptance, the applicant makes an application for homelessness assistance to authority B; and
  \item[(3)] neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant will run the risk of domestic violence in the district of authority A; and
  \item[(4)] neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him or her has suffered violence in the district of authority A; or \item[(5)] if violence has been suffered, it is not probable that a return to the district of authority A will lead to further violence of a similar kind against that person.\footnote{HA 1996, s 198(2ZA) and (2A). See \ref{14.123-14.137}.}
\end{itemize}

The third set of ‘conditions for referral’ is to be found in HA 1996, s 198(4) and (4A). It applies only to referrals made by local housing authorities in England to local housing authorities in England or Wales.

The conditions are that:

\begin{itemize}
  \item[(1)] the applicant was placed in accommodation in the district of the local housing authority to which he or she has now applied (authority A) by another local housing authority (authority B); and \item[(2)] that placement was made in pursuance of authority B’s functions under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2; and \item[(3)] the application for homelessness assistance to authority A is made within a prescribed period.

The prescribed period is the total of five years plus the period between the date of the applicant’s application for homelessness assistance to authority B and the date when the applicant was placed in authority A.\footnote{Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Miscellaneous Provisions) (England) Regulations 2006, SI 2006/2527, reg 3, for applications to local housing authorities made on or after 9 October 2006. See Appendix 2.}

If this third set of conditions is met, the applicant can be referred by authority A to authority B. There is no additional requirement on authority A to consider whether the applicant ever had a local connection with authority B or has, more recently, acquired a local connection with its district. Nor is there any requirement to consider whether the applicant or any member of his or her household would be subject to domestic or other violence in the district of authority B.

14.42 Each set of conditions for referral is now separately considered.

The first set of conditions for referral – ‘local connection’

Overview

14.43 The lynchpin of the first set of referral conditions is the concept of ‘local connection’\(^1\) with the district of a local housing authority. That phrase is not itself defined by HA 1996, Pt 7\(^2\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The legislation simply limits the relevant methods by which a local connection can be acquired to one or more of the circumstances specified in HA 1996, s 199 or H(W)A 2014, s 81. As a result of amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7 made by HRA 2017\(^3\) the circumstances in which a person may acquire a local connection to a local housing authority in England are no longer identical to the circumstances in which a person may acquire a local connection to a local housing authority in Wales. There are now two additional situations in which an applicant for homelessness assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^4\) may have a local connection to a local housing authority in England.

1 HA 1996, s 198(2) and (2A); H(W)A 2014, s 80(3) and (4).
2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
4 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.44 The circumstances in which a homeless applicant may have a local connection with the district of a local housing authority in England or Wales are that:

(1) the person is, or was in the past, normally resident in a district and his or her residence there is, or was, of his or her own choice\(^1\);
(2) the person is employed in the district\(^2\);
(3) the person has a connection with the district through family associations\(^3\);
(4) the person has a connection with the district through special circumstances\(^4\);
(5) the person was provided with accommodation in the district (in England or Wales) under s 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (dispersal of asylum-seekers)\(^5\).

The additional circumstances in which an applicant for homelessness assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^6\) may have a local connection with the district of a local housing authority in England only are that:

(6) the person is owed a duty under Children Act 1989, s 23C\(^7\) by a local authority in England\(^8\) and either that local authority is also the local housing authority for the district or, alternatively, the district of the local housing authority falls within the area of the local authority\(^9\); or

(7) the person is under 21 and was normally resident in the district of a local housing authority in England for a continuous period of at least two years, some or all of which fell before the person attained the age of 16, as a result of being accommodated under Children Act 1989, s 22A.

6 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
7 See 20.65.
8 As defined in Children Act 1989, s 105. See HA 1996, s 199(9) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 8 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
9 HA 1996, s 199(8) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 8 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.45 Each of the above circumstances will be examined in turn in this chapter.

14.46 When considering whether the circumstances sufficient to establish a ‘local connection’ are made out, a local housing authority must have regard to HA 1996, Pt 7, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, and the relevant Code of Guidance. In addition, local housing authorities have also agreed and adopted additional guidance as to the interpretation of some of these statutory provisions. The House of Lords has confirmed that local housing authorities are entitled to consider that additional guidance when making their decisions. As Chadwick LJ put it in a later case:

‘It is desirable that the notified authority – who is being asked to assume the burden of providing accommodation for the applicant in the place of the notifying authority – should be able to accept the view of the notifying authority both that the applicant has no local connection with the district of the notifying authority and that the applicant does have a local connection with their own district. Ready agreement is unlikely to be achieved on those two points unless both the notifying authority and the notified authority are able to approach the question from a common basis. It is the need for that common basis which, as it seems to me, provides the imperative for all authorities to apply the guidelines “generally to all applications which come before them”’.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 The Local Authorities Agreement. See 14.19 fn 3.

14.47 If they do take the guidance into account, local housing authorities must still ensure that they consider the applicant’s individual circumstances, particularly any exceptional circumstances, before reaching a decision¹.
14.47 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

14.48 If they embark on inquiries into local connection at all, local housing authorities should consider each of the five (Wales) or seven (England) circumstances in which an applicant, or a member of his or her household, may acquire a local connection¹. It is not sufficient merely to establish that a local connection has been acquired by the applicant with the district of another local housing authority through one of the specified categories. The local housing authority must go on to consider what other local connections the applicant or his or her household members may have. Consideration of all the categories might reveal that the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has a local connection with the very local housing authority to which he or she applied. If that is the case, the conditions for referral will not be met. Alternatively, it might be the case that the applicant or a member of his or her household has a local connection with more than one local housing authority (other than that to which he or she applied), in which case the conditions for referral are met, but the applicant’s preference² is relevant when deciding which local housing authority should be notified by the local housing authority to whom the applicant has applied³.

³ Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.11.

14.49 The House of Lords held in Mohammed v Hammersmith and Fulham London Borough Council⁴ that the relevant date for determining whether an applicant has a local connection, and with which local housing authority, is the date of the decision that the local housing authority (or local housing authorities jointly, or a referee) makes on the question or (if a review is requested) the date of the review decision. Although in that case, the House of Lords was concerned with the definition of ‘normally resident’, the principle must apply to any of the other statutory circumstances that fall to be considered. So, if an applicant acquires a family association or becomes employed in a local housing authority’s district after his or her application for homelessness assistance but before the date of decision, or even the review decision, the question of local connection must be considered on the facts at that later date, not as at the date of application. More commonly, of course, the applicant might have been ‘resident’ in the local housing authority’s district for long enough since applying to have established a local connection⁵ by the time of the initial decision or review decision, even though the period of residence in the district prior to the application for homelessness assistance had not been long enough to establish such a local connection⁶.

³ See, for example, Fetaj v Lambeth London Borough Council (2002) September Legal Action, p 31, Lambeth County Court.

14.50 It is possible for a person not to have a local connection with any local housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland. The example given in the Welsh Code is where a person has ‘had an unsettled way of life for many years'. Former prisoners, former long-term hospital residents, former servicemen or servicewomen, etc, may likewise not have a local connection with any district at all. Neither would someone newly arrived in the UK, with no prior period of residence in England, Wales or Scotland, who was not employed and who had no family associations here. If there is no local connection anywhere, the conditions for referral are not met and the applicant remains the responsibility of the local housing authority to which he or she applied².

1 Welsh Code, para 18.19.
2 English Code, para 10.35; Welsh Code, para 18.19.

14.51 Four additional points about local connection must be made before the individual ingredients are considered further.

14.52 First, HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 do not exhaustively define ‘local connection’. Most obviously, a person may have a local connection with an area but it may arise from circumstances falling outside the prescribed list of circumstances. If that is the case, that connection would not fall within the definition of ‘local connection’ for the purposes of HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. For example, the connection a person has with an area because it was the place of his or her birth would be immaterial: ‘A local connection not founded upon any of the four stated factors is irrelevant’.

2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 R v Eastleigh Borough Council ex p Betts [1983] 2 AC 613, HL per Lord Brightman. There are now seven stated factors in England and five in Wales, see 14.4.

14.53 Second, a ‘local connection’ with a district is something more than simply a connection by residence, employment, etc. While one of the seven (England) or five (Wales) prescribed circumstances is a necessary pre-condition for a local connection, it is not sufficient alone to establish a local connection.
For example, a person may have employment in an area, but it may be of only a transient or very part-time nature. A person may have ‘family associations’ with an area because his or her parents live there, but might be estranged from their parents and not have seen or spoken to them for years. What is required is that the connection of a person (e.g. by having been ‘normally resident’, ‘employed’, or having ‘family associations’ in an area) is of sufficient quality to amount to a present ‘local connection’. As the House of Lords has put it, a local connection is a connection which has been built up or established so as to have become ‘a connection in real terms’.

1 R v Eastleigh Borough Council ex p Betts [1983] 2 AC 613, HL per Lord Brightman. See X v Ealing London Borough Council (2010) November Legal Action, p 19, Brentford County Court, for an example of a connection based on special circumstances amounting to a connection in real terms, see 14.85.

14.54 Third, different local connections may be of different comparative strengths. For example, a person might be said to have a stronger local connection with the place in which she or he lives than with the place where she or he works. If the applicant (or anyone who might reasonably be expected to live with him or her) has any local connection (based on one or more of the statutory circumstances) with the local housing authority to which an application for homelessness assistance has been made, the strength of that local connection is irrelevant. The conditions for referral will not be made out and the referral provisions cannot be used, even if the applicant has a much stronger local connection with another local housing authority\(^1\). But where there is no local connection with the district of the local housing authority applied to, but local connections with two or more other districts, the applicant’s preference, will be a factor for the first local housing authority in determining to which other local housing authority it should direct the referral\(^2\).
14.54 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

\(^1\) English Code, para 10.33; Welsh Code, para 18.10.
\(^2\) English Code, para 10.34; Welsh Code, para 18.10.

14.55 Fourth, the relevant local connection is with the ‘district’\(^3\) of a local housing authority. That must mean with any part of the geographical area of that authority. So, a person who lives (and has always lived) just inside the boundaries of Borough A will have a local connection with that borough even if, in practice, most of his or her time is spent in neighbouring Borough B (for shopping, education, recreation or leisure purposes). None of the interesting questions which might arise in relation to local connection when district boundaries are moved (eg by implementation of recommendations of the Boundary Commission) have yet been considered by the courts.

\(^1\) See 14.35 fn 1.

The relevant statutory circumstances

(I) Normal residence of his or her own choice

14.56 A person must have been ‘normally resident’\(^4\) in a district in order to acquire a local connection with that district by having lived there. ‘Normal residence’ is to be understood as meaning ‘the place where at the relevant time the person in fact resides’\(^5\). There is no need for the place to be a permanent home, or even to be the place where a person most wants to be living.

‘So long as that place where he eats and sleeps is voluntarily accepted by him, the reason why he is there rather than somewhere else does not prevent that place from being his normal residence. He may not like it, he may prefer some other place, but that place is for the relevant time the place where he normally resides. If a person, having no other accommodation, takes his few belongings and moves into a barn for a period to work on a farm that is where during that period he is normally resident, however much he might prefer some more permanent or better accommodation. In a sense it is “shelter” but it is also where he resides.’

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 199(1)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(a).

14.57 Applying this approach, even occupation of interim accommodation, provided under a local housing authority’s homelessness duties, constitutes ‘normal residence’\(^6\). Likewise, occupation of accommodation provided under community care or other duties will be accommodation in which the applicant normally resides. At a county court level it has been held that normal residence does not necessarily equate to lawful residence. A victim of trafficking who had lived for several years in an area without any leave to remain in the UK, before applying for asylum and obtaining refugee status, could be classed as normally resident during that time.

1 Applying this same approach, a person occupying interim accommodation provided by local housing authority A in the area of local housing authority B, would not be considered to be normally resident in the district of local housing authority A. In Adam v Waltham Forest London Borough Council [2016] EWCA Civ 248, CA, the Court of Appeal refused permission to bring a second appeal in which the applicant sought to argue otherwise. An applicant accommodated in such circumstances might nevertheless have a local connection with local housing authority A on the basis of special circumstances. See 14.82–14.87.

14.58 The assessment that has to be made in a ‘residence’ case:

‘... is not whether the homeless person is now or was in the past normally resident in the area of the notifying authority, but whether the applicant has now a local connection with either area based upon the fact that he is now or was in the past normally resident in that area’.

1 R v Eastleigh Borough Council ex p Betts [1983] 2 AC 613, HL per Lord Brightman.

14.59 The Local Authorities’ Agreement suggests that a working definition of normal residence sufficient to establish a ‘local connection’ should be residence for at least six months in an area during the previous 12 months, or for not less than three years during the previous five-year period. Local housing authorities may apply that working definition, although each case must be considered on its own particular facts.

1 See 14.19 fn 3.

2 Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(i).

3 R v Eastleigh Borough Council ex p Betts [1983] 2 AC 613, HL.

14.60 The concept of normal residence being ‘of his own choice’ was considered by the House of Lords in Al-Ameri v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council. It decided that ‘choice’ in this context refers to a person’s choice to go and live in a particular district. The district must have been selected by the individual, rather than by some other person (for example, by an official or a Secretary of State). The particular situation in Al-Ameri (asylum-seekers occupying accommodation provided under the then National Asylum Support Service (NASS) scheme) has since been specifically addressed by legislation. However, the general definition of ‘his own choice’ remains. The reasoning of the House of Lords suggests, for example, that children moved from one district to another by their parents or by social services would not have been resident in the new district ‘of their own choice’. This latter scenario has now been partially addressed by the amendments made to HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017. The Court of Appeal has held that residence in a women’s refuge is capable of being residence of a person’s own choice.

14.60 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

3 HA 1996, s 199(6) and (7) as amended. See 15.86–15.92.

4 See also Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(iii).

5 By HA 1996, ss 199(10)–(11) as inserted by HA 1996, s 8 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 14.95–14.103.

14.61 This freedom of choice aspect cannot be extrapolated too far. A person who moves from one area to another as a consequence of his or her employer relocating might be said to be simply falling in line with a choice made by another, and the point could be made with even more force about the employee’s partner. However, in reality, the employee has chosen to move rather than to resign and the employee’s partner has chosen to follow. Their residence is, accordingly, of their ‘own choice’. Much more acute difficulties arise with the ‘own choice’ concept when an applicant to the local housing authority for District A has become resident in District A as a result of having been placed there by District B in pursuance of its statutory duties to accommodate the applicant. Those statutory obligations might include the making of a private rented sector offer to the applicant. In one sense this was not residence of the applicant’s ‘own choice’. On the other hand, the applicant was not obliged to accept the accommodation in District A as offered by District B.

2 This problem is side-stepped for local housing authorities in England by the second and third set of referral conditions available to District A when this scenario arises (HA 1996, s 198(2ZA), (4) and (4A)). See 14.123–14.137 and 14.138–14.150.

Exceptions to normal residence of his or her own choice

Detention

14.62 Residence in a district is not ‘of his own choice’ if it occurs because a person is detained under the authority of an Act of Parliament (England) or an enactment (Wales). This refers to any form of detention authorised by statute and therefore embraces detention, for example, as a result of having been remanded in custody, having been given a custodial sentence, or having been detained under the Mental Health Act 1983. Periods of residence in a district prior to detention are not excluded and can count towards normal residence for the purposes of HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. This exception encompasses spouses or other family members of detainees, who come to reside in the district in order to be close to their detained relative. Therefore, the person who moves from District A to District B to be near her partner, who is detained in District B, cannot acquire a local connection with District B unless either:

(1) a connection other than through normal residence is available (eg she becomes employed in District B); or

(2) there is a period of fresh residence (eg if she remained in District B after her partner was released, or after she had ended the relationship but chose to remain in the district).

Other exceptions

14.63 The Secretary of State and the Welsh Ministers have the power to specify circumstances in which residence in a district is not to be treated as being of a person’s own choice. To date, neither the Secretary of State nor the Welsh Ministers have exercised that power.

14.64 Previous editions of the Local Authorities’ Agreement recommended that local housing authorities also treat time spent in hospital or time spent in an institution in which households are accepted only for a limited period (e.g. mother and baby homes, refuges, rehabilitation centres) as exceptions for the purposes of determining local connection. These examples, not repeated in the current edition, illustrate the point that having normal residence of one’s own choice in an area is not sufficient. Such residence must have the character, additionally, of establishing a ‘local connection’ with a local housing authority’s district. The examples given were of normal residence of choice which may be thought, as a general rule, not to be of sufficient character to establish a local connection.

Former asylum-seekers

14.65 Former asylum-seekers who previously lived in accommodation provided by the Home Office under s 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (formerly known as ‘NASS accommodation’) do not reside in that district of their own choice. However, asylum-seekers who occupied accommodation provided under IAA 1999, s 95 (the main duty to provide accommodation and support) are deemed to have a local connection with the local housing authority in whose district that accommodation is situated. This deeming provision does not apply to asylum-seekers who only occupied accommodation provided under IAA 1999, s 98 (temporary support) or s 4 (hard cases support), nor to asylum-seekers who were provided with accommodation by local authorities under the Asylum Seekers (Interim Provisions) Regulations 1999.

14.66  Scottish law provides that residence in accommodation provided under IAA 1999, s 95 cannot constitute residence ‘of his own choice’, and so asylum seekers dispersed to Scotland by the Home Office do not, as a matter of law, acquire a local connection with a local authority in Scotland under this provision.\(^1\)

\(^1\) Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, s 27 as amended by Homelessness etc (Scotland) Act 2003, s 7. As a result, there are lesser duties imposed on local housing authorities in England who receive applications for homelessness assistance from asylum seekers previously dispersed to Scotland (see 14.212–14.220). The Scottish Ministers have the power to suspend Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, s 27, so as to end referral between local housing authorities (Homelessness etc (Scotland) Act 2003, s 8). They have not as yet exercised this power, see 15.238. English Code, paras 10.26–10.29.

(2)  Employment

14.67  An applicant, or a member of his or her household, who is employed in a district may acquire a local connection with that district by virtue of that employment.\(^1\) The English Code suggests that the person must actually work in the district, in the sense of being physically present, for the employment to establish a local connection, and so it would not be sufficient, as in the case of a peripatetic employee, for the employer’s head office to be located there.\(^2\)

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 199(1)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(b).
\(^2\) English Code, para 10.8, although this is a difficult approach to apply to employment that is mobile, such as taxi-drivers or Deliveroo riders.

14.68  HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\), H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 and the English Code all use the present tense (‘is employed’). The question is therefore whether the applicant, or a member of his or her household, is employed in the relevant district at the date of the initial decision or review decision.\(^3\) However, the simple fact of such current employment will not necessarily establish a local connection in itself. To build up and establish a local connection there will usually need to have been ‘a period of employment’, although HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 and the English Code do not suggest any particular period of employment. If the person’s connection with an area is through past employment that will count, if at all, only if it amounts to ‘special circumstances’.\(^4\)

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
\(^2\) HA 1996, s 199(1)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(b).
\(^4\) Betts v Eastleigh Borough Council [1983] 2 AC 613, HL at 627 per Lord Brightman.

14.69  Further, the Local Authorities’ Agreement suggests that, if it is to found a local connection, employment should not be of a casual nature. It then suggests that employers be asked for confirmation of both the fact of employment and its non-casual nature.\(^5\) This inquiry is obviously unnecessary if the applicant can produce a written statement of the terms and conditions of employment or a fixed-term contract.

1 Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(ii).

14.70 Employment can be full-time or part-time and include both paid and unpaid employment. For example, an unpaid pastor in a church has been held to have a local connection with a district by virtue of that employment.\(^1\)

14.71 There is provision for the Secretary of State or the Welsh Ministers to specify other circumstances in which a person is not to be treated as employed in a district, but this power has not been exercised in either jurisdiction.\(^1\)

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 199(5)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 81(4)(a).

(3) Family associations

14.72 An applicant, or a member of his or her household, may have a local connection with a district if he or she has family associations with that district. ‘Family associations’ are not defined in HA 1996, Pt 7\(^2\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The Local Authorities’ Agreement suggests that the phrase should ‘normally’ be understood to refer to ‘parents, adult children or brothers and sisters’ and that only in ‘exceptional circumstances’ should the place of residence of other relatives be taken into account. In the past, this approach (which was also contained in earlier versions of the Local Authorities Agreement) received a measure of judicial support:

‘In my opinion family associations do not extend beyond parents, adult children or brothers and sisters. First cousins once removed (or cousins of any description) cannot provide the necessary connection.’\(^3\)

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 199(5)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(c).
\(^2\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
\(^3\) Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(iii).

14.74 However, the better and more recent view, which has also received some support from the Court of Appeal, is that the question falls to be decided having regard to the fact-specific characteristics of the individual case:
14.74 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

‘... the starting point is the position of the applicant and his household and, in having regard to both “family association” and “special circumstances”, while we do not discourage general rules such as are to be found in the Local Authority Agreement, we note that Parliament left those broad phrases undefined and to be judged as a matter of fact and degree in every case. For instance, the actual closeness of the family association may count for more than the precise degree of consanguinity.¹

14.75 In Ozbek v Ipswich Borough Council, the Court of Appeal specifically rejected a submission that only near relatives could found the basis for a local connection because of ‘family associations’. Considering the judicial observations in R v Hammersmith & Fulham London Borough Council ex p Avdic, Chadwick LJ said that those observations were not authority for the proposition that only near relatives (parents, siblings, children) could provide a ‘family association’ and said that the relevant question is:

‘whether, in the particular circumstances of the individual case, the bond between the applicant and one or more members of the extended family was of such a nature that it would be appropriate to regard those members of the extended family as “near relatives” in the sense in which that concept is recognised in the Referral Guidelines.’

14.76 Sedley LJ said that, if the judge in Avdic had meant to confine ‘family association’ to near relatives, he was wrong and his judgment should not be followed in that regard. He gave examples of relatives whose presence might found a ‘family association’ as ‘grandparents or uncles and aunts by whom the applicant had been brought up’ and emphasised that ‘the character of the family association must be at least as relevant – probably more relevant – than the degree of consanguinity’.¹

14.77 Accordingly, the family relationship does not have to be one of blood or marriage. For example, an unmarried step-parent has been held to be a sufficiently close relative to provide a family association.¹

14.78 The current edition of the English Code shows that the Secretary of State takes a similar view:
The conditions for referral 14.81

‘... where the applicant raises family associations, this may extend beyond partners, parents, adult children or siblings. They may include associations with other family members such as step-parents, grandparents, grandchildren, aunts or uncles provided there are sufficiently close links in the form of frequent contact, commitment or dependency. Family associations should be determined with regard to the fact-specific circumstances of the individual case. For example, the actual closeness of the family association may count for more than the degree of blood relation.’

1 English Code, para 10.9. There is no specific guidance in the Welsh Code.

14.79 Local housing authorities, certainly in England, are therefore advised against applying the guidelines in the Local Authorities’ Agreement rigidly and should follow the guidance in the English Code.

1 Local housing authorities in Wales, even though not subject to the same guidance, should certainly ensure that they apply the Court of Appeal’s approach in Ozbek v Ipswich Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 534, [2006] HLR 41, CA.

14.80 The Local Authorities’ Agreement recommends that, in order to give rise to a local connection, the family members relied upon as ‘family associations’ should have been resident in the district for a period of at least five years at the date of application for homelessness assistance. But no rule to this effect is contained in HA 1996 Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, and the individual circumstances of a particular case might indicate that a shorter period of residence by a relation is sufficient. Local housing authorities need to guard against the temptation simply to apply the five-year yardstick to every case. This is particularly so in the cases of refugees or other recent arrivals to the UK, where local housing authorities should bear in mind that the relatives may not have had five years in which to build up a residence period in any district in the UK.

1 Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(iii).
2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 See R v Harrow London Borough Council ex p Carter (1992) 26 HLR 32, QBD at 37, where the applicant’s sister had lived in the Harrow area for only four years. Roger Henderson QC, sitting as a deputy High Court judge, said: ‘It will be seen that that clause of the agreement, if applied rigidly, would mean that a family association would not normally arise if a homeless person’s sister had been resident in Harrow for less than five years, but the agreement would not preclude this abnormally. Thus, to say without more ado that Mrs Carter had no local connection with Harrow because her sister had lived in Harrow for between four and five years would have been erroneous (a) because the agreement is no more than a guideline, (b) because the agreement did not so provide and (c) because, in Mrs Carter’s predicament with four small children, any form of sisterly support might well make a significant difference in coping with her parental responsibilities’.

14.81 The ‘family associations’ variant of local connection is an acknowledgment of ‘the continuity of support that family associations can give’. Accordingly, a local housing authority should not be relying on it in order to identify a connection with an area other than one where the applicant positively wants to live. The applicant would generally need to indicate a wish to be near those members of his or her family for a local connection to be acquired through ‘family associations’. As the Local Authorities’ Agreement sensibly acknowledges, a referral should not be made under ‘family associations’ if the applicant objects to being referred to a district in which other members of his or her family live.\(^3\)

2. English Code, para 10.9.
3. Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(iii).

(4) Special circumstances

14.82 A person may have a local connection with a particular district if his or her connection with it arises because of ‘special circumstances’. Unsurprisingly, these are not defined in HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The deliberately wide term embraces ‘all special circumstances which can contribute to such a socially beneficial “local connection” with an area’.\(^3\)

1. HA 1996, s 199(1)(d); H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(d).
2. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.83 The English Code gives as an example ‘the need to be near special medical or support services which are available only in a particular district’\(^1\).

1. English Code, para 10.11.

14.84 The Local Authorities’ Agreement suggests that this category ‘may be particularly relevant in dealing with people who have been in prison or in hospital’ and gives an example of a person seeking to return to an area where he or she was brought up or lived for a considerable length of time\(^1\).

1. Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3(iv).

14.85 Absent a statutory definition, and with only limited guidance given by the Codes and the Local Authorities’ Agreement, it is no surprise to find that a wide range of circumstances have been advanced (often unsuccessfully) as being sufficiently ‘special’ for these purposes. These include:

- the need to visit a particular mosque and attend a particular school\(^1\);
- medical advice that an applicant needed to live in a warmer area\(^2\);
- residence (not for a sufficient period to constitute normal residence under HA 1996, s 199(1)(a) or H(W)A 2014, s 81(2)(a)), first with the man with whom the applicant believed that she was going to live permanently and, secondly, in a woman’s refuge\(^3\);
- the need to remain in the London area to receive medical treatment (the local housing authority was entitled to take the view that the medical treatment required was also available in the notified local housing authority’s district)\(^4\);
- the applicant’s need for care and assistance would not be met in the notified local housing authority’s district\(^5\);
- the applicant’s traumatic experiences before fleeing as a refugee, the existence of an ethnic minority community of same-language speakers in the local housing authority’s district, and enrolment at a local college\(^6\);
The conditions for referral 14.86

- the fact that the applicant’s children had special educational needs and were making rapid progress at a particular local school;
- a fear of leaving the area by reason of the risk of violence that might be experienced elsewhere;
- membership of a church community around which the applicant’s social life revolved;
- 14 years’ previous residence in the area in which the applicants’ children had attended school and in which the family still had friends; and
- a former asylum-seeker’s decision to seek accommodation in an area because her daughter had secured a bursary to study at a private school in that area, and where the daughter had been in that school for three months.

1. R v Westminster City Council ex p Benniche (1996) 29 HLR 230, CA, where the local housing authority’s decision of ‘no special circumstances’ on the facts was not wrong in law.
2. R v East Devon District Council ex p Robb (1997) 30 HLR 922, QBD, where the local housing authority was wrong in law not to have considered this as a potentially special circumstance.
3. R v Southwark London Borough Council ex p Hughes (1998) 30 HLR 1052, QBD, where the local housing authority was wrong in law not to have considered this as a potentially special circumstance.
4. R v Hammersmith and Fulham London Borough Council ex p Avdic (1998) 30 HLR 1, CA, where the local housing authority’s decision of no special circumstances on the facts was not wrong in law.
7. R v Harrow London Borough Council ex p Carter (1992) 26 HLR 32, QBD, where the local housing authority should have considered those circumstances.
8. R v Islington London Borough Council ex p Adioun (1986) 20 HLR 600, QBD, where the local housing authority’s decision of no special circumstances on the facts was not wrong in law.
10. R v Waltham Forest London Borough Council ex p Koutsoudis (unreported) 1 September 1986, QBD.
11. X v Ealing London Borough Council (2010) November Legal Action, p 19, Brentford County Court where the local housing authority’s decision that there were no special circumstances was wrong in law, and no reasonable local housing authority could have decided other than that the applicant had a local connection.

14.86 The generally strict line taken by the courts (rejecting most of the above challenges to decisions of local housing authorities) reflects the fact that Parliament has left it to local housing authorities to determine whether there are sufficiently ‘special’ circumstances to amount to a local connection. However, a local housing authority must not gloss the statutory language by seeking some extra-special or particularly pressing ‘special circumstances’. For example, a local housing authority considering an application based on a ‘special circumstances’ connection was held to have misdirected itself by looking for ‘an essential compassionate, social or support need’ to be in a particular area. Policy considerations that might be relevant to the decision whether to exercise the discretion to make a referral, will not be relevant to a decision as to whether an applicant has a local connection as the result of special circumstances\(^2\).

14.87 Local housing authorities are advised in the Local Authorities’ Agreement that, if they are referring on the basis that an applicant has no local connection with their area, but does have a local connection with another area under this category, they should only do so with the prior consent of the notified local housing authority\(^1\).

(5) Deemed 'local connection' for some former asylum-seekers

14.88 By virtue of amendments made to HA 1996, Pt 7 in 2005 (and subsequently enacted in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2), a 'local connection' is deemed to have been acquired by a person with the district of any local housing authority in England or Wales in which he or she, while an asylum-seeker, was provided with accommodation under s 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999\(^1\). The accommodation could have been provided 'at any time', ie before or after this provision for deemed local connection was enacted\(^2\).

2. HA 1996, s 199(6); H(W)A 2014, s 81(5).

---

14.89 The effect of this deeming provision is that former asylum-seekers, who previously occupied accommodation provided by the Home Office, will acquire a local connection with the local housing authority in whose district the Home Office accommodation was situated\(^1\).

14.90 Since HA 1996, s 199(6) and H(W)A 2014, s 81(5) both specify 'at any time', a former asylum-seeker will retain a local connection with that district forever. Even if the Home Office accommodation came to an end some considerable time before the applicant’s subsequent application for homelessness assistance, and even if the applicant had since then moved around the country and acquired a local connection with other local housing authorities, he or she will retain a local connection with that original district. It appears that the local connection cannot be lost, although it becomes of less importance if the former asylum-seeker is able to establish a local connection with another local housing authority (for example, by employment) and makes the application for homelessness assistance there\(^1\).

1. English Code, para 10.25. For an example of a former asylum-seeker who had both a local connection because of special circumstances with the district of the local housing authority to which she had applied, and a deemed local connection with another local housing authority because of occupying accommodation there which had been provided under Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, s 95, see X v Ealing London Borough Council (2010) November Legal Action, p 19, Brentford County Court.

14.91 The lifetime acquisition of deemed local connection applies not just to the asylum-seeker, but also, it would seem, to every member of his or her household who had been ‘provided with’ Home Office accommodation in that area. Applying that deemed local connection to a homeless applicant’s household means that any member of the applicant’s household who had, in the past, been provided with Home Office accommodation, whether in his or her own right or as part of the household of an asylum-seeker, therefore acquires a local connection. Nor does there appear to be any minimum period during which the asylum-seeker must occupy the Home Office accommodation for it to trigger a deemed local connection.

So, if a person moves into Home Office accommodation in District A on a Monday (having lived in District B for the previous nine months), is accorded refugee status on the Tuesday, and that accommodation burns down on the Wednesday, he or she will have a local connection with District A, and his or her application for homelessness assistance made on Thursday to District A could not be referred to District B or anywhere else.

14.92 There are two statutory qualifications to the deemed local connection triggered by occupation of Home Office accommodation. First, the deemed local connection is only acquired with the district in which the last accommodation provided by the Home Office was situated. If the asylum-seeker was moved around by the Home Office, it is only the last accommodation that can be considered as giving rise to the deemed local connection. Second, accommodation provided by the Home Office in an accommodation centre cannot constitute accommodation by which an applicant acquires a deemed local connection.

2 Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 22; English Code, para 10.24(b). Plans to build accommodation centres were abandoned by the then Labour government and s 22 has never been brought into force.
3 HA 1996, s 199(7)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 81(6)(b).

14.93 The deemed local connection category specifically refers to accommodation which was provided under s 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (IAA 1999). That is the main statutory power available to the Secretary of State to provide accommodation to asylum-seekers. It does not refer to other temporary accommodation, including accommodation provided under IAA 1999, s 98(4), or to hard cases support(4), or to accommodation provided by local authorities(5). Former asylum-seekers who were accommodated only under one of these latter provisions, therefore, will not have acquired a deemed local connection.

3 SI 1999/3056.

14.94 The deemed local connection provisions are only part of homelessness legislation for England and Wales – there is no such deeming provision in
14.94 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

Scotland. Instead, Home Office accommodation provided under IAA 1999, s 95 in Scotland is specifically not capable of giving rise to a local connection by virtue of normal residence because it is not ‘residence of his own choice’\(^1\). Asylum-seekers who occupied Home Office accommodation in Scotland do not, therefore, acquire a local connection with the local authority in Scotland for the area in which that accommodation is situated, by virtue of such residence alone. Instead, for a local housing authority in England considering an application from a former asylum seeker who had been provided with accommodation under IAA 1999, s 95, the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(2) to provide accommodation (if owed by a local housing authority in England to a former resident of Home Office accommodation in Scotland) is modified by s 11(2) and (3) of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants etc) Act 2004, so that a former asylum seeker is provided with accommodation for a period, giving him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation, and is given advice and assistance either to apply to a local authority in Scotland as homeless or to find his or her own accommodation\(^2\). These rules are discussed later in this chapter\(^3\).

Deemed ‘local connection’ for certain care leavers owed a duty under Children Act 1989, s 23C

14.95 By virtue of amendments made to HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017, a local connection is deemed to have been acquired by a young person to whom a duty is owed under Children Act 1989, s 23C by a local authority\(^1\). That duty is owed to any young person between the ages of 18 and 21\(^2\) or 25\(^3\) who was looked after\(^4\) by the local authority for a period of 13 weeks or more, beginning after his or her 14th birthday and ending after his or her 16th birthday\(^5\). A young person who is owed the duty under Children Act 1989, s 23C is known as a ‘former relevant child’\(^6\). He or she will be entitled to a personal advisor, a pathway plan and various other forms of assistance\(^7\).

district. If the local authority is not a local housing authority then the young person is deemed to have a local connection with every district of a local housing authority that falls within the area of the local authority.

The conditions for referral

14.100 By virtue of amendments made to HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017, a young person under the age of 21 who, by virtue of being accommodated under Children Act 1989, s 22A, was normally resident in the district of a local housing authority in England for a continuous period of at least two years, some or all of which fell before the person attained the age of 16, is deemed to have a local connection with that district.

3. HA 1996, s 199(10) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 8 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

There is no requirement that the young person should have been normally resident in the district by his or her own choice. Indeed, in many cases the residence will not have been of his or her choosing.

Contrast HA 1996, s 199(10) with s 199(1)(a).

See 14.60.

14.102 HA 1996, s 199(10) is a deeming provision. That is, a person who satisfies the requirements of HA 1996, s 199(10) is deemed to have a local connection with a district irrespective of the actual strength of his or her connection with the area. This deemed local connection will cease upon the young person reaching the age of 21, though he or she may still have a local connection acquired in one or more of the other circumstances specified in HA 1996, s 199.

Who acquires a local connection?

A relevant local connection may have been acquired (or deemed to have been acquired) by the applicant or by any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

HA 1996, s 198(2); H(W)A 2014, s 80(3). See also English Code, para 10.35; Local Authorities Agreement, para 4.3; Welsh Code, paras 18.5 and 18.9. The question of whether it is reasonable to expect a person to reside with the applicant arises both in relation to homelessness and priority need and is discussed at 10.29–10.30, 12.58–12.75.

Any local housing authority choosing to investigate the question of local connection must obviously, therefore, make inquiries into any potential local connection that any of the people who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant might have, either with its own district or any other district in England, Wales or (for applications to local housing authorities in England) Scotland.

The extent of any local connection enjoyed by any other member of the household (if that local connection is different from any enjoyed by the applicant) could be relevant in various scenarios. For example:

The conditions for referral 14.108

(1) The applicant has no local connection with the local housing authority to which she or he has applied and does have a local connection with another local housing authority, but a member of his or her household has a local connection with the local housing authority to which the application has been made: the conditions for referral are not met and the applicant cannot be referred.

(2) Neither the applicant nor any member of his or her household has a local connection with the local housing authority to which he or she has applied, the applicant has a local connection with another local housing authority and a member of the applicant’s household has a local connection with a different local housing authority: the conditions for referral are met, but the local housing authority dealing with the application has a discretion as to which local housing authority it will refer the applicant to (if it decides to make any referral) 1.

(3) The applicant has a connection with the local housing authority applied to, but a member of the household has a stronger connection with the district of another local housing authority. There can be no referral – the connection of the other household member(s) is irrelevant.

1 See 15.151–15.154.

Risk of violence or abuse (domestic or otherwise)

14.107 If the applicant is owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty 1 or the HA 1996, s 193(2) 2 main housing duty (England) or is owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty 3, has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally, (Wales) and he or she, or a member of his or her household:

(1) does not have a local connection with the district of the local housing authority to which the application is made; and

(2) does have a local connection with the district of another local housing authority in England, Wales or (for applications to local housing authorities in England) Scotland, the local housing authority in receipt of the application, and which has opted to consider local connection questions, must then inquire into whether or not:

(1) the applicant, or any member of his or her household, would run the risk of domestic violence (England) or domestic abuse (Wales) in that other local housing authority’s district; and

(2) the applicant, or any member of his or her household, had suffered violence or abuse in the district of that other local housing authority and it is probable that there would be further violence or abuse of a similar kind if he or she returned to that district. 4

14.108 The local housing authority is obliged to make inquiries itself into the risk of violence or abuse (domestic or otherwise); it is not sufficient for it to wait for the applicant to volunteer any relevant information.\(^1\)

\(^1\) R v Greenwich London Borough Council ex p Patterson (1994) 26 HLR 159, CA.

14.109 The wording of the statutory provisions puts victims of domestic violence or domestic abuse in a slightly different position from victims of other violence or abuse.

14.110 Under HA 1996, Pt 7, ‘violence’ means ‘violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out’\(^2\). The courts have decided that violence (whether domestic or otherwise) should be given a broad definition, encompassing not just physical violence but also ‘threatening or intimidating behaviour and any other form of abuse which, directly or indirectly may give rise to the risk of harm’\(^3\). The broad definition has been adopted in the English Code\(^4\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 198(3). The definition is the same as that applying to the definition of homelessness at HA 1996, s 177(1). See 10.79–10.91.

14.111 For local housing authorities in Wales, the word ‘abuse’ has been used in place of the word ‘violence’. ‘Abuse’ has been defined in H(W)A 2014, s 58(1)\(^1\) as ‘physical violence, threatening or intimidating behaviour and any other form of abuse which, directly or indirectly, may give rise to the risk of harm’\(^2\), reflecting the approach under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^3\).

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 99.

\(^2\) See further Welsh Code, paras 3.114 and 18.20–18.21.

\(^3\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See further 10.91–10.98.

Domestic violence or abuse

14.112 Violence or abuse is ‘domestic’ in nature if it is from a person who is associated with the victim. The phrase ‘a person who is associated with the victim’ is defined at HA 1996, s 178 and H(W)A 2014, s 58(2) and includes:

- spouses and former spouses;
- civil partners and former civil partners;
- cohabitants and former cohabitants (heterosexual or same-sex);
- people who live or used to live in the same household;
- relatives;
- people who have agreed to marry each other or to enter into a civil partnership; and
- people who share the parentage of, or parental responsibility for, a child (including the relationship between natural and adoptive parents)\(^1\).

The conditions for referral 14.116

2 Civil Partnership Act 2004, s 81 and Sch 8, para 61 amended HA 1996, s 178 to include references to civil partnerships and same-sex couples living together as though they were civil partners, in force from 5 December 2005.

14.113 The definition also includes adoptive and natural parents of a child, step-relatives, grandparents and grandchildren, siblings, uncles, aunts, nieces and nephews, and in-laws or former in-laws (including relatives of a civil partner or former civil partner). Under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 the definition also includes people who have had an intimate personal relationship with each other of significant duration.

1 HA 1996, s 178(1), (2), (3); H(W)A 2014, s 58(2), (3) and (5). See also 10.85 and 10.96.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 58(2).

14.114 If the issue of domestic violence or abuse is the subject of inquiries, the question is whether the applicant, or a member of the applicant’s household, will run the risk of domestic violence or abuse in the district of the local housing authority intended to be notified. It follows, therefore, that that person need not actually have been subject in the past to actual or threatened domestic violence or abuse there. Obviously, if there has been domestic violence or abuse, the relevant question to ask is whether it will recur. However, even where there has been no domestic violence or abuse in the past, if there is information that leads to the conclusion that the person would be at risk of violence or abuse from an associated person, the conditions for referral are not made out.

1 HA 1996, s 198(2)(c); H(W)A 2014, s 80(3)(c).

OTHER VIOLENCE OR ABUSE

14.115 If there is no domestic violence or abuse, the test is slightly different (although the Codes of Guidance do not draw attention to, or give guidance upon, the difference). There must have been violence, as defined by HA 1996, or abuse, as defined by H(W)A 2014, suffered in the district of the local housing authority likely to be notified, and it must be probable that the return to that district will lead to further violence or abuse of a similar kind. The past violence or abuse may have been carried out by any person, not being a person ‘associated’ with the victim.

1 English Code, paras 10.52–10.54; Welsh Code, paras 18.20–18.21.
4 HA 1996, s 198(2A); H(W)A 2014, s 80(4).

14.116 It follows that there are two questions for the local housing authority:

(1) Has there been violence or abuse?

(2) Is it ‘probable’ that the victim’s return to the notified local housing authority’s district will lead to further violence or abuse of a similar kind against the same victim?

1 ‘Probable’ means ‘more likely than not’ (Bond v Leicester City Council [2001] EWCA Civ 1544, [2002] HLR 6, CA).
14.117 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

14.117 The local housing authority is entitled to take the applicant’s perceptions, fears or concerns into account, but it is for the local housing authority to decide the facts, in order to answer these two questions objectively1.

14.118 Where there is a probability of violence or abuse, other than domestic violence or abuse, which is of a different kind to that previously experienced, the test will not be made out. Similarly, if any violence or abuse in the future were to be directed against another member of the household, the test will not be made out. Although there would be no statutory bar on a local housing authority referring a victim back to an area in which a different kind of non-domestic violence or abuse was likely to be suffered by another member of the household, it might be expected that a local housing authority would exercise its discretion not to refer in those circumstances.

14.119 The factual decisions as to:

1. whether there is a risk of domestic violence or domestic abuse; or
2. whether other violence or abuse occurred in the past; and
3. whether it is probable that there will be further violence or abuse of a similar kind in future, are for the local housing authority to make, and its decisions will be upheld by the courts, provided that it lawfully applies the correct statutory tests1.

Conditions for referral by reason of local connection – a summary

14.120 Only if:

- the applicant is owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1 relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty2, (England) or is owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty3 relief duty, has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally, (Wales); and
- neither the applicant, nor any member of his or her household, has a local connection with the district of the local housing authority to which he or she has applied; and
- either the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has a local connection with the district of another local housing authority in England, Wales or (for applications to local housing authorities in England) Scotland; and
- there is no risk of domestic violence or domestic abuse to the applicant or any member of his or her household in the district of the other local housing authority; and
- neither the applicant, nor any member of his or her household, had suffered violence or abuse the other local housing authority’s district; and
The conditions for referral 14.124

- if either the applicant, or a member of his or her household, had suffered violence or abuse in the other local housing authority’s district, it is not probable that there will be further violence or abuse of a similar kind against that person, are the conditions for referral under the local connection route made out.

1 As inserted by the HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189. Note, the case of an applicant who is owed the relief duty by a local housing authority in England can only be referred to another local housing authority in England. See HA 1996, s 198(A1) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 See 16.94–16.199.

3 See 17.73–17.117.

14.121 Where the conditions for referral are met, and there is a local connection with two or more different local housing authorities (not including the local housing authority which received the application), the original local housing authority has a discretion as to which of the other local housing authorities it should refer the applicant to (if any). When considering that discretion, it should take into account the applicant’s own preference.

1 English Code, para 10.34; Welsh Code, para 18.10.

14.122 Even if all the conditions for a referral are made out, the local housing authority is under no obligation to refer and has an unqualified discretion as to whether or not to refer.

The second set of conditions for referral – private rented sector offers

Introduction

14.123 The second set of circumstances in which the conditions for referral are met is much more self-contained and has nothing to do with the statutory definition of ‘local connection’. It arises where:

(1) an applicant had made an application for homelessness assistance on or after 9 November 2012 to a local housing authority in England; and

(2) the applicant accepted a private rented sector offer from that local housing authority of accommodation located in the district of another local housing authority in England; and

(3) the applicant subsequently made an application for homelessness assistance to the second local housing authority in England within two years of the date of acceptance of that offer.

4 HA 1996 198(2ZA) and (2A).

14.124 Its purpose is to ensure that applicants in those circumstances – who benefit from special provisions whereby the main housing duty will be owed to most applicants whether or not they have a priority need1 – remain the responsibility of the local housing authority which made the private rented sector offer. In particular, the availability of private rented sector offers and the restrictions on housing benefit make it likely that local housing authorities operating in areas of high private sector rents will make private rented sector offers in districts where rents are less expensive. If the assured shorthold tenancies secured under these arrangements end within two years of the date of acceptance, it is the local housing authority which made the private rented sector offer which will subsequently owe a main housing duty to the applicant2.

2 HA 1996, s 195A as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 8.100–8.107.

14.125 This set of conditions applies where both the first application and the subsequent application for homelessness assistance were made to local housing authorities in England. The first application for homelessness assistance must have been made on or after 9 November 20121.

14.126 This second set of conditions for referral does not apply in Scotland or Wales and cannot be used by a local housing authority in England to refer an applicant to a local authority in Scotland or Wales1.

1 Because HA 1996, s 198(2ZA) only applies to local housing authorities in England. Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, s 33 (the Scottish equivalent to HA 1996, s 198) and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 do not contain an equivalent provision to HA 1996, s 198(2ZA).

14.127 The provisions of the Local Authorities’ Agreement will apply, where relevant, to any disputes between local housing authorities as to whether or not this set of conditions for referral is met1.

1 Local Authorities Agreement, para 10.1.

The second set of conditions

14.128 The second set of conditions for a referral will be met where2:

(1) the applicant had previously applied to a local housing authority in England (authority A) on or after 9 November 20121;
(2) authority A had made the applicant a private rented sector offer4 in order to bring the main housing duty to an end1;
(3) the applicant accepted the private rented sector offer4;
(4) the applicant makes an application for homelessness assistance to authority B within two years of the date of his or her acceptance of the offer7;
(5) neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant’s household will run the risk of domestic violence in the district of authority A4;
The conditions for referral

(6) neither the applicant, nor any member of his or her household, had suffered violence or threats of violence that were likely to be carried out in the district of authority A; and

(7) if either the applicant, or a member of his or her household, had suffered violence in the district, of authority A, it is not probable that there will be further violence of a similar kind against that person.

1 English Code, para 10.54.
2 HA 1996, s 198(2ZA).
4 HA 1996, s 193(7AA).
6 HA 1996, s 193(7AA)(a).
7 See 8.100–8.107.

14.129 It should be noted that the relevant two-year period is that between the date of the applicant’s acceptance of the private rented sector offer from authority A and the date of his or her application for homelessness assistance to authority B. It is not from the date of the commencement of the tenancy.

14.130 The applicant will also be entitled to the benefit of the special provisions in HA 1996, s 195A. For most applicants, they will not need to have a priority need in order to be entitled to the main housing duty. If they are given a valid HA 1988, s 21 notice, they will also be deemed to be homelessness on the date on which the notice expires. These special provisions only apply on the first occasion when an applicant makes an application within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer. If the applicant subsequently accepts a second private rented sector offer, there are no special provisions if the applicant later makes a fresh application for homelessness assistance.

1 See 8.100–8.107.
2 HA 1996, s 195A(1). See 8.100–8.107. The exception is where the applicant is only owed the main housing duty because of the presence in his or her household of a ‘restricted person’ (defined at HA 1996, s 184(7), see 11.163–11.164). If that is the case, the applicant must still have a priority need in order to be entitled to the main housing duty (HA 1996 s 195A(3)). See 16.180–16.185.
3 HA 1996, s 195A(2). See 8.100–8.107. For priority need, see Chapter 12.

14.131 Unlike the special provisions in HA 1996, s 195A, this set of conditions for referral applies to all applicants who have accepted a private rented sector offer from one local housing authority and then make an application for homelessness assistance to another local housing authority within two years of acceptance. It does not matter whether the application being considered follows a first acceptance of a private rented sector offer, or a second, third or fourth acceptance. If the application for homelessness assistance is made within two years of any acceptance of a private rented sector offer.
14.131 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

offer, this set of conditions for referral will apply.

1 See 8.100–8.107.

14.132 This set of conditions does not require the applicant to be currently living in the private rented sector accommodation, which he or she had accepted. It may be that the tenancy has ended and the applicant has managed to find his or her own accommodation, whether another assured shorthold tenancy or some much more insecure arrangement. If the application for homelessness assistance is made within two years of the date of acceptance of the private rented sector offer, this set of conditions for referral will apply.

14.133 The second set of conditions for referral is not satisfied if the application for homelessness assistance is made to authority B more than two years after the date of acceptance of the private rented sector offer. If the application is made on the two-year anniversary itself, or any time after that, this set of conditions for referral will not apply and the only relevant set of conditions would be those relating to ‘local connection’.

1 HA 1996, s 198(2) and (2A), see 14.43–14.122.

14.134 The second set of conditions is also not satisfied if the applicant is someone other than the person who accepted the private rented sector offer. The special provisions at HA 1996, s 195A only apply to re-applications made by the same person who had accepted the private rented sector offer. So if the household would need to take advantage of those special provisions (perhaps because there is no longer any member of a household who has a priority need), the application should be made by the person who had accepted the private rented sector offer. On the other hand, if there is no benefit to the household in the special provisions at HA 1996, s 195A (because any member of the household would have a priority need), and the household would wish to avoid a referral back to authority A, the applicant could be a different member of the household from the one who had accepted the private rented sector offer.

14.135 It must be emphasised that the conditions stipulated are conditions for formal referral. Authority B cannot merely turn the applicant away to apply for himself or herself at authority A. The referral can only be made after authority B has satisfied itself, on completion of inquiries, that it would otherwise owe the applicant the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty. The duty which may arise to provide interim accommodation pending the outcome of those inquiries, remains on

14.136 Authority B must make inquiries into all the limbs of the test in HA 1996, s 198(2ZA) and (2A). The conditions for referral will not be satisfied merely by authority B establishing that the applicant had accepted a private rented sector offer from authority A and that the application for homelessness assistance was made within two years of the date of the acceptance. Authority B must also inquire into whether the applicant or any member of his or her household will run the risk of domestic violence in the district of authority A, whether the applicant, or any member of his or her household, had suffered violence in the district of authority A; and (if either the applicant, or a member of his or her household, had suffered violence in the district of authority A) whether it is probable that there will be further violence of a similar kind against that person.

14.137 It should also be remembered that authority B retains a discretion whether or not to refer the applicant to authority A. It may be that, even if this set of conditions for referral are made out, if the applicant also has a local connection with authority B, it would be reasonable on the facts of a particular case for authority B to decide not to refer him or her to authority A.

The third set of conditions for referral – out of district placements

Introduction

14.138 The third set of conditions for referral arises where an applicant has previously been placed by another local housing authority in England or Wales in the district of a local housing authority in England, to which a new application for homelessness assistance is being made. It is different from the second set of conditions for referral in that it applies where an applicant was occupying accommodation secured in performance of HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 duties rather than having accepted a private rented sector offer which brought those duties to an end.

14.139 Its purpose is to underscore the statutory presumption that homeless households should be accommodated in the district to which they first apply by ensuring that a local housing authority cannot relieve itself of some future responsibility by placing the applicant outside its own district. It was enacted in HA 1996, Pr 7 to meet the phenomenon of increasing numbers of local housing authorities placing their homeless households in other local housing authorities’ districts. These conditions for referral no longer apply to applications made to local housing authorities in Wales. H(W)A 2014, Pr 2 contains no equivalent provision to HA 1996, s 198(4).

1 HA 1996, s 208(1); H(W)A 2014, s 91(1). See 15.244–15.251 and 18.47–18.63.

14.140 The Codes and the Local Authorities Agreement are silent on what should happen if a local housing authority in England wishes to refer under these conditions to a local housing authority in Wales.

1 See 15.222–15.225.

14.141 This third set of conditions for referral does not apply in Scotland and cannot be used by a local housing authority in England to refer an applicant to a local authority in Scotland.

1 Because HA 1996, s 198(4) and (4A) only apply to applicants accommodated by local housing authorities in England and Wales under HA 1996, Pr 7 (as amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) or H(W)A 2014, Pr 2, and Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, s 33 (the Scottish equivalent to HA 1996, s 198) does not contain an equivalent provision to HA 1996, s 198(4). See 15.230–15.233.

The third set of conditions

14.142 The conditions for a referral will be met where:

(1) the applicant applies to local housing authority B for homelessness assistance;

(2) the applicant had previously been placed in the district of local housing authority A in performance of any of authority A’s homelessness functions under HA 1996, Pr 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pr 2; and

(3) the current application is made within a prescribed period running from the date of the application for homelessness assistance to authority A; and

(4) the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1 relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2)2 main housing duty would be owed to the applicant by authority B3.

1 As inserted by the HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

2 See 16.94–16.199.

3 HA 1996, s 198(4) and (4A).

14.143 The currently prescribed period is five years plus any period between the date of the applicant’s original application to authority A and the date of being placed in the accommodation in authority B’s district. This aggregate period is then applied running backwards from the date of the application to authority B (not from the date of authority B’s decision on that application).

2 So, if the applicant applied to local housing authority A on 3 June 2009 and was placed in the district of local housing authority B on 3 January 2010 (six months later) the prescribed period would not have expired until 3 January 2015 (five years and six months in all). If he or she applied to authority B on 30 August 2014, the conditions for referral to authority A will be met, even if authority B’s decision is taken several weeks or months later. If he or she applied to authority B on 1 September 2015, the conditions for referral will not be met.

14.144 This set of conditions for referral applies regardless of which of authority A’s statutory homelessness functions it was carrying out when it provided the accommodation. Throughout the whole of the prescribed period, authority A retains responsibility for that applicant. A local housing authority which moves a homeless household over a series of districts (eg interim accommodation in District B, followed by short-term temporary accommodation in District C, and then longer term temporary accommodation in District D) will find that it is triggering a new prescribed period of responsibility on each move.

14.145 This third set of conditions for referral may be satisfied whether the applicant has become homeless from the accommodation actually provided by authority A or from some other accommodation in authority B’s district. An applicant provided with accommodation in authority B’s district by authority A may have found his or her own accommodation in authority B’s district. Or he or she may have found accommodation elsewhere. However, if he or she becomes homeless again and applies to authority B within the prescribed period, the conditions for referral will be met and authority B may refer his or her application back to authority A.

14.146 It has already been noted that the statutory scope of initial inquiries that a local housing authority undertakes on an application for homelessness assistance has not been expressly expanded to include the information required to make out this third set of conditions for referral. Certainly there is no obligation on an applicant to volunteer (without being asked) the fact that he or she came into the local housing authority’s district on placement by another local housing authority.

1 See 14.29.

14.147 As with the second set of conditions for referral, it must be emphasised that these are conditions for formal referral. Authority B cannot merely turn the applicant away to apply for himself or herself at authority A. The referral can only be made after authority B has satisfied itself, on completion of inquiries, that it would otherwise owe the applicant the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty. The duty which may arise to provide interim accommodation pending the outcome of those inquiries, remains on authority B.

2 As inserted by the HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

3 See 16.94–16.199.

14.148 Since this third set of conditions for referral is separate from the conditions governing a local connection referral under the first set of conditions, it must follow that there is no strict need for authority B to consider whether the applicant might be at risk of domestic or other violence if he or she is referred back to authority A. However, authority B retains a discretion whether or not to refer\(^1\), once it has decided that the conditions are met, and any risk of violence would be relevant to the exercise of that discretion.

14.149 It must also follow that, even if the applicant has acquired a local connection with the district of authority B, by residence, employment, family association or special circumstances, the third set of conditions for referral is still met. Although, if the applicant has a local connection with authority B, particularly if he or she is employed in that district or has family associations, this should be a relevant consideration when authority B is deciding whether or not to exercise its discretion to refer.

14.150 The third set of conditions for referral is only met if the applicant to authority B was also the applicant to authority A. They do not apply to people with whom the applicant resides or might reasonably be expected to reside. This suggests that, if the placement in the district of authority B was as a result of authority A's duty owed to one member of the household, another member of the household could apply to authority B and the third set of conditions for referral would not be made out.

THE DECISION WHETHER OR NOT TO REFER

14.151 Once a local housing authority has decided that one of the three sets of conditions for referral is met, it must then decide whether or not to notify the other local housing authority of its opinion\(^1\). A local housing authority that failed properly to consider its discretion whether to refer, having determined that the conditions for referral were met, would have erred in law\(^2\). However, given the shortfall between housing supply and demand in many areas, there is nothing to prevent a local housing authority from adopting a general policy that it will normally refer an applicant in respect of whom the conditions are fulfilled, provided that it ensures that it considers any particular circumstances of an individual case that would suggest that a departure from the general policy should be made\(^3\).

\(^2\) R v East Devon District Council ex p Robb (1997) 30 HLR 922, QBD.
\(^3\) English Code, para 10.32.

14.152 Obviously, the applicant’s personal circumstances (including any risk of violence that does not fall within any of the statutory criteria prohibiting referral) are relevant to the local housing authority’s decision whether or not to notify\(^1\). There will be other cases in which the conditions for a referral are only tenuously met and where, for that reason and perhaps others, it would not be right to use the power to refer. In those and other cases, the local housing authority will want to consider ‘whether it is in the public interest’ to accept the relevant duty or to make a referral, taking into account the public expenditure involved and whether a referral involves disruption to an applicant’s employment or education, etc. In a case involving former asylum-seekers, who had a local connection by reason of having occupied accommodation provided by the Home Office, the notifying local housing authority was entitled to take into account the burden on its own resources and the importance of giving effect to Parliament’s intention in respect of the dispersal of asylum-seekers. Absence of family or friends in the district of the notified local housing authority was not a sufficient reason for the notifying local housing authority to decide against making a referral1.
Notification duties

2. Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 3.7.

14.153 In addition, when considering a referral, local housing authorities may take into account, where it is relevant, the general housing circumstances prevailing in the district of the local housing authority potentially to be notified1. Where the applicant or a member of his or her household has a local connection with more than one local housing authority (other than the local housing authority to which the application has been made), the notifying local housing authority should weigh up all relevant factors which will include the applicant’s own preference2.

2. English Code, para 10.34; Welsh Code, para 18.10.

14.154 There is no requirement on any local housing authority to notify another local housing authority of an application for homelessness assistance, even where it has decided that the conditions for referral are met. Local housing authorities are free to accept all those to whom they owe the relief duty1 or the main housing duty2 (England) or the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty3, (Wales) regardless of whether any set of the conditions for referral is met4.

NOTIFICATION DUTIES

Notification to the applicant

England

14.155 Where referral to another local housing authority is being pursued by a local housing authority in England, there are two occasions on which the local housing authority which received the application may need to notify the applicant of its decision1:

(1) ‘the first notification’: when it has decided that the conditions for referral are met, and that it intends to notify, or has notified, another local housing authority of that opinion; and

(2) ‘the second notification’: when it has later been decided (by the two local housing authorities agreeing, or by a referee) that the conditions for referral are or are not met.

1 See also 9.90–9.139.
2 HA 1996, s 184(4) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(3) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and s 200(1) and (1A) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018).
3 HA 1996, s 199A(3) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and s 200(2); H(W)A 2014, s 82(2).

14.156 Where the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed, the first notification is mandatory. However, if the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, the first notification is discretionary. The second notification is mandatory, irrespective of whether the referral has been made at the stage where the relief duty or the main housing duty would be owed.

4 HA 1996, ss 200(1) and (1A) as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. Note that this notification cannot be issued until the relief duty has come to an end.
5 HA 1996, s 199A(3) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and s 200(2).

14.157 There is no obvious reason for the lack of parity in notification requirements as between the two stages. The English Code, rather than drawing attention to the lack of parity, seems to proceed on the assumption that applicants will notified at every opportunity. As has been shown, the position is a little more complex than this. But while not strictly accurate, the advice in the English Code might be understood as an example of best practice.

14.158 The first notification duty enables a local housing authority, in effect, to give the applicant a ‘minded to refer’ notification so that all the issues can be explored with the applicant before another local housing authority is troubled with what might transpire to be an inappropriate or impermissible referral. Alternatively, if the question of referral appears straightforward, it permits one local housing authority to give notice of referral to another straight away, whilst simultaneously also notifying the applicant that this has been done.

1 When the purpose of the first notification is viewed in this way it might be thought that a local housing authority would be well-advised to issue the first notification in all cases prior to contacting the other local housing authority, irrespective of whether it is under a duty to do so, in order to ensure that it has before it all of the material which is relevant to the decision to refer, prior to making the decision.

14.159 If the referral is made at the stage when the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed, the local housing authority, in issuing the applicant with the first notification, is required to inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review of that decision. But there is in fact no such right of review. and any challenge would need to be brought by way of judicial review.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

3 Note the limits of HA 1996, s 202(1)(c). See further English Code, para 10.56.
4 See 19.306–19.327.

14.160 In contrast, there is a right to request a review of any decision to notify a local housing authority that the conditions for referral are satisfied at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed. But, as discussed at 14.156, a local housing authority is not required to issue the applicant with the first notification in these circumstances, and even if it chooses to do so it is not required to inform him or her of the right to request a review.

3 HA 1996, ss 200(1) and (1A) as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.161 This mismatch in the notification duties and review rights can only sensibly be attributed to a drafting error in the legislation. The potential for hardship caused by this mismatch may be mitigated to some extent by the fact that an applicant has the right to request a review of any decision as to whether the conditions for referral are, or are not, met (at whatever stage the referral is made) and the second notification must inform the applicant of this right and of the 21-day period in which the review must be requested.

2 HA 1996, s 199A(3) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and s 200(2).

Wales

14.162 Where referral to another local housing authority is being pursued by a local housing authority in Wales, there are (as is the case in England) two occasions on which the local housing authority which received the application may need to notify the applicant of its decision:

1 ‘the first notification’: when it has decided that the conditions for referral are met, and that it intends to notify, or has notified, another local housing authority of that opinion; and

2 ‘the second notification’: when it has later been decided (by the two local housing authorities agreeing, or by a referee) that the conditions for referral are or are not met.

1 See Welsh Code, paras 18.22–18.26.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 63(3).
3 H(W)A 2014, s 82(2).

14.163 Both notifications are mandatory. The local housing authority ‘must’ notify the applicant of both of these decisions. Each notification must inform the applicant that he or she has a right to request a review of the decision and of the 21-day period in which a review must be requested.

1. H(W)A 2014, ss 63(3) and 82(2).
2. H(W)A 2014, ss 63(4), 82(2) and 84.

Notification procedures between local housing authorities

14.164 Once the notifying local housing authority has formed the opinion that the conditions for referral are met and decided that a referral should be made, it is advised first to contact the local housing authority which it intends to notify by telephone and then confirm the notification in writing. A pro-forma written notification is provided in the Local Authorities’ Agreement. Each local housing authority is expected to have a nominated officer to deal with such notifications as are received. Unless there is likely to be a dispute between the local housing authorities, the notified local housing authority should immediately start to make appropriate arrangements to provide accommodation and not wait for the written confirmation to arrive.

If it does accept responsibility (or is found by a referee to be responsible), the notified local housing authority should reimburse the notifying local housing authority for the cost of the accommodation it has provided to the applicant, unless there has been undue delay in making the referral.

1. Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 6.1.
2. Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 6.2.
3. Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 6.1.
4. Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 7.4.

14.165 The notified local housing authority should reply to the notifying local housing authority (confirming whether or not it accepts responsibility) within ten days of receiving the written confirmation of notification.

DUTIES OWED TO AN APPLICANT WHOSE CASE IS REFERRED

England

14.166 For applications made to local housing authorities in England, once the first notification has been given to the applicant, any duty which the notifying local housing authority may have under HA 1996, s 188(1) to provide interim accommodation for the applicant comes to an end and the notifying local housing authority is not subject to either the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty (as the case may be) from that point on. This does not mean that the applicant is left without accommodation. Where the first notification has been given at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed, the notifying local housing authority must continue to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation under HA 1996, s 199A(2) until the second notification has been given, provided that it has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need. Similarly, where the first notification has been given at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, the notifying local housing authority must continue to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation under HA 1996, s 200(1) until the second notification has been given\(^1\).

In respect of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^5\) relief duty, the notifying local housing authority will, if it has reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need, be required to secure accommodation for his or her occupation while the duty is performed\(^6\). The 56-day period for the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^7\) relief duty will run from the date of the second notification\(^8\).

treated as having made his or her homeless application to the notified authority on that date\(^2\). Since the notifying local housing authority will already have decided that the applicant is homeless and eligible for assistance, and the notified local housing authority will only be permitted to revisit these findings in very limited circumstances\(^3\), this has the legal consequence that the notified local housing authority will owe the applicant the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\) relief duty from that point on\(^5\). To facilitate the performance of this duty the notifying local housing authority is required to provide the notified local housing authority with copies of any assessment of the applicant’s case which it may have carried out pursuant to HA 1996, s 189A\(^6\), together with any revisions to that assessment\(^7\). Further, where it appears to the notified local housing authority that the applicant has a priority need, it must secure that accommodation is available for his or her occupation\(^8\).

Wales

14.172 Once the first notification has been given to the applicant, the notifying local housing authority’s duty to provide interim accommodation for the applicant comes to an end. In its place, a duty to provide accommodation under H(W)A 2014, s 82(1) arises on the notifying local housing authority.

1 See 14.162.
2 H(W)A 2014, ss 69(2) or (3) and 73(2).
3 See 17.138–17.145.

14.173 If, after the first notification, it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, the notifying local housing authority will, upon the second notification being given, be required to pick up where it left off and perform the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty.

1 See 14.162.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 82(3). The duty to provide interim accommodation under H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) will also apply.

14.174 Alternatively, if, after the first notification, it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, the duties that would otherwise be applicable had the case not been referred, pass to the notified local housing authority. Specifically, once the second notification has been given to the applicant, the notifying local housing authority is no longer under a duty to provide accommodation for the applicant and the duty to provide accommodation passes to the notified local housing authority.

The Welsh Code recommends that applicants who have a priority need (which would include any applicant whose case is being referred) should be accommodated during the review process.

14.176 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

DISPUTES BETWEEN LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES

14.176 Where the notified local housing authority disagrees with the opinion of the notifying local housing authority, as to whether the conditions for a referral are made out, there is a special procedure for resolution of the dispute.\(^1\)

\(^1\) See 14.184–14.190.

14.177 However, the notified local housing authority may have a more fundamental disagreement with the referral. It may disagree with one or more of the notifying local housing authority’s earlier decisions: that the applicant is homeless and eligible for assistance, or that the applicant has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally. In other words, it may dispute the proposition that the applicant is owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty (England) or the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty (Wales). The sense of grievance may be particularly strong when the notified local housing authority had previously accepted an application by the very same applicant, but had decided a duty was not owed (perhaps because the notified local housing authority had decided that the applicant had become homeless intentionally). The prospect of the applicant then applying to a different local housing authority, with which he or she has no local connection, and that local housing authority inquiring into the same facts, but coming to a different conclusion and then referring the performance of the duty back to the original local housing authority is not one that the original local housing authority would find attractive. Although this may seem harsh to the notified local housing authority, an essential premise is that the notifying local housing authority has investigated all the circumstances ‘with the same degree of care and thoroughness . . . as it would for any other case’.\(^4\)

\(^4\) Local Authorities’ Agreement, para 6.3.

14.178 The courts have traditionally made it very clear that, once a local housing authority has determined that a duty is owed, and has notified another local housing authority that the conditions for referral are met, the notified local housing authority cannot re-open or go behind the inquiries and decisions made by the notifying authority as to the existence of that duty.\(^1\)

14.179 As a result of amendments made to the HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017,\(^2\) a limited exception to this principle arises in circumstances where an applicant’s case has been referred at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would have been owed. In these circumstances the notified local housing authority will be entitled to revisit the notifying local housing authority’s conclusions that the applicant is either homeless, eligible for assistance or did not become homeless intentionally if (and only if):

- the applicant’s circumstances have changed, or new information has come to light, since the notifying local housing authority’s decision; and
Disputes between local housing authorities 14.181

• the change in circumstances or new information justifies the notified local housing authority in reaching a different decision.

In these circumstances, the notified local housing authority is not entitled to refuse to accept the referral. Rather, the duty which it owes as a result of the acceptance of the referral will be modified according to the outcome of any new decision.

2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

4 HA 1996, s 199A(5)(a) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.180 In other circumstances, where this exception does not apply, if the notified local housing authority remains dissatisfied with the notifying local housing authority’s decision making, the notified local housing authority can challenge, through judicial review, the lawfulness of the inquiries made by the notifying local housing authority before it came to its decision that a duty was owed, or the legality of the decision itself. In R v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council ex p Camden London Borough Council, the notifying local housing authority (Camden) should have made inquiries of the notified local housing authority (Tower Hamlets) and considered Tower Hamlets’ reasons for finding that the applicant had become homeless intentionally, before making its own decision that a main housing duty was owed. In R v Newham London Borough Council ex p Tower Hamlets London Borough Council, Newham notified Tower Hamlets of its intention to refer an applicant whom Tower Hamlets had previously found to have become homeless intentionally. Tower Hamlets successfully challenged the lawfulness of Newham’s inquiries into the question of whether the applicant had become homeless intentionally.

1 For example, where the referral has been made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed. See English Code, para 10.50.
3 [1991] 1 WLR 1032, CA.

14.181 Where an applicant applies to the notifying local housing authority after refusing an offer of accommodation from the notified local housing authority (and the notified local housing authority had decided that its duty to the applicant had come to an end), the notifying local housing authority must accept the new application save where it is based on exactly the same facts as the first application. Once the application has been accepted the local housing authority must make inquiries to determine what duty if any is owed to the applicant. If it is decided that a duty is owed then the notifying local housing authority may seek to refer the applicant’s case, once again. If the notified local housing authority disputes, but does not challenge in the courts, the lawfulness of the notifying local housing authority’s decision that a duty would be owed, it cannot simply refuse to accept the referral. Nor can it seek to raise the matter as part of the procedures for resolving disputes over whether the conditions for referral are satisfied. It is bound by the notifying local housing authority’s decision unless that decision is withdrawn or is successfully challenged, and quashed, in judicial review proceedings. An applicant should never be required to bring his or her own legal proceedings to compel a local housing authority to act on a referral.

2. R (Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea) v London Borough of Ealing and Ms Hacene-Blidi (Interested Party) [2017] EWHC 24 (Admin), [2017] PTSR 1029, Admin Ct. In that case the High Court quashed Ealing’s refusal to accept a referral, in circumstances where no challenge had been brought to the rationality of Kensington and Chelsea’s decision that the applicant was owed the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(2) 1996.

3. R (Bantamagbari) v Westminster City Council [2003] EWHC 1350 (Admin), (2003) July Legal Action, p 27, Admin Ct; and R (Enfield London Borough Council) v Broxbourne Borough Council [2004] EWHC 1053 (Admin), (2004) May Legal Action, p 26, Admin Ct. Alternatively, if the exception at HA 1996, s 199A(5)(c) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) applies, then it may be entitled to revisit the decision as to what duty is owed to the applicant, following the acceptance of the referral.

14.182 In circumstances where the notified local housing authority is successful in persuading the notifying local housing authority to withdraw a referral on the basis that its underlying decision making as to the duty owed to an applicant is flawed, this does not entitle the notifying local housing authority to revisit its decision. This situation arose in R (Sambotin) v Brent London Borough Council1. Mr Sambotin applied as homeless to Brent London Borough Council, who accepted the HA 1996, s 193(2) 2 main housing duty but referred his case to Waltham Forest London Borough Council. Waltham Forest refused to accept the referral on the basis that it did not accept that the applicant was eligible3 for homelessness assistance. Brent then withdrew the referral and proceeded to revisit its earlier decision, substituting it for finding that the applicant was not eligible. On Mr Sambotin’s application for judicial review, the High Court quashed Brent’s decision. Absent fraud or deception on the part of the applicant or a fundamental mistake of fact, there was no power to revisit a decision once made4.

3. See Chapter 11.

14.183 The notified local housing authority can, however, perfectly properly dispute the notifying local housing authority’s opinion that the conditions for referral are met. The following paragraphs explain the procedure involved.

Determining disputes about whether the conditions for referral are met

14.184 The arrangements for resolving disputes between local housing authorities as to whether any of the three sets of conditions for referral are met have been negotiated and agreed between the organisations representing local
Disputes between local housing authorities

14.187 Authorities in England, Wales and Scotland and have been approved by the Secretary of State in the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998¹.

¹ SI 1998/1578, made under the Secretary of State’s powers at HA 1996, s 198(5) and approving the Guidelines for Local Authorities and Referees Agreement. By virtue of the Homelessness (Review Procedure) (Wales) Regulations 2015 SI 2015/1266 (W 86), reg 7 (see the CD Rom with this book), the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998, SI 1998/1578 is to be treated as if it had been made under H(W)A 2014, s 80(5)(b) and (6)(b), thereby transposing the arrangements for resolving disputes they contain into Welsh law. See further Welsh Code, paras 18.27–18.30.

14.185 If the notified local housing authority wishes to challenge the referral, in the sense of contending that the conditions for referral are not made out, it must state its written reasons in full within ten days of receiving the referral notification¹. On receipt of that response, the notifying local housing authority may accept the notified local housing authority’s position and withdraw the referral.

14.186 However, if there is no agreement between the two local housing authorities, the question of whether the conditions for referral are met should be decided by a referee. The referee should be appointed within 21 days of notification to the notified local housing authority of the referral¹. The local housing authorities agree to be bound by the referee’s decision. The two local housing authorities may themselves find and appoint an agreed referee, but if they cannot agree on the identity of the referee, one will be appointed by the chairperson of their appropriate local government organisation². The request for a referee to be appointed should be jointly made, or can be made by the notifying local housing authority alone if the notified local housing authority has failed to agree to accept the referral within six weeks of the referral having been made³.

² Local Authorities Agreement, para 10.3.

³ There is a small panel of referees established by the local authority organisations to perform this function. The list of panel members is maintained by the Local Government Association.

14.187 The referee, once appointed, invites both local housing authorities to submit representations within 14 working days. Each local housing authority will have the opportunity to consider the other’s representations, and to comment in writing on those representations within a further 10 working days. If the representations are insufficient, the referee can invite further representations on any issue that he or she considers necessary. Although the applicant is not a party to this particular aspect of the dispute, he or she should be sent the local housing authorities’ representations. It is up to the referee whether the applicant should be invited to comment, or to make written representations. The referee may choose to hold an oral hearing and the Local Authorities’ Agreement advises that an oral hearing might be necessary or more convenient where the applicant is illiterate, where English is not his or her first language, or where further information is necessary for the issues to be resolved¹.

14.188 The referee’s decision must be given in writing. The Local Authorities’ Agreement recommends that the decision should be reached ‘as quickly as possible’ and normally within one month from receipt of both the local housing authorities’ written representations. The decision should record the issues, the referee’s findings of fact, the decision and the reasons for the decision. Copies should be sent to both local housing authorities and the appropriate local government organisation. The notifying local housing authority should inform the applicant of the decision. One judge described the aims of the procedure in this way:

‘the legislature intended that these matters should be disposed of within a particular specified time frame and “as quickly as possible” and “promptly”. It is also obvious from the terms of that guidance that it is, as one would expect, contemplated by the legislature that the relevant applicant should be kept informed of what is going on, to a reasonable extent’.

1 Local Authorities Agreement, para 14.5.
2 Local Authorities Agreement, paras 18.2.

14.189 The applicant may then request a review of the referee’s decision, in which case a reviewer will have to be appointed by agreement between the two local housing authorities; this would commonly be another referee from the panel maintained by the local authority associations.1

14.190 The written decisions of the referees are collected by the local government associations and distributed among other members of the panel of referees (no doubt to encourage consistency of decision-making). They are not officially published. By the end of 2004 only some 120 decisions had been made by referees since the inception of the scheme in 1977. The great bulk had been made in the early years and over the past decade no more than a handful of disputes has been resolved by referees each year.1

1 In November 1980 the then London Boroughs Association produced an indexed Digest covering decisions 1–25. A supplement in May 1982 added decisions 26–43. A second update in December 1986 added and indexed decisions up to No 60. However, production of the Digest ceased with the issue of a final supplement in 1993 (which added decisions up to and including No 89 to the text). For an analysis of the operation of the local connection referrals during these years see R Thornton ‘Who Houses? Homelessness, Local Connection and Inter-Authority Referrals Under HA 1985, s 67’ [1994] 16 Journal of Social Welfare and Family Law 19.

CHALLENGES BY THE APPLICANT

Right to request a review

14.191 The applicant has the right to request the review of a number of the decisions that a local housing authority may make in connection with referral procedures, including:
Challenges by the applicant 14.195

(1) a decision made by the local housing authority to which the applicant applied, at the point where the HA 1996, s 193(2)¹ main housing duty (England) or H(W)A 2014, s 73² relief duty (Wales) would be owed, to notify another local housing authority⁴;

(2) any decision reached, by agreement between the two local housing authorities or by a referee’s decision, that the conditions for referral are met⁶; and

(3) any decision⁵ by either of the two local housing authorities as to which of them is subject to the HA 1996, s 193(2)⁶ main housing duty (England) or the H(W)A 2014, s 73⁷ relief duty (Wales)⁸.

² See 17.73–17.117.
³ HA 1996, s 202(1)(c); H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c). See 19.49–19.54. For applications made to local housing authorities in England there is no right to review of a decision to refer an applicant at the point where the relief duty under HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) would be owed. See English Code, para 10.56.
⁵ Under HA 1996, s 200(3) or (4) or under H(W)A 2014, s 80(3) or (4).
⁶ See 17.146–17.197.
⁷ See 17.73–17.117.

14.192 Those rights, read together with the requirements of notification to the applicant¹, have the effect that, during the referral process, the applicant could substantively challenge decisions to make a referral on two occasions and on a number of issues. It will be recalled that the applicant may receive up to two decisions:

(1) a decision made by the local housing authority to which he or she applied to notify another local housing authority⁶; and then

(2) a decision reached by agreement between the two local housing authorities or by a referee that the conditions for referral are met⁶.

² HA 1996, s 184(4) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(3) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) and ss 200(1) and (1A) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018); H(W)A 2014, s 63(3).

14.193 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales, the local housing authority is required to notify the applicant of both of these decisions¹ and both decisions can be challenged by the applicant making a request for a review should he or she wish to do so.

14.194 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England the position is more complicated and varies according to the point at which the applicant’s case is referred.

14.195 Where the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹ relief duty would be owed, the local housing authority is required to notify the applicant of the first decision. However, if the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, the local housing authority has a discretion as to whether to notify the applicant of the first decision. Incongruously, there is a right to a review of the first decision only where the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, and not where the referral is made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed.

14.196 In contrast, the second decision must be notified to the applicant, irrespective of whether the referral has been made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed. There is a right to a review of the second decision in all cases.

Right to a review of whether the first set of conditions for referral are satisfied

14.197 The applicant has, in effect, the right to request a review in relation to a local connection referral made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty (England) or the H(W)A 2014, s 73 relief duty (Wales) would be owed, of the notifying local housing authority’s decision that:

(1) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has no local connection with it; or
(2) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has a local connection with the district of another local housing authority; or
(3) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, will not run the risk of domestic violence in the district of the other local housing authority; or
(4) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has not suffered violence in the district of the other local housing authority; or
(5) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has suffered violence, but it is not probable that any return to the other local housing authority’s district will lead to further violence of a similar kind against the victim; or
Challenges by the applicant 14.199

(6) the other local housing authority should be notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the conditions for referral are met.

1 See 16.94–16.199.
2 See 17.73–17.117.

14.198 In addition, the applicant has the right to request a review in all cases, following a referral, of the local housing authorities’ agreement, or of a referee’s decision, that:

(1) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has no local connection with the local housing authority to which he or she applied;

or

(2) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has a local connection with the district of another local housing authority;

or

(3) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, will not run the risk of domestic violence in the district of the other local housing authority;

or

(4) the applicant or a member of his or her household, has not suffered violence in the district of the other local housing authority’s district;

or

(5) the applicant, or a member of his or her household, has suffered violence, but it is not probable that any return to the other local housing authority’s district will lead to further violence of a similar kind against the victim.

Right to a review of whether the second set of conditions for referral are satisfied

14.199 In relation to the second set of conditions for referral between local housing authorities in England, the applicant, where the referral has been made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, has the right to request a review of the notifying local housing authority’s decision that:

(1) he or she accepted a private rented sector offer from another local housing authority and has made his or her application for homelessness assistance within two years of the date of acceptance;

or

(2) he or she, or a member of his or her household, will not run the risk of domestic violence in the district of the other local housing authority;

or

(3) he or she, or a member of his or her household, has not suffered violence in the district of the other local housing authority;
14.199 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

(4) he or she, or a member of his or her household, has suffered violence, but it is not probable that any return to the other local housing authority's district will lead to further violence of a similar kind against the victim; or

(5) the other local housing authority should be notified of the local housing authority's decision that the conditions for referral are met.

1 HA 1996 s 198(2ZA) and (2A). See 14.123–14.137.
2 See 16.94–16.199.

14.200 In addition, the applicant has the right to request a review in all cases, following a referral, of the local housing authorities' agreement, or of a referee's decision, that:

(1) he or she accepted a private rented sector offer from another local housing authority and has made his or her application for homelessness assistance within two years of the date of acceptance; or

(2) he or she, or a member of his or her household, will not run the risk of domestic violence in the district of the other local housing authority; or

(3) he or she, or a member of his or her household, has not suffered violence in the district of the other local housing authority; or

(4) he or she, or a member of his or her household, has suffered violence, but it is not probable that any return to the other local housing authority's district will lead to further violence of a similar kind against the victim.

Right to a review of whether the third set of conditions for referral are satisfied

14.201 For applicants to local housing authorities in England, in relation to the third set of conditions for referral, the applicant, where the referral has been made at the stage where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed, has the right to request a review of any decision by the notifying local housing authority (authority B) that:

(1) the applicant was, on a previous application to authority A, placed in the district of authority B in performance of authority A's homelessness functions; or

(2) the previous application to authority A was made within the prescribed period of the application to authority B; or

(3) authority B should notify authority A of its decision that these 14.202 In addition, the applicant has the right to request a review in all cases, following a referral, of the local housing authorities' agreement, or of a referee's decision, that:

(1) the applicant was on a previous application to authority A placed in the district of authority B in performance of authority A's homelessness functions; or

(2) the previous application was within the prescribed period.

Circumstances where there is no right to a review

14.203 However, there is no statutory right to request a review of any of the other decisions involved in the process, including:

(1) a decision, by the local housing authority to which he or she has applied, to make or not to make inquiries into local connection or the other conditions of referral;

(2) a decision by the local housing authority that the conditions of referral are met, but that another local housing authority should not be notified of the application;

(3) a decision by a local housing authority in England to refer the applicant's case at the stage where the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed; and

(4) a decision by the notifying local housing authority not to exercise its power to provide accommodation pending determination of a request for a review of the decision made by the two local housing authorities jointly or by the referee.

Challenges to those four types of decision can only be brought by way

of a judicial review.\footnote{See 19.306–19.327.}

Review procedure

14.205 The procedure for requesting a review of any decision by the notifying local housing authority is the same as for any other request for a review, and the reviewer will be appointed by the notifying local housing authority in the usual way.\footnote{See 19.104–19.108 and 19.131–19.137.} The right to request a review arises upon notification to the applicant of a reviewable decision.\footnote{Berhane v Lambeth London Borough Council [2007] EWHC 2702 (QB), (2008) March Legal Action, p 21, QBD.}

14.206 If the request is to review a decision made as to whether the conditions for referral are met, the decision will have been made either by agreement between the notifying and notified local housing authorities, or by a referee. In either case, the request should be made to the notifying local housing authority.\footnote{Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Review Procedures) Regulations 1999, SI 1999/71, reg 6(1)(b); Homelessness (Review Procedure) (Wales) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/1266 (W 86), regs 2(1) and 1(3)(b).}

14.207 If the decision was one made by agreement between the two local housing authorities, then the review must be undertaken by them jointly. Presumably this will mean an arrangement for a joint committee or a joint panel of officers, or contracting out to a reviewer independent of both.\footnote{SI 1999/71, reg 1(2)(b)(i).}

14.208 If a referee made the decision, then the reviewer should be a person jointly appointed by the local housing authorities within 5 working days from the day on which the review request was received by the notifying local housing authority. This appointee could be anyone to whom both local housing authorities are prepared to entrust the review process who has no personal interest in the dispute, no connection to the applicant and is not employed by either authority or a council tax payer in either area. If an appointment is not agreed within that time frame, the notifying local housing authority (which has received the review request) has a further 5 working days to ask the chair of the Local Government Association (LGA) to appoint another referee. The chair of the LGA must then appoint a referee within a further seven days from among the membership of a panel appointed by the LGA. That person then undertakes the review. Although this may appear to be a very tight time frame, the membership of the panel comprises only a handful of referees, one of whom is already eliminated because he or she took the decision. Whether appointed by the local housing authorities or by the LGA, the reviewer will in this chapter be referred to as to the ‘appointed’ reviewer.\footnote{SI 1999/71, reg 7(1); SI 2015/1266 (W 86), reg 4(2).}

14.209 Once the appointed reviewer has been appointed, the local housing authorities should supply the reasons for the decision under review, together with information and evidence in support. The appointed reviewer will inform the applicant of the procedure to be followed during the review process and that he or she may make written representations. The request for a review and representations made by the applicant should be sent to the local housing authorities and they should be invited to respond. If there is thought to be a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision, further written or oral representations should be invited.

14.210 If the appointed reviewer is a person appointed by agreement between the two local housing authorities, the review decision must be notified to the applicant within ten weeks from the date of the request for the review. If the appointed reviewer was appointed from a panel, the period is 12 weeks for notification to the applicant, and the review decision will be notified to the local housing authorities one week prior to notification to the applicant, in order to give the local housing authorities concerned time to notify a review decision within the 12-week period.

14.211 Once the review has been determined, and the decision on review notified to the applicant, the applicant may appeal to the county court against the review decision. The exercise of this right is entirely separate from any dispute that may be going on between the two local housing authorities. In one case, the county court judge’s decision to adjourn the appeal whilst the notifying and notified local housing authorities sought to resolve their dispute was criticised by an appeal judge because it ‘denies the appellant effective access to the court, where there is, or is likely to be, undue delay on the part of the relevant respondent’.

The power to assist former asylum-seekers who occupied Home Office accommodation in Scotland

14.212 Former asylum-seekers who leave accommodation in Scotland provided by the Home Office under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, s 95 and then apply as homeless to local housing authorities in England will not normally have a local connection with the district of the local authority in...
Scotland (unless by reason of employment, family associations, or some other special circumstance).

14.213 Providing the applicant is homeless¹ and eligible for assistance², he or she will be owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2)³ relief duty by the local housing authority in England to which he or she has applied. Normally, when the HA 1996, s 189B(2)³ relief duty comes to an end, an applicant who remains homeless and has a priority need⁴ would be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2)⁴ main housing duty. However, legislation passed in 2004 provides that where local housing authorities in England would otherwise owe the HA 1996, s 193(2)⁷ main housing duty towards these former asylum-seekers, the duty does not apply⁸. There is no equivalent provision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.

⁸ Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants etc) Act 2004, s 11(2) and (3).

14.214 Instead, the local housing authority in England has a power (but no duty):

- to provide accommodation for the former asylum-seeker for a period that would give him or her a reasonable opportunity of obtaining accommodation; and
- to provide advice and assistance with any attempts he or she may make to obtain his or her own accommodation¹.

14.215 The idea is that the former asylum-seeker will either obtain his or her own accommodation in England, with assistance from the local housing authority (if the local housing authority chooses to provide it), or will return to Scotland and make an application for homelessness assistance to a local authority in Scotland¹. Indeed, the English Code specifically suggests that the local housing authority consider:

‘providing such advice and assistance as would enable the applicant to make an application for housing to the Scottish authority in the district where the section 95 accommodation was last provided, or to another Scottish authority of the applicant’s choice’.

¹ Since an application for homelessness assistance can be made in any manner and should not require completion of the local housing authority’s standard form, the former asylum-seeker could be assisted to make an application to any local authority in Scotland by writing, by fax, or even by email. There should be no need to leave any accommodation provided by the local housing authority in England or in Wales until the local authority in Scotland has notified the applicant that the application for homelessness assistance has been received and that suitable accommodation will be provided.

Cross-border referrals 14.221

14.216 Since, under Scottish law, the former asylum-seeker will most likely have no local connection with any local housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland, a local authority in Scotland will be subject to the main housing duty. There is no need for the former asylum-seeker to apply to the Scottish local authority in Scotland in whose district he or she had been accommodated by the Home Office. He or she could apply to any Scottish local authority.

1 English Code, para 10.29.

14.217 The surprising effect of this provision is to put a former asylum-seeker who was dispersed to Scotland by the Home Office but has become homeless unintentionally from Home Office accommodation and wishes to apply for accommodation to a local housing authority in England in a worse position than a person who has become homeless intentionally. At least an applicant who has become homeless intentionally would (if he or she had a priority need) be owed the HA 1996, s 190(2) short term accommodation duty1 when the HA 1996, s 189B(2)2 relief duty came to an end.

1 See 16.81–16.93.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

14.218 Any decision by the local housing authority that such an applicant is caught by these provisions and not owed the HA 1996, s 193(2)1 main housing duty would be a decision as to ‘what duty (if any) is owed’. The applicant would have a right to request a review of that decision under HA 1996, s 202(1)(b).

1 See 16.94–16.199.

14.219 The powers given to local housing authorities in England under the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants etc) Act 2004 (whether or not to provide accommodation and/or whether or not to provide advice and assistance) are discretionary powers and carry no statutory right to request a review. If a local housing authority decided not to exercise these powers, any challenge could only be brought on a point of law in judicial review proceedings.1

1 See 19.306–19.327 for judicial review.

14.220 An applicant who had been provided with accommodation under the interim duty owed by the local housing authority in England would be entitled to reasonable notice of the termination of that accommodation.1

CROSS-BORDER REFERREES

14.221 All the countries of the UK1 operate statutory homelessness schemes. This book is concerned only with the detailed schemes for England and Wales found in HA 1996, Pt 72 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, respectively. But cross-border referrals may arise between local housing authorities in England or in Wales and when local housing authorities in England or in Wales make referrals to, or are asked to receive referrals from, other countries in the UK.
14.221 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

1 England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. See Interpretation Act 1978, s 5 and Sch 1; and see Box 1 at 11.28.

2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Referrals within England and Wales

14.222 The referral arrangements in HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 govern all referrals between local housing authorities in England or Wales. They apply to referrals between:

- a local housing authority in Wales and one or more other local housing authorities in Wales;
- a local housing authority in England and one or more other local housing authorities in England;
- a local housing authority in England and one or more local housing authorities in Wales; and
- a local housing authority in Wales and one or more local housing authorities in England.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.223 However, the schemes under HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 are not identical. For example the case of an applicant who is owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty by a local housing authority in England can only be referred to another local housing authority in England. The net result is a potential for disparity between the treatment of an application for homelessness assistance by a local housing authority in Wales as compared to that by a local housing authority in England. An applicant to a local housing authority in Wales might well be accepted as having priority need in circumstances in which no priority need would be found by a local housing authority in England (because of the differences between the priority need classes). The result may be that the conditions of referral from Wales to England are made out where the conditions for referral of the same application from England to Wales would not be, since the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(2) would not be owed.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.189.

3 HA 1996, s 198(A1) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.224 These nuances cannot, however, make any difference to the application of the first set of referral conditions discussed in this chapter. For example, if a local housing authority in Wales finds that it owes the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty to an applicant who has a priority need, who has not become homeless intentionally, who has no local connection with its district but who does have a local connection with a local housing authority in England (and would run no risk of violence by returning there), it may make a referral. No doubt, in considering the exercise of its discretion whether to refer\(^1\), it might wish to take into account that, on the same facts, the notified local housing authority might not have owed the main housing duty at all.

14.225

However, as this chapter has described, an applicant to a local housing authority in England who had previously accepted a private rented sector offer\(^1\) from a local housing authority could be referred back to that local housing authority under the second set of conditions for referral\(^2\). Likewise, an applicant to a local housing authority in England who was placed in the local housing authority’s district by another local housing authority in England or Wales pursuant to its functions under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^3\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 could be referred back to the first local housing authority under the third set of conditions for referral\(^4\). This is not the case for applications made to local housing authorities in Wales. A local housing authority in Wales would have no power to refer the applicant’s case back to another local housing authority in Wales or to a local housing authority in England in these circumstances.

\(^3\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Referrals to the Isles of Scilly

The Isles of Scilly are administratively part of England\(^5\), but special measures have been taken to protect the very limited stock of social housing on those islands. HA 1996\(^6\) enables the Secretary of State to make an order adapting HA 1996, Pt 7\(^7\) in its application to the Isles of Scilly, and that power has been used\(^8\). So, for example, there are special provisions governing eligibility for applicants applying there\(^9\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 225(1).

\(^3\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Cross-border referrals

To prevent these eligibility rules being circumvented by an application directed initially to a local housing authority elsewhere, modifications have been made by Order to arrangements for referral by other local housing authorities to the Isles of Scilly Council.

If a homeless applicant applies to a local housing authority elsewhere in England or in Wales and the conditions for a local connection referral to the Council of the Isles of Scilly would otherwise be met, they are displaced by special rules. The intended effect of the Order\(^1\) is that the applicant will only have a local connection with the Isles of Scilly if she or he has resided in the district of the Isles of Scilly Council for two years and six months during the three years prior to the date that the latest application for homelessness assistance is made. If that period of residence is established, there is a deemed local connection in place of the normal local connection provisions\(^2\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 199(1).

14.229 It is recognised that the Isles of Scilly may need to accommodate some of its homeless applicants on the mainland. As a result, local housing authorities in England can refer back to the islands if the second or third set of conditions for a referral is made out\(^1\). This is because the HA 1996, s 225(2) power to modify HA 1996, Pt 7\(^2\) has not been used in relation to this set of conditions.

\(^1\) See 14.123–14.150. However, for either of the second or third conditions for referral to apply, the Isles of Scilly would have had to have made private rented sector offers of accommodation or to have secured accommodation for an applicant in the district of a local housing authority in England, which seems unlikely.
\(^2\) As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Referrals to Scotland

14.230 The provisions of HA 1996, Pt 7 enable local housing authorities in England to make referrals to local authorities in Scotland in a similar way as they might make a referral to another local housing authority in Wales. There is no equivalent provision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The Local Authorities’ Agreement\(^1\) was drawn up with the co-operation of the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities (CoSLA) and applies in the same way to referrals to local authorities in Scotland as it would to any other referral.

\(^1\) See 14.19 fn 3.

14.231 The Local Authorities’ Agreement provides that, where there is a cross-border dispute, the relevant law to be applied is that relevant to the location of the notified local housing authority\(^1\). This only applies to the issue of whether or not the conditions for referral are or are not made out, and not to any other disagreements that the notified local housing authority may have with the decision of the notifying local housing authority\(^2\).

\(^1\) Local Authorities Agreement, para 11.2.

14.232 The only procedural difference is that if the notified local authority (in Scotland) does not accept that the conditions for referral are made out and is unable to agree with the notifying local housing authority (in England or in Wales) on the identity of a referee to resolve the dispute, then it is CoSLA which appoints a referee in default of such agreement\(^1\). The adjudication will then be governed by the procedural rules in the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) (Scotland) Order 1998.

1. Local Authorities Agreement, para 11.4.

14.233 If the conditions for a referral are not made out, a local housing authority in England may nevertheless invite a local authority in Scotland to assist in the discharge of HA 1996, Pt 7 functions. The local authority in Scotland would be bound to co-operate with that request to such extent as was reasonable in the particular circumstances. A local housing authority in Wales would also be entitled to make such a request but there would be no statutory obligation on the local housing authority in Scotland to cooperate.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 213(1).
3 H(W)A 2014, s 95.

Referrals from Scotland to England

14.234 The capacity of a local authority in Scotland to refer an application for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority in England will primarily be regulated by the law of Scotland (which is beyond the scope of this book). Note that under Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, s 33(1) a local housing authority in Scotland may refer a case to England or Wales. However, under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 there is no corresponding provision to receive such a referral. Contrast this with HA 1996, ss 201 and 201A (for local housing authorities in England to receive referrals from Scotland and Wales) and H(W)A 2014, s 83 (for local housing authorities in Wales to receive referrals from England). As such it is very difficult to see how the referral mechanism from Scotland to Wales can possibly operate.

14.235 It should be noted that there are several differences in the operation of homelessness provisions, including those relating to referrals, as between Scotland and England. For example:

- the priority need test has been abolished in Scotland;
- applicants in Scotland have no statutory right to seek a review of a decision to refer them to a local housing authority in England or Wales;
- the second and third sets of conditions for a statutory referral (reference back to a local housing authority which made a private rented sector offer or placed the applicant in the present local housing authority’s area) do not extend to Scotland; and
- the deemed local connection for residents of Home Office accommodation is not part of the law of Scotland.

1 Homelessness (Abolition of Priority Need Test) (Scotland) Order 2012, SI 2012/330.
3 Because HA 1996, Pt 7, as amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, (and in particular HA 1996, s 193(7AA)) does not apply to Scotland.
4 HA 1996, s 199(6) and (7), added by Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants etc) Act 2004, s 11(1).
14.236 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

14.236 However, if a local authority in Scotland (applying the law of Scotland) forms the opinion that the conditions for a referral to a local housing authority in England are met, it may notify the local housing authority in England to that effect. If the notified local housing authority accepts that the conditions for a referral are satisfied, then the application is referred in the normal way. If the local housing authority in England does not accept that the necessary conditions are satisfied, a referee will be appointed by agreement or in default by the Local Government Association. The adjudication will then be governed by the procedural rules in the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order.

1 Local Authorities Agreement, para 10.3.
2 SI 1998/1603. See Local Authorities Agreement, para 11.4.

14.237 If the conditions for a referral are not made out, a local authority in Scotland may nevertheless invite a local housing authority in England or Wales to assist in the discharge of its homelessness duties. The local housing authority in England or in Wales would be bound to co-operate with that request to such extent as was reasonable in the particular circumstances.

1 HA 1996, s 213.

14.238 The Homelessness etc (Scotland) Act 2003 contains powers under which ministers of the Scottish Executive may effectively abolish the referral powers of local authorities in Scotland so that responsibility for a homeless person in Scotland will remain with the local authority to which an applicant first applies. The powers have yet to be used.

1 Homelessness (Scotland) Act 2003, s 8.

Northern Ireland

14.239 Northern Ireland has its own self-contained legislative scheme for homelessness. No doubt because there is a single authority dealing with applications for homelessness assistance in Northern Ireland (the Housing Executive), there are no ‘local connection’ or other referral provisions in the scheme. There is no power for the Executive to refer an application to a local housing authority in England, Scotland or Wales. Likewise, there is no power to make a referral in the other direction. Any referral could therefore only be through informal, co-operative arrangements.

The Isle of Man

14.240 The Isle of Man has its own separate jurisdiction and, indeed, a self-contained legislative scheme defining the right of residence. There are no legislative powers permitting referrals from the Isle of Man to local housing authorities in England or in Wales, or vice versa. Any referral could only, therefore, be informal through co-operative mechanisms, and the Isle of Man would be unlikely to co-operate unless the applicant had the right to reside under its statutes.

1 Residence Act 2001, s 9 (not yet brought into effect).

INFORMAL REFERRALS

14.241 This chapter has been primarily concerned with the formal mechanisms by which a local housing authority can refer a homelessness applicant to another local housing authority to be accommodated in another local housing authority’s district. Where those provisions do not apply, the normal rule is that the local housing authority that has accepted the application must accommodate the applicant in its own district.

1 HA 1996, s 208(1); H(W)A 2014, s 91(1).

14.242 But there is a wide range of circumstances beyond those covered by the formal referral arrangements when the provision of accommodation in the area of another local housing authority may be appropriate. For example:

• the applicant may not be safe (in that there is a risk of domestic or other violence) in the district of the local housing authority which has accepted his or her application and with which she or he may enjoy a local connection; or

• the applicant may have other compelling reasons (eg relating to health or education or the need to be near a carer) for asking that local housing authority to provide accommodation in another local housing authority’s district; or

• the local housing authority may simply be unable to provide any accommodation which is suitable for the applicant in its own district; or

• the local housing authority may have sought to make a referral under the formal provisions, and then been satisfied by the notified local housing authority’s response that the conditions for referral were not made out, yet the applicant may still wish to be accommodated in the other local housing authority’s area.

1 English Code, para 17.54.

14.243 The following paragraphs explore the extent to which there is scope under HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 for a local housing authority to provide accommodation in another local housing authority’s district outside the tailor-made referral provisions.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Unilateral placements in another district

14.244 Strictly, a local housing authority which has accepted a responsibility to accommodate an applicant, but finds that it is not ‘reasonably practicable’ to accommodate that applicant in its own district, can provide accommodation in the district of another local housing authority (provided that it is suitable), and may do so without any prior reference to that other local housing authority at all. A local housing authority might be tempted to do precisely that when it comes to its most needy and vulnerable applicants, so that the burden of meeting their special needs (for example, in relation to education or adult care or children’s services) falls on another district.

1 HA 1996, s 208(1); H(W)A 2014, s 91(1).

14.245 The legality of such placements fell for consideration by the Supreme Court in Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council. The judgment reaffirms the significance of the requirement on local housing authorities to place applicants within their own district so far as is reasonably practicable. ‘Reasonably practicable’ is a stronger duty than an obligation simply to act reasonably. If it is not reasonably practicable to secure accommodation within the local housing authority’s own district, it should try to place the household as close as possible to where it was previously living. Ideally, each local housing authority should maintain and publish a policy of procuring units of accommodation within its own district and a separate policy on how those units of accommodation would be allocated.

14.246 Where an ‘out of district’ placement is made, HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 require the placing local housing authority to give notice of any such placement to the other local housing authority. Notice is not required in advance but must be given within 14 days of the provision of accommodation in the notified local housing authority’s district.

1 English Code, paras 17.46–17.61. There is no comparable guidance in the Welsh Code addressing specifically the operation of H(W)A 2014, s 91, though the location of accommodation more generally is dealt with at paras 19.13–19.24.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 208(2); H(W)A 2014, s 91(2).
4 HA 1996, s 208(4); H(W)A 2014, s 91(4).

14.247 HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, set out the formal requirements of the notice (name of applicant, address of the accommodation, etc) including the provision of the date on which accommodation was provided to the applicant.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 208(3); H(W)A 2014, s 91(3).

14.248 The duty to notify an ‘out of district’ placement applies whenever a local housing authority is discharging any accommodation duty owed under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 by securing accommodation in another district, whether the accommodation being provided is provided by a social or private sector landlord or anyone else. Thus, it is not confined to placement of those owed the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(2) or the H(W)A 2014, s 73 duty. For example, it applies whenever accommodation is being provided on an interim basis pending a decision on an application. Experience suggests that, particularly in relation to interim accommodation where there can be a reasonably rapid turnover of households, the notification duty is honoured in the breach.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 188(1); H(W)A 2014, s 68(1). See 16.37–16.73.

14.249 The duty to notify does not apply where a local housing authority in England owes the main housing duty to an applicant and makes him or her a private rented sector offer in the district of another local housing authority. This is surprising as the second local housing authority will become responsible for education, adult care or children's services and any other needs that the applicant and his or her household has. In addition, in England, if the applicant makes a further application for homelessness assistance to the second local housing authority more than two years after he or she had accepted the private rented sector offer, any duty to accommodate under HA 1996, Pt 7 will fall on the second local housing authority.

2 Because the second set of conditions for referral at HA 1996 s 198(2ZA) and (2) will not be met. See 14.123–14.137.

14.250 The simple dispatch of a notice is not sufficient to relieve the placing local housing authority of any responsibility for the homeless household. The English Code reminds placing local housing authorities to consider the particular needs of a household being accommodated out of the area and advises that households who need adult care or children's services support or need to maintain links with specialist medical services, special schools or other essential services within the authority's district should be given priority for accommodation within that district.

1 See R (E) v Islington London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 1440 (Admin), (2017) 20 CCLR 148, Admin Ct for the procedural requirements in instances where there are children in the household.
2 English Code, para 17.56.

14.251 Where a household is placed in a different district from the district of the local housing authority to which it applied, it might be prudent for that household to apply for long-term social housing under both local housing authorities' allocation schemes.

Placements by co-operation between local housing authorities

14.252 HA 1996, Pt 7, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, the Codes and the Local Authorities' Agreement are all replete with references to the need for local
14.252 Referral Between Local Housing Authorities

Housing authorities to co-operate with one another in their dealings with homeless applicants. Obviously, it is particularly important for local housing authorities to co-operate where a homeless household is being re-located from the district of the local housing authority to which it applied to another local housing authority’s district.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.253 The legislation facilitates that necessary co-operation in two ways. First, HA 1996, Pt 7 requires any local housing authority receiving a request for assistance in discharging HA 1996, Pt 7 functions from another local housing authority, to give such assistance as is reasonable in the circumstances. The corresponding provision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 requires a local housing authority receiving a request to cooperate save to the extent that such cooperation would be incompatible with that local housing authority’s own duties or otherwise have an adverse effect on the exercise of its functions: a stronger duty. Secondly, HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 enable a local housing authority to perform its housing functions by securing accommodation for the applicant from some other person than the local housing authority itself. That other person might be a different local housing authority.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

14.254 The most frequent instance of local housing authorities co-operating occurs when local housing authorities with surplus accommodation make that stock available to other local housing authorities. These arrangements are particularly encouraged by the Codes. Increasingly sophisticated schemes have been developed to match homeless applicants who apply to high demand areas with accommodation in lower demand areas (even though they may have previously had no connection with those areas). Most of those schemes work on the premise that the applicant is willing to take up the opportunity of a home elsewhere.

1 English Code, Chapter 2 and para 16.15 generally on the importance of joint working; Welsh Code, paras 6.1–6.12

14.255 The power given to local housing authorities to make private rented sector offers, coupled with the restrictions on the levels of housing benefit paid to claimants, make it more likely that local housing authorities in districts where private rents are high will make private rented sector offers in districts where the rents are comparatively cheaper. The effects of such placements have yet to be fully researched.

14.256 It is not permissible for the local housing authority (to which an applicant has applied) to use the mere existence or activation of these co-operative arrangements as a purported performance of its own duties. However, where a local housing authority has satisfied itself that another local housing authority is prepared to accommodate the applicant and that the accommodation to be provided for the applicant will be suitable, the main housing duty owed to an applicant can be performed upon the other local housing authority accepting that it would accommodate him or her.

1 See R v Bromley London Borough Council ex p Cafun (2001) January Legal Action, p 27, Admin Ct, where Bromley had told the applicant that Greenwich, its neighbouring borough, would accommodate her. The court held that simple activation of the co-operative arrangements between the two boroughs was not enough. Bromley had to ensure that accommodation suitable for that particular applicant was actually going to be provided by Greenwich before its duty could be said to have been performed. Had Bromley satisfied itself that was the case, placing her in Greenwich would potentially have been lawful and its duty would have been discharged.

2 R v Bristol City Council ex p Browne [1979] 1 WLR 1437, QBD. Though note that a specific unit of accommodation would need to have been made available. The hypothetical existence of a unit of accommodation based on the fact that the other local housing authority had accepted a duty would not suffice. See Johnston v Westminster City Council [2015] EWCA Civ 554, (2015) Legal Action, p 54, CA.

14.257 The second common form of co-operative out-of-district placements is a reciprocal arrangement, whereby one local housing authority agrees to accommodate an applicant who has applied as homeless elsewhere, and, in response, can place one of its homeless applicants in the transferring local housing authority’s district. The Codes advise local housing authorities that this form of co-operation is particularly appropriate where an applicant has ‘special housing needs’ which can better be met in one area than another, or where the applicant needs be placed elsewhere to avoid the risk of violence in the area of the local housing authority to which he or she applied. The Local Authorities’ Agreement also promotes such reciprocal arrangements where, for one reason or another, a strict application of the formal referral rules would not result in a successful referral.

1 English Code, para 16.15. Welsh Code, para 19.32 advises that a reason to place out of area might include where the applicant or a member of his or her household has been at risk of abuse, or where ex-offenders or drug/alcohol users would benefit from being accommodated outside the districts to help break links with previous contacts who could exert a negative influence.

2 For example, where the only ground for a local connection with the notified local housing authority would be ‘special circumstances’ or where a local connection is made out with the notifying local housing authority but the applicant does not wish to live in that local housing authority’s area: Local Authorities Agreement, paras 4.4 and 6.4.

INTRODUCTION

15.1 The Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017) broadens the range of duties owed by local housing authorities in England under the Housing Act 1996, Pt 7 (HA 1996) in very significant ways. Local housing authorities in England now owe duties to help and support eligible applicants who are homeless, or threatened with homelessness, regardless of whether those applicants also have a priority need or became homeless intentionally. These duties are intended to provide much more assistance to applicants who are trying to retain their accommodation, or are looking for new accommodation, than the previous duties of ‘advice and assistance’ provided in practice. These new duties do not require a local housing authority to secure accommodation for the applicant, although interim accommodation must be secured while the duties are being performed if the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, may be eligible for assistance and may have a priority need.

15.2 HRA 2017 operates by substantially amending HA 1996, Pt 7. The changes came into force on 3 April 2018 and apply to all applications for homelessness assistance, made on or after that date. A new Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities (the English Code) was published on 22 February 2018 and amended in June 2018. Chapters 11–14 of the English Code provide guidance on the contents of this chapter. We begin this chapter by providing an overview of the duties that fall short of the immediate provision of accommodation, before considering the background to HRA 2017 that led to the expansion of these duties and some of the key concepts underpinning it. We will then go on to consider the duties in detail.

OVERVIEW

15.3 HRA 2017 amends HA 1996, Pt 7, with the effect that local housing authorities owe duties to all eligible applicants as long as they are either threatened with homelessness or homeless. In accordance with Parliament’s intention to encourage early intervention, the definition of ‘threatened with homelessness’ has been expanded by amendments to HA 1996, s 175 made by HRA 2017. Each eligible applicant who is either homeless or threatened with homelessness is owed a duty under which the local housing authority must assess his or her case and formulate a personalised housing plan.

2 HA 1996, s 175(4) and (5) as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(2) and (3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 10.144–10.147.
3 HÅ 1996, s 189A, inserted by HRA 2017, s 3, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.62–15.86. For ‘eligible for assistance’, see Chapter 11; for ‘homeless’, see HA 1996, s 175–177 and Chapter 10; for ‘threatened with homelessness’, see HA 1996, s 175(4) and (5), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(2) and (3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 10.144–10.147.

15.4 Eligible applicants who are threatened with homelessness will be owed the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty which requires local housing authorities to take reasonable steps to help them secure that their accommodation does not cease to be available for their occupation. This is not entirely new. A duty to take reasonable steps to secure that accommodation did not cease to be available existed previously, but the group to whom the duty is owed has been enlarged, and HA 1996, Pt 7, now requires the local housing authority to take reasonable steps to help to secure that accommodation does not cease to be available.

3 HA 1996, s 195(2), prior to amendment by HRA 2017, required a local housing authority to take reasonable steps to secure that accommodation did not cease to be available for an applicant’s occupation if the local housing authority was satisfied that an applicant was threatened with homelessness, eligible for assistance, had a priority need and was not satisfied that he or she had become homeless intentionally.

15.5 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

15.5 Eligible applicants who are homeless will be owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty which requires local authorities to take reasonable steps to help them secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for their occupation. This is an entirely new duty. Where the local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant to whom the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is owed may have a priority need, it is under a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and all members of his or her household during the performance of that duty.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.
2 HA 1996, s 189B(2), inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, chapter 13 and 15.138–15.195.
3 HA 1996, s 188, as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.37–16.80.

15.6 The HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention and HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duties can each be brought to an end in a number of ways, which we discuss in detail later on in the chapter.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 See 15.98–15.133 for the events that bring the HA 1996, s 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) prevention duty to an end; see 15.151–15.189 for the events that bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty to an end.

15.7 HRA 2017, s 7(1) also inserts provisions into HA 1996, Pt 7, permitting a local housing authority to notify the applicant of a decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. Notification of a decision to this effect will bring the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty or the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end. If the applicant is threatened with homelessness, no further duty will be owed. If the applicant is homeless, but does not have a priority need, no further duty will be owed.

1 In force for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 193B, inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.196–15.221.
3 As amended by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.87–15.137.
4 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.
5 HA 1996, s 193A(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.132 and 15.189.

15.8 If the applicant is homeless and has a priority need, one of two duties will be owed:

- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, a duty to secure accommodation for such period as the local housing authority considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation and a duty to provide advice and assistance in any attempts the applicant may make in securing accommodation; or where the local housing authority is not satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, a duty to secure accommodation which can be brought to an end on the occurrence of various events, including if the applicant accepts or refuses a suitable final accommodation offer or final Pt 6 offer.

1 HA 1996, s 190(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018 see 16.81–16.93.

3 Defined at HA 1996, s 193C(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.206.

4 Defined at HA 1996, s 193C(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.211.

15.9 A new HA 1996, s 213B¹, imposes a duty on specified public authorities to notify local housing authorities in England of people who are or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. The relevant public authorities are specified in reg 10 of and the Schedule to the Homelessness (Review Procedure etc) Regulations 2018. Whilst the HA 1996, s 213B¹, duty comes into force on 3 April 2018, the list of specified public authorities does not come into force until 1 October 2018. This duty is discussed at 15.222–15.228.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 10, from 12 February 2018 (but only to enable the exercise of the power under HA 1996, s 213B(4) to make regulations) and otherwise from 3 April 2018.

2 SI 2018/223, see Appendix 2 and 15.222–15.228.

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 10, from 12 February 2018 (but only to enable the exercise of the power under HA 1996, s 213B(4) to make regulations) and otherwise from 3 April 2018.

4 SI 2018/223, regs 1(3) and 10.

15.10 There is also a duty at HA 1996, s 213A³, on a local housing authority to refer an applicant to children’s services if his or her household includes a child and the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may not be eligible for assistance or that he or she has become homeless intentionally. This duty is discussed at 15.229 and 16.280–16.288.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.11 Under HA 1996, Pt 7, there is a duty to provide advice and assistance to the applicant. This is separate to the new, and more substantive, duties to take reasonable steps to help the applicant retain or secure accommodation. The duty to provide advice and assistance is owed to an applicant who is homeless, eligible for assistance, has a priority need, has become homeless intentionally and in respect of whom the local housing authority’s HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end. As well as being obliged to secure accommodation for the applicant for such period as the local housing authority considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation, the local housing authority must provide the applicant, or secure that he or she is provided with, advice and assistance in any attempts she or he may make to secure accommodation. We discuss this duty at 15.231.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, ss 189B(2) relief duty and 195(2) prevention duty, as inserted and amended by HRA 2017, ss 5(2) and 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.87–15.137 for prevention duty and 15.138–15.195 for relief duty.

3 HA 1996, s 190(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.81–16.93.

4 HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.81–16.93.

5 HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), (4) and (5), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.231.

15.12 Finally, there is also a duty on the local housing authority to protect an applicant’s property where the local housing authority is subject to a duty to the applicant under HA 1996, Pt 7, and has reason to believe that there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, his or her personal property. This duty is discussed at 16.288–16.309.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

THE NEW LANDSCAPE: THE HOMELESSNESS REDUCTION ACT 2017

Law and practice before the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017

15.13 For many years, there had been criticism of HA 1996, Pt 7, and of its statutory predecessors for providing little help to applicants who did not have a priority need. Whilst there had always been a duty to provide advice and assistance to those applicants, this duty tended to be neglected by local housing authorities. As long ago as 2002, the government had acknowledged that it should ‘consider the varying standards of homelessness advice services in order to promote good practice across all local authorities’.

1 For ‘priority need’, see Chapter 12.

2 HA 1996, s 190(3), repealed by HRA 2017, s 5(5)(c) and HA 1996, s 192(2), repealed by HRA 2017, s 5(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.14 That acknowledgement led in 2003 to amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7, inserted by the Homelessness Act 2002. As a result of those amendments, where a local housing authority owed an applicant a duty to provide him or her with advice and assistance in any attempts he or she might make to secure accommodation, it was required first to make an assessment of the applicant’s housing needs. The advice and assistance subsequently provided had to include information about the likely availability in the local housing authority’s district of types of accommodation appropriate to the applicant’s housing needs, including the location and sources of such types of accommodation.

1 The Explanatory Notes to the Homelessness Act 2002 stated at [55]: ‘There are amendments to sections 190, 192 and 195 which place stronger duties on authorities to provide advice and assistance to applicants who are homeless or threatened with homelessness, but who either do not have priority need or have become homeless or threatened with homelessness intentionally. The amendments set out specific requirements for an assessment of the applicant’s housing needs and the provision of information about the likely availability of appropriate accommodation.

2 HA 1996, s 190(4) and (5), inserted by Homelessness Act 2002, s 18(1), Sch 1, and amended by HRA 2017, ss 3(2) and 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; HA 1996, s 192(4) and (5), inserted by Homelessness Act 2002, s 18(1), Sch 1, and repealed by HRA 2017, s 5(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 HA 1996, ss 190(5) and 192(5), prior to amendment and repeal by HRA 2017, s 5(5) and (6), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.15 However, there were concerns that assessments were not being undertaken adequately or at all. Research conducted in 2009 by Crisis, the national charity for homeless people, found that only very superficial assessments were taking place. A mystery shopper exercise undertaken by Crisis in 2014 found that, in over a third of visits to local housing authorities by single homeless people seeking assistance, no assessments were carried out. Even where assessments were carried out, the assistance provided was minimal. In one case, a High Court judge found that the local housing authority’s purported assessment was either non-existent or patently inadequate. The local housing authority had found that the applicant did not have a priority need. Towards the end of its HA 1996, s 184, decision letter, it had advised the applicant to refer to information that had been previously given to her, and had given her a telephone number to apply to be registered on a scheme for long-term places in hostels. The judge found that the local housing authority could not demonstrate that the HA 1996, s 184, decision letter constituted an assessment of the ‘nuts and bolts’ of the applicant’s housing needs.

1 No one’s priority: the treatment of single homeless people by local authority homelessness services (Crisis, 2009).

2 Turned away: The treatment of single homeless people by local authority homelessness services in England (Dobie, Sanders & Teixeira, Crisis, 2014).

4 See 9.89–9.110.

15.16 In addition, there was concern that advice intended to prevent homelessness was instead operating so as to prevent applicants from making applications for homelessness assistance. It was common for applicants who did not appear to have a priority need simply to be given written information, or even turned away without help or the opportunity to speak to a housing adviser. From 2014, Crisis began to lobby for a change in the English law, arguing for early intervention to be put on a statutory footing and for local housing authorities to be required to take action to relieve homelessness experienced by anyone in their district.

1 No one turned away: changing the law to prevent and tackle homelessness (Gousey, Crisis, 2016).

Origins of the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017

15.17 On 27 April 2015, the Housing (Wales) Act 2014, Pt 2, (H(W)A 2014) came into force for local housing authorities in Wales. H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, introduced statutory duties requiring local housing authorities in Wales to help an eligible applicant who is threatened with homelessness avoid becoming homeless and to help an eligible homeless applicant to secure his or her own accommodation. These duties apply whether or not an applicant has a priority need, or has become homeless intentionally.

1 See Chapter 17 of this book.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), see 17.45–17.72.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.73–17.143.
4 See Chapter 12 for priority need and Chapter 13 for ‘becoming homeless intentionally’.

15.18 In 2016, Crisis prepared a draft Homelessness Reduction Bill, based on the concepts in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Bob Blackman MP introduced the Bill as a Private Members’ Bill in 2016, and it gained cross-party support, receiving Royal Assent on 27 April 2017. Its substantive provisions were brought into force for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities on or after 3 April 2018. The then DCLG consulted on a draft Homelessness Code of Guidance for local authorities between October and December 2017 and the MHCLG published the final version on 22 February 2018.

3 See Appendix 2.

15.19 A new HA 1996, s 214A allows the Secretary of State to issue one or more Codes of Practice, in addition to the Code of Guidance. A draft of any Code of Practice must first be laid before Parliament, and can be issued by the Secretary of State if no negative resolution is made by Parliament within 40 days. Local housing authorities must have regard to those Codes of Practice when exercising functions under HA 1996, Pt 7. It is understood that the MHCLG’s intention is to use this facility to complement the English Code, and provide examples of good practice.

The new approach to dealing with homelessness

Early intervention

15.20 The aim, as characterised by Crisis, of the amendments made by HRA 2017 to HA 1996, Pt 7, is to ‘ensure that more robust prevention work is provided at a much earlier point, irrespective of priority need status’. Local housing authorities must now assist applicants for homelessness assistance well before they become homeless, by complying with the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty, owed to all applicants who are eligible for assistance and are threatened with homelessness. If that assistance is successful, then the applicant will never have to face actual homelessness. He or she would be assisted either to retain his or her current accommodation, or to secure new accommodation and so move straight from one to the other. If the applicant does become homeless - or was homeless when he or she first approached the local housing authority - the local housing authority must then take reasonable time to help him or her secure accommodation: this is the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{1}, relief duty, owed to all applicants who are eligible for assistance and are homeless\textsuperscript{2}.

2016).
\textsuperscript{2} As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

15.21 It is only if the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{1}, relief duty fails to achieve the applicant obtaining suitable accommodation that the distinction between applicants with priority need and those without will become crucial\textsuperscript{2}. At that stage the local housing authority will be obliged to secure that accommodation is available for the former (albeit for a limited period if the local housing authority is satisfied that they have also become homeless intentionally)\textsuperscript{3}, but will not be obliged to do so for the latter.

\textsuperscript{1} As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
\textsuperscript{2} Although it is not without relevance earlier in the process, as the duty to secure interim accommodation only arises if the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need: HA 1996, s 188(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.37–16.80 \textsuperscript{3} HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities on or after 3 April 2018: duty to secure accommodation owed to applicants who have a priority need and who have become homeless intentionally, see 16.81–16.93; HA 1996, s 193(2): the main housing duty to secure accommodation owed to applicants who have a priority need and who have not become homeless intentionally, see 16.94–16.199; HA 1996, s 193C(4), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities on or after 3 April 2018: duty to secure accommodation owed to applicants who have a priority need and who have not become homeless intentionally, and who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, see 16.200–16.216.

How does a local housing authority ‘help’ an applicant?

15.22 Both the HA 1996, s 195(2)\textsuperscript{1}, prevention duty and the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\textsuperscript{2}, relief duty require the local housing authority to ‘take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure’ that accommodation either does not cease to be available, or becomes available, for his or her occupation. What does this phrase mean?

\textsuperscript{1} Amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after
3 April 2018, see 15.87–15.137.
\textsuperscript{2} Inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after
3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.

15.23 It does not mean that the local housing authority must actually provide accommodation, either directly from its own stock or by making arrangements with a private landlord. The duties merely require a local housing authority to 'help the applicant to secure', not to 'secure'.

15.24 Equally it does not preclude the local housing authority from providing accommodation. The local housing authority may, for example, accommodate the applicant itself, in temporary accommodation or through its allocation scheme.\(^1\)

\(^1\) The applicant will have a reasonable preference, by virtue of being a person who is owed a duty under HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018: HA 1996, s 166A(3)(b); or by virtue of being a person who is homeless: HA 1996, s 166(3)(a) and (b), see 4.58–4.79.

15.25 In contrast to H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, there is no definition of the phrase 'help to secure', in HA 1996, Pt 7, as amended by HRA 2017. Assistance must therefore be found in the English Code, which contains the following general suggestions:

- attempting mediation or conciliation where an applicant is threatened with parental or family exclusion;
- assessing whether applicants with rent arrears might be entitled to Discretionary Housing Payments;
- providing support to applicants, whether financial or otherwise, to access private rented accommodation;
- assisting people at risk of violence and abuse wishing to stay safely in their home through provision of ‘sanctuary’ or other measures; or
- helping to secure or securing an immediate safe place to stay for people who are sleeping rough or at high risk of sleeping rough.\(^2\)

\(^2\) In contrast, see H(W)A 2014, s 65, see 17.36–17.40.

Use of the private rented sector

15.26 The local housing authority may provide these services itself, or it may arrange for the applicant to receive these services from another organisation or individual, such as housing advice agencies, private registered providers of social housing, voluntary sector organisations, or private landlords.\(^3\) However, the local housing authority must ensure that the applicant is actually provided with these services, and that they are tailored so as to assist him or her either to retain his or her own home, or to find another home. Provision of generic information should not be acceptable.\(^4\)

\(^3\) All at para 11.23 English Code.

\(^4\) HA 1996, s 179(1) as amended by HRA 2017, s 2, in force from 3 April 2018, see 8.4–8.13.

15.27 Since November 2012, local housing authorities have been able to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end by making the applicant a private rented sector offer. The amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7, made by HRA 2017 allow local housing authorities to make much greater use of the private rented sector.\(^1\)

\(^1\) See 16.94–16.199.
15.28 Local housing authorities can use private rented accommodation for three different functions:

- where they are helping an applicant to secure his or her own accommodation\(^1\), such accommodation is likely to be accommodation in the private rented sector;
- where they are under a duty to secure accommodation for the applicant\(^2\), that accommodation might also be in the private rented sector; and
- where they are making certain offers of suitable accommodation to applicants with a view to bringing the relevant duty owed to an end, namely:
  - a final accommodation offer\(^3\), which is defined as an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy for a minimum period of six months made by a private landlord, will bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^5\) duty to an end; or
  - a private rented sector offer\(^7\), which is defined as an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy for a minimum period of 12 months made by a private landlord will bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end\(^8\).

15.29 The English Code reminds local housing authorities that enabling applicants to ‘exercise some choice over the accommodation offered’ is likely to increase acceptances and secure the co-operation of both applicants and landlords1. It encourages local housing authorities to ‘develop a private rented sector access scheme which provides opportunities for all applicants, including those who do not have a priority need, to access private rented accommodation’. Support provided by the local housing authority through such a scheme could include offers of guarantees and paying deposits2. The English Code also reminds local housing authorities of the need to identify shared housing options for younger people3.

1 English Code, para 16.18.
2 English Code, para 16.19.
3 English Code, para 16.19. With some exceptions, single people under the age of 35 who are renting privately are only entitled to the Local Housing Allowance rate for housing benefit for a single room in a shared house.

15.30 Special rules apply where private rented sector accommodation is being made available:

• under HA 1996, s 193(7F) to end the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty4;
• as a ‘final accommodation offer’ under HA 1996, s 193A(4) or HA 1996, s 193C(6)(a)5 to end the HA 1996, s 189B(2)6 relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4)7 accommodation duty; or
• for an applicant with a priority need where that accommodation has been secured by the local housing authority in performance of the HA 1996, s 195(2)8 prevention duty or HA 1996, s 189B(2)9 relief duty.

2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018 date, see 15.181–15.184 and 16.205–16.209.

6 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.31 In those situations, the local housing authority must be satisfied that the requirements specified at art 3 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 are met4. These relate to the physical condition of the accommodation and to the landlord’s fitness to let the accommodation.

4 Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012, SI 2012/2601, art 3, as amended by HRA 2017, s 12(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see Appendix 2 and 18.70–18.79.
Availability and suitability of accommodation

15.32 The HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty specifically requires the local housing authority to take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that ‘suitable’ accommodation becomes ‘available’ for his or her occupation for at least six months. In addition, both the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty, and the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty will come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has ‘suitable’ accommodation which there are reasonable prospects to believe will be ‘available’ for occupation for at least six months, or has refused an offer of such accommodation.

5 Or such longer period, not exceeding 12 months, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, see 15.105 and 15.118.
6 HRA 1996, ss 189B(7)(a) and (c), inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), and 195(8)(a) and (d), inserted by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, paras 14.5–14.12 and 14.23–14.28 and 15.169–15.173 and 15.118–15.122.

15.33 The requirement that accommodation should be ‘available’ for the applicant’s occupation’ mirrors the test which is applied to determine whether an applicant is homeless at HA 1996, ss 175–176. An applicant is homeless if he or she does not have accommodation which is both factually and legally ‘available’ for his or her occupation. Accommodation must be available for occupation not only by the applicant but also by all members of his or her household. In this context, household means any other person who normally resides with the applicant as a member of his or her family and any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

1 See 10.17–10.30.
2 HA 1996, s 175(1)–(2), see 10.17–10.72.
3 By s 206(1) Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority must discharge its functions by (among other things) securing that suitable accommodation is ‘available’. This refers to HA 1996, s 176: ‘accommodation shall be regarded as available only if it is available for occupation by [the applicant] together with any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him’. The combined effect of these two provisions is that suitable accommodation must be available for the applicant and his household, which carries with it the implication that the accommodation must be suitable for all such persons, and not solely the applicant. See English Code, paras 16.3 and 17.2 and R v Newham London Borough Council ex parte Sacupima [2001] 1 WLR 563, CA, at [28]–[32].
4 HA 1996, s 176, see 10.23–10.30.

15.34 The accommodation must actually be available for the applicant to occupy. A promise or offer of accommodation, to be made available in the future, will not be sufficient for the local housing authority to be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant currently has ‘suitable accommodation available for occupation’. Similarly, assisting the applicant simply to join the local housing authority’s allocation scheme without actually securing accommodation would not bring the duty to an end.

1 HA 1996, ss 195(8)(a)(i) and 189B(7)(a)(i), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, ss 4(2) and 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.35 Although accommodation must be suitable and there must be a "reasonable prospect" of it being "available for occupation for at least six months," HA 1996, s 189B(2), does not specify accommodation of any particular type or tenure. It could, for example, be accommodation provided under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, (provided by either the local housing authority or a private registered provider of social housing). More frequently, it will be an assured shorthold tenancy in the private rented sector, or even a licence granted by family or friends to occupy accommodation.

5 English Code paras 14.8–14.10.

15.36 The English Code contains advice that applicants should be given a reasonable period in which to consider offers of accommodation. There is no set reasonable period: the length will depend on each applicant's circumstances. It also contains advice that applicants should be given the opportunity to view the accommodation or (if it is not practical to travel) that sufficient information about the property and the locality should be made available. In addition, the opportunity to consider more than one property could play an important part in the process of exploring what options are realistically available and what compromises an applicant may want to make.

1 English Code, paras 14.5–14.6.
2 English Code, para 14.28.

15.37 The period of "six months" is the minimum period for which the accommodation must be available. It could, obviously, be available for a longer period. The six-month period starts from different points depending on whether the applicant is in possession of, or has refused, the accommodation:

- if the applicant currently has suitable accommodation available, then there must be a reasonable prospect that there will be suitable accommodation available for at least six months from the date the local housing authority gives notice to the applicant bringing the duty to an end; or
- if the applicant refused an offer of suitable accommodation, then there must have been a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would have been available for at least six months from the date of the refusal.

1 Or such longer period, not exceeding 12 months, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State.
2 Or such longer period, not exceeding 12 months as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State.
To whom are the duties owed? 15.41

4 Or such longer period, not exceeding 12 months as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State.

15.38 The English Code encourages local housing authorities to adopt policies favouring longer tenancies than the legal minimum where market conditions in their area allow, and advises that minimum tenancy lengths should be 12 months so as to provide more stability, particularly but not exclusively for families who have children.\footnote{1}{English Code, para 14.7.}

15.39 If the accommodation is situated outside the local housing authority’s district, the local housing authority must take into account the distance of the accommodation from its district. Whether the accommodation is situated inside or outside the local housing authority’s district, it should also take into account the significance of any disruption which would be caused by the location of the accommodation to the employment, caring responsibilities or education of the applicant and members of his or her household, the proximity and accessibility of the accommodation to medical facilities and other support which are currently used or provided to the applicant or members of his or her household and which are essentially to the well-being of that person, and the proximity and accessibility of the accommodation to local services, amenities and transport.\footnote{1}{Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012, SI 2012/2601, art 2; see Appendix 2 and 18.48–18.61.}

15.40 Every applicant is owed at least one duty: the duty that the local housing authority must notify a decision on his or her application.\footnote{1}{HA 1996, s 184(1) and (3), see English Code, paras 11.3 and 18.32–18.33 and 9.89.}

Applicants who are not eligible for assistance

15.41 Beyond that initial notification, if an applicant is not eligible for assistance\footnote{1}{HA 1996, s 183, see CHAPTER 11.} no further duty is owed to him or her, although he or she may receive advice from the local housing authority’s homelessness service\footnote{2}{HA 1996, s 179, as amended by HRA 2017, s 2, in force from 3 April 2018; see English Code, chapter 3 and para 14.32 and 8.4–8.14.}. If the local housing authority had been providing interim accommodation for the applicant\footnote{3}{HA 1996, s 188(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.37–16.50.}, the interim accommodation duty will come to an end upon notification from the local housing authority.\footnote{4}{HA 1996, s 188(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.37–16.50.}
Applicants who are eligible for assistance

15.42 Any duties owed to eligible applicants will depend on whether they are threatened with homelessness, or homeless. If an applicant is neither threatened with homelessness, nor homeless, no duty is owed.

15.43 For ease of reference, the main duties and powers listed below have been divided up by reference to those key findings:

- Local housing authorities owe the following duties to all eligible applicants who are threatened with homelessness:
  - the duty to make an assessment of the applicant’s case;\(^4\)
  - the duty to formulate a personalised housing plan;\(^2\) and
  - the duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available (the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty).\(^3\)

- Local housing authorities owe the following duties to all eligible applicants who are homeless:
  - the duty to make an assessment of the applicant’s case;\(^4\)
  - the duty to formulate a personalised housing plan;\(^2\)
  - the duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation (the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty) unless the local housing authority refers the applicant to another local housing authority;\(^6\) and
  - if there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, the duty to secure interim accommodation.\(^7\)

15.44 The HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty will not be owed if the local housing authority refers the applicant’s case to another local housing authority in England. In that case, however, two further duties arise:

- a duty to notify the applicant that the local housing authority have referred or intend to refer him or her and to inform the applicant of the reasons; and

How do the duties fit together? 15.48

- if there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, a duty to secure interim accommodation until the applicant is notified of the decision as to whether or not the conditions for referral are met.

The duty to carry out an assessment of the applicant's case and to agree a personalised housing plan remain on the first local housing authority and cannot be referred. If the applicant's case is to be referred to another local housing authority, the notifying local housing authority should send a copy of the assessment and the personalised housing plan, if completed, to the notified local housing authority.

5. English Code, para 10.43.

HOW DO THE DUTIES FIT TOGETHER?

15.45 Under HA 1996, Pt 7, prior to its amendment by HRA 2017, an applicant would apply as homeless to the local housing authority and in due course be issued with a decision under HA 1996, s 184(3), notifying him or her what duty, if any, the local housing authority considered that it owed. The position has now changed.

15.46 An applicant may move through several duties. Moreover, the applicant is likely to receive a number of different decisions under HA 1996, s 184(3), before the application process is concluded. The English Code recognises that more than one notification may be required in any given case.

15.47 The first decision the local housing authority will be required to make is whether there is reason to believe the applicant may be homeless, eligible, and have a priority need. If so, a duty arises to secure interim accommodation. This does not require a HA 1996, s 184(3) decision.

15.48 The local housing authority will then need to decide whether the applicant is eligible and whether he or she is homeless or threatened with homelessness. If both these criteria are met, the local housing will owe the applicant two duties and must notify the applicant in accordance with HA 1996, s 184(3):
15.48 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

- the HA 1996, s 189A(1)\(^1\) duty to assess his or her case and formulate a personalised housing plan; and
- either:
  - the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^2\) prevention duty; or
  - the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\) relief duty.

1. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.49 If the applicant is threatened with homelessness then, whilst the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\) prevention duty is being performed, the local housing authority will need to decide what duty might be owed when the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty has come to an end. The various scenarios would be as follows:

- where homelessness has been prevented, or the applicant has become ineligible, no further duty will be owed;
- where the applicant remains threatened with homelessness at the end of the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^2\) prevention duty, but has not become homeless, then no further duty will be owed\(^3\);
- If the applicant has become homeless by the end of the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^3\) prevention duty then the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty will arise\(^6\).

1. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3. Unless the applicant has been served with a valid Housing Act 1988 s 21 notice that either will expire within 56 days, or has expired, and is in respect of the only accommodation that is available for his or her occupation: HA 1996, s 195(6), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. If that is the case, the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty continues to be owed. See 15.111.
4. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
5. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. English Code, para 14.20 advises that the local housing authority will ‘want to provide a seamless transition between the prevention and relief duties’.
6. HA 1996, s 189B(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.50 If the applicant is homeless\(^1\), then the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\) relief duty arises\(^3\). If the action taken pursuant to the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\) relief duty successfully relieves the applicant’s homelessness, then no further duty will be owed.

1. Either because he or she was homeless at the date of the application for homelessness assistance, or because he or she was formerly threatened with homelessness and has since become homeless.
2. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3. The applicant will have received a notification under HA 1996, s 184(3), that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is owed.
How do the duties fit together? 15.51

15.51 If, however, the applicant remains homeless at the point when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty ends, then the local housing authority will have to decide what final duty is applicable:

- where the applicant has become ineligible, no duty arises;
- where the applicant does not have a priority need, no duty arises,
  - unless the applicant has made a fresh application for homelessness assistance within two years of accepting a private rented sector offer, and the local housing authority is also satisfied that the applicant has not become homeless intentionally, in which case the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will be owed;
- if the applicant has a priority need but became homeless intentionally, the local housing authority must secure that accommodation is available for a reasonable period and also provide advice and assistance;
- if the applicant has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally, then the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty will be owed unless:
  - during the course of the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty, the applicant refused a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer. In this situation, the main housing duty does not apply and no further duty will be owed; or
  - during the course of the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty, the local housing authority gave notice to the applicant stating that it considered he or she had deliberately and unreasonably failed to take a step under his or her personalised housing plan. In this situation, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty does not apply but the local housing authority must secure that accommodation is available under HA 1996, s 193C(4).

Whenever the local housing authority has to decide what further duty, if any, is owed, it must notify the applicant of its decision under HA 1996, s 184(3).

15.51 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

15.52 If no further duty is owed to the applicant, and the applicant remains homeless, he or she could make a fresh application for homelessness assistance\(^1\). Unless the factual circumstances are the same as those when the first application for homelessness assistance was disposed of\(^2\), then the local housing authority must accept the application, make inquiries into what duty might be owed, and (if there is reason to believe that the applicant may be eligible for assistance, may be homeless and may have a priority need), secure interim accommodation\(^3\). The English Code contains advice that in the majority of re-application cases where the applicant has previously refused an offer of suitable accommodation, the local housing authority will be entitled to rely on the ending of its duties following the refusal of accommodation. It is only if the applicant’s factual circumstances have changed that the local housing authority must accept a fresh application\(^4\).

Interim accommodation

15.53 Where the local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant may be homeless, may be eligible for assistance and may have a priority need\(^1\), it has a duty to secure ‘interim accommodation’\(^2\) for the applicant and his or her household whilst it carries out its inquiries and then during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty\(^4\). The words ‘reason to believe’ and ‘may’ mean that the threshold is very low\(^5\).

1 Unless the applicant has made a fresh application for homelessness assistance within two years of having accepted a private rented sector offer (HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC), see 16.154), in which case the applicant will not normally need a possible priority need in order to be entitled to the interim accommodation duty: HA 1996, ss 188(1A) and 195A(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) and 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 8.100–8.107 and 16.47–16.50.

4 English Code, para 18.12.

15.54 Where a local housing authority decides that an applicant does not have a priority need:

- the interim accommodation duty will come to an end when the applicant is notified of a decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^1\), relief duty is not owed, because the applicant is either not homeless or is not eligible for assistance\(^2\); or

• the interim accommodation duty will come to an end during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), reliance duty upon notification to the applicant that no duty will be owed to him or her under HA 1996, ss 190(2) or 193(2) because he or she does not have a priority need.

4 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. Duty to secure accommodation for such period as the local housing authority considers will give the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation, owed to applicants who have a priority need and who have become homeless intentionally, see 16.81–16.93.

15.55 In any other case, the interim accommodation duty will come to an end upon any of the following events occurring:

• the applicant is notified of a decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed, because the applicant is either not homeless or is not eligible for assistance;
• the ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• the applicant has been notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what duty, if any, will be owed to him or her upon the ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty.

Where the applicant was owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and it has come to an end because the applicant has accepted or refused a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer, and the applicant has requested a review of the suitability of that offer, the interim accommodation duty continues until the review decision has been notified to the applicant.

Applicants who have re-applied for homelessness assistance within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer

15.56 Special provisions apply where an applicant, having accepted a private rented sector offer1 made by a local housing authority in response to an earlier application for homelessness assistance, makes a fresh application for homelessness assistance within two years of the date of his or her acceptance of the offer2. Most applicants in these circumstances will be entitled to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty whether or not they have a priority need provided that the local housing authority is satisfied that they are homeless, eligible, and did not become homeless intentionally3.

3 HA 1996, s 195A(1). The exception is where the local housing authority would not be satisfied that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is owed without having regard to a restricted person: HA 1996, s 195A(5), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 8.102.

15.57 If, therefore, before a final decision has been made, the local housing authority has reason to believe that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will apply1, it is under a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and his or her household2. This duty applies whether or not there is any reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need3.

1 HA 1996, s 195A(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 8.100–8.107.
2 HA 1996, s 188(1ZB)(a), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.58 Applicants in these circumstances must be provided with interim accommodation. That duty comes to an end upon any of the following events occurring:

• the applicant is notified of a decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty is not owed, because the applicant is either not homeless or is not eligible for assistance2;
• the ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty3; or
• the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what duty, if any, will be owed to him or her upon the ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty4.

Applicants referred to another local housing authority

15.59 Where a local housing authority decides to notify an applicant that the conditions for referral are met, usually by reason of his or her local connection with the district and the local housing authority, so that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will be performed by another local housing authority, the first local housing authority’s duty to secure interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188 will come to an end. However, if the first local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need then it will continue to be under a duty to secure accommodation for the applicant and his or her household. That duty continues until the applicant is notified of the decision as to whether or not the conditions for referral of his or her case are met.

7 HA 1996, s 199A(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.15. If the applicant was already accommodated by the first local housing authority under the HA 1996, s 188(1) interim accommodation duty, then the first local housing authority had already decided that it had reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need.

15.60 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, and if the notified local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, it becomes subject to an interim accommodation duty to accommodate the applicant.

15.61 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, the first local housing authority becomes subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and, if there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, to the the interim accommodation duty. This ends upon the later of:

- the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty coming to an end; or
- the local housing authority deciding what further duty, if any, it owes

ASSESSMENTS AND PERSONALISED PLANS

Duty to make an assessment of the applicant’s case

15.62 The duty to make an assessment of an applicant’s case is owed to applicants whom the local housing authority is satisfied are;

- eligible for assistance;
- threatened with homelessness; or
- homeless.

1 HA 1996, s 189A(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, chapter 11.

2 HA 1996, s 189A(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 HA 1996, s 185, see Chapter 11.

4 HA 1996, s 175(4) and (5) as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(2) and (3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 10.144–10.147.

5 HA 1996, ss 175–177, see Chapter 10.

When does the duty arise?

15.63 The duty to assess arises as soon as the local housing authority is satisfied of these matters. Concurrently, once the local housing authority is satisfied that these conditions are met, it will also owe a duty either to help the applicant prevent his or her homelessness or to help the applicant secure suitable accommodation for his or her occupation. The local housing authority must notify the applicant in writing of the decision that one of these two duties, as well as the duty to assess his or her case, is owed to him or her.

2 HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.87–15.137.

4 HA 1996, s 184(1) and (3), see English Code, paras 18.32–18.33 and 9.90–9.94.

15.64 If the local housing authority has ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant ‘may’ be homeless, ‘may’ be eligible for assistance and ‘may’ have a priority need, it is also under a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and his or her household. The local housing authority must provide this accommodation whilst it complies with HA 1996, s 189A\(^2\) duty, unless, during the performance of that duty, it notifies the applicant that it is satisfied that he or she does not have a priority need\(^3\).

2. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3. See 16.51–16.80 for the ways in which the HA 1996, s 188(1) interim accommodation duty can come to an end.

Duty towards applicants who are referred under the conditions for referral 15.65 If the local housing authority would be subject to the HA 1996, s 189B\(^7\), relief duty but considers that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case for performance of HA 1996, s 189B\(^7\), relief duty might be met\(^2\), it remains under a duty to carry out an assessment of the applicant’s case and, potentially, to proceed to produce a personalised housing plan with the applicant\(^3\). It is only once it has been determined, by agreement or by a referee’s decision, that the conditions for referral are met that the notifying local housing authority ceases to be under a duty under HA 1996, s 189A\(^2\). Once that decision has been made, and the applicant has been notified of that decision, the notified local housing authority becomes subject to the HA 1996, s 189A duty and any other duties under HA 1996, Pt 7, and the notifying local housing authority owes no further duties\(^5\).

3. HA 1996, s 199A(1) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) states that where the local housing authority notify an applicant that they have notified or intend to notify another local housing authority under HA 1996, s 198(A1) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), the notifying local housing authority will not be subject to the HA 1996, s 189B\(^7\) interim accommodation duty or the HA 1996, s 189B\(^7\) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty. The omission HA 1996, s 189A (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) means that the duties imposed by this section continue.
4. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
5. HA 1996, s 199A(5)(a) and (b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.139–15.146.

15.66 The English Code advises that the notifying local housing authority should give to the notified local housing authority a copy of the applicant’s assessment of his or her case and, if the applicant consents, a copy of the personalised housing plan in so far as that remains relevant\(^1\).

Contents of the assessment

15.67 HA 1996, s 189A\(^2\), requires the local housing authority to assess:

- the circumstances that caused the applicant to become homeless\(^5\) or threatened with homelessness\(^5\);
15.67 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

- the housing needs of the applicant including, in particular, what accommodation would be suitable\(^4\) for the applicant and any persons with whom the applicant resides or might reasonably be expected to reside (‘other relevant persons’); and
- what support would be necessary for the applicant and any other relevant persons to be able to have and retain suitable accommodation.

2. HA 1996, ss 175–177, see Chapter 10.
3. HA 1996, s 175(4)–(5), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(2) and (3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 10.144–10.147.
4. For ‘suitable accommodation’ see Chapter 18.

15.68 The English Code advises that when considering the circumstances leading to a threat of homelessness, local housing authorities will need to make inquiries into an applicant’s accommodation history, at least as far as back as his or her last settled address and the events that led to him or her being threatened with or becoming homeless\(^1\). When assessing the applicant’s housing needs, local housing authorities will need to consider all the members of the applicant’s household and their needs. That should include an assessment of the size and type of accommodation required, any requirements necessary to meet the needs of any disabled people, any specific medical needs, and also the location. The applicant’s wishes and preferences should be considered and recorded, whether or not there is a reasonable prospect of accommodation being available that would meet them\(^2\). The assessment of support needs should be holistic and comprehensive, not limited to those needs which are most apparent or which have already been notified to the local housing authority by a referral agency. Applicants should be sensitively encouraged to discuss their needs and local housing authorities should be aware of the support that can be provided by health or social care services\(^3\). The English Code also contains guidance on the arrangements for carrying out assessments and recommends at least one face to face interview\(^4\).

3. English Code, paras 11.11–11.12. For young people aged 16 or 17, there is specific guidance as to the contents of assessment, see Prevention of Homelessness and Provision of Accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation (MHCLG and Department for Education, April 2018), chapter 4.

15.69 The contents of the assessment will assist the local housing authority in deciding what steps to take to help the applicant to prevent his or her homelessness\(^1\), or to secure that accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation, together with the members of his or her household\(^2\).

15.70 Once the assessment has been drawn up it must be notified, in writing, to the applicant\(^1\). If the notification is not received by the applicant, then it is treated as having been given to him or her if it is made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant.

2 HA 1996, s 189A(12), as amended by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.71 There is no right to request a review of the contents of the assessment. However, the applicant does have the right to request a review of the local housing authority’s decision as to what steps it will take, either to help the applicant prevent his or her homelessness, or to help the applicant secure his or her own accommodation. Those steps will be set out in the personalised housing plan drawn up following the assessment.

1 HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, paras 11.36 and 19.18–19.23.

2 HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.72 After the assessment has been completed, the local housing authority and the applicant should try to agree what steps each of them will take in order to secure that the applicant and members of his or her household ‘have and are able to retain’ suitable accommodation. If the local housing authority and the applicant agree on the steps each of them should take, that agreement should be recorded in writing.

2 HA 1996, s 189A(5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.73 If they do not agree, then the local housing authority must record in writing:

• the reasons why they could not agree;
• what steps the local housing authority considers it would be reasonable to require the applicant to take; and
• what steps the local housing authority is to take.

1 HA 1996, s 189A(6) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.74 Whether or not the steps are agreed, the local housing authority can also include in the written record any advice for the applicant that it considers appropriate. That advice can include any steps that the local housing authority considers it would be a good idea for the applicant to take, but which he or she is not required to take.\(^1\)

1 HA 1996, s 189A(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.75 The local housing authority must give the applicant a copy of the written record. This written record is the applicant’s ‘personalised plan’, also known as the ‘personalised housing plan’.\(^2\)

1 HA 1996, s 189A(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 189A (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) is headed ‘personalised plan’ while the English Code uses the phrase ‘personalised housing plan’, para 11.20. The two terms refer to the same document.

15.76 The English Code advises that the personalised housing plans should be realistic and that local housing authorities should provide sufficient information and advice for applicants to make informed and realistic choices. Applicants should be encouraged to extend the areas in which they are searching for accommodation and to consider different types of properties.\(^1\) The type of reasonable steps that a local housing authority might consider taking are discussed at 15.22–15.26, 15.91–15.96 and 15.144–15.149 of this book.\(^2\)

2 There is specific guidance as to contents of personal housing plans for young people aged 16 or 17 in Prevention of Homelessness and Provision of Accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation (MHCLG and Department for Education, April 2018), chapter 4.

15.77 This record of what steps the applicant is to take, whether agreed or otherwise, is important. If the applicant subsequently fails to take any of those steps, he or she could be notified by the local housing authority of a decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate.\(^1\) The consequence of such a decision is that any HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty, or any HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty owed will come to an end\(^4\) and the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, if it would otherwise have been owed, will not apply\(^5\). Instead, for applicants who have a priority need and who have not become homeless intentionally, a duty to secure accommodation will arise under HA 1996, s 193C(4), which can be ended by (among other circumstances) the making of a final accommodation offer.\(^6\)

1 HA 1996, s 193B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.196–15.221. The decision must be preceded by a relevant warning giving the applicant a reasonable period in which to comply: HA 1996, s 193B(4) and (5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.196–15.221.

15.78 The applicant has a right to request a review of any of the steps that the local housing authority has recorded that it will take in order to help him or her secure and retain accommodation.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(i) and (bc)(i) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, para 11.36 and 19.18–19.23.

15.79 The position in respect of the steps that the applicant is to take is less clear. The right to request a review at HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(i) and (bc)(i)

1 refers to any decision of a local housing authority as to the steps ‘they’ are to take. ‘They’ appears to refer back to ‘the local housing authority’ only and therefore there seems to be no right to request a review of the steps the applicant is to take. This is surprising given the significant implications if the applicant is subsequently found to have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate as a result of his or her failure to take any of those steps, but the authors’ view is that this is the natural meaning of the provision. However, it is noted that the English Code is more ambiguous and refers to a right to request a review of the reasonable steps, in general, rather than those specified to be taken by the local housing authority.

2 English Code, para 11.36. The authors’ view is that the plain wording of HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(i) and (bc)(i) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) should prevail.

15.80 The applicant does, however, have a right to request a review of any decision of a local housing authority to give notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take a required step under the personalised housing plan. This provides an avenue, albeit at a later stage, for an applicant to challenge the steps which he or she has been required to take.

Continuing review of assessment and personalised housing plan

15.81 The local housing authority must keep the contents of both the assessment and the personalised housing plan under review at all times whilst the local housing authority continues to owe any duty towards the applicant.

1 In this context, ‘review’ means a continuing re-assessment of the contents, rather than the ‘review’ requested against an adverse decision¹.
15.81 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

¹ HA 1996, s 189A(9) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, paras 11.32–11.35. It should be noted that the English Code advises that local housing authorities should keep the assessment and personalised housing plan under review throughout the prevention and relief stages, implying that there is no need to review them if the applicant is subsequently accommodated under other duties.

² HA 1996, s 202(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.8–19.69.

15.82 The duty to keep the assessment and personalised housing plan under review continues even where the local housing authority intends to refer the applicant to another local housing authority for performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹, relief duty or performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty². It only ends in those circumstances once it has been decided that the conditions for referral are made out³. The assessment and personalised housing plan will have been sent to the notified local housing authority and the duty to keep those documents under review will be owed by the notified local housing authority⁴.

The duties to accommodate in these circumstances are at HA 1996, s 199A(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, and HA 1996, s 200(1), see 15.139–15.146.

⁴ HA 1996, 199A(5)(a) and (b). The English Code suggests that the applicant’s consent will be needed for a copy of his or her personalised plan to be sent to the notified local housing authority: English Code, para 10.43.

15.83 The English Code contains advice that local housing authorities should establish timescales for reviewing plans and those timescales are likely to vary according to each applicant’s individual needs and circumstances. In addition, if a personalised housing plan is agreed when the applicant is threatened with homelessness, it must be reviewed if the applicant subsequently becomes homeless¹. A local housing authority should also initiate a review if it becomes aware that any information provided was inaccurate, or if there is new information or a relevant change in the applicant’s circumstances or if it believes that the applicant is not co-operating with the personalised housing plan².

² English Code, para 11.33.

15.84 If the local housing authority’s assessment of the applicant’s case changes, the local housing authority may be under a duty to notify the applicant of that change in writing. If the change is to the assessment of any of the three matters that it was required to assess by HA 1996, s 189A(2)¹, then the applicant must be notified in writing of the change². Otherwise, the local housing authority is required to notify the applicant in writing of any other changes to the assessment of his or her case that it considers it appropriate. The notification of the changes might take the form of a revised written assessment, or, more simply, a letter setting out the changes.

The three statutory matters are: the circumstances that caused the applicant to become homeless or threatened with homelessness; the housing needs of the applicant including in particular what accommodation would be suitable for the applicant and for other relevant persons; and what support would be necessary for the applicant and any other relevant persons to have and retain suitable accommodation: HA 1996, s 189A(2) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.67.

2 HA 1996, s 189A(10)(b) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.85 If the local housing authority decides that any of the steps that were recorded as required of the applicant, whether by agreement or otherwise, or any steps to be taken by the local housing authority, are no longer appropriate, it must notify the applicant of that decision in writing. The effect of that notification is that any subsequent failure by the applicant to take those steps should be disregarded and so should not be the basis of any decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. The applicant should still be taking any steps remaining in the personalised housing plan which have not been notified to him or her as no longer appropriate.

3 HA 1996, s 189A(11)(c) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.86 As already noted, the applicant does not, in the authors’ view, have a right to request a review of the local housing authority’s decision as to what steps he or she is required to take. It follows that there is no right to request a review of any decision that any of those steps are no longer appropriate. Nor is there any right to request a review of a decision that the local housing authority no longer has to keep the assessment or personalised housing plan under review. However, he or she would be able to request a review of a decision that the steps that were to be taken by the local housing authority were not reasonable steps.

DUTY TO TAKE REASONABLE STEPS TO HELP THE APPLICANT SECURE THAT ACCOMMODATION DOES NOT CEASE TO BE AVAILABLE: ‘THE PREVENTION DUTY’

Applicants entitled to the duty

15.87 The HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty is owed to all applicants whom the local housing authority is satisfied are:
15.87 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

- eligible for assistance; and
- threatened with homelessness.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; see English Code, chapter 12.
2 HA 1996, s 185, see Chapter 11.
3 HA 1996, s 175(4) and (5) as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(2) and (3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.144–10.147.

15.88 All applicants who are eligible, and who are likely to become homeless within 56 days, or who have received a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice which expires within 56 days, are entitled to this duty. There is no additional test of whether an applicant has a priority need, or whether or not he or she has become threatened with homelessness intentionally.

1 HA 1996, s 175(4), as amended by HRA 2017, s 1(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.144–10.145.
2 HA 1996, s 175(5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.145–10.147.

15.89 The duty arises as soon as the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant is threatened with homelessness and is eligible for assistance.

1 HA 1996, s 195(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 12.2.

15.90 The local housing authority must notify the applicant in writing of its decision that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty is owed to him or her. If the written decision is notified later than the date on which the local housing authority actually came to that decision, that is not a reason for the local housing authority to delay performing its duty.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 184(1) and (3), see 9.90–9.94.

Performing the duty

15.91 The duty requires the local housing authority to ‘take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that accommodation does not cease to be available for the applicant’s occupation’. The meaning of ‘take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure’ and ‘available for occupation’ is discussed at 15.22–15.40.

1 HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.92 When the local housing authority is deciding what steps it will take, it must have regard to its assessment of the applicant’s case under HA 1996, s 189A. In the course of the assessment (which may be ongoing), the local housing authority will have considered the circumstances that caused the applicant to become threatened with homelessness, his or her housing needs together with those of his her household, and what support would be necessary for the applicant and his household to have or retain suitable accommodation. This should therefore ensure that the local housing authority is aware of the information necessary to determine what steps might reasonably be taken to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available. Those reasonable steps will then have been set out in the personalised housing plan, drawn up following the assessment1.

1 HA 1996, s 195(3), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See HA 1996, s 189A, as inserted by HRA, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, and 15.62–15.86.

15.93 The applicant has the right to request a review of the steps that the local housing authority has decided that it is to take under this duty1. This is the opportunity for the applicant to challenge the local housing authority if he or she believes that it is not taking sufficient or appropriate steps to help him or her find or retain accommodation.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(bc)(i), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.36–19.41.

15.94 The English Code advises that the first option to be explored should be enabling the applicant to remain in his or her current home where suitable. It gives examples of when interim accommodation can be provided whilst action is taken to enable an applicant to remain in his or her home, for example if sanctuary measures are to be installed or emergency repairs carried out, or whilst action is taken to reinstate a tenant who has been illegally evicted. If this is not possible, the focus should be on helping to secure alternative accommodation that he or she can move into in a planned way, which may require taking steps to extend the stay in the current accommodation until he or she can move1. There is specific guidance in the English Code as to how to perform the prevention duty when dealing with applicants who have been subject to domestic abuse2 and when dealing with applicants who have an offending history3.

1 English Code, paras 12.3–12.4.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 English Code, paras 21.10–21.15.

15.95 Provided that the applicant is able to move directly from his or her existing accommodation into new, suitable accommodation, then the local housing authority will have performed its duty to the applicant. Of course, if there is an intervening period when the applicant has no accommodation, the applicant will no longer be threatened with homelessness and the local housing authority may give notice bringing the HA 1996, s 195(2)4, prevention duty to an end2. The applicant will be homeless and the HA 1996, s 189B(2)3, relief duty will apply.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2. HA 1996, s 195(4), specifically provides that this duty to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available does not affect any right of the local housing authority to secure vacant possession of any accommodation. In other words, if a council tenant is due to be evicted from his or her council home within 56 days and is eligible for assistance, the duty arises to help the tenant to secure that the accommodation does not cease to be available. But that duty does not prevent the local housing authority from continuing to exercise its functions as landlord, and so proceeding with an eviction. However, since the duty will be owed, efficient allocation of resources might involve the local housing authority, when seeking to exercise its homelessness functions, liaising with its housing department with a view to preventing the eviction if possible by, for example, assisting to resolve housing benefit problems, providing debt and budgeting advice, helping to pay the tenant’s rent arrears or providing any other service that might enable the tenant to remain in his or her home.

3. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.183–15.195.

15.96 HA 1996, s 195(4), specifically provides that this duty to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available does not affect any right of the local housing authority to secure vacant possession of any accommodation. In other words, if a council tenant is due to be evicted from his or her council home within 56 days and is eligible for assistance, the duty arises to help the tenant to secure that the accommodation does not cease to be available. 1. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.97 Since the applicant is threatened with homelessness, but not actually homeless, there is no duty to secure interim accommodation.¹

¹ See 16.37–16.50.

How does the duty to prevent homelessness come to an end?

15.98 The local housing authority can bring the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty to an end in the following eight circumstances:²

1. it is satisfied that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for his or her occupation and a reasonable prospect of having suitable accommodation available for occupation for at least six months;

2. it has complied with the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty for a period of 56 days beginning with the day on which the local housing authority is first satisfied that the duty is owed unless the applicant has been served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice which will either expire within 56 days or has already expired;

3. it is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless;
‘The prevention duty’ 15.100

(4) it is satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and, on the date of the refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation by the applicant for at least six months;

(5) it is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation that had been made available to the applicant as a result of the local housing authority’s exercise of its functions under the HA 1996, 195(2), prevention duty;

(6) it is satisfied that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance;

(7) it is satisfied that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application for homelessness assistance; or

(8) it considers that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate following a warning.

The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.99 All of these circumstances require some form of notice to be given to the applicant before the duty can be ended.

15.100 In the eighth circumstance, the applicant must be given a written notice setting out the reasons for the notice, the effect of the notice, his or her right to request a review and the period of 21 days in which to request the review. The giving of the notice, which is discretionary, automatically brings the duty to an end.

15.101 In all other cases, the duty does not come to an end until the applicant is given notice in writing of the decision bringing the duty to an end\(^1\). That notification must:

- specify which of the circumstances, set out at 15.98, has occurred;
- inform the applicant that he or she has the right to request a review of the decision to bring the duty to an end\(^2\); and
- inform the applicant of the 21-day period within which the request must be made\(^3\).

If no notification is given\(^4\), or if the notification does not contain all of that information, the duty continues\(^5\). Whilst there is no statutory requirement that reasons be given for the decision, procedural fairness is likely to require that the local housing authority explain why they consider the circumstance in question applies\(^6\).

15.102 The decision must be notified in writing to the applicant\(^7\). 15.103 The decision to serve a notice ending the duty\(^9\) is a discretionary one. Even if the statutory criteria are met, the local housing authority may decide not to end the duty\(^10\).

1 Whether under HA 1996, s 195(5) or s 193B(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) and inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
'The prevention duty' 15.107

2 Because HA 1996, s 195(5) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) provides that the local housing authority ‘may’ give notice.

15.104 Each of these events will now be considered in more detail.

Suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant and there is a reasonable prospect that accommodation will be available for at least six months

15.105 The HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty can be brought to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that all of the following conditions are met:

- the applicant has suitable accommodation;
- the accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant, and by all the members of his or her household; and
- there is a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation will be available for the applicant’s occupation for at least six months.

The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ of all these different requirements. This requires something more on the local housing authority’s part than simply an assumption.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 For ‘suitable’ accommodation, see Chapter 18.
3 As defined at HA 1996, ss 175–177, see Chapter 10.
4 As defined at HA 1996, s 176, see 10.21–10.33.
5 HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
6 HA 1996, s 195(8), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.106 The accommodation that has become available might be the applicant’s existing home, from which the applicant had originally been threatened with homelessness. For example, the local housing authority might have helped the applicant to negotiate a new tenancy with his or her landlord. Alternatively, the applicant might have been helped to secure new accommodation.

1 HA 1996, s 175(4) and (5), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.144–10.147.

15.107 HA 1996, s 195(8)(a) does not stipulate that it should be the same unit of accommodation which must be available for six months, as long as some suitable accommodation is available. Potentially then, the requirement might be met by means of two or more units of accommodation available one after the other for an aggregate period of six months or more. However, where a local housing authority is considering accommodation which is not yet available, it will need a sufficient basis to be ‘satisfied’ that there is a ‘reasonable prospect’ it will be available. The English Code advises that where an applicant with support needs is placed in short term accommodation, as part of a planned accommodation and support pathway, there should be a clear, documented expectation that he or she will be supported to make a planned move directly to more supported accommodation or independent accommodation¹.

¹ As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.108 As already observed, there must be ‘a reasonable prospect’ that the accommodation will continue to be available for at least six months¹. What is ‘a reasonable prospect? Obviously if the applicant is granted a fixed-term tenancy, for a term of six months or more, the local housing authority could be satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect that the accommodation will continue to be available for that period. In the case of more informal arrangements, such as accommodation provided by family or friends, the local housing authority would want something more than a mere assurance that it might be available for that period. The English Code contains advice to deal with two specific circumstances:

- where the applicant is permitted to remain in his or her existing accommodation by the landlord, but a Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice was previously issued, the landlord should be asked to issue a new tenancy. If he or she refuses, the local housing authority could secure written confirmation that the applicant can remain on condition that he or she complies with documented conditions. Provided that the local housing authority has a reasonable expectation that the applicant can comply, the guidance in the English Code is that there is likely to be a reasonable prospect of availability²;

- where the applicant is staying with friends or family, the local housing authority must satisfy itself that the accommodation will be available for at least six months, either with an open-ended agreement (perhaps with reasonable conditions) or an agreement that the applicant can stay until he or she has secured alternative accommodation³.

¹ HA 1996, s 195(5), (8)(a)(i)(ii) and (9), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

² English Code, paras 14.8–14.9.

³ English Code, para 14.10.

The local housing authority has complied with its HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty for a period of 56 days

15.110 The HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\), prevention duty can be brought to an end where the local housing authority is satisfied that:

- it has complied with the duty to take ‘reasonable steps’ for a period of 56 days\(^2\);
- that period began on the day on which the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty was owed\(^3\); and
- the applicant has not been served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice which is due to expire within 56 days, or has expired\(^4\).

The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ of all these different requirements\(^5\).

3 HA 1996, ss 195(1) and (8)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. For the possible distinction between the local housing authority being satisfied that the duty was owed, and the notification of that decision to the applicant, see 15.137.
4 HA 1996, s 195(6), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The HA 1988, s 21 notice in this context must relate to the only accommodation that is available for the applicant’s occupation.
5 HA 1996, s 195(8), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.111 If, at the end of the 56-day period in which the local housing authority was performing its HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\), prevention duty, the applicant is still threatened with homelessness, there is generally no longer any duty on the local housing authority to continue to help the applicant. However, if the applicant was served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice in respect of the only accommodation which is available for his or her occupation, and that notice either has expired, or is due to expire within 56 days, the local housing authority cannot bring its duty to an end on this ground\(^2\). It must continue to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available. The Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice might have been served on the applicant on or before the applicant made his or her application for homelessness assistance, and might be the reason why the local housing authority was satisfied that the applicant was threatened with homelessness\(^3\). Alternatively, the applicant might have made his or her application for homelessness assistance and have been found to have been threatened with homelessness for some other reason, but later received a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 HA 1996, s 175(5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 1(3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.147.

15.112 If the applicant remains threatened with homelessness for some reason other than having been served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice\(^1\), and the local housing authority has not been able to help the applicant resolve the situation within 56 days, the local housing authority is no longer under a duty to continue to help the applicant. However, the English Code makes it clear that a local housing authority may choose to continue the duty for a longer period, and that local housing authorities should not have blanket policies of ending the duty after 56 days. In each case, the applicant’s circumstances should be taken into account. It is in both the applicant’s and the local housing authority’s interests to continue the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty, in order to work to help the applicant avoid homelessness, since if the applicant becomes homeless a HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty can be brought to an end. The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant has become homeless.

The applicant has become homeless

If, despite the steps taken by both the applicant and the local housing authority, the applicant becomes homeless, the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty can be brought to an end. The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant has become homeless.

Although the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty will have ended, this does not mean that the applicant can be abandoned by the local housing authority. The change in circumstances from the applicant having been threatened with homelessness to becoming homeless will mean that the local housing authority must review its assessment of the applicant’s case and notify the applicant in writing accordingly.

Provided that the applicant remains eligible for assistance, the local housing authority will now owe the applicant the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will arise.
duty to take reasonable steps to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for the applicant’s occupation, and for the members of his or her household. The English Code advises that the local housing authority will want to provide a ‘seamless transition’ between the two duties.1

15.117 In addition, if the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, the local housing authority will have a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and the members of his or her household1. The English Code advises that this should be arranged as a priority2.

The applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation where there was a reasonable prospect that it would be available for occupation for at least six months

15.118 The HA 1996, s 195(2)1, prevention duty can be brought to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that:

• the applicant was made an offer of accommodation;
• the accommodation was suitable for the needs of the applicant and members of his or her household2;
• the applicant refused the offer; and
• on the date of refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation3 by the applicant and all the members of his or her household4 for at least six months5.

The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ of all these different requirements6. This requires something more on the local housing authority’s part than simply an assumption.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 For ‘suitable’ accommodation, see Chapter 18. By s 206(1) Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority must discharge its functions by (among other things) securing that suitable accommodation is ‘available’. This refers to HA 1996, s 176: ‘accommodation shall be regarded as available only if it is available for occupation by [the applicant] together with any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him’. The combined effect of these two provisions is that suitable accommodation must be available for the applicant and his household, which carries with it the implication that the accommodation must be suitable for all such persons, and not solely the applicant. See English Code, paras 16.3 and 17.2 and R v Newham London Borough Council ex parte Sacupima [2001] 1 WLR 563, CA, at [28]–[32].

HA 1996, s 195(8), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.119 The meanings of ‘suitable’ and ‘available’ accommodation are discussed at 15.32–15.35. Readers are also referred to the discussion of HA 1996, s 195(8)(a)\(^1\), which allows the local housing authority to bring the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^2\) prevention duty to an end when the equivalent offer is accepted\(^3\).

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

\(^2\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.120 Normally this offer of alternative accommodation will have been as a result of the local housing authority’s help given to the applicant to prevent his or her homelessness. It might be that the local housing authority\(^4\) had been able to persuade the applicant’s existing landlord to make the applicant an offer of a new tenancy of the current home. It might have been that the offer came from the local housing authority, under its allocation scheme, or from a private registered provider\(^5\). Or the offer might have come from family or friends making suitable accommodation available on an informal basis\(^6\).

\(^4\) The applicant will have been entitled to a reasonable preference under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme because the HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, prevention duty was owed to him or her: HA 1996, s 166A(3)(b), see 4.67–4.79.

\(^5\) See 15.35.

15.121 There is nothing in HA 1996, s 195\(^1\), setting out any form in which the offer must have been made. There is no requirement that the offer was made in writing, or that it was accompanied with an explanation of the consequences of refusal.

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.122 Given that the local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that all of these conditions are met, this requires a local housing authority to consider carefully any reasons that are put forward by the applicant, or are otherwise apparent to the local housing authority, as to why the accommodation offered might not have been suitable. The local housing authority will also need a sufficient basis to be ‘satisfied’ that there was a reasonable prospect that the accommodation would have been available for occupation for at least six months\(^7\). The period of six months begins from the date when the applicant refused the offer of accommodation.

\(^7\) The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 195(8)(d), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.37–15.38.
The applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation made available to him or her as a result of the local housing authority's exercise of its functions under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty.

The HA 1996, s 195(2)

1. Prevention duty can be brought to an end when the local housing authority is satisfied that:
   - the applicant occupied accommodation made available to him or her pursuant to the local housing authority's functions under the HA 1996, s 195(2);
   - the applicant has ceased to occupy that accommodation;
   - the cessation of occupation was due to a deliberate act or omission (which does not include an act or omission in good faith by a person unaware of a material fact);
   - that deliberate act, or omission, was by the applicant;
   - that deliberate act or omission was an operative cause of the applicant's homelessness;
   - the accommodation was available for the applicant's occupation, and for the members of his or her household; and
   - the accommodation was reasonable for the applicant and his or her household to continue to occupy.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 195(8)(e), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 14.29–14.31.
4 These last six conditions are the elements of the 'becoming homeless intentionally' test at HA 1996, s 191, see Chapter 13.

The local housing authority must be 'satisfied' that all these conditions are made out. If there is any doubt, the duty will not have ended.

1 HA 1996, s 195(8), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.125 The first condition makes it clear that the accommodation that the applicant has ceased to occupy must have been made available to the applicant pursuant to the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty. It would be unusual for the local housing authority to have secured accommodation for the applicant under this duty, first, because the applicant is threatened with homelessness, and not actually homeless, and secondly because the duty is only to take reasonable steps to help the applicant prevent his or her homelessness. The cases in which a local housing authority regards it as 'reasonable' to secure accommodation for an applicant who is not yet homeless will probably be rare. This means that instances where an applicant has become homeless intentionally from any such accommodation are likely to be rarer still.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.87–15.137.
2 There is a power to secure accommodation at HA 1996, s 205(3), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(12), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities on or after 3 April 2018 and English Code, para 14.30, envisages the possibility, see 13.239–13.247 and 16.278–16.279.
15.126 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

The applicant is no longer eligible for assistance

15.126 The local housing authority must be 'satisfied' that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance. 'Eligible for assistance' is defined at HA 1996, s 185, and discussed at Chapter 11. The HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty can come to an end for this reason and readers are referred to the discussion at Chapter 16.

1 HA 1996, s 195(8)(f), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 14.33.
2 HA 1996, s 193(6)(a).

15.127 If the applicant’s household includes a child aged under 18, the applicant will be asked to consent to a referral of the essential facts of his or her case to children’s services. The English Code contains advice that when interim accommodation is brought to an end, the period of notice should take account of the applicant’s needs and of the time required for him or her to access assistance, and that the local housing authority should consider having arrangements in place to manage a transition in responsibility from housing to adult or children’s services, so that there is no break in the provision of accommodation.

1 English Code, para 14.32.

The applicant has withdrawn his or her application

15.128 The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application. It cannot rely on ambiguity. An unequivocal written warning would be sufficient for the local housing authority to be satisfied. But what if the wording is ambiguous? What if the applicant simply falls silent and fails to respond to communications from the local housing authority? Or if he or she verbally informs the local housing adviser that he or she has withdrawn, or intends to withdraw, the application? Can those circumstances be interpreted as the applicant withdrawing his or her application?

1 HA 1996, s 195(8)(g), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 14.33–14.34.

15.129 The only guidance in the English Code is in relation to the situation where the applicant fails to keep in contact with the local housing authority. In those circumstances, it recommends that local housing authorities should have procedures in place to attempt to maintain or regain contact with applicants, and should use a variety of communication channels.

1 English Code, para 14.31.

15.130 The local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason must be notified to the applicant in writing. If the applicant were to respond to this notification, and dispute the decision, that would probably be sufficient for the local housing authority to find that the applicant has not withdrawn his or her application.

1 HA 1996, s 195(5) and (7), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.131 In addition, the applicant has the right to request a review of this decision that the duty has come to an end. If the applicant requests a review disputing the decision, that very action may suggest that the application has not in fact been withdrawn.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(bc)(ii), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.42–19.48.

Decision that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate

15.132 A new provision at HA 1996, s 193B, permits a local housing authority to decide that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. The consequences of this decision are that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty will come to an end. This provision is further discussed at 15.196–15.221.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

4 HA 1996, s 193C(2) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.216–15.218.

The right to request a review

15.133 The applicant has the right to request a review of the following decisions made by the local housing authority that might be relevant to the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty:

• whether or not he or she is eligible for assistance;
• whether or not the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty is owed;
• what steps the local housing authority is to take in order to perform its HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty;
• whether or not any accommodation offered in discharge of the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty is suitable;
• to give notice to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end because the local housing authority is satisfied that one of the circumstances set out in HA 1996, s 195(8) has occurred; and
• to give notice to the applicant of a decision under HA 1996, s 193B(2), that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to

15.134 If the applicant wishes to request a review of the suitability of accommodation offered, then caution would suggest that the applicant should accept the offer of accommodation. If the review is unsuccessful, the applicant will at least have some accommodation. If the applicant refuses the accommodation and the review is unsuccessful, he or she may be without any accommodation at all.

1 The right to accept whilst also requesting a review is at HA 1996, s 202(1)(g) and (h), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.90–19.99.

2 There is nothing at HA 1996, s 202(1) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) which specifically provides for an applicant who is made an offer of accommodation under the HA 1996, s 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) prevention duty both to accept the accommodation offered and to request a review of its suitability. However, if the applicant is contemplating refusing an offer of accommodation, he or she would be advised to accept the offer instead and then, when notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) prevention duty has come to an end because the applicant has accepted an offer of suitable accommodation, which is available for occupation for at least six months (under HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), the applicant would have a right to request a review of that decision and to make representations as to why the accommodation was not suitable: HA 1996, s 202(1)(a) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018).

15.135 A review must be requested within 21 days of the applicant being notified of the relevant decision, which is the date when the applicant received the decision. If the applicant did not receive the notice, and the local housing authority made the notice available at its office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant, the date of notification will be the end of that period

1 HA 1996, s 195(9), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) and s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

What happens after the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty has ended?

15.136 The fact that the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty has come to an end does not necessarily mean that no further duty will be owed to the applicant. What happens next for the applicant depends on what his or her circumstances are:

- If the applicant has become ineligible for assistance, then no further duty will be owed.
- If the applicant has secured accommodation, then he or she will not be homeless or threatened with homelessness, and no further duty will be owed.
- If the applicant remains threatened with homelessness, then he or she will be owed no further duty

1 Unless the applicant has been served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice that either will expire within 56 days or has expired, and is in respect of the only accommodation that is available for his or her occupation. In those circumstances, the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty continues: HA 1996, s 195(6), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.111.

- If the applicant has become homeless, then the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty arises. This applies even if, for example, the applicant refused an offer of suitable accommodation. There is no need for the applicant to make a fresh application for homelessness assistance because the local housing authority will have notified the applicant that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end because the applicant has become homeless. The local housing authority will also have notified the applicant that its assessment of his or her case has changed, because he or she was previously threatened with homelessness, and is now homeless.

15.137 Even if no further duty is owed, the applicant may make a further application for homelessness assistance. If the factual circumstances are not the same as they were at the time when the earlier application for homelessness assistance was disposed of (namely the circumstances at the time the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\), prevention duty came to an end), the local housing authority must accept the application and make inquiries into what duty, if any, is owed to the applicant\(^2\).

\(^2\) The English Code contains advice that in the majority of re-application cases where the applicant has previously refused an offer of suitable accommodation, the local housing authority will be entitled to rely on the ending of its duty. However, if the applicant’s factual circumstances have changed, the local housing authority must accept the fresh application: English Code, paras 18.11–13.13 and particularly para 18.12. See 8.80–8.82 and 8.85–8.91 for discussion of further applications.

DUTY TO TAKE REASONABLE STEPS TO HELP THE APPLICANT TO SECURE THAT SUITABLE ACCOMMODATION BECOMES AVAILABLE FOR HIS OR HER OCCUPATION: ‘THE RELIEF DUTY’

Applicants entitled to the duty

15.138 The HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty is owed to applicants whom the local housing authority is satisfied are:

- eligible for assistance\(^4\); and
- homeless\(^4\).

However, where a local housing authority has notified the applicant that it intends to notify, or has notified, another local housing authority of its opinion that the conditions are met for the referral of the applicant’s case to that other local housing authority, the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty will not be owed to the applicant.

\(^1\) As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see Chapter 11.

\(^2\) HA 1996, ss 175–177, see Chapter 10.

\(^3\) As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

\(^4\) As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

Referral of HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to another local housing authority

15.139 If the local housing authority decides that the conditions for referral to another local housing authority are met, it may choose to refer the applicant’s case to another local housing authority for that local housing authority to perform the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty.\(^2\) Once it has notified the applicant that it has notified, or intends to notify, another local housing authority of its opinion that the conditions for referral are met, it is not subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty. The applicant does not have the right to request a review of that decision.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.

2 HA 1996, s 198(A1) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, and HA 1996, s 198(2)–(4).

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

4 HA 1996, s 199A(1)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 13.4.

5 Because the only right to request a review of a decision to notify another local housing authority applies to decisions made under HA 1996, s 198(1), which permits a local housing authority to refer performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty: HA 202(1)(c), see 19.49–19.54.

15.140 The conditions for referral are discussed at Chapter 14. Even if the local housing authority is satisfied that the conditions for referral are met, it retains a discretion whether or not to refer the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty to the other local housing authority.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 198(A1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, para 10.30 and 13.4.

15.141 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, the applicant will be notified of that decision and the reasons for it. The applicant will have the right to request a review of that decision. Performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will become the responsibility of the notified local housing authority. The notifying local housing authority should send to the notified local housing authority its assessment of the applicant's case and the personalised housing plan, if completed.

1 By agreement between the two local housing authorities, or by a referee's decision, see HA 1996, s 198(5) and 14.176–14.190.

4 HA 1996, s 199A(5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

5 English Code, para 10.43. The English Code suggests that the applicant's consent will be needed for a copy of his or her personalised plan to be sent to the notified local housing authority.

15.142 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, the applicant will be notified of that decision and the notifying local housing authority becomes subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty. The 56-day period during which the local housing authority should perform the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will commence from the day when the applicant is notified of the decision that the conditions for referral are not met.

When does the duty arise?

15.143 The duty arises as soon as the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant is homeless and is eligible for assistance. The local housing authority must notify the applicant in writing of its decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is owed to him or her. However, the duty arises as soon as the local housing authority is 'satisfied' that these conditions are met, rather than on the date of notification. If the written decision is notified later than the date on which the local housing authority has concluded that it is 'satisfied' that the applicant is eligible for assistance and is homeless, that is not a reason for the local housing authority to delay in performing its duty.

15.144 The duty on the local housing authority is to 'take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for the applicant's occupation' for at least six months. The meaning of 'take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure' is discussed at 15.22–15.26 and the meaning of 'available for occupation' is discussed at 15.32–15.39.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The period may be extended by the Secretary of State to up to twelve months: HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.145 When the local housing authority is deciding what steps it will take, it must have regard to the assessment of the applicant's case that it will have already undertaken. In the course of the assessment (which may be ongoing), the local housing authority will have considered the circumstances that caused the applicant to become homeless, his or her housing needs, together with those of his or her household, and what support would be necessary for the applicant to find suitable accommodation. The information in the assessment should ensure that the local housing authority is aware of all the information necessary to determine what steps might reasonably be taken to help the applicant secure accommodation. Those ‘reasonable steps’ will then have been set out in the personalised housing plan, drawn up following the assessment.\(^1\)

HA 1996, s 189B(3), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See HA 1996, s 189A, as inserted by HRA, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, and see 15.62–15.71.

HA 1996, s 189A(4)(b) and (6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, paras 11.18–11.23 and para 13.7, and 15.72–15.80. There is specific guidance as to how to perform the relief duty when dealing with young people aged 16 or 17 in Prevention of Homelessness and Provision of Accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation (MHCLG and Department for Education, April 2018), chapter 4.

The applicant has the right to request a review of the steps that the local housing authority has decided that it is to take under this duty.\(^1\) This is the opportunity for the applicant to challenge the local housing authority if he or she believes that it is not taking sufficient or appropriate steps to help him or her secure accommodation.\(^1\)

HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(i), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.18–19.23.

The aim is to help the applicant find his or her own accommodation, whether that is social housing, accommodation in the private rented sector or accommodation through some other route such as an informal arrangement from family or friends.\(^1\)

The applicant will be entitled to reasonable preference within the local housing allocation scheme, because he or she is homeless: HA 1996, s 166A(3)(a), see 4.58–4.66.

The English Code contains specific advice on supporting people who are sleeping rough.\(^1\) It also advises that where homelessness is relieved, but the applicant’s needs put him or her at risk of a further threat of homelessness, the local housing authority should work with other support services to help the applicant.\(^2\)

The meanings of ‘suitable accommodation’ and ‘available for occupation’ are discussed at 15.32–15.39 and Chapter 18.

Any accommodation which is secured must be:

- suitable for the needs of the applicant and the members of his or her household;\(^1\)
- available for occupation by the applicant and the members of his or her household; and
- available for occupation for at least six months.\(^3\)

The meanings of ‘suitable accommodation’ and ‘available for occupation’ are discussed at 15.32–15.39 and Chapter 18.\(^1\)

HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, and HA 1996, s 206(1), see Chapter 18. By s 206(1) Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority must discharge its functions by (among other things) securing that suitable accommodation is ‘available’. This refers to HA 1996, s 176: ‘accommodation shall be regarded as available only if it is available for occupation by [the applicant] together with any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his...’
family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him'. The combined effect of these two provisions is that suitable accommodation must be available for the applicant and his household, which carries with it the implication that the accommodation must be suitable for all such persons, and not solely the applicant. See English Code, paras 16.3 and 17.2 and \textit{R v Newham London Borough Council ex parte Sacupima} [2001] 1 WLR 563, CA, at [28]–[32].

2 'Available' is defined at HA 1996, s 175(1) as meaning some legal entitlement to occupy, see 10.17–10.32.

3 HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 8.100–8.107, 15.56–15.58 and 16.47–16.50 for the special provisions which apply where an applicant is re-applying within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer.

\textbf{Interim accommodation}

\textbf{15.150} If the local housing authority has ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant ‘may’ be homeless, ‘may’ be eligible for assistance and ‘may’ have a priority need, it is under a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and his or her household\footnote{HA 1996, s 188(1), see English Code, para 13.3 and 16.37–16.50.}. The local housing authority must provide this accommodation whilst it complies with the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}, relief duty, unless, whilst it is complying, it concludes that the applicant does not have a priority need and notifies the applicant of its decision that, once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}, relief duty has come to an end, no further duty will therefore be owed\footnote{HA 1996, s 188(1ZA)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}.

\textbf{How does the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty come to an end}

\textbf{15.151} There are ten circumstances in which the HA 1996, s 189B relief duty can come to an end. They are:

\item the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally, and 56 days have passed since the day on which the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty was owed. In this case, the duty will end automatically when the 56 day period has ended\footnote{HA 1996, s 188(1), see English Code, para 13.3 and 16.37–16.50.};
\item the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for occupation and that there is a reasonable prospect of suitable accommodation being available for occupation for at least six months\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.};
\item the local housing authority has complied with the relief duty at HA 1996, s 189B(2)\footnote{HA 1996, s 188(1ZA)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}, for a period of 56 days beginning with the day on which the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty is owed\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}.
(4) the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and, on the date of the refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation by the applicant for at least six months;

(5) the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation that had been made available to the applicant as a result of the local housing authority's exercise of its functions under the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;

(6) the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance;

(7) the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application for homelessness assistance;

(8) the applicant has refused a final accommodation offer, having been informed of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation;

(9) the applicant has refused a final Pt 6 offer, having been informed of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation; or

(10) the local housing authority considers that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate following a warning.

When the applicant must be notified in writing

15.152 There is no obligation to notify the applicant of the first circumstance. It is an automatic consequence at the end of the 56 day period that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty ends where an applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally. The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will arise.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(4), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, para 14.5 and see 15.160–15.161.

2 See 16.94–16.199.

15.153 For the second to seventh circumstances inclusive, the applicant must be notified in writing of the local housing authority’s decision that the relevant circumstances have been met. The duty does not come to an end until that notification has been given.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(5)–(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, paras 14.40–14.41; and see 15.162–15.189.

15.154 That notification must:

- specify which of the circumstances apply that have brought the duty to an end;
- inform the applicant that he or she has the right to request a review of the decision; and
- inform the applicant of the 21-day period within which the request must be made.

3 HA 1996, s 189B(6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.190–15.192.

15.155 If no notification is made, or if the notification does not contain all of that information, the duty continues.

1 Because the decision is not put in writing, or is not received by the applicant, or is not made available at the applicant’s office for a reasonable period for collection, see 15.152–15.159.
The relief duty 15.159

15.156 Whilst there is no statutory requirement that reasons be given for the decision, procedural fairness is likely to require that the local housing authority explain why they consider the circumstance in question applies. If the notification is not received by the applicant, then it is treated as having been given to the applicant if it is made available at the applicant’s office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant. The decision to serve a notice is discretionary. Even if the statutory criteria are met, the local housing authority may decide not to end the duty.

2 HA 1996, s 189B(5) and (6), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.152–15.159.
3 Because HA 1996, s 189B(5) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) contains the word ‘may’.

15.157 In respect of the eighth and ninth circumstances, there is no need for notification to be given under HA 1996, s 189B(5)–(7). However, the applicant will have been informed of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review. A final Pt 6 offer must be made in writing and it would be expected that a final accommodation offer would also be made in writing. The duty ends when the offer is refused.

15.158 In the tenth circumstance, the applicant will have been given a written notice setting out the reasons for the notice, the effect of the notice, his or her right to request a review and the period of 21 days in which to request the review. The giving of the notice, which is discretionary, brings the duty to an end.

15.159 Each of these circumstances will now be considered in more detail.
Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

Applicant has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally and 56 days have passed.

15.160 The HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will come to an end if:

- the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need; and
- the local housing authority is not satisfied that the applicant became homeless intentionally; and
- 56 days have passed since the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty arose.

The duty ends automatically when these criteria are met and no written notification is needed, although the local housing authority must inform the applicant in writing of its decision that he or she has a priority need and did not become homeless intentionally. It would also have notified the applicant in writing that its assessment of the applicant's case has changed.

7 HA 1996, s 189A(10), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see English Code, paras 11.32–11.34 and 15.81–15.86.

This provision brings the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty automatically to an end even if the local housing authority has not taken any reasonable steps to help the applicant. If it only applies to applicants who would be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty. There is no discretion available to the local housing authority to extend the period for compliance with the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and thus postpone the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

Suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant and there is a reasonable prospect that the accommodation will be available for at least six months.

15.162 The HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that all of the following conditions are met:

- that the applicant has accommodation that is suitable for his or her needs and those of the members of his or her household;
- that the accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant, and by all the members of his or her household; and
- that there is a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation will be available for at least six months.
'The relief duty' 15.164

available for the applicant’s occupation for at least six months.\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}

For ‘suitable’ accommodation, see Chapter 18. By s 206(1) Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority must discharge its functions by (among other things) securing that suitable accommodation is ‘available’. This refers to HA 1996, s 176: ‘accommodation shall be regarded as available only if it is available for occupation by [the applicant] together with any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him’. The combined effect of these two provisions is that suitable accommodation must be available for the applicant and his household, which carries with it the implication that the accommodation must be suitable for all such persons, and not solely the applicant. See English Code, paras 16.3 and 17.2 and \textit{R v Newham London Borough Council ex parte Sacupima} [2001] 1 WLR 563, CA, at [28]–[32].\footnote{As defined at HA 1996, ss 175–177, see Chapter 10.}

The meanings of ‘suitable’ and ‘available’ accommodation are is discussed at 15.32–15.39. As already observed, there must be ‘a reasonable prospect’ that the accommodation will continue to be available for at least six months.\footnote{As defined at HA 1996, s 176, see 10.21–10.32.}

What is ‘a reasonable prospect’? Obviously if the applicant is granted a fixed-term tenancy, for a term of six months or more, the local housing authority could be satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect that the accommodation will continue to be available for that period. In the case of more informal arrangements, such as accommodation provided by family or friends, the local housing authority would want something more than a mere assurance that it might be available for that period. The English Code contains advice to deal with two specific circumstances:

- where the applicant is permitted to remain in his or her existing accommodation by the landlord, but a Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice was previously issued, in those circumstances the landlord should be asked to issue a new tenancy. If he or she refuses, the local housing authority could secure written confirmation that the applicant can remain on condition that he or she complies with documented conditions. Provided that the local housing authority has a reasonable expectation that the applicant can comply, the guidance in the English Code is that there is likely to be a reasonable prospect of availability;\footnote{HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}

- where the applicant is staying with friends or family, the local housing authority must satisfy itself that the accommodation will be available for at least six months, either with an open-ended agreement (perhaps with reasonable conditions) or an agreement that the applicant can stay...

until he or she has secured alternative accommodation.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a)(ii), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 English Code, paras 14.8–14.9.

3 English Code, para 14.10.

15.165 The period of six months begins on the date of the notice bringing the duty to an end.

The local housing authority has complied with its HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty for a period of 56 days

15.166 The HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty will come to an end where the local housing authority is satisfied that all of the following conditions are met:

• it has complied with the duty;
• a period of 56 days has ended; and
• the 56 day period began on the day on which the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty was owed.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 189B(7)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 14.14–14.19.

3 HA 1996, s 189B(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. For the potential distinction between the date when the local housing authority was satisfied that the duty was owed, and the notification of that decision to the applicant, see 9.93.

15.167 The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ of all of these conditions. It does not matter whether the outcome of the local housing authority’s compliance has been that the applicant has actually secured accommodation or not. However, the local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that it has actually complied, ie that it has taken reasonable steps to help the applicant. If the local housing authority has done nothing during the 56 days, it has not complied with the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty and so the duty will not end at the close of the 56 day period.

1 HA 1996, s 189B(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 189B(7)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.168 The English Code makes it clear that a local housing authority may choose to continue to provide help to the applicant for a longer period, and that local housing authorities should not have blanket policies of ending the duty after 56 days. In each case, the applicant’s circumstances should be taken into account, including his or her needs, the risk of him or her sleeping rough, the prospects of him or her securing accommodation, along with the local housing authority's resources and any wider implications of bringing the duty to an end, such as an applicant with children being referred to children's services.¹

¹ Except where the applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally, in which case the duty will automatically end after 56 days: HA 1996, s 189B(4), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.160–15.161.

The applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation where there was a reasonable prospect that it would be available for occupation for at least six months

15.169 The HA 1996, s 189B(2),¹ relief duty will come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that:

• the applicant was made an offer of accommodation;
• the accommodation was suitable for the needs of the applicant and members of his or her household;²
• the applicant refused the offer;
• on the date of refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation¹ by the applicant and all the members of his or her household for at least six months.³

¹ As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
² For 'suitable' accommodation, see Chapter 18. By s 206(1) Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority must discharge its functions by (among other things) securing that suitable accommodation is 'available'. This refers to HA 1996, s 176: 'accommodation shall be regarded as available only if it is available for occupation by [the applicant] together with any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him'. The combined effect of these two provisions means that suitable accommodation must be available for the applicant and his household, which carries with it the implication that the accommodation must be suitable for all such persons, and not solely the applicant. See English Code, paras 16.3 and 17.2 and R v Newham London Borough Council ex parte Sacupima [2001] 1 WLR 563, CA, at [28]–[32].
³ As defined at HA 1996, s 175–177, see Chapter 10.
⁴ As defined at HA 1996, s 176, see 10.21–10.32.
⁵ HA 1996, s 189B(7)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 189B(7)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.170 The local housing authority must be 'satisfied' of all these different requirements. This requires something more on the local housing authority's part than simply an assumption. If there is any doubt, the duty will not have come to an end.

¹ HA 1996, s 189B(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.171 The meanings of 'suitable' and 'available' accommodation are discussed at 15.32–15.39. The issue of how the local housing authority can be satisfied that there was a reasonable prospect that the accommodation would be available for at least six months is discussed at 15.37.

15.172 There is no requirement that the offer should have come from the local housing authority itself. It might have come from a private landlord, from family or friends making suitable accommodation available on an informal basis. Equally, the offer might have come from the local housing authority, through its allocation scheme.

15.173 Given that the local housing authority must be 'satisfied' that all of these conditions are met, this requires a local housing authority to consider carefully any reasons that are put forward by the applicant, or that are otherwise apparent to the local housing authority, as to why the accommodation offered might not have been suitable. The local housing authority will also need a sufficient basis to be 'satisfied' that there was a reasonable prospect that the accommodation would have been available for occupation for at least six months1. The period of six months begins from the date when the applicant refused the offer of accommodation2. Finally, it would also have to be 'satisfied' that the applicant had actually refused the offer of accommodation3.

1 The period of six months could be extended to a longer period of no more than 12 months if the Secretary of State so prescribes: HA 1996, s 189B(7)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 189B(7)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

3 For an example where the local housing authority was wrong in law to characterise the applicant’s response as a refusal, see Ciercierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016) Legal Action, October, p 41, County Court at Central London.

The applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation made available to him or her as a result of the local housing authority’s exercise of its functions under the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty

15.174 The HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty will come to an end when the local housing authority is satisfied that all of the following apply2:

- the applicant occupied accommodation made available to him or her pursuant to the local housing authority’s functions under the HA 1996, s 189B(2)1, relief duty;
- the applicant has ceased to occupy that accommodation;
- the cessation of occupation was due to a deliberate act or omission (which does not include an act or omission in good faith by a person unaware of a material fact);
- that deliberate act, or omission, was by the applicant;
- that deliberate act or omission was an operative cause of the applicant’s homelessness;
- the accommodation was available for the applicant’s occupation, and for the members of his or her household; and
- the accommodation was reasonable for the applicant and his or her household to continue to occupy.

The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that all these conditions are made out. If there is any doubt, the duty will not have ended.

4. HA 1996, s 189B(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.175 The first condition makes it clear that the accommodation that the applicant has ceased to occupy must have been provided to the applicant pursuant to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty.

1. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. see 15.138–15.195.

15.176 The six latter conditions comprise the definition of ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ at HA 1996, s 191. The HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty can come to an end for the same reason and readers are referred to the discussion at Chapter 16.

2. HA 1996, s 193(6)(b)

15.177 It remains to be seen how much practical relevance this provision will be. The local housing authority is not obliged to provide accommodation under the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty, although there is a power to do so at HA 1996, s 205(3). So the number of applicants likely to be accommodated under this duty may not be large. Moreover, it is well-established that an applicant in interim accommodation remains homeless and therefore cannot become homeless intentionally from it. It would appear likely that in order for the accommodation provided under the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty to be accommodation from which it is possible to become homeless intentionally, it would have to have some degree of permanence, in which case the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty is likely to have been brought to an end under one of the other provisions long before the applicant becomes homeless intentionally from it.

15.178 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

The applicant is no longer eligible for assistance

15.178 The local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance¹. ‘Eligible for assistance’ is defined at HA 1996, s 185, and discussed at Chapter 11. The HA 1996 s 193(2), main housing duty can come to an end for this reason² and readers are referred to the discussion at Chapter 16³.

³ See 16.124–16.125. For an example of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty coming to an end for this reason, see Tower Hamlets London Borough Council v Dugan [2006] EWCA Civ 159, [2006] HLR 28, CA. See also the ending of the HA 1996, s 195(2), (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), prevention duty for this reason: 15.126–15.127.

15.179 Where the applicant’s household includes a child aged under 18, and the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may not be eligible for assistance¹, the applicant will be asked to consent to a referral of the essential facts of his or her case to children’s services². The English Code contains advice that when interim accommodation is brought to an end, the period of notice should take account of the applicant’s needs and of the time required for him or her to access assistance, and that the local housing authority should consider having arrangements in place to manage a transition in responsibility from housing to adult or children’s services, so that there is no break in the provision of accommodation³.

15.180 The equivalent provision which brings to an end the HA 196, s 195(2)⁴ prevention duty is discussed at 15.128–15.131. The local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason must be notified to the applicant in writing⁵. If the applicant were to respond to this notification, that would be an indication in itself that he or she has not withdrawn his or her application. Similarly, the applicant has the right to request a review of this decision that the duty has come to an end⁶, and any such request might suggest that the application has not in fact been withdrawn⁷.

The applicant has refused a final accommodation offer

15.181 The HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will come to an end where:

• the applicant has received an offer of accommodation;
• the applicant had been informed of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation;
• that offer was of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;
• the offer was made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by it in discharge of its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• the offer was made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by it in discharge of its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• the offer was made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by it in discharge of its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• the offer was made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by it in discharge of its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• the tenancy was for a fixed-term of at least six months;
• the applicant has refused the offer;
• the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation was suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household; and
• the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant was not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation which he or she could not bring to an end before being required to take up the offer.

15.182 In order to approve the making of a final accommodation offer, the local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and that he or she is not under contractual or other obligations preventing him or her from taking up the accommodation. Whilst there is no specific requirement in HA 1996, Pt 7, that the local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ about the other conditions, that does not mean that the local housing authority could operate simply on an assumption. For the duty to come to an end for this reason, the local housing authority must come to a decision that all the conditions are met which means, in effect, that it must be satisfied that each one is met.

1 HA 1996, s 193A(6), inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.183 There is nothing in HA 1996, s 193A, setting out any form in which the offer must be made. However, it would be expected that the offer will be made in writing. Similarly, there is nothing that requires that the information given to the applicant (of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability) is given in writing, but again it should be expected as good administrative practice. The meanings of ‘suitable accommodation’ and ‘available for occupation’ are discussed at 15.32–15.39 and Chapter 18.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.184 A special provision applies in relation to applicants who have been occupying interim accommodation and who have refused a final accommodation offer in these circumstances. If the applicant requests a review of the suitability of the final accommodation offer, and the local housing authority either has reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need, or is satisfied that he or she does have a priority need, the local housing authority will continue to be under a duty to secure interim accommodation until the review decision has been notified to the applicant. Unlike the usual position where an applicant who has interim accommodation requests a review, this is not a discretionary power exercised by the local housing authority but a duty to continue to secure interim accommodation.

The applicant has refused a final Pt 6 offer

15.185 The HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will come to an end where:

- the applicant has received an offer of accommodation;
- the applicant has been informed of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation;
- that offer was an offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6 (‘allocation of housing accommodation’);
- the offer was made in writing by the local housing authority in discharge of its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
- the offer stated that it was a final offer for the purposes of HA 1996, s 193A;
- the applicant has refused the offer of accommodation;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation was suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household; and
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant was not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation which he or she could not bring to an end before being required to take up the offer\textsuperscript{10}.

15.186 In order to make a final HA 1996, Pt 6 offer, the local housing authority must be ‘satisfied’ that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and that he or she is not under contractual or other obligations preventing him or her from taking up the accommodation\textsuperscript{1}. The meanings of ‘suitable accommodation’ and ‘available for occupation’ are discussed at 15.32–15.39 and \textsc{chapter} 18.

15.187 The offer must be made in writing and state that it is a final offer for these purposes\textsuperscript{1}. Although there is nothing in HA 1996, Pt 7, requiring that the information given to the applicant (of the consequences of refusal and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability) should be in writing, this would be expected as good administrative practice.

15.188 A special provision applies in relation to applicants who have been occupying interim accommodation. If the applicant requests a review of the suitability of the final Pt 6 offer, and the local housing authority either has reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need, or is satisfied that he or she does have a priority need, the local housing authority will continue to be under a duty to secure interim accommodation until the review decision has been notified to the applicant\textsuperscript{1}. Unlike the usual position where an applicant who has interim accommodation requests a review, this is not a discretionary decision exercised by the local housing authority but a duty to continue to secure interim accommodation².

Decision that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate

15.189 If the local housing authority has notified an applicant under HA 1996, s 193B(2)¹, that it considers that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably failed to co-operate², then the HA 1996, s 189B(2)³, relief duty will come to an end for this reason. The right to request a review

15.190 The applicant has the right to request a review¹ of the following decisions made by the local housing authority that might be relevant to this duty:

• whether or not he or she is eligible for assistance³;
• whether or not the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁴, relief duty is owed⁴;
• what steps the local housing authority is to take in order to perform its HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁵ relief duty⁶;
• any decision, by agreement between local housing authorities or following a referee’s decision, under HA 1996, s 198(5)⁷, that the conditions for referral⁸ are met and that the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁹, relief duty will be referred to another local housing authority¹⁰;
• any decision as to the suitability of any accommodation offered to the applicant in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹¹, relief duty to an end¹²;
• any decision as to the suitability of accommodation offered by a way of a final accommodation offer¹³;
• any decision as to the suitability of accommodation offered by a way of a final Pt 6 offer¹⁴;
• any decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹⁵, relief duty has come to an end under HA 1996, s 189B(4)¹⁶ because the applicant has a priority need, did not become homeless intentionally, and 56 days have passed¹⁷;
• any decision to give notice to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹⁸, relief duty has come to an end because the local housing authority is satisfied that one of the circumstances at HA 1996, s 189B(7)¹⁹ applies²⁰; and

If the applicant wishes to request a review of the suitability of accommodation offered, then caution would suggest that the applicant should accept the accommodation. The right to request a review of any decision as to the suitability of either a final accommodation offer or final Pt 6 offer applies whether the applicant has accepted or refused the offer. However, those are not the only offers of accommodation which can bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end. The duty can also end where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for his or her occupation for a period of at least six months. If the applicant is contemplating refusing an offer in these circumstances, the safer course would be to accept the accommodation and then, when notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end because of his or her acceptance, request a review of the suitability of the accommodation. If the review is unsuccessful, the applicant will at least have some accommodation. If the applicant refuses the accommodation and the review is unsuccessful, he or she may be without any accommodation at all. The cautious approach would therefore always be to accept the offer and request a review of the suitability of accommodation offered.

A review must be requested within 21 days of the applicant being notified of the relevant decision, which is the date when the applicant received the decision. If the applicant did not receive the notice, and the local housing authority made the notice available at its office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant, the date of notification will be the end of that period.

15.192 A review must be requested within 21 days of the applicant being notified of the relevant decision, which is the date when the applicant received the decision. If the applicant did not receive the notice, and the local housing authority made the notice available at its office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant, the date of notification will be the end of that period.

2. HA 1996, s 189B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), and s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The exact wording is ‘treated as having been given to the applicant if it is made available at the authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection’. This suggests that the date when it is to be treated as having been given, ie notified, is the end of the reasonable period, rather than the date when the notice was first left.
What happens after the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty has ended?

15.193 The applicant’s position when the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty ends depends on his or her circumstances.

15.194 If the applicant is no longer eligible or homeless, no further duty will be owed. If the applicant is eligible, homeless, and has a priority need, the local housing authority must secure accommodation for the applicant for such period as it considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation, and must provide advice and assistance.

1 HA 1996, s 190(2)(a) and (b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.231 and 16.81–16.93. Paragraph 14.30 of the English Code advises that applicants for whom the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty was ended because they became homeless intentionally from accommodation made available under that duty will be found to have become homeless intentionally for the purposes of HA 1996, s 190(2). However, this is open to question, see 13.239–13.247.

15.195 If the applicant is eligible, homeless, and has a priority need, and did not become homeless intentionally, then he or she will be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty unless one of the following applies:

- the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty came to an end under HA 1996, s 193A(2) following the refusal of a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer. In this case, the HA 1996, s 193 main housing duty will not apply. No further duty will be owed.

- the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty came to an end under HA 1996, s 193C(2) following the applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate. In this case, the main housing duty does not apply but the local housing authority must secure that accommodation is available under the duty at HA 1996, s 193C(4).

Even if no further duty is owed, the applicant may make a further application for homelessness assistance. If the factual circumstances are not the same as they were at the time when the earlier application for homelessness assistance was disposed of (i.e. when the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty came to an end), the local housing authority must accept the application and make inquiries into what duty, if any, is owed to the applicant.

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 If the applicant had been occupying interim accommodation, and requests a review of the suitability of the final accommodation offer or final Pt 6 offer, the interim accommodation will continue until the applicant has been notified of the decision on review: HA 1996, s 188(2A), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. 15.195 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The ways in which that duty will come to an end are discussed at 16.204–16.216.

As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

See 8.80–8.82 and 8.85–8.91. The English Code contains advice that in the majority of re-application cases where the applicant has previously refused an offer of suitable accommodation, the local housing authority will be entitled to rely on the ending of its duty. However, if the applicant’s factual circumstances have changed, the local housing authority must accept the fresh application: English Code, paras 18.11–18.13 and particularly para 18.12.

DECISION THAT AN APPLICANT HAS DELIBERATELY AND UNREASONABLY REFUSED TO CO-OPERATE

Overview

15.196 A new provision at HA 1996, s 193B permits a local housing authority to decide that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. The applicant must first have been warned that the local housing authority considers that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take an appropriate step. The applicant must also have been warned as to the consequences of such a decision, and have been given a reasonable period in which to take the step. The step, or steps, referred to are those that the applicant either agreed to take when he or she and the local housing authority agreed his or her personalised housing plan, or, if there was no agreement, the steps recorded by the local housing authority in the personalised housing plan as being reasonable to require the applicant to take.

15.197 The consequences of this decision are that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention or HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duties will come to an end. A decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate cannot bring any other duties, such as the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, to an end.

Decisions on refusal to co-operate 15.200

15.198 Where the HA 1996, s 195(2),1 prevention or HA 1996, s 189B(2),2 relief duties come to an end for this reason, no further duty will be owed unless the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant remains eligible for assistance, is homeless, and has a priority need. If any of those conditions are not met, then no further duty is owed to the applicant. If all of those conditions are met, the local housing authority will owe the applicant a duty to secure accommodation for him or her. Which accommodation duty will be owed will depend on whether or not the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally.3

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

5 HA 1996, s 189(1) and Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002, SI 2002/2051, see Chapter 12.
6 HA 1996, s 191, see Chapter 13.

15.199 If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is eligible for assistance, is homeless, has a priority need and has become homeless intentionally, then the duty at HA 1996, s 190(2),1 to secure accommodation for such period as the local housing authority considers will give the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation, and to provide advice and assistance will be owed.2

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 190(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.81–16.93.

15.200 If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is eligible for assistance, is homeless, has a priority need and is not satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, then the HA 1996, s 193(2),1 main housing duty will not apply because of the decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. Instead, the local housing authority has a different duty, at HA 1996, s 193C(4),2 to secure that accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant and the members of his or her household. That duty will come to an end if the applicant is offered, and accepts or refuses, a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer, having been informed of the consequences of refusal or acceptance and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the offer. The duty will also come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance, or has become homeless intentionally from accommodation made available, or has accepted an offer of an assured tenancy from a private landlord, or has voluntarily ceased to occupy as his or her only or principal home the accommodation made available for his or her occupation.3

15.201 The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate.\(^1\)

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.30–19.35.

15.202 Each local housing authority must develop a procedure to be followed when issuing the relevant warning, or the final decision, or both, under HA 1996, s 193B.\(^1\) That procedure must be in writing, and must be kept under review.\(^2\) The final notice of a decision that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, given under HA 1996, s 193B(2),\(^3\) will involve two people. One officer decides to issue the decision and then another officer, known as the ‘appropriate person’, who is of at least equivalent seniority to the first officer, must authorise it. The appropriate person must work for the local housing authority (or in another department in the local authority), or work under a contract for the local housing authority, and must not previously have been involved in the decision to give the notice.\(^4\)

The steps which the applicant has agreed, or was required, to take

15.203 After the local housing authority had notified the applicant of its assessment of his or her case under HA 1996, s 189A(3),\(^1\) it will then try to agree with the applicant the steps that he or she is required to take in order to retain or secure suitable accommodation. It will also record the steps that it has argued to take for the same purpose.\(^2\) This record is known as the personalised housing plan.\(^3\)

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018 See 15.62–15.86.
Decisions on refusal to co-operate

15.204 It is only if the applicant has refused to take any of the steps recorded as either agreed, or as required by the local housing authority, in the personalised housing plan that the local housing authority can decide that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. The local housing authority cannot come to this decision in respect of any steps which it may have advised the applicant to take, but are not recorded as either agreed or required from the applicant.

15.205 The local housing authority can only activate this procedure if it considers that the applicant has refused to take the specified step, and that refusal was deliberate and unreasonable. If the applicant was, for example, unaware of the requirement to take the step, then his or her failure to do so would not be a refusal, nor would it be deliberate, or unreasonable.

The two-stage process

The relevant warning

15.207 The first stage is that the local housing authority must serve the applicant with a ‘relevant warning’. This is defined as a notice which:

- is given by the local housing authority to the applicant;
- is given after the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take any step that he or she had agreed to take or that was recorded by the local housing authority as reasonable to require him or her to take;
- warns the applicant that, if he or she deliberately and unreasonably refuses to take any such step after receiving the notice, the local housing authority intends to give notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate; and

- explains the consequence of a notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate.

The warning notice must be in writing. If the notice is not received by the applicant, it is treated as having been given to him or her if it was made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant.\(^1\)

The reasonable period

15.208 The applicant must then have a ‘reasonable period’ within which to comply ie to take the step required of him or her. The English Code advises that there is no set reasonable period but that local housing authorities should ensure that the applicant has sufficient time to rectify his or her non-co-operation. The length of that sufficient time will vary according to the applicant’s particular needs and circumstances.\(^2\)

The notice that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate

15.209 If the applicant has not taken the step required by the end of the reasonable period, the local housing authority can then give him or her notice of its decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take the step and thus has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate.\(^1\)

Procedure for authorising the notice

15.210 The decision to give the notice must be made by two separate people working for, or on behalf of, the local housing authority. One officer will make the decision to give the notice. This could be the same officer as made the decision to give the applicant a warning. A second officer, known as the ‘authorised person’, must then authorise the decision to give the notice. That ‘authorised person’ must be of at least equivalent seniority to the first officer and must not have been involved in the officer’s decision to give notice.\(^1\) He or she should either be employed by the local housing authority, work under a contract with the local housing authority, be supplied as an agency worker or be seconded to work for the local housing authority. There is no requirement that the authorised person be employed in the housing department of the local housing authority.\(^2\)

Decisions on refusal to co-operate 15.213

15.211 The notice must be in writing. If the notice is not received by the applicant, it is treated as having been given to him or her if it was made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant. The period of 21 days within which the applicant must request a review runs from the date of notification, which means the date when the notice was actually received. If the notice was not received at all, then the date of notification (and therefore the beginning of the 21 day period) should be the end of the reasonable period during which the notice was made available for collection at the local housing authority’s office rather than the date of the notice or when it was first made available.

What does ‘deliberately and unreasonably’ mean?

15.212 HA 1996, s 193B, provides that the local housing authority must be satisfied that the applicant’s failure to take the required step is more than a mere omission. The local housing authority must consider the applicant’s personal circumstances and his or her needs. It should not confine itself to those circumstances and needs identified in the HA 1996, s 189A, assessment of the applicant’s case.

15.213 The English Code contains detailed advice at paras 14.49–14.53, including advice that the local housing authority must be satisfied of the following matters:

• that the steps recorded in the personalised housing plans were reasonable in the context of the applicant’s particular circumstances and needs;
• that the applicant understood what was required of him or her in order to fulfil those reasonable steps and is therefore in a position to make a deliberate refusal;
• that the applicant is not refusing to co-operate as a result of a mental illness or other health need, for which he or she is not being provided with support, or as a result of a difficulty in communicating; and

2 English Code, paras 14.56–14.59. Para 14.58 advises that it may be appropriate for an officer within children’s services to be the authorised person in the case of a care-leaver.
3 HA 1996, s 193B, as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

The exact wording is ‘treated as having been given to the applicant if it is made available at the authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection’. This suggests that the date when it is to be treated as having been given, ie notified, is the end of the reasonable period, rather than the date when the notice was first left.
15.213 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

- the applicant’s refusal to co-operate with any steps was unreasonable in the context of his or her particular circumstances and needs (examples are given about failing to attend appointments or view properties).\(^1\)

It also contains advice on applicants who might have particular needs, and particular reasons why their actions should not be regarded as deliberate and unreasonable refusals to co-operate\(^2\).

The right to request a review

15.214 The applicant has the right to request a review of the local housing authority’s decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate\(^1\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 202(1)(bb), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.30–19.35.

15.215 The review must be requested within 21 days of notification, which is the date when the applicant received the notice. If the applicant did not receive the notice, and the local housing authority made the notice available at its office for a reasonable period for collection by or on behalf of the applicant, the date of notification will be the end of that period\(^2\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The exact wording is ‘treated as having been given to the applicant if it is made available at the authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection’. This suggests that the date when it is to be treated as having been given, ie notified, is the end of the reasonable period, rather than the date when the notice was first left.

Consequences of a decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate

15.216 A notice of a decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate can only be served on an applicant who is owed either the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\), prevention duty or the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\), relief duty. In each case, the relevant duty will come to an end\(^3\).

What happens next to the applicant depends on which duty he or she was owed and, if he or she was owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty, whether or not he or she has a priority need and whether he or she became homeless intentionally.

The end of the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty

15.217 If the applicant was owed the HA 1996, s 195(2)¹, prevention duty, then he or she was threatened with homelessness. No further duty will arise under HA 1996, Pt 7². If he or she remains threatened with homelessness, he or she could make a fresh application for assistance. The local housing authority must accept a fresh application if the factual circumstances are not the same as those on the disposal of his or her first application³.

2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 183(1), see English Code, para 18.12 and 8.80–8.82 and 8.85–8.91.

15.218 If the applicant subsequently becomes homeless, the factual circumstances will not be the same as on his or her first application and so he or she could make a fresh application for homelessness assistance. If he or she is homeless and eligible for assistance, the local housing authority will owe the applicant the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹, relief duty. If the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, may be eligible for assistance and may have a priority need, it will owe a duty to secure interim accommodation².

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, para 18.12 and 15.137–15.195.

The ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty

15.219 If the applicant was owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹, relief duty, then he or she is homeless. If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant does not have a priority need, then no further duty is owed. The applicant could make a fresh application for assistance. The local housing authority must accept a fresh application if the factual circumstances are not the same as those on disposal of his or her first application².

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, para 18.12 and 15.137–15.195.
2 HA 1996, s 183(1), see 8.80–8.82 and 8.85–8.91.

15.220 If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need, then it must also consider whether or not the applicant became homeless intentionally. Where the applicant is homeless, eligible for assistance, has a priority need, and has become homeless intentionally, the local housing authority will owe the applicant:
15.220 Helping Applicants Prevent or Relieve Homelessness (England)

- a duty to secure that accommodation is available for his or her occupation for such period as it considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her occupation; and
- a duty to provide the applicant, or secure that he or she is provided with, advice and assistance in any attempt he or she may make to secure that accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation.

2 HA 1996, s 190(2)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.231.

15.221 Where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is homeless, eligible for assistance and has a priority need and is not satisfied that the applicant became homeless intentionally, and the local housing authority is also satisfied that the relevant duty came to an end because the applicant had deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, then the main housing duty at HA 1996, s 193(2), will not be owed. Instead, the local housing authority will owe the applicant a different duty, under HA 1996, s 193C(4), to secure accommodation for the applicant’s occupation. This accommodation duty is discussed at 16.200–16.216.

REFERRAL DUTIES

Duty on public authority to notify a local housing authority

15.222 A new HA 1996, s 213B, creates a duty on other public authorities to take steps to refer a person who is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness to a local housing authority for the purposes of allowing him or her to make an application for homelessness assistance. Public authorities are defined as ‘a person (other than a local housing authority) who has functions of a public nature’. The public authorities specified as subject to this duty are set out at Homelessness (Review Procedure etc) Regulations 2018, reg 10 and Sch 1. They are:

- a governor of a prison within the meaning of Prison Act 1952, s 53(1);
- a director of a contracted out prison within the meaning of Criminal Justice Act 1991, s 84(4);
- a governor of a young offender institution provided under Prison Act 1952 s 43(1)(a);
- a governor of a secure training centre provided under Prison Act 1952, s 43(1)(b);
- a director of a contracted out secure training centre within the meaning of Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, s 15;
Referral duties 15.224

- a principal of a secure college provided under of Prison Act 1952, s 43(1)(c);
- a youth offending team established under Crime and Disorder Act 1998, s 39(1);
- a provider of probation services;
- an officer designated for these purposes by the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions employed at a Jobcentre Plus office; a social services authority;
- a person who performs a function of a local authority pursuant to a direction under Education Act 1996, s 497A(4) or (4A) applying to social services functions relating to children under Children Act 2004, s 50, and relating to childcare by Childcare Act 2006, s 15;^4
- a NHS Trust and an NHS Foundation Trust in relation to emergency departments, urgent treatment centres and in-patient treatment; and
- the Secretary of State for Defence in relation to members of the regular armed forces.

Although the referral duty came into force on 3 April 2018, the list of specified public authorities does not come into force until 1 October 2018. This is presumably to allow the specified public authorities a period in which to prepare for the referral duty.

1 Inserted by HRA, s 10, from 3 April 2018; English Code, chapter 4.
2 HA 1996, s 213B(5), as inserted by HRA, s 10, from 3 April 2018.
3 SI 2018/223, at APPENDIX 2.
4 There is specific guidance as to the duty to refer when dealing with young people aged 16 or 17 in Prevention of Homelessness and Provision of Accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation (MHCLG and Department for Education, April 2018), paras 3.62–3.63.
5 SI 2018/223, regs 1(3) and 10.

15.223 The duty applies when one of those bodies is exercising functions in respect of a person, and also considers that person is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. Those functions could be the provision of criminal justice, health care, social care, or education.

15.224 The threshold is met when the public authority considers that a person is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. That requires a public authority to be aware that homelessness does not mean just that a person might lack a roof over his or her head. It also applies where accommodation might not be reasonable to continue to occupy, or might not be available for the occupation of members of the person’s family, or by people with whom he or she might reasonably be expected to reside. The public authority should also be aware of the two definitions of “threatened with homelessness”: that a person is likely to become homeless within 56 days or that a person has been served with a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice which expires within 56 days. The test is that a person ‘is or may be’ homeless, so if in doubt, it should be assumed that a person is homeless.

15.225 If the relevant public authority does come to that conclusion, it must ask the person to agree that it should notify a local housing authority in England of its opinion (that the person is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness). It should also ask the person how he or she may be contacted by the local housing authority, and ask him or her to identify which local housing authority should be notified. The public authority cannot make the referral unless the person consents and identifies which local housing authority in England should be notified. The English Code contains a procedure for referrals, to be set up by the local housing authority and agreed with local service partners.

3 English Code, paras 4.5–4.12

15.226 Once the notification has been sent, the onus will be on the local housing authority then to make contact with the person, and to invite him or her to make an application for homelessness assistance. This is the reason for including the person’s contact details in the notification.

1 HA 1996, s 183(1), see 8.14–8.110.

15.227 Receipt of the notification, containing information that the person is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, might constitute an application for homelessness assistance under HA 1996, s 183(1) meaning that the local housing authority’s obligations under HA 1996, Pt 7, would apply. The immediate obligations would be for the local housing authority to make inquiries into whether the person is eligible for assistance and if so, what duty, if any is owed, and to secure interim accommodation if it has reason to believe that the person may be eligible for assistance, may be homeless and may have a priority need.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 184(1), see 9.89–9.143.
3 HA 1996, s 188(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.20–16.50.

15.228 The English Code, however, does not advise that the receipt of a referral constitutes an application for homelessness assistance. Instead, it advises that the local housing authority should try to make contact with the person and that an application for homelessness assistance is only triggered once contact has been achieved, and details are received that give the local housing authority reason to believe that the person may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. The authors of this book consider that this advice fails to recognise that the referral itself can give the local housing authority reason to believe that the person may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, and thus that the referral itself constitutes an application for the purposes of HA 1996, s 183(1). In those circumstances, the duty at HA 1996, s 183(1), to start to make inquiries and to consider whether interim accommodation should be secured applies once the local housing authority has received the referral2.

Duty on local housing authority to refer in cases involving children

15.229 Where a local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant with whom a child normally resides or might reasonably be expected to reside may be ineligible or may have become intentionally homeless1, the local housing authority must invite the applicant to consent to the referral of the essential facts of his or her case to children’s services2. If consent is given, the referral must be made3. The local housing authority must provide children’s services with the essential facts of the applicant’s case and the subsequent decision that is made on his or her homelessness application4. This duty is discussed in more detail at 16.280–16.287.

4 HA 1996, s 213A(2)(b) and (3)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

15.230 In addition to this referral duty, local housing authorities are obliged to co-operate with social services. Where social services are aware of a decision by a local housing authority that the applicant is ineligible for assistance or became homeless intentionally, they may request the local housing authority provide them with advice and assistance. The local housing authority must provide such advice and assistance as is reasonable1.

ADVICE AND ASSISTANCE DUTY OWED TO APPLICANTS WHO HAVE A PRIORITY NEED AND HAVE BECOME HOMELESS INTENTIONALLY

15.231 The duty to provide advice and assistance remains in HA 1996, Pt 7, as amended by HRA 20171, for one group of applicants only: those in respect of whom a local housing authority is satisfied that they are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need and have become homeless intentionally. The duty to secure advice and assistance applies when the local housing authority’s HA 1996, s 189B(2)2, relief duty has come to an end3. At that point, the local housing authority must provide the applicant with advice and assistance in any attempt he or she may make to secure that accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation4. The local housing authority is also under a duty to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant and for his or her household for such period as it considers will give him a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation5. In deciding what advice and assistance is to be provided under this duty, the local housing authority must have regard to its assessment of the applicant’s case under HA 1996, s 189A. The advice and assistance must include information about the likely availability in the local housing authority’s district of types of accommodation appropriate to the applicant’s housing needs, including the location and sources of such types of accommodation.

Strangely, there is no guidance as to this remaining advice and assistance duty in the English Code.

DUTY TO PROTECT APPLICANT’S PROPERTY

15.232 The local housing authority must take reasonable steps to prevent the loss of or damage to an applicant’s personal property where:

- the local housing authority have reason to believe there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, the property;
- that danger arises from the applicant’s inability to protect or deal with his or her property;
- no other suitable arrangements are in place; and
- the local housing authority are or were subject to a duty to accommodate the applicant under HA 1996, ss 188 (interim accommodation duty), 189B (relief duty), 190 (duty to persons found to be homeless intentionally), 193 (main housing duty), 195 (duty to persons threatened with homelessness prevention duty), or 200 (duties to applicants whose case is considered for referral to another local housing authority).

This duty is discussed in more detail at 16.288–16.309.

INTRODUCTION

16.1 In this chapter, we consider the powers and duties, in the Housing Act 1996 (HA 1996), Pt 7, as amended by the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017), on local housing authorities in England to secure accommodation for homeless applicants. The amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7, inserted by HRA 2017, require a change in approach by both local housing authorities and advisers. In particular, the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty and the s 189B(2) relief duty, discussed in detail in Chapter 15, mark a shift in policy away from local housing authorities securing accommodation for eligible, homeless applicants in favour of helping those applicants retain or secure accommodation for themselves. The shift is a significant one: from 1977, when the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 was enacted, until 2018 when the HRA 2017 came into force, whether or not a local housing authority would be required to secure accommodation for a homeless applicant could properly be described as the ultimate question underpinning each successive statutory homelessness scheme. The policy behind the HRA 2017 is that of early intervention, so that applicants can be assisted either to keep their existing accommodation or to find alternative accommodation without having to experience ‘the stress and experience of a homelessness crisis’. The second policy aim is to help all applicants, regardless of whether they have a priority need or have become homelessness intentionally. However, that ‘help’ does not extend to a duty to accommodate all those applicants.

1 See Chapter 17 for the duties on local housing authorities in Wales to secure accommodation for the applicant under Housing (Wales) Act 2014, Pt 2.
3 As amended by Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017), s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
5 Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977; Housing Act 1985, Pt 3; Housing Act 1996, Pt 7 (HA 1996), (prior to the amendments introduced by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018).
7 The HA 1996, s 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) prevention duty is owed to all applicants who are threatened with homelessness and are eligible for assistance, see 15.87–15.137; the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty is owed to all applicants who are threatened with homelessness and are eligible for assistance.
16.2 Accommodation will only now be secured by the local housing authority in those cases where the performance of the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\) prevention duty or the s 189B(2)\(^2\) relief duty has not been effective in helping the applicant to retain or secure accommodation for him or herself. That is, if the performance of the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^3\) prevention duty or the s 189B(2)\(^4\) relief duty is successful and the applicant retains or secures accommodation, the issue of accommodation being provided by the local housing authority will no longer arise.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.3 This shift in policy goes hand in hand with another longer-term trend: the increased use of the private rented sector as a means of tackling statutory homelessness as an alternative to the allocation of social housing or the provision of any other form of permanent or indefinite accommodation\(^1\). Putting it another way, an application for homelessness assistance can no longer be seen as an automatic gateway to ‘council housing’, as it is colloquially known.

1 Pursuant to HA 1996, Part 6. For the allocation of social housing prior to April 1997 see 1.14–1.15.

The shift away from provision of accommodation to helping an applicant secure accommodation

16.4 In 1981, when the House of Lords handed down its landmark decision on the circumstances in which a person is to be regarded as having become homeless intentionally\(^1\) in the case of Din v Wandsworth London Borough Council\(^2\), there was (or at least there was seen to be) a clear link between applications for homelessness assistance and the allocation of social housing. In the words of Lord Bridge:

‘A homeless person who has a priority need can look to the relevant housing authority to secure that accommodation becomes available for his occupation. This throws a heavy burden on already hard-pressed housing authorities in areas, of which Wandsworth is undoubtedly one, where there is a desperate shortage of housing accommodation and a long housing waiting list. It may also no doubt engender a sense of grievance among those on that list who either have no priority need or cannot claim to be homeless, although their existing accommodation is far from satisfactory, to see others going to the head of the queue’.

1 See Chapter 13 on becoming homeless intentionally.
16.4 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

3 Din v Wandsworth London Borough Council [1983] 1 AC 657, 680, AC.

16.5 But in 1996, the House of Lords, when they were next called upon to consider the circumstances in which a person is to be regarded as having become homeless intentionally, exploded the idea that those applicants who had not become homeless intentionally were entitled to be provided with permanent homes under the statutory homelessness provisions contained in Housing Act 1985, Pt 3:

‘[T]he duty of the local housing authority to an unintentionally homeless person in priority need under section 65(2) is simply to secure that accommodation becomes available for his occupation. Under the substituted section 69(1), the accommodation must be ‘suitable,’ but this does not import any requirement of permanence . . . there is no reason why temporary accommodation should ipso facto be unsuitable. If the tenure is so precarious that the person is likely to have to leave within 28 days without any alternative accommodation being available, then he remains threatened with homelessness and the council has not discharged its duty. Otherwise it seems to me that the term for which the accommodation is provided is a matter for the council to decide. In some cases, such as a person in priority need because he is old, mentally ill or handicapped (section 59(1)(c)), the council may decide to provide permanent accommodation as soon as reasonably possible. In other cases, such as the pregnant woman in my earlier example, it may prefer to use temporary accommodation and wait and see. But provided that the decision is not Wednesbury unreasonable (Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd. v. Wednesday Corporation [1948] 1 K.B. 233), I do not think that the courts should lay down requirements as to security of tenure.’

1 This time, under the provisions of Housing Act 1985, Pt 3.

16.6 Subsequently, the statutory framework in HA 1996, Pt 7 made it clear that the highest duty owed to any applicant would be met by the provision of temporary accommodation only. The Homelessness Act 2002 then introduced a new mechanism by which this duty might be brought to an end: the acceptance of an offer of an assured non-shorthold tenancy from a private landlord. For ‘restricted cases’ only, further amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7 introduced by the Housing and Regeneration Act 2008 provided that this duty could be brought to an end by means of a ‘private accommodation offer’ of an assured shorthold tenancy. Further changes to HA 1996, Pt 7 made by the Localism Act 2011 then allowed local housing authorities to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end in any case by means of a ‘private rented sector offer’ of an assured shorthold tenancy. Then finally, the changes to the HA 1996, Pt 7 introduced by HRA 2017 encourage the use of the private rented sector still further as a means of bringing the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty, the s 189B(2) relief duty or the s 193C(4)(c) accommodation duty to an end.

8 As defined by HA 1996, s 193(7AC). See 16.153–16.180. Though this marked a significant change, its practical effect should not be overstated: only around 1% of applicants owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty are made private rented sector offers. See Table 777, Immediate outcome of decision by local authority to accept household as unintentionally homeless, eligible and in priority need (DCLG, September 2017).

11 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

12 Duty owed to applicants who have a priority need and have not become homeless intentionally, but who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.200–16.216.

13 The various ways in which these duties may be brought to an end by means of the acceptance or refusal of suitable accommodation in the private sector are discussed in detail at 15.98–15.132 (for the prevention duty), 15.151–15.190 (for the relief duty), and 16.204–16.215 (for the accommodation duty): HA 1996, ss 189B(2), 193C(4) and 195(2), as inserted and amended by HRA 2017, ss 4(2), 5(2) and 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.7 The effect of the new provisions introduced by HRA 2017, if they operate effectively, is that a homeless applicant is likely to be helped to secure (or retain) suitable accommodation in the private sector, rather than being made an offer of permanent social housing. This is not to say that the link between the duties owed to homeless applicants under HA 1997, Pt 7 and the allocation of social housing under HA 1996, Pt 6 has been severed entirely. Local housing authority allocation schemes must still give ‘reasonable preference’ to those who are homeless under HA 1996, Pt 7 and to those who are owed certain specific duties under HA 1996, Pt 7, when it comes to allocating social housing. And the allocation of social housing under HA 1996, Pt 6 to a homeless applicant remains one of the ways in which the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty may be brought to an end. But if not severed, the link has certainly become frayed. This might be seen as part of a wider policy shift away from the provision of accommodation by local housing authorities as a long-term solution by which to meet housing need, and instead implementation of a shorter term solution to cope with emergencies and facilitate access to the private rented sector.

5 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
6 Applicants who are ‘homeless’ will be entitled to a reasonable preference under HA 1996, s 166A(3)(a) as will applicants who are owed any of the duties at HA 1996, ss 190(2), 193(2), or 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018). See 4.58–4.79.
7 See 16.94–16.199.
9 Evidence for this wider policy shift can be found in Housing and Planning Act 2016, s 118 and Sch 7 (‘Secure tenancies etc: phasing out of tenancies for life’), and s 119 and Sch 8, which restrict succession rights to secure, introductory and demoted tenancies. At the date of writing, these provisions have not been brought into force and there seem to be no immediate plans to do so.
16.8 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.8 Clearly, then, the nature of the accommodation which a homeless applicant may expect to obtain under HA 1997, Pt 7, and the circumstances in which a local housing authority will be under a duty to secure that accommodation, as opposed to helping the applicant to secure it, have changed significantly in the years since 1977. The duties to help a homeless applicant retain or secure accommodation form the subject of Chapter 15. The duties (and powers) on local housing authorities to secure accommodation form the subject of this chapter.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

THE DUTIES AND POWERS IN OUTLINE

The interim accommodation duty

16.9 The first accommodation duty which may arise upon an application for homelessness assistance having been made is the interim duty to secure accommodation for applicants whom the local housing authority have reason to believe may be homeless, eligible for assistance and have a priority need. Before the amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7 made by HRA 2017 came into force, the operation of this duty was a relatively simple matter. The duty would be owed as soon as the local housing authority had reason to believe that the applicant satisfied the relevant criteria, and it would end upon the local housing authority concluding its inquiries and deciding what further duty, if any, the applicant was owed. Now the operation of the duty is considerably more complex. The complexity arises from the operation of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to help the applicant secure accommodation for him or herself, which may be owed at the same time as the interim accommodation duty under HA 1996, s 188(1). The new duties have increased the number of decisions which a local housing authority is required to make in the course of considering an application for homelessness assistance. As a result, there is a greater variety of events which may cause the interim accommodation duty to come to an end.

1 HA 1996, s 188(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
5 See Chapter 9 of this book.

16.10 The precise circumstances in which the interim accommodation duty will be owed and the ways in which it may come to an end are analysed in detail at 16.51–16.80. In overview, the duty operates as follows:

• Where the applicant has made an application for homelessness assistance, and the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may be homeless, may be eligible for assistance and may have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty is owed.

The duties and powers in outline 16.10

- Where the local housing authority, having made inquiries, satisfies itself that an applicant does not have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty continues until either:
  - the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless); or
  - the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision that, when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end, no further accommodation duty will be owed under the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term duty, or the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

- Where the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant does have a priority need, or continues to have reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty continues until the later of:
  - the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty coming to an end;
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what further duty (if any) will be owed to him or her when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end.

- Where the applicant requests a review under HA 1996, s 202(1)(h) of the suitability of accommodation offered to him or her by way of a final accommodation offer or final Pt 6 offer, having accepted or refused the offer, the interim accommodation duty will continue until the decision on review has been notified to the applicant.

- Where the applicant has made an application for homelessness assistance within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer, and the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may be homeless and may be eligible for assistance, the interim accommodation duty will arise irrespective of whether the applicant has a priority need and will continue until the later of:
  - the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty coming to an end;
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed, because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless; or
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what further duty (if any) will be owed to him or her when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end.

The HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty

16.11 Once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)’, relief duty has come to an end, if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is homeless, eligible for assistance, has a priority need, and has become homeless intentionally it will owe the applicant a duty to:

- secure accommodation for such period as it considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her occupation; and
- provide, or secure the provision of, advice and assistance in any attempts he or she may make to secure accommodation.26
The duties and powers in outline 16.13

These duties are discussed in detail at 15.23 and 16.81–16.93.

The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty

16.12 Once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^1\), relief duty has come to an end, if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is homeless, eligible for assistance, has a priority need, and is not satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, then it will normally owe him or her the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty to secure accommodation for his or her occupation\(^2\). This duty will continue until one of the events at HA 1996, s 193(5)–(7AA), occurs.

2 See 16.94–16.199.

16.13 The HA 1996, s 193(2), duty is not, however, owed to the following applicants, even though they are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need and have not become homeless intentionally:

- applicants who are to be referred to another local housing authority under the conditions for referral: a duty to accommodate under HA 1996, s 200(1) arises\(^3\);
- applicants who have refused a final accommodation offer\(^4\) or final Pt 6 offer\(^5\) made to them during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^6\), relief duty: no accommodation duty arises\(^7\); and
- applicants who have been notified of the local housing authority’s decision that they have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate\(^8\): a duty to accommodate under HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^9\) arises.

The s 193(2) main housing duty is discussed in detail at 16.94–16.199.

The HA 1996, s 193C(4) duty to accommodate applicants who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate 16.14 If the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end because the local housing authority has given notice, in accordance with HA 1996, s 193B, that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate, then whether any further duty is owed to the applicant will depend on his or her personal circumstances. If the applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally, then the local housing authority will be required to accommodate him or her under HA 1996, s 193C(4). That duty will continue until one of the events at HA 1996, s 193C(5)–(6) occurs: typically the acceptance or refusal by the applicant of a final accommodation offer. If the applicant has a priority need but has become homeless intentionally, then he or she will be owed the HA 1996, s 190(2) short-term accommodation duty. This duty is discussed in detail at 16.200–16.216.

Accommodation duties owed where the applicant’s case is referred to another local housing authority

Referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty

16.15 Where the local housing authority would be subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty but have notified the applicant that they intend to notify, or have notified, another local housing authority that the conditions for the referral of his or her case are met, and have reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need:

- the interim accommodation duty comes to an end;
- there is a duty on the notifying local housing authority to accommodate the applicant until it has been decided whether the conditions for referral are met;
- if it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, the notified local housing authority becomes subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and also to the duty to secure interim accommodation, if there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need; and
- if it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, then the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will revert to the notifying local housing authority, along with a further duty to secure

Referral of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty

16.16 Where the local housing authority would be subject to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty¹ but have notified the applicant that they intend to notify, or have notified, another local housing authority that the conditions for the referral of his or her case² are met:

• the interim accommodation duty comes to an end³;
• there is a duty on the notifying local housing authority to accommodate the applicant until it has been decided whether the conditions for referral are met⁴;
• if it is decided that the conditions for referral are met⁵, the notified local housing authority becomes subject to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty⁶; and
• if it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, then the performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will revert to the notifying local housing authority⁷.

Powers to accommodate

16.17 A local housing authority also has three different powers to secure accommodation for a homeless applicant:

• a power to accommodate pending a decision on review¹;
• a power to accommodate pending the determination of an appeal²; and
• a power to secure accommodation in performance of the HA 1996, s 195(2)³, prevention duty or the s 189B(2)⁴, relief duty⁵.

GENERAL ISSUES ABOUT ACCOMMODATION

16.18 Before we discuss the accommodation duties in detail, we consider some general points that apply to accommodation secured under any of the duties or powers referred to at 16.9–16.17.

Accommodation for whom?

16.19 All of the duties to secure accommodation are owed to the applicant. However, the accommodation secured must be ‘available’ for the applicant’s occupation. This means ‘available’ as defined in HA 1996, s 176. That is, the accommodation must be available for the occupation of both the applicant and of those who normally reside with the applicant as a member of his or her family, or anyone who might be reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant. The accommodation must also be ‘suitable’ for the applicant and his or her household. Usually, this will require the local housing authority to secure one unit of accommodation, which all the members of the household can occupy together. In some circumstances, more than one unit of accommodation might properly be secured, providing that such an arrangement allows the applicant and his or her household to ‘live together’.

2 See 16.20 and Chapter 18.

Suitability

16.20 A local housing authority which is subject to a duty to secure accommodation (or is using its powers to secure such accommodation) is not obliged to provide the applicant with local housing authority housing. It may secure accommodation in any of the following three ways:

(1) by providing suitable accommodation itself;
(2) by arranging for someone else to secure suitable accommodation; or
(3) by giving the applicant such advice and assistance as secures that suitable accommodation is made available by someone else.

1 HA 1996, s 206(1).
General issues about accommodation 16.24

16.21 In all cases, any accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, must be suitable for the applicant, and for the members of the applicant’s household. Whether or not the accommodation is ‘suitable’ is primarily a matter for the local housing authority, but consideration of suitability must focus on whether the accommodation is suitable for the particular applicant. The issue of whether accommodation is ‘suitable’, including issues such as terms, tenure, location and duration of occupation are discussed in detail in Chapter 18.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018
2 See English Code, para 17.2.

Charging for accommodation

16.22 The local housing authority can secure accommodation for applicants free of charge. More usually it will require the applicant to pay whatever amount the local housing authority considers he or she can reasonably afford. The local housing authority has power to require the applicant to pay ‘such reasonable charges as they may determine’ in respect of the accommodation secured, by itself or by another person. Where the local housing authority is itself paying for the accommodation, it can require the applicant to pay ‘such reasonable amount’ towards the cost as it may determine.

1 HA 1996, s 206(2)(a) and (b).
2 For example, where it is paying rent for accommodation that it is leasing from a private owner.
3 HA 1996, s 206(2)(b).

16.23 The local housing authority’s performance of its duty to secure accommodation is not contingent upon the applicant paying any charges imposed. Obviously, if an unpaid charge leads to loss of the accommodation, this may give rise to a further incidence of homelessness.

16.24 What is a ‘reasonable’ charge or amount will vary according to the type, nature and extent of the accommodation and the personal circumstances of the applicant. Indeed, local housing authorities are required to consider ‘affordability’ as a function of ‘suitability’ whenever they secure accommodation. Plainly, it would not be reasonable to impose a level of charges that pushed the applicant below subsistence levels of income and the English Code advises that in determining suitability, local housing authorities will need to ‘consider whether the applicant can afford the housing costs without being deprived of basic essentials’.

1 R (Best) v Oxford City Council [2009] EWHC 608 (Admin), (2009) May Legal Action, p 27, Admin Ct, where, on the facts, the local housing authority was entitled to find that the applicant did have the resources to pay charges.
16.24 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

of ‘becoming homeless intentionally’. At the date of writing, Ms Samuels has been granted permission to appeal to the Supreme Court.

16.25 What if an applicant has no income, or very limited income, from which to pay housing costs? In a case where the applicant was not eligible for housing benefit¹, the local housing authority considered that its HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty² had come to an end. She and her children had been evicted from her temporary accommodation because she could not afford to pay the charges on her accommodation. On her claim in judicial review, the judge held that the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty had not ended. He said that, in the circumstances where an applicant is owed the main housing duty but is unable to pay reasonable charges, the local housing authority had three options:

‘The first option is the discretion which I have described, as to a nil or nominal rent or charge for the purposes of [HA 1996] section 206(2). The second is that the housing assistance secured for the purposes of the 1996 Act could continue to be housing provided by the local housing authority, but with the relevant rental met by assistance in cash made available by social services in the context of a 1989 [Children] Act section 17 assessment. In those circumstances, where that approach taken, the rent would continue to be charged, the means would be made available for the protection of the children, and the local authority would in that sense be able to balance its books. That could have clear implications for questions as to eviction. The third option is that the 1989 [Children] Act duty, being a duty not to house but to secure that accommodation is available, could be discharged through securing and being satisfied that provision is being made available through accommodation under section 17(6) of the 1989 Act.’¹

It follows that, if an applicant cannot afford to pay any charges, the local housing authority must perform its duty, and secure accommodation, in any event, and either charge a nil or nominal rent, or arrange for other sources of funding, which might include contributions from children’s services, to pay for its charges. This point is likely to become increasingly important as changes to welfare benefits, especially the benefit cap⁴, leave individuals with insufficient resources to pay otherwise reasonable housing costs.

1 Because of her status as a ‘Zambrano carer’, see 11.80–11.85. Applicants who have that status have not been eligible for assistance since 12 November 2012, see 11.144–11.145.

3 April 2018), or any offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation (see 19.59–19.62). The right to request a review of the suitability of private rented sector offers is at HA 1996, s 202(1)(g) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 19.63–19.64. The right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation offered as a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer is at HA 1996, s 202(1)(h) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 19.65–19.69.

16.27 Otherwise, the amount of the charge can be disputed through the local housing authority’s complaints procedure, and thereafter with a complaint to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman, or (where an error of law is alleged) by a challenge by way of judicial review.

1 For complaints see 19.333–19.339 and for judicial review, see 19.306–19.332.

Viewing accommodation

16.28 The English Code contains a recommendation from the Secretary of State that applicants should be:

‘given the chance to view accommodation that is offered on anything other than an interim basis, before being required to decide whether they accept or refuse an offer, and before being required to sign any written agreement relating to the accommodation’.

This suggests that local housing authorities should normally give the applicant an opportunity to view accommodation, even though they are not strictly required to under HA 1996, Pt 7. The English Code also recommends that, where offers of accommodation are made outside of the local housing authority’s district, particular care should be taken to ensure that applicants have sufficient information about the location of the accommodation and the services that would be available to them there. Applicants should also be given a reasonable period to consider any offer made before a reaching a decision. The appropriate length of time depends on the applicant’s circumstances. Local housing authorities should take into account that:

• applicants may wish to seek advice; and
• applicants may not be familiar with the property offered.

If the applicant is in hospital or temporarily absent, the local housing authority should take that into account.

Termination of accommodation

16.29 Once any duty to secure accommodation has ended, or a local housing authority decides that it will no longer exercise a power to secure interim accommodation, the applicant’s legal right to occupation of the accommodation may need to be brought to an end.
16.30 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.30 The length of any notice period that the applicant is entitled to be given if he or she is required to leave the accommodation depends first on the terms of the licence or tenancy under which she or he has been occupying it. She or he cannot be excluded on shorter notice than is provided for in that tenancy or licence agreement. What further protection (if any) that the applicant is entitled to is likely to vary according to the duty or power under which he or she is accommodated, the type of accommodation in question, and the nature of his or her occupation agreement. We discuss the different obligations governing termination of accommodation under the relevant duty.

1 For termination of interim accommodation, see 16.51–16.74; for termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty, see 16.90–16.93; for termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, see 16.102–16.190; for termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate those who have deliberately and unreasonably failed to co-operate, see 16.204–16.216.

Compensation claims

16.31 Challenges to decisions as to whether an accommodation duty is owed to an applicant, to refusals to exercise any powers to secure accommodation, and to decisions to bring any duties to an end are dealt with elsewhere in this chapter. Challenges to the suitability of accommodation offered are considered in Chapter 18.

1 For challenges to refusals to secure interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(1), see 16.74–16.80; for challenges to decisions concerning accommodation secured pending referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to another local housing authority under HA 1996, s 199A (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(5)), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.223; for challenges to decisions concerning accommodation secured pending referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to another local housing authority under HA 1996, s 200 (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.231; for challenges to decisions as to whether the short-term duty at HA 1996, s 190(2)(a) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5)), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) is owed, see 19.15–19.17; for challenges to decisions as to whether the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty is owed, see 19.15–19.17; for challenges to decisions as to whether the HA 1996, s 193C(4) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) duty is owed towards applicants who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, see 19.30–19.35.

2 For challenges to referrals to secure interim accommodation under HA 1996, s 188(3) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.248–16.257; for challenges to referrals to secure accommodation pending appeal under HA 1996, s 204(4) (as amended by HRA 2017, ss 4(6) and 5(11), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.266–16.277.

3 For challenges to decisions to bring interim accommodation to an end under HA 1996, s 188(1ZA) or (1ZB) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.74–16.80; for challenges to decisions to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty to an end, see 19.15–19.17; for challenges to decisions to bring the HA 1996, s 193C(4) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) duty towards applicants who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate to an end, see 19.15–19.17.

4 For challenges to the suitability of interim accommodation, see 16.17; for challenges to the suitability of accommodation secured under HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty see 19.59–19.62.
16.32 Whilst those remedies are available to an applicant, so that the local housing authority’s decisions can be scrutinised, and it can be required to remedy any unlawfulness, an applicant may feel that having to experience a local housing authority’s unlawful conduct requires some recompense. Where a local housing authority wrongly fails to secure interim accommodation, in breach of its statutory duty so to do, the applicant cannot sue for compensation for loss in respect of that breach of statutory duty nor can he or she recover damages for that breach as an ancillary remedy in a claim by way of judicial review. Nor can the applicant recover damages for any breach of the right to respect for his or her home because, by definition, she or he has, at this point, no home to ‘respect’. The right to ‘respect for his home’ does not encompass a right to a home. There may be a legal right to compensation if the breach of duty reduces the applicant to circumstances amounting to inhuman or degrading treatment, or infringes his or her right to respect for private or family life.

1 O’Rourke v Camden London Borough Council [1998] AC 188, AC.
2 R v Ealing London Borough Council ex p Parkinson (1997) 29 HLR 179, QBD per Laws J. In some circumstances, it might be possible to claim damages for the tort of misfeasance in public office. In the only attempt known to the authors of a claim for damages for this tort being brought in connection with homelessness duties, the judge said: ‘Whilst . . . I would be reluctant to conclude that a claim for misfeasance in a public office could never be brought in a situation that reflects a breach of Part 7, the circumstances in which such a claim could successfully be brought would . . . be extremely limited’ (R (Kharzai & others) v Birmingham City Council [2010] EWHC 2576 (Admin), (2010) December Legal Action, p 37, Admin Ct per Foskett J at [44]).

7 Human Rights Act 1998, Sch 1, Art 8. See R (B) v Southwark London Borough Council (No 2) (2004) January Legal Action, p 32, in which the local housing authority settled a claim for compensation for £3,000 where the failure to secure interim accommodation caused the applicant to stay in prison unnecessarily for an additional weekend.

16.33 The absence of a general right to compensation in these circumstances makes it even more important that the applicant promptly obtains a mandatory order in judicial review proceedings requiring the local housing authority to perform its duty. Normally, any financial or other loss caused in the period before an order is obtained could only be recovered through a complaint under the local housing authority’s own complaints procedure (or thereafter by further complaint to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman).

16.34 Even where an applicant has been provided with interim accommodation, the local housing authority will be in breach of its statutory duties if the accommodation is not ‘suitable’. Again, the normal rule is that the applicant cannot sue for recompense. However, where the standard of accommodation is so unsuitable that it infringes an applicant’s right to respect for his or her home, family or private life, damages could be awarded for breach of the Human Rights Act 1998, Sch 1, Art 8(1). Where the evidence shows that the conditions of the accommodation do infringe an applicant’s rights under Art...

8(1), the burden rests on the local housing authority to show that the interference with those rights was justified and proportionate under Art 8(2)⁴.

16.35 Precisely because Art 8(1) does not provide a right to a home¹, merely the right to respect for the applicant’s existing home, any claims brought under it are likely to relate to the interference, as a result of the condition of the accommodation, with the applicant’s right to respect for his or her family or private life². For example, placing a London family in interim accommodation in Birmingham, when the child needed to retain contact with her father in London, was found to be contrary to the family’s right to respect for their family life³. On the other hand, a claim for damages for 29 weeks spent in grossly overcrowded and unsuitable accommodation did not succeed as the applicant was not deprived of her home, she was not separated from her children and the health problems caused by the unsuitable accommodation were not so grave as to constitute an interference with her private life⁴. Damages were awarded for breach of the applicant’s right to respect for her family and private life where a wheelchair-bound woman was restricted to a single room in unsuitable temporary accommodation for over two years⁵. However, where an elderly woman had been effectively confined to her bedroom as a result of the steepness of the stairs in the family’s temporary accommodation, and had missed the family interaction that took place principally in the kitchen, the local housing authority was held not to have interfered with her right to respect for her family life. It had secured accommodation, made offers of alternative accommodation that had been rejected, and had provided practical help. The obligations under Human Rights Act 1998, Sch 1, imposed on the local housing authority did not extend to creating a set of circumstances in which all major impediments to the full enjoyment of family life were removed⁶.

16.36 Alternatively, complaint could be made to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman that the local housing authority has been guilty of maladministration. Indeed, any awards of compensation for interference with an applicant’s rights under Art 8(1) of the Human Rights Act 1998, Sch 1, are likely to be assessed by reference to the sums recommended as compensation for maladministration by the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman.
The initial duty to secure interim accommodation 16.39

in other cases1.

THE INITIAL DUTY TO SECURE INTERIM ACCOMMODATION

To whom is the duty owed?

16.37 The initial duty to secure interim accommodation1 is triggered when the local housing authority has ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant may be ‘homeless’, may be ‘eligible for assistance’2, and may have a ‘priority need’3. This is a very low threshold4. The governing word is ‘may’, which must be understood to apply to all the elements of the statutory formula. So the threshold is met when a local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant:

• ‘may’ be homeless; and also
• ‘may’ be eligible; and also
• ‘may’ have a priority need.

1 HA 1996, s 188(1); Code, paras 15.11–15.12, and 15.19–15.22.
2 See CHAPTER 10.
3 See CHAPTER 11.
4 See CHAPTER 12.

16.38 These are some of the issues that the local housing authority will be making inquiries into, in due course, in order to determine what duty (if any) is ultimately owed to the applicant under HA 1996, Pt 71.

1 As amended by HRA 2017.

16.39 Four additional points should be noted. First, no interim accommodation duty is owed to an applicant who may be simply ‘threatened with’ homelessness1. An applicant who is eligible for assistance and is threatened with homelessness will be owed the HA 1996, s 195(2)2, prevention duty requiring the local housing authority to take reasonable steps to help him or her secure that accommodation does not cease to be available for his or her occupation, but will not normally need interim accommodation because he or she is not yet homeless\(^1\).

\(^1\) As defined in HA 1996, s 175(4), see 10.144–10.147.

\(^3\) There is, however, a power to secure that accommodation is available in discharge of the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018). See HA 1996, s 205(3) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 6, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) and English Code, paras 15.33–15.35. See further 15.184–15.188 and 16.278–16.279.

16.40 Second, the question whether the initial duty is owed may arise not only when the initial application is made but also at any stage before the local housing authority’s final decision on the application has been notified to the applicant. For example, where a local housing authority is making its inquiries into an application made by an applicant who appears to be threatened with homelessness, it is not under a duty to secure interim accommodation\(^1\). However, if, before the local housing authority has concluded its inquiries and notified the applicant of its decision, the situation changes and the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may actually be homeless (and there is also reason to believe that the applicant may be eligible and may have a priority need), the duty to secure interim accommodation is immediately triggered.

16.41 Third, the initial duty arises irrespective of any local connection the applicant may have with any other local housing authority\(^1\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 188(2); English Code, para 15.6.

\(^1\) Where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is homeless and is eligible for assistance, and also considers that the conditions for referral of the performance of the HA 1996, s 198B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), relief duty are met, and that it intends to notify another local housing authority of its opinion (HA 1996, s 198(A1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), then the local housing authority is no longer subject to a duty to secure interim accommodation at HA 1996, s 188(1): HA 1996, s 199(A1)(a) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018). Instead, if it continues to have reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, the notifying local housing authority must secure accommodation for the applicant until he or she has been notified of the decision as to whether the conditions for referral of his or her case are met: HA 1996, s 199A(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.217–16.224.

16.43 If the local housing authority does have reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, may be eligible and may have a priority need, the duty to secure initial interim accommodation is an absolute one. The local housing authority must secure that accommodation is available; it cannot postpone that duty, which is triggered as soon as the requisite ‘reason to believe’ is present. One local housing authority’s application form contained the following instruction to its officers: ‘unless the applicant and family are at risk of harm, they should be advised to return to the homeless address whereby a visiting officer will attend the property'. As a result of that instruction, the local housing authority failed to engage with the criteria at HA 1996, s 188(1) and failed to provide accommodation to applicants for homelessness assistance whom it had reason to believe may be homeless, may be eligible and may have a priority need. A judge said:

‘The approach of the Council to their obligations under Section 188 at the very least lacks legal coherence and a proper consideration of the relevant Section 188 criteria. So far as the Council are concerned that failure had and, insofar as that practice continues, continues to have, the effect of avoiding their obligations under Section 188’.

16.44 The same local housing authority was later alleged to be operating a variety of systems in order to avoid the duty to secure interim accommodation. In a subsequent case, it agreed that apparent instructions that ‘all single homeless . . . must be referred to the appropriate funded support service. We should not be completing a homeless application’ were unlawful.

16.45 There was also a suggestion that the same local housing authority was encouraging its officers to make a decision on an application for homelessness assistance on the same day as the application was received, so that the duty to secure interim accommodation at HA 1996, s 188(1) would not arise. The judge said:

‘[t]here is no doubt that a blanket ‘same day’ policy, which requires a decision on the homeless application and, in consequence, the interim accommodation all in one day would be unlawful . . . it would only be “in the most straightforward of cases that a decision can be reached on the same day as the application itself”’.

1 R (Khazai) v Birmingham City Council [2010] EWHC 2576 (Admin), (2010) December Legal Action, p 37, Admin Ct per Foskett J at [47] quoting from the instruction to local housing authority staff that was under scrutiny. See also R (IA) v Westminster City Council [2013] EWHC 1273(Admin), (2013) July/August Legal Action, p 23, Admin Ct, where the decision that the applicant did not have a priority need had been notified to him on the same day as his application for homelessness assistance. The judge found that the claimant had a ‘highly arguable’ case that no lawful inquiry under HA 1996, s 184(1) had been conducted. He went on to say that ‘it follows that the claimant has good prospects of showing that the defendant is in breach of its [HA 1996] section 188(1) duty in not providing the claimant with interim accommodation pending the provision of a lawful [HA 1996] section 184 decision’ per Judge Anthony Thornton QC, sitting as a deputy judge of the High Court, at [27] and [31]. See also R (XX) v Southwark London Borough Council (2015) May Legal Action, p 43; and see decisions by the Ombudsmen finding maladministration discussed at 8.75-8.76. In 2016, Hickinbottom J found that Birmingham City Council’s up to date policies did not show that there was a systematic failure to comply with duties under Part 7, HA 1996: R (Edwards) v Birmingham City Council [2016] EWHC 173 (Admin), [2016] HLR 11, Admin Ct.

16.46 If the local housing authority refuses to secure initial interim accommodation when the statutory conditions are fulfilled or, before the duty ends, withdraws any accommodation secured and accepted by the applicant, it is in breach of its statutory duty. The applicant is entitled to bring judicial review proceedings for a mandatory order that accommodation be secured immediately.

The duty to secure interim accommodation where there is a re-application for homelessness assistance within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer

16.47 Special provisions apply where an applicant, having accepted a private rented sector offer made by a local housing authority in response to an earlier application for homelessness assistance, makes a fresh application for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority within two years of the date of his or her acceptance of the offer.

2 HA 1996, s 188(1A) as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 18.16–18.20; see Appendix 2.

16.48 If the local housing authority has reason to believe that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty may apply in these circumstances, it is under a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and his or her household. This duty applies whether or not there is any reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need. This is because most applicants in these circumstances will be entitled to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty whether or not they have a priority need.

1 See 16.94–16.199.
2 HA 1996, s 188(1A), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; see English Code, para 15.10.
3 HA 1996, s 195A(1). See 8.100–8.107 and 15.56–15.58. The exception is where the local housing authority would not be satisfied that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is owed without having regard to a restricted person (HA 1996, s 195A(5)). In those cases, there would have to be reason to believe that the applicant might have a priority need. See 8.102.

16.49 In order for the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to apply, the local housing authority will only have to be satisfied that the applicant:

- is homeless;
- is eligible for assistance; and
- did not become homeless intentionally.

Obviously for the duty to secure interim accommodation to apply in these circumstances, the local housing authority need not be satisfied of any of these tests. It just has to have ‘reason to believe’ that the applicant may pass each of those conditions. The threshold is a low one.

2 See 75–76 and 16.37.

16.50 An applicant to whom these special provisions apply is threatened with homelessness throughout the 56-day period leading up to the expiry of a valid

Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice, and is deemed to be homeless upon the expiry of the notice. Accordingly, such applicants may make fresh applications for homelessness assistance while they are still occupying their private rented accommodation. The interim accommodation duty will apply once the date stipulated in the notice for giving up possession has been reached. In those circumstances, it may be possible for the local housing authority to perform that duty by arranging with the landlord for the applicant and his or her household to remain in the private rented accommodation. However, if the applicant is required to leave that accommodation, the local housing authority will have to secure interim accommodation for him or her.

Ending the duty to secure interim accommodation

Overview

16.51 The duty to secure interim accommodation will come to an end in the circumstances set out below.

- Where the local housing authority, having made inquiries, satisfies itself that an applicant does not have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty continues until either:
  - the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless); or
  - the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision that, when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end, no further accommodation duty will be owed under the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term duty, or the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.
- Where the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant does have a priority need, or continues to have reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty continues until the later of:
  - the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty coming to an end;
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless); or
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what further duty (if any) will be owed to him or her when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end.
- Where the applicant requests a review under HA 1996, s 202(1)(h) of the suitability of accommodation offered to him or her by way of a final accommodation offer or final Pt 6 offer:
  - the interim accommodation duty will continue until the decision on review has been notified to the applicant.
16.51 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

- Where the applicant has made an application for homelessness assistance within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer\(^1\), and the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may be homeless and may be eligible for assistance, the interim accommodation duty will arise irrespective of whether the applicant has a priority need and will continue until the later of\(^2\):
  - the HA 1996 s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty coming to an end\(^4\);
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless)\(^5\); or
  - the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what further duty (if any) will be owed to him or her when the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^3\), relief duty comes to an end\(^6\).

The initial duty to secure interim Accommodation 16.53

16.52 These circumstances are all set out expressly in HA 1996, Pt 7. A further situation, not expressly contemplated within HA 1996, Pt 7, but which has been considered by the High Court and by the English Code, is where the applicant refuses interim accommodation. Each of these circumstances will be considered in turn. But first we will discuss the duties owed by a local housing authority to notify the applicant that the duty has ended.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

Notification duties

16.53 There is no specific provision in HA 1996, Pt 7, requiring the local housing authority to notify the applicant of any decision that the interim accommodation duty has come to an end. However, in most circumstances the applicant will know that the interim accommodation is due to end because he or she will have received a notification informing him or her of one or more of the following:

- that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed;
- that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end; and/or
- of what further duty, if any, will be owed when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end.

Each of those decisions contains a right to request a review if the decision is adverse. Normally, requesting a review will not prevent the interim accommodation duty from coming to an end. The local housing authority has a power to continue to secure accommodation if the applicant requests a review of either of those decisions.

16.54 There is an exception to this rule at HA 1996, s 188(2A)\(^1\). Where the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\), relief duty has come to an end because the applicant has refused a final accommodation offer\(^3\) or a final Pt 6 offer\(^4\), but has requested a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered, the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^5\), relief duty does not come to an end until the applicant is notified of the decision on review\(^6\). Consequently, unless the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant does not have a priority need, and have notified him or her of that, the interim accommodation duty will continue until the review has concluded\(^7\).

16.55 The fact that the initial interim accommodation duty is brought to an end by notification of the decision on the application for homelessness assistance does not mean that the accommodation that has been secured will be instantly withdrawn. At the very least, ‘reasonable’ notice will be required\(^1\). Alternatively, the local housing authority may have to continue to secure accommodation for the applicant in performance of one of its other duties\(^2\) or may choose to continue to secure accommodation in the exercise of a power\(^3\).

Applicants with no priority need

16.56 Where the local housing authority, having made inquiries, satisfies itself that an applicant does not have a priority need\(^1\), the interim accommodation duty will end upon:

- the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless)\(^3\); or
- the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that, when the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty comes to an end, no further accommodation duty will be owed under the HA 1996, s 190(2)\(^5\), short-term duty, or the HA 1996, s 193(2)\(^6\), main housing duty\(^7\).

1 See English Code paras 15.8–15.9.
The initial duty to secure interim Accommodation 16.59

An applicant who does not have a priority need will continue to be owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty if he or she is homeless and eligible for assistance, but no further duty thereafter. An applicant who has no priority need and is either not homeless or is ineligible for assistance will be owed no duty at all. In either scenario, the applicant will need to be notified of the local housing authority’s decision and upon that notification the interim accommodation duty will come to an end.

16.58 So, in instances where the applicant is found not to have a priority need, the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and the interim accommodation duty are not coterminous. The local housing authority does continue to help the applicant must secure accommodation, but does not have to accommodate him or her while doing so. The English Code suggests that:

‘... an applicant who the housing authority has found to be not in priority need within the 56 day ‘relief stage’ will no longer be owed a section 188(1) interim duty to accommodate, but will continue to be owed a section 189B(2) relief duty until that duty ends or is found not to be owed.’ [Emphasis added]

The italicized parts of this sentence are apt to mislead. In those cases where the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is found not to be owed, the ‘56 day ‘relief stage’ will never have begun. So it is wrong to suggest that the interim accommodation duty could end during the 56-day period in those cases. But, those cases aside, the underlying point that, in non-priority need cases, the interim accommodation duty may end, while the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty continues, is correct.

16.59 An applicant has the right to request a review of a decision:

• that he or she is not eligible for assistance;
• that he or she is not owed (or is no longer owed) the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty; and
16.59 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

- that he or she is not owed the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term duty, or the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

The local housing authority is not required to accommodate the applicant pending the notification of the review decision but has a power to do so.

Applicants who have, or whom the local housing authority has reason to believe may have, a priority need 16.60 For all other applicants, where there is either reason to believe that they may have a priority need, or where the local housing authority is satisfied that they do have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty will end upon the later of:

- the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty coming to an end;
- the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed (because the applicant is either not eligible for assistance or is not homeless); or
- the applicant being notified of the local housing authority’s decision as to what further duty (if any) will be owed to him or her when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end.

16.61 As to the first of these events, the circumstances in which the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will come to an end are set out at HA 1996, s 189B(4)–(9) and discussed at 15.151–15.189. In relation to the second of these events, no HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will be owed in circumstances where the applicant is either found not to be eligible for assistance or not to be homeless.

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.62 Turning to the third of these events, if any duty is owed to an applicant once the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end, it would be one of:

- the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty: owed to applicants who have a priority need but have become homeless intentionally;
- the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty: owed to applicants who have a priority need who have not become homeless intentionally; or
- the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate: owed to applicants who have a priority need, who have not become homeless intentionally but who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate with the local housing authority.

4 See 16.94–16.199.
5 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.63 The interim accommodation duty will come to an end ‘upon the later of’ one of the three events at 16.60 occurring. Each of these events must be notified to the applicant in writing. Until the relevant notification has been given, the duty will continue. The English Code advises that an applicant should simply receive one notification if possible, combining notification of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty coming to an end with notification of what additional duty is owed to the applicant:

‘Housing authorities are advised against issuing a section 184 notification accepting the section 193 (main housing duty) during the relief stage. The section 193 duty cannot commence until the relief duty has come to an end and issuing notification during the relief stage might detract from activities to relieve their homelessness.’

1 See HA 1996, s 188(1ZB), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 This might be taken to suggest that an applicant could receive three separate notifications and that the interim accommodation duty will end upon receipt of the third notification. But this is not the case. The second event is mutually exclusive to the first and third events: in cases where the applicant is notified that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty is not owed, there will be no question of subsequently notifying him or her that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty has come to an end, or what, if any, duty will be owed after the HA 1996, s 189B(2), (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty has ended. Further, in practice, it is likely that notification of the first and third events will be combined. That is, the local housing authority will choose to combine the notification that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty has come to an end with notification of what, if any, duty will be owed next.

The implication is that an applicant who is informed that he or she will be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty might lose the motivation to take steps to secure accommodation for himself or herself.

16.64 An applicant has the right to request a review of a decision that he or she is not eligible for assistance, that he or she is not owed (or no longer owed) the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and that he or she is not owed the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term duty, or the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. The local housing authority is not required to accommodate the applicant pending the notification of the review decision but has a power to do so.

If the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty has come to an end because the applicant has referred a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer, and the applicant has requested a review of the decision that the duty has ended, the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty is deemed not to end until the review decision has been notified to the applicant and so the interim accommodation duty continues.

16.65 In effect, therefore, in most priority need (or apparent priority need) cases, the interim accommodation duty will end either when the local housing authority notifies the applicant that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty is not owed, or when the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty comes to an end. So the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and the HA 1996, s 188, interim accommodation duty are likely to be coterminous in most priority need (or apparent priority need) cases.

The initial duty to secure interim accommodation 16.68

duty (if any) is owed to him or her next, at some later stage. As discussed at 16.63, it seems likely that most local housing authorities will choose to combine these notifications.

The applicant refuses interim accommodation

16.66 Circumstances, set out expressly in HA 1996, Pt 7, in which the interim accommodation duty comes to an end, are dealt with at 16.51–16.65. A further situation, not expressly contemplated within HA 1996, Pt 7 was considered by the High Court prior to the amendment of HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017. The circumstance was that the applicant had refused interim accommodation. In this situation, the High Court held that:

‘The authority will have performed the duty owed under section 188 of the Act if the authority offers suitable accommodation, or secures the offer of suitable accommodation by another person, which is intended to be available to the applicant until the authority have completed their inquiries and notified the applicant of their decision as to whether a duty is owed. If the applicant does not take up the offer of accommodation, then he cannot require the authority to take different and further steps to perform the duty again.’

The exception to this principle is where the applicant rejects accommodation but a subsequent change in circumstances renders the accommodation unsuitable. In that case, the local housing authority will be required to secure alternative accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 For applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 English Code, para 15.22.

16.67 An attempt to codify these principles is contained in the English Code which provides that:

‘Where an applicant rejects an offer of interim accommodation (or accepts and moves into the interim accommodation and then later rejects it), this will bring the housing authority’s interim accommodation duty to an end – unless it is reactivated by any change of circumstances.’

1 English Code, para 15.22.

16.68 Whether these principles still hold good following the amendment of HA 1996, Pt 7 by HRA 2017 may be open to question. The reasoning of Lewis J in R (Brooks) v Islington London Borough Council was based, in part, on the earlier decision of in R v Westminster City Council ex p Chambers. In R (Royal London Borough of Kensington and Chelsea) v London Borough of Ealing and Ms Hacene-Blidi, HHJ Karen Walden-Smith, sitting as a deputy High Court judge, held that R v Westminster City Council ex p Chambers was no longer good law on this issue and the reasoning in that decision could not be applied to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. Now that HA 1996, s 188 has been amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4) to insert a series of express statutory provisions as to cessation of duty, if Chambers is no longer good law, then the reasoning of Lewis J in Brooks may be undermined.

1 For applications for homelessness assistance on or after 3 April 2018.

3 (1982) 6 HLR 24, QBD. That case, which ‘created the concept of discharge of duty’, involved an applicant who refused an offer of accommodation under Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, s 4(5) duty owed to applicants who had a priority need and who had not become homeless intentionally. McCullough J held that, although there was no express statutory provision as to the cessation of duty contained in the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, the local housing authority were not obliged to secure alternative accommodation. They had performed the duty by ‘making available to him accommodation’ and were required to do no more.

5 This was because, among other things, HA 1996, s 193 differed from Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, s 4 in that the former does contain express statutory provision as to the cessation of duty. As such, HA 1996, Pt 7 could be regarded as a complete statutory scheme in which there is no place for any judicial overlay.

6 HA 1996, s 188(1ZA)–(1ZB), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

7 The answer to this question may lie in the distinction drawn by Lewis J in R (Brooks) v Islington London Borough Council between the existence of the HA 1996, s 188(1) duty and the performance of the duty. The duty will exist until one of the events specified in HA 1996, s 188(1ZA)–(1ZB) occurs. However, the duty can be performed by securing a single offer of suitable accommodation. That interpretation might be taken to reflect ‘the realities . . . of the competing claims for the provision of accommodation, which is often a scare resource’ [43]. But the answer is not clear cut and it may be that the courts are required to consider this question before long.

16.69 In the meantime, (and irrespective of the answer to this question) applicants would be well-advised to be cautious before refusing an offer of interim accommodation. Conversely, local housing authorities will certainly be required to ensure that the applicant has actually rejected the accommodation before deciding that their initial interim accommodation duty has come to an end. One local housing authority was subject to judicial review proceedings when it refused to secure further interim accommodation, insisting that the applicant had rejected the accommodation, after the applicant had arrived at the accommodation a day late. Likewise, where it is said that the applicant’s conduct has manifested an implied rejection of the accommodation, the local housing authority should normally give the applicant a warning and an opportunity to provide an explanation for his or her conduct. Particular sensitivity will be needed when the applicant is in poor mental health (a phenomenon that is not infrequent, given the stressful nature of homelessness). In those circumstances, where an applicant might have behaved in a way that led him or her to be excluded from interim accommodation, whether the accommodation provided was suitable for the applicant’s needs will be relevant to whether the duty owed to him or her has been properly performed.

2 For example, if the applicant flouts the terms on which the accommodation is available or, in extreme cases, damages or destroys the accommodation.

The initial duty to secure interim accommodation 16.72

4 See R (Lindsay) v Watford Borough Council, unreported, 17 October 2017, Admin Ct, where the applicant, who suffered from depression and severe epilepsy, was required to leave hotel accommodation having allegedly assaulted a member of staff. The Administrative Court judge held that there was a serious issue to be tried as to whether the accommodation provided had been suitable and whether, therefore, the local housing authority had discharged its duty under HA 1996, s 188(1).

Consequences of decision that the duty to secure interim accommodation has come to an end 16.70 The duty to secure interim accommodation is separate from the other duties that a local housing authority is likely to owe to an applicant who is homeless at an early stage in the progress of the application for homelessness assistance. Those duties are:

- to make inquiries into the application and to notify the applicant of a decision as to whether he or she is eligible for assistance and, if so, whether any duty is owed to him or her;
- if the applicant is eligible for assistance, to make an assessment of his or her case and draw up a personalised housing plan; and
- if the applicant is eligible for assistance, to take reasonable steps to help him or her to secure that accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation.

Those duties continue even if there is no further duty to secure interim accommodation.

Termination of interim accommodation

16.71 Almost by definition, any agreement for occupation of ‘interim’ accommodation will provide for quite short notice. Ordinarily, whatever the agreement itself says, those tenancies and licences that fall within the scope of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 can only be terminated by the landlord on at least four weeks’ written notice and the landlord will require a possession order from the court before he or she is entitled to obtain possession. But much of the accommodation secured as interim accommodation is provided under licences excluded from that protection. In particular, a licence to occupy a local authority hostel is excluded from protection, and so all that the local housing authority or the hostel manager need do is give the applicant reasonable notice to leave.

1 Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 3A lists the exclusions.
2 Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 3A(8).
3 Minister of Health v Bellotti [1944] 1 KB 298, CA. See further Gibson v Douglas [2016] EWCA Civ 1266, CA at [20]–[21] per Sir James Munby for an obiter discussion on the length of notice that may be required to terminate a licence.

16.72 Even in respect of the types of accommodation which might otherwise ordinarily fall within the scope of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 (such as self-contained accommodation), the courts have not been inclined to apply the provisions of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 to interim accommodation which is occupied under a licence. The approach taken has been that it is incompatible with a scheme for interim accommodation that the occupier should be entitled to four weeks’ notice and then to the benefit of the further inevitable delay while possession is obtained through the courts.

16.73 Even if there is no minimum notice required and no need to obtain a possession order, this does not mean that the local housing authority can simply eject applicants accommodated on an interim basis. Local housing authorities must act reasonably, as any public authority would. The obligation to behave reasonably requires that the applicant be given at least some opportunity to find some other accommodation before the interim accommodation is withdrawn. Reasonable notice in those circumstances should obviously be more than 24 hours and periods of six or seven days have also been held to be too short to constitute reasonable notice. In one case, a judge suggested that the reasonable notice ought to be at least the period the local housing authority would have given to applicants who have a priority need and have become homeless intentionally occupying accommodation secured under HA 1996, s 190(2)(a).

Challenges to decisions concerning interim accommodation

16.74 None of the decisions that a local housing authority might make in relation to its duty to secure ‘interim’ accommodation are subject to the statutory review procedure at HA 1996, s 202(1). None of the following decisions about the provision of interim accommodation, which may be among the most critical to be made concerning an applicant, are covered by the statutory review procedure:

(1) a decision that no duty to secure interim accommodation is owed;
(2) a decision as to how a duty to secure interim accommodation will be performed;
The initial duty to secure interim accommodation

(3) a decision as to which members of the applicant’s household will be accommodated under the duty;

(4) a decision as to whether the interim accommodation is suitable; or

(5) a decision that the interim accommodation duty is no longer owed.

As amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.12–19.69.

16.75 There is no statutory obligation to notify the applicant of these decisions (in writing or otherwise), nor is there a statutory obligation to give reasons for those decisions. It is obviously good administrative practice for decisions to be recorded in writing and, where appropriate, to be explained by written reasons.

16.76 Although these decisions, if disputed, could be the subject of a formal complaint to the local housing authority under its complaints procedure and (ultimately) to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman, the applicant will usually need the urgent provision of suitable interim accommodation, and this can only be obtained (if at all) by a legal challenge to the relevant decision.

16.77 Any challenge to the local housing authority’s decision that it does not have ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant ‘may’ be homeless, ‘may’ be eligible for assistance and ‘may’ have a priority need, can only be brought by judicial review.

1 See 19.306–19.333.

16.78 Any challenge to the suitability of accommodation secured under the duty to secure interim accommodation (or any of the other decisions listed) can only be brought by judicial review. There is no right to request a statutory review of the suitability of interim accommodation and no appeal to the county court on such an issue.

1 See 19.306–19.333.

16.79 When the local housing authority agrees that it has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, may be eligible for assistance and may have a priority need, but is nevertheless failing to comply with its acknowledged statutory duty, the appropriate procedure is to bring a claim for judicial review, including an application for both an interim and final mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to comply with its statutory duty.

1 See 19.306–19.333.

16.80 There is no right to request a review of any decision that the interim accommodation duty is not owed, or has come to an end. However, there are rights to request reviews of the decisions that may have led the local housing authority to notify the applicant that it no longer owes him or her the interim accommodation duties. The local housing authority is not required to accommodate the applicant pending the notification of the review decision but

16.82 The duty is triggered as soon as those conditions are fulfilled, although the local housing authority will provide written notification to the applicant indicating that this is the duty that it owes to him or her\(^1\). The duty owed by the local housing authority is to secure accommodation ‘for such period as they consider will give him a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his occupation’\(^2\). The accommodation secured for this period must meet all the usual requirements\(^3\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 184(3). See 9.90–9.94. Where a local housing authority had rejected the contention that it owed this duty to accommodate an applicant whom it had found to have become homeless intentionally, it was ordered to pay the costs of the applicant’s judicial review claim. The prospect of the local housing authority losing the judicial review was ‘towards the obvious end of the spectrum’: per Walker J in R (Dumbaya) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2008] EWHC 1852 (Admin), (2008) September Legal Action, p 23, Admin Ct.

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
The HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty 16.86

16.83 Concurrently, the local housing authority also has a duty to provide, or secure that the applicant is provided with, advice and assistance in any attempt he or she may make to secure that accommodation is available for his or her occupation. This advice and assistance is to be provided in addition to the help that the local housing authority will already have provided during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty. In deciding what advice and assistance to provide, HA 1996, s 190(4), provides that the local housing authority must have regard to its assessment of the applicant’s case under HA 1996, 189A. The advice and assistance must include information about the likely availability in the local housing authority’s district of types of accommodation appropriate to the applicant’s housing needs, including in particular the location and sources of such types of accommodation. This advice and assistance duty is discussed further at 15.231.

1  HA 1996, s 190(2)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.231.
2  As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.
3  This is evident from the fact that the duty to provide this advice and assistance only arises after the HA 189B(2), relief duty (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) has come to an end.
4  As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.231–15.232.
5  As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.62–15.71.
6  HA 1996, s 190(5), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.84 The applicant owed these duties is likely to have been provided with interim accommodation pending the decision on his or her application and the subsequent performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty. In that situation, the usual course will be for the local housing authority to continue the provision of that same accommodation for whatever further period it has decided will satisfy its duty. If it has not previously secured accommodation, it must do so for that same period.

2  HA 1996, s 188(1) and (1B), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.37–16.50.

16.85 Local housing authorities, having strategic responsibility for housing in their districts, are uniquely well placed to determine what sort of period an applicant will require in order to have a ‘reasonable opportunity’ of finding housing locally. The duty is not to secure accommodation for as long as it actually takes the applicant to find his or her own housing. It is instead to secure accommodation for the period that the local housing authority considers will give the applicant a ‘reasonable opportunity’ to find and secure accommodation for himself or herself.

16.86 The English Code advises that local housing authorities, when determining the length of the period, should take into account:
16.86 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

- the particular needs and circumstances of the applicant and any resources available to him or her to secure accommodation, which might include any health or support needs that make it more difficult for the applicant to find and secure accommodation and any support available from the applicant’s family or social network;
- the housing circumstances in the local area and the length of time it might reasonably take to secure accommodation, including the efforts previously made by both the local housing authority and the applicant to relieve his or her homelessness and why those efforts have not proved successful; and
- any arrangements that have already been made by the applicant to secure accommodation which are likely to be successful within a reasonable timescale, and whether it would be appropriate to accommodate the applicant in the meantime.

1 English Code, para 15.15.

16.87 Some of these issues will have already been addressed within the HA 1996, s 189A(1), assessment of the applicant’s needs and from the personalised housing plan agreed with the applicant, or recorded by the local housing authority. This personalised approach should end the practice, to the extent it still exists, of providing a standardised period of accommodation without any proper assessment of the applicant’s needs and resources.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.62–15.71.
2 HA 1996, s 189A(4) and (6), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.72–15.80.

16.88 Plainly the period required will be longer in areas of housing shortage. Some examples considered by the courts are:

- a period of four days for an applicant with a family was considered to be unlawfully short and a period of months might be expected;
- an initial decision to give a single parent of three children six or seven days’ accommodation could not be considered reasonable, but there was no error of law in the local housing authority’s subsequent decision not to extend the period beyond 28 days;
- where a judge decided that accommodation secured the duty would only have been for a maximum period of three months, so that the judicial review claim was academic;
- where a judge decided that he should grant an interim injunction requiring the local housing authority to continue to secure accommodation for the applicant, where the evidence was that within a week the claimant would be able to clear previous arrears, secure housing benefit and with the help of a bond scheme, secure a private sector tenancy; and
- where a judge held that it was not wrong in law for a local housing authority to decide that a 28-day period was a ‘reasonable period’ for a single mother with a 4-year-old son to secure accommodation for their occupation.

The HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty 16.92

3 Prior to amendment by HRA 2017.

16.89 The Court of Appeal has held that, when considering what period would give the applicant a ‘reasonable opportunity’ for securing accommodation for his or her occupation, the local housing authority should consider what is reasonable from an applicant’s standpoint, having regard to his or her circumstances and in the context of accommodation potentially available. Considerations peculiar to the local housing authority, such as the extent of its resources and the other demands on its resources, are not to be taken into account when determining the length of the period¹.

Termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty

16.90 The duty at HA 1996, s 190(2)¹, owed to applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need and have become homeless intentionally is to secure accommodation for the applicant’s occupation for such period as the local housing authority considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her own occupation. The duty arises after the HA 1996, s 189B(2)², relief duty has come to an end³.

² As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.
³ HA 1996, s 190(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.91 Accommodation secured under this duty is usually provided under a licence and for a short period of time¹. In R (CN) v Lewisham London Borough Council², the Supreme Court held that the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 would not generally apply to such accommodation. The licence to occupy the accommodation can therefore be terminated on reasonable notice, but with no obligation on the licensor to obtain a possession order³.

¹ See 16.29–16.30.

16.92 Where the applicant’s household includes a person under 18, the applicant should be invited to consent to a referral to children’s services for assistance under Children Act 19891.

1 HA 1996, s 213A(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, Code, para 15.21, see 16.280–16.287.

16.93 If the applicant wants to challenge the local housing authority’s decision as to the length of the period that it considers will give him or her ‘a reasonable opportunity’ of securing his or her own accommodation, he or she must bring a claim for judicial review. This is because it is a dispute over the way in which the local housing authority is performing its duty, not over what duty, if any, is owed to the applicant, and so the statutory right to request a review is not available1.

THE HA 1996, S 193(2) MAIN HOUSING DUTY

16.94 The highest duty to secure accommodation that can be owed under HA 1996, s 193(2)1 is often colloquially called the ‘full housing duty’, but HA 1996, Pt 72 refers to it as the ‘main housing duty’3. We use the statutory language to refer to the duty throughout this chapter and this book.

1 HA 1996, s 193, as amended by HRA 2017, ss 5(7) and 7(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 15.39–15.43.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 For example in HA 1996, s 200(3).

To whom is the duty owed?

16.95 The HA 1996, s 193(2) ‘main housing duty’ is owed to applicants whom the local housing authority is satisfied1:

• are homeless2;
• are eligible for assistance3;
• have not become homeless intentionally4; and
• have a priority need5.

The duty will only arise once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)6, relief duty has come to an end7. But it will not be owed in circumstances where:

• the HA 1996, s 189B(2)8, relief duty came to an end because the applicant refused a final accommodation offer9 or a final Pt 610 offer11;
• the HA 1996, s 189B(2)12, relief duty came to an end because of the applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate13; or
• the local housing authority has notified the applicant that they have notified, or intend to notify, another local housing authority that the conditions for referral14 of his or her case are met15.

5 HA 1996, s 189(1) and Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002, SI 2002/2051, see Chapter 12 and Appendix 2. There is an exception from the requirement that an applicant must have a priority need in order to be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty where the applicant is making a fresh application for homelessness assistance within two years of the date of acceptance by the applicant of a private rented sector offer (HA 1996, s 195A, as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 8.100–8.107, 15.56–15.58 and 16.47–16.50. It should be noted that where the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty would only be owed to the applicant because of the presence of a restricted person, the applicant must still have a priority need in order to be owed the main housing duty (HA 1996, s 195A(5) as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 8.102.

14 See Chapter 14.

15 HA 1996, s 200(1). See 16.225–16.232 for the duty that will be owed instead in these circumstances.

16.96 The duty is ‘to secure that accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant’ and by his or her household (ie by all other persons who normally reside with the applicant as a member of his or her family, or who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant)¹.

1 HA 1996, s 176; English Code, para 15.40. This extension of the duty to the other household members is considered at 10.21–10.32. See R (Ogbeni) v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council [2008] EWHC 2444 (Admin), (2008) October Legal Action, p 37, Admin Ct, where the local housing authority was wrong to refuse to secure accommodation for a 17-year-old applicant and his aunt, who normally resided with him as a member of his family.

16.97 The duty is not limited to any particular minimum or maximum period. Nor is it a duty to provide a lasting home. HA 1996, Pt 7¹ is a safety net statutory scheme designed to resolve or prevent homelessness. The HA 1996, s 193(2), ‘main housing duty’ is the highest form of that safety net. Under that duty, accommodation is secured until the applicant is able, with any appropriate assistance, to resolve his or her longer-term housing needs². That longer-term need might be met by the provision of a tenancy of social housing³, in which case the applicant will need the assistance of HA 1996, Pt 6 (Allocation of Housing Accommodation) described in Chapters 1–6, or accommodation in the private rented sector⁴.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 Or other events, specified at HA 1996, s 193(5) and (6), occur. See 16.114–16.141.

16.97 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

When does the duty start?

16.98 The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is triggered as soon as the local housing authority is satisfied that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end, and all the other components required to activate the duty are in place.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.
2 HA 1996, s 193(1)(c), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.99 Whilst the commencement of the duty is not dependent on notification being given to the applicant, because it is owed as soon as the local housing authority is 'satisfied' that the components are in place, the applicant will have been notified of the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end.

1 HA 1996, s 193(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 189B(5) and (6), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.151–15.159.

16.100 The duty is an unqualified one and, once the components are in place, its performance cannot be deferred. A local housing authority must secure accommodation, and it must be suitable, from the date the duty is first owed. The local housing authority cannot avoid the immediate performance of the duty by reference to the other demands on its housing services or its available stock. The whole point of the safety net duty is that it kicks in immediately once its components are met.

1 Codona v Mid-Bedfordshire District Council [2004] EWCA Civ 925, [2005] HLR 1, CA at [36] per Auld LJ.

16.101 If the local housing authority fails to secure suitable accommodation, the applicant can apply for a mandatory order in judicial review proceedings requiring the local housing authority to comply with its duty. If the breach of duty is technical or minor, and the local housing authority can demonstrate it has done its best to comply with the duty, permission to bring a judicial review claim may be refused.

1 See 19.312.

How can the duty end?

16.102 When the local housing authority owes the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to secure accommodation for the applicant, that duty can only end if one of the events set out in HA 1996, s 193(5)–(7AA) occurs. The list of those events is exhaustive. If there is a change of circumstances not featuring among the events specified, the duty is not brought to an end. For example, where an applicant who had a priority need and was entitled to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty had a change of circumstances such that he no longer had a priority need, the local housing authority still had a duty towards him, because such a change is not among the listed events. Similarly, where an applicant is owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty but is unable to afford the charges levied on the accommodation, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty does not come to an end (because an inability to afford the charges is not among the listed events).
The HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty 16.104

3 R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Sadiq (2001) 33 HLR 525, QBD.

16.103 Of course, if the local housing authority discovers that its decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is owed was obtained as a result of fraud, or made under a fundamental mistake of fact, it may re-open that decision and, on further inquiries, may decide that it does not owe the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty after all.

16.104 The events that can cause the duty to end are:

(1) the refusal by an applicant of suitable accommodation secured in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
(2) the applicant ceasing to be eligible for assistance;
(3) the applicant becoming homeless intentionally from his or her HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation;
(4) the applicant accepting an offer of a tenancy made under HA 1996, Pt 6;
(5) the applicant accepting an offer of an assured, but not an assured shorthold, tenancy from a private landlord, including a private registered provider;
(6) the applicant voluntarily ceasing to occupy his or her HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation as his or her only or principal home;
(7) the applicant refusing a final offer of suitable accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6;
(8) the applicant accepting a private rented sector offer; or
(9) the applicant refusing a private rented sector offer.

16.105 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.105 From this list it is clear that the duty may end when the applicant refuses three types of offer of suitable accommodation:

- an offer of accommodation made in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty itself;
- a final offer made under HA 1996, Pt 6; or
- a private rented sector offer.

3 HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC), see 16.163–16.185.

16.106 If, unusually, an offer of accommodation is made outside of these provisions, an applicant would be free to refuse it without fear that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty would end. Because the consequence of refusal of any of these offers can be to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, applicants contemplating refusing an offer, and their advisers, should first ensure that they are very clear whether the offer is being made under any of these three provisions or not.

Decisions and challenges about ending the main housing duty

16.107 There is a common misconception that it is for the local housing authority to decide whether or not the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended. In fact, HA 1996, Pt 7, simply prescribes that, on the happening of one of the events listed above, the local housing authority ‘shall cease to be subject to the duty’. In other words, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty ends automatically and without any need for a freestanding decision to that effect by the local housing authority. In consequence, there is no obligation on a local housing authority to ‘notify’ any such decision to the applicant.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 193(5), (6), (7) and (7A).
3 There is one exception: if the duty ends for the reason given at HA 1996, s 193(5), (refusal of an offer of accommodation made in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty), the local housing authority is required to notify the applicant that it regards itself as ceasing to be subject to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

16.108 However, many of the events which terminate the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty are dependent upon the local housing authority being ‘satisfied’ that a particular situation has come about (eg that accommodation refused by the applicant was suitable). Most local housing authorities will notify the applicant of their conclusions and indicate that, as a result, they consider that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended. These are colloquially called ‘discharge of duty’ letters.

1 HA 1996, s 193(5) and (7).

16.109 A decision made by a local housing authority that events have occurred that bring to an end the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty owed to the applicant has been held to constitute a decision as to ‘what duty (if any) is owed to him’. The applicant therefore has a right to request a review of the decision to treat the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty as at an end.

16.110 Quite apart from this general right to a statutory review of any decision that events have occurred which bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, the applicant also has a separate freestanding right to request a review of any decision that accommodation offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, as a final offer under HA 1996, Pt 6, or as a private rented offer is suitable. If an applicant receives an offer of accommodation under any of the three provisions, and he or she believes that the accommodation is not suitable, there is the right both to request a review of the decision that the property is suitable, and to accept the property in any event. This must usually be the sensible course of action for an applicant to take. Otherwise, she or he may lose the suitability review and find that the offer has meanwhile been withdrawn.

16.111 Where the local housing authority has decided to end its duty because the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation, and the applicant then requests a review of that decision (as he or she is entitled to do), the scope of the review will be different from the scope of reviews of other decisions. The normal rule for reviews is that the reviewing officer should consider all the facts, law and circumstances as at the date of the review decision. The Court of Appeal has considered whether the normal rule should apply to cases involving refusals of offers. In Osseily v Westminster City Council, it held that there was no obligation on the local housing authority to keep the accommodation available for the applicant while a review is being carried out. In Omar v Westminster City Council, the Court of Appeal considered the position where, at the date of refusal, the accommodation was unsuitable, but subsequent events had rendered it suitable by the date of the review decision. The Court of Appeal held that:

‘the correct question for the reviewer is whether the council were right, as at the date of that original decision; and for that purpose what they should be examining is the facts that existed as of that date, albeit they may discover what facts existed as at that date, between the date of that original decision and the date of review.’

19.166–19.174 for scope of review in general and 19.174 for scope of review where the applicant has refused an offer of accommodation.

16.112 A third decision of the Court of Appeal concerned accommodation which, at the date when the applicant was required to accept it, was not suitable but there were works proposed that would render it suitable. In Boreh v Ealing London Borough Council, the Court of Appeal held that there would only be an offer of suitable accommodation in those circumstances if the offer was accompanied with certain, binding and enforceable assurances about what work would be carried out after acceptance and before occupation. A reviewing officer should not take into account the works subsequently carried out if they had not been contained in such assurances.

2 The Court of Appeal in Boreh v Ealing London Borough Council [2008] EWCA Civ 1176, [2009] HLR 22, CA, did not specify that the assurances must be to the effect that the works would be carried out before the accommodation is to be occupied. However, it follows that if the accommodation before works were carried out was not suitable for occupation by the applicant, then the works should be carried out before occupation commences. See also Norris v Milton Keynes Council [2010] EWCA Civ 77, (2010) April Legal Action, p 26, CA.

The events that may cause the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to end 16.113 HA 1996, s 193(5)–(7AA) contains a list of nine events which may cause the main housing duty to come to an end.

(1) Refusal of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation

16.114 For the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to end for this reason, HA 1996, s 193(5) prescribes a number of fairly strict conditions which must all be fulfilled. These conditions are that:

(1) the accommodation has been offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
(2) the local housing authority is satisfied that it is ‘suitable’ accommodation;
(3) the applicant has been informed of the consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer;
(4) the applicant has been informed of the right to seek a review of the suitability of the offered accommodation;
(5) the applicant refuses the offer; and
(6) the local housing authority notifies the applicant that it regards the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty as having ended as a result of the refusal.

1 HA 1996, s 193(5); English Code, para 15.41(e).
2 The exact text is ‘not an offer of accommodation under Part 6 or a private rented sector offer’ (HA 1996, s 193(5)).
HA 1996, s 193(5). See English Code, para 15.41(e).

Where a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy is offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, the Court of Appeal has held that the local housing authority should explain in the offer letter that:

‘the authority acknowledges the accommodation would be temporary if the private landlord lawfully exercises his right to recover possession after the end of the fixed term and that, if that happens and assuming that the applicant’s circumstances have not materially changed, the authority accepts that it would again become obliged to perform its duty under the section to secure that accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant’.

Griffiths v St Helens Council [2006] EWCA Civ 160, [2006] HLR 29, CA at [42] per May LJ. The offer letter should make it clear that the assured shorthold tenancy is not a private rented sector offer, but an offer made under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

The conditions refer to two sets of rights to request a review:

(a) a review of the decision as to suitability; and
(b) a review of the decision that the duty is regarded as ended.

HA 1996, s 202(1)(f), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.59–19.62.

HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17. For the specific considerations where an offer has been refused, see 19.174.

This reflects the fact that the applicant will have received two letters. The first letter will have offered the accommodation on the basis that it was suitable, outlined the right to seek a review of suitability, and warned of the consequences of refusal. The second, following a refusal, will have notified the applicant of the fact that the local housing authority considered that the main housing duty had ended. Because an applicant can request a review whilst simultaneously accepting the accommodation (and thus preserve his or her position), it should become less common for the second letter to be sent. In Ali v Birmingham City Council, the Court of Appeal held that “inform” in [HA 1996, Pt 7] is to be construed as requiring information to be conveyed in understandable English and that ‘notify’ requires the giving of a notice which imports a degree of formality. The Local Government Ombudsman found maladministration following a complaint where the offer letter containing notification of the consequences of refusal was sent on the day that the applicant verbally refused an offer of a tenancy made under HA 1996, Pt 6, and was not received by her until three days after the refusal.

request a review if he accepted the offer and moved into the property, and the local housing authority did not notify him in writing of its decision to end the HA 1996, s 211, duty to protect his possessions and did not give reasons for that decision.

16.118 There is no obligation for the information to be given to the applicant in the same letter as the offer. It may have been provided in an earlier communication. The Court of Appeal has held that it is ‘essentially a matter of fact and degree’ whether or not any period between the notification and the offer itself means that the applicant has or has not been informed of his or her statutory rights. In the case considered by the Court of Appeal1, there had been a month between the information being conveyed to the applicant and the offer being made, with no other relevant events occurring during that month.
If there was a longer period between the information being conveyed and the offer being made, and especially if there had been other correspondence during that period between the local housing authority and the applicant, it might be the length of that period meant that the applicant had been not been informed of the consequences before refusing the offer of accommodation2.

per Munby LJ at [23]. In relation to offers of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation, the Court of Appeal has held that there is no obligation on the local housing authority to explain, in the offer letter, its reasons for concluding that the accommodation offered is suitable: Solihull

16.119 A decision by the local housing authority that its HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end as a result of this provision could arise at any time during the performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty. So, where an applicant is offered a move from his or her current accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to other suitable accommodation and refuses to move, he or she may find that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end1. If the applicant is notified that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end as a result of his or her refusal of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation, local housing authorities should be alert to the possibility that an applicant’s request for a review might either be made in respect solely of the suitability of the offer2 or have been made in respect of an actual or anticipated decision that the duty has come to an end. So the applicant might request a review because he or she believes that he or she did not refuse the offer, or had not been informed of the consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer3. The local housing authority must ensure that it deals with all the issues that arise on a HA 1996, s 193(5) decision that the duty has ended and not confine the review only to the issue of suitability of the accommodation4.

homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.39–19.62.

applicant’s response to a private rented sector offer as a refusal (HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC), see 16.163–16.185), see Ciercierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016), Legal Action, October, p 41, County Court at Central London.
16.120 The key issue for the applicant is likely to be the suitability or otherwise of the accommodation offered. It may be that accommodation offered was not suitable at the date when it fell to be accepted, eg if it was not wheelchair-accessible. If accompanied by certain, binding and enforceable assurances about the work to be carried out after acceptance but before occupation, the accommodation may be suitable and a refusal of the offer may result in the ending of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty under this provision. However, where no such assurance had been given by the date for acceptance, it will not have been an offer of suitable accommodation.

1 See CHAPTER 18.
3 In one case, the applicant refused an offer of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation, arguing that she had a legitimate expectation that any offer of alternative accommodation made to her would be an offer of suitable Part 6 accommodation. The local housing authority had previously made her three offers of HA 1996, Part 6 accommodation, all of which were acknowledged not to be suitable for her. The Court of Appeal held that the fact that the local housing authority had made her a number of offers of permanent accommodation did not prevent it from making an offer of temporary accommodation and the applicant did not have a legitimate expectation that she would only be offered permanent accommodation: Obiorah v Lewisham London Borough Council [2013] EWCA Civ 325, [2013] HLR 35, CA.

16.121 The location of the accommodation offered is relevant to whether or not the accommodation is suitable. Accommodation should be offered in the local housing authority’s district so far as is reasonably practicable. If that is not practicable, the local housing authority should try to secure accommodation as close as possible to its own district, and to where the applicant was previously living. Article 2 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 contains a checklist of factors which the local housing authority must consider before it can treat the offer of accommodation as suitable.

3 English Code, para 17.47.
4 SI 2012/2601. See Appendix 2.

16.122 The expectation is that, following receipt of the offer of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation, the applicant should have a reasonable opportunity to consider the offer and inspect the accommodation. This reflects best practice as set out in the English Code. However, circumstances might compel the local housing authority to require an immediate acceptance or rejection of the offer, even if the applicant has not had the opportunity to see it or consider it. The safeguards, if the local housing authority insists on an immediate acceptance or rejection, are that:

1 the local housing authority must have satisfied itself that the accommodation is suitable;
2 it must have notified the applicant of the right to a review; and
16.122 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

(3) the applicant can both accept and seek a review. The Court of Appeal has held (in a decision that pre-dates guidance given in the current and previous editions of the English Code) that these safeguards are sufficiently compliant with the statutory scheme, and that there is no separate right for applicants to view, and comment on, the accommodation before being required to accept or reject it.

1 English Code, para 15.46.

3 HA 1996, s 193(5)(a).
5 R (Khatun) v Newham London Borough Council [2004] EWCA 55, [2004] HLR 29, CA. In Abed v Westminster City Council [2011] EWCA Civ 1406, (2012) January Legal Action, p 21, CA, the Court of Appeal held that any deficiency leading up to the offer of accommodation to the applicant, such as a failure to assess the suitability of accommodation, could be made good by the review process.

16.123 The key ingredient to the ending of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty under this first route is that the applicant has refused the accommodation offered. The statutory wording is that the applicant ‘refuses’ an offer – not simply fails to accept it. This must mean something more than that the applicant has not replied to the making of an offer. The local housing authority must be able to identify something that amounts to unequivocal rejection following receipt of the offer.

1 R v Haringey London Borough Council ex p Muslu (2001) February Legal Action, p 29, QBD. See also R (Faziz) v Brent London Borough Council [2015] EWHC 2449 (Admin), (2015) September Legal Action, p 54, Admin Ct, where Haddon-Cave J said ‘[t]he subsection provides in terms that, as from the moment of refusal, the duty of the authority “ceases”’ at [17]. For an example where the local housing authority was wrong in law to characterise the applicant’s response to a private rented sector offer as a refusal (HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC), see 16.163–16.85), see Ciercierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016) October, Legal Action, p 41, County Court at Central London.

(2) Because the applicant ceases to be eligible

16.124 When an applicant ceases to be eligible for homelessness assistance, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty ends. Eligibility is primarily determined by immigration status, so the trigger to the ending of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty in these circumstances will normally be a change in that status.

2 See Chapter 11.
3 As happened in Tower Hamlets London Borough Council v Deugi [2006] EWCA Civ 159, [2006] HLR 28, CA, where the applicant had originally been eligible as a result of being the primary carer of a dependent child who was in full-time education. See 11.78–11.79. She ceased to be eligible when the child left full-time education.

16.125 HA 1996, s 193(6)(a) makes it clear that the issue is whether the applicant has ceased to be eligible. The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty does not end if it is some other member of the applicant’s household who ceases to be eligible for assistance, even if it is the very household member whose presence conferred priority need on the applicant in the first place. In those circumstances, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will continue.

16.126 There is some debate as to whether or not a local housing authority needs to make a decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended because the applicant is no longer eligible, since the issue is not a matter of discretion. It is recognised, however, that the question of whether the applicant has ceased to be eligible may be disputed, and in those circumstances it would seem right for there to be a decision by the local housing authority, which can then be the subject of a request for a statutory review.

1 See the comments by May LJ in Tower Hamlets London Borough Council v Deugi [2006] EWCA Civ 159, [2006] HLR 28, CA, at [33].

(3) Because the applicant becomes homeless intentionally from the main housing duty accommodation

16.127 When the local housing authority is deciding whether the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended for this reason, it should apply the definition of intentional homelessness contained in HA 1996, s 191. In Orejudos v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council the applicant was absent, despite warnings, on ten different occasions (over a period of more than a year) from hostel accommodation provided in performance of the main housing duty. In breach of the conditions of his occupancy, he had failed to give reasons for his absences in advance. The local housing authority terminated his booking, decided that he had become homeless intentionally and concluded that its duty toward him had ended. That decision was upheld on review, on appeal to the county court and on a further appeal to the Court of Appeal. Similarly, where an applicant lost her HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation because she did not pay the rent, and the local housing authority rejected her argument that she did not have the resources to pay for the accommodation, she had become homeless intentionally from the main housing duty accommodation. It is, of course, a necessary pre-requisite that the applicant has actually been rendered homeless by termination of any rights to occupy the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation. The duty does not end simply because the applicant has become threatened with homelessness intentionally. Nor will it end in circumstances where the applicant has never taken up occupation of the accommodation. The local housing authority must also be satisfied that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation provided was suitable for the applicant. If it was not suitable, then the local housing authority will not have been properly performing the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty in the first place.

16.127 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

8 See, in the context of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 188(1) interim accommodation duty, R (Lindsay) v Watford Borough Council, unreported, 17 October 2017, Admin Ct, where the applicant, who suffered from depression and severe epilepsy, was required to leave hotel accommodation having allegedly assaulted a member of staff. The Administrative Court judge held that there was a serious issue to be tried as to whether the accommodation provided had been suitable, whether it was therefore sufficient for HA 1996, s 188(1), accommodation and, accordingly, whether the local housing authority had properly discharged its duty under HA 1996, s 188(1).

16.128 The applicant has a right to request that the local housing authority reviews its decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended for this reason.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17.

16.129 In one case, an applicant argued that, once his HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation had ended under this provision, the local housing authority should provide him with accommodation for such period as would give him a reasonable opportunity to secure his own accommodation. By the time the appeal was heard, the applicant had been accommodated by friends and relatives for six months and the appeal was dismissed by the county court judge on the basis that it had become academic and futile. The Court of Appeal refused permission to appeal on the grounds that the decision had been justified on the facts, but reserved for another occasion whether a different result might be required in “a starker case”.

1 HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), now amended by HRA 2017, s 5(5) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.81–16.93.
2 Newman v Croydon London Borough Council [2008] EWCA Civ 1591, (2009) Legal Action, p 22, CA. See also R (Dragic) v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2012] EWHC 1241 (Admin), (2012) July Legal Action, p 42, Admin Ct, where the applicants took the route of re-applying after the HR 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty had come to an end, the local housing authority accepted that they were entitled to make fresh applications for homelessness assistance and notified them of its decision that they had become homeless intentionally.

(4) Acceptance of a HA 1996, Pt 6 offer

16.130 An applicant owed the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty will normally have applied to the same local housing authority for an allocation of a social housing tenancy under the provisions of HA 1996, Pt 6 (‘Allocation of housing accommodation’).

16.131 Because all homeless persons (including those owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty) are entitled to a reasonable preference in an allocation scheme, an offer under HA 1996, Pt 6 could be made quite quickly. In some circumstances, a HA 1996, Pt 6 offer could be made immediately upon the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty being triggered, not least because the applicant might have been using the period of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to place bids under a choice-based lettings scheme. If that offer is accepted, then it may not be necessary to secure any accommodation under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty at all.

1 See 4.58-4.79.
2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 See 15.138-15.150.

16.132 Where the applicant has been provided with accommodation from a local housing authority or from a private registered provider under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, the subsequent offer under HA 1996, Pt 6 might be of a tenancy of the very same property. If that offer is accepted, the local housing authority, or private registered provider will notify the applicant of his or her new tenancy status.

16.133 Since the introduction of choice-based lettings in some allocation schemes, the expectation has been that an applicant is free to bid for properties without any penalties or risks to his or her temporary accommodation. Precisely for this reason, there is no requirement in HA 1996, Pt 7, that all the HA 1996, Pt 6 offers made to an applicant should be of 'suitable' accommodation or that any reasons are required to be given by the applicant for refusal of those offers. There is no right to a statutory review of the suitability of offers that are not expressed to be 'final' offers.

1 See 5.6-5.47.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.134 An applicant who accepts an offer made under HA 1996, Pt 6, only to find subsequently that it is unsuitable, will simply apply for a transfer to alternative accommodation in the ordinary way. When a 'final' offer is made under HA 1996, Pt 6, the applicant will need to be cautious. If a local housing authority's policy is to make one offer, then the only offer made to someone owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will be 'a final offer', and there may be consequences if the applicant refuses it.

1 See 2.55-2.65 and 5.77-5.82.
2 HA 1996, s 193(7) and (7A). See 16.142-16.152.

16.135 The applicant has a right to request that the local housing authority reviews its decision that the duty has ended for this reason. However, since the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty only ends as a result of the voluntary acceptance by the applicant of accommodation, it would seem unlikely that the applicant would want to challenge such a decision.

(5) Acceptance of an offer of an assured tenancy

16.136 The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will end if the applicant accepts an assured tenancy offered by a private landlord (including by a private registered provider). In this context, assured tenancy does not include an assured shorthold tenancy. It follows that it would also not be a private rented sector offer.

2 HA 1996, s 193(6)(cc).

3 Because a ‘private rented sector offer’ can only be an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy: HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC). See 16.154.

16.137 The offer will have been made other than as a result of a nomination under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme (HA 1996, Pt 6). Such an offer may have been elicited from a private sector landlord by a local housing authority seeking homes for its homeless households. Or it may have come from a private registered provider to which the applicant had applied directly for a tenancy.1

1 Because the acceptance of HA 1996, Part 6 offers is dealt with separately in HA 1996, s 193(6)(c), see 16.130–16.135.

2 See Chapter 6.

16.138 An offer of an assured tenancy, made separately from the HA 1996, Pt 6 process, may be refused by the applicant with no adverse consequences upon the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, unless the accommodation is subsequently re-offered to him or her as a final HA 1996, Pt 6 offer. The local housing authority cannot make a ‘final’ offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation without first being satisfied that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and his or her household.1

1 See 16.142–16.152.

16.139 The applicant has a right to request that the local housing authority reviews its decision that the duty has ended for this reason. However, since the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty only ends as a result of the voluntary acceptance by the applicant of accommodation, it would seem unlikely that the applicant would want to challenge such a decision.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17.

(6) Because the applicant voluntarily ceases to occupy the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation

16.140 The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will come to an end where the applicant voluntarily ceases to occupy, as his or her only or principal home, the accommodation made available under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. The test to be applied in relation to the cessation of occupation is the same test as that used for determining whether a tenant of social housing has lost security of tenure because he or she no longer occupies accommodation as his or her only or principal home. The test is not met, and the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty will not have ended, merely because the applicant has been staying somewhere else temporarily. Additionally, if the applicant has ceased to occupy, he or she must have done so ‘voluntarily’. This requirement is especially important where the applicant has been accommodated because she or he is vulnerable as a result of mental illness. Its presence corresponds to the requirement in the definition of ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ that the applicant’s actions must have been ‘deliberate’.1

16.141 The applicant has a right to request that the local housing authority reviews its decision that the main housing duty has ended for this reason¹.

(7) Refusal of a final offer made under HA 1996, Pt 6

16.142 Where the applicant refuses an offer of accommodation¹ made under HA 1996, Pt 6, the HA 1996, 193(2), main housing duty will end if the following requirements are all fulfilled:

(1) the applicant was offered accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6²;
(2) the offer was made in writing³;
(3) the offer stated that it was a ‘final offer for the purposes of section 193(7)’⁴;
(4) the local housing authority had satisfied itself that the accommodation was ‘suitable’ for the applicant⁵;
(5) the applicant is not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation which he or she cannot bring to an end before being required to take up the offer⁶;
(6) the applicant had been informed of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer⁷;
(7) the applicant had been told of the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation⁸; and
(8) the offer was refused⁹.

⁴ HA 1996, s 193(7A).
⁵ HA 1996, s 193(7F)(a).
⁶ HA 1996, s 193(7F) and (8). HA 1996, s 193(7F) as originally enacted contained a requirement that the local housing authority must also be satisfied that it would have been reasonable for the applicant to have accepted the accommodation.

⁸ HA 1996, s 193(7).

16.143 This possible avenue to the ending of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty only applies to a ‘final offer’ of HA 1996, Pt 6 Accommodation.

Notification of the final offer

16.144 The applicant will know whether or not the offer is a ‘final offer’ because the written notification must not only state that it is, but must also state that it is being treated as such for the purposes of the specific subsection in HA 1996, Pt 7. Meeting all of these different requirements, which enables the local housing authority to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end under this route, requires careful organisation by the allocation staff and the homelessness staff.

1. The letter need not contain the exact words in HA 1996, s 193(7), provided that it conveys every matter of substance required by s 193(7): Omar v Birmingham City Council [2007] EWCA Civ 610, [2007] HLR 43, CA.

2. Particularly so where these functions are separately managed within the particular local housing authority. See Complaint against Forest Heath District Council, 13 019 785, 17 July 2014, (2014/15) December/January Legal Action, p 35, where the Local Government Ombudsman found maladministration when an applicant had been verbally offered accommodation under HA 1996, Part 6 which she had refused. The letter setting out that it was a final offer, and the consequences of refusal, was dated the same day as her refusal and received by her three days later.

16.145 The formula for the ending of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty by refusal of a final offer of accommodation offered under HA 1996, Pt 6 potentially triggers two sets of rights to request a review:

1. a right to request a review of the decision as to suitability; and
2. a right to request a review of the decision that the duty is regarded as ended.

1. HA 1996, s 202(1)(f), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.59–19.62.

2. HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17. For the specific considerations where an offer has been refused, see 19.174.

16.146 This reflects the fact that the applicant will have received two letters. The first will have offered the accommodation on the basis that it was a final offer, outlined the right to seek a review of suitability, and warned of the consequences of refusal. The second, following a refusal, will have notified the applicant that the local housing authority considers the HR 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to have come to an end. The Court of Appeal has held that it is desirable for all the issues arising on refusal to be reviewed at the same time. It should be made clear to the applicant that he or she has a right to a review of the suitability of the accommodation alone and/or of all the other elements of HA 1996, s 193(7) and (7A). Because an applicant can both request a review and also simultaneously accept the accommodation (and thus preserve his or her position), it should be less common for the stage to be reached at which the second letter comes to be sent.

1. This letter need not contain the reasons for the local housing authority’s decision that the offer of accommodation is suitable: Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council v Khan [2014] EWCA Civ 41, [2014] HLR 33, CA.

2. Ravichandran v Lewisham London Borough Council [2010] EWCA Civ 755, [2010] HLR 42, CA. While the specific point that the Court of Appeal was considering (whether it had been reasonable for the applicants to accept the offer) no longer arises following the amendments to HA 1996, s 193(7F) by Localism Act 2011, s 148(9), the general point that applicants should not be deprived of a review decision that considers all the separate elements of a HA 1996, s 193(7) decision still applies.

3. HA 1996, s 202(1A). See 19.80–19.99. Where this occurs, the duty will have come to an end because the applicant has accepted an offer made under HA 1996, Part 6, see 16.130–16.135.
Suitable accommodation

16.147 The local housing authority cannot make a ‘final’ offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation without first being satisfied that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and his or her household. There is no obligation on the local housing authority to give reasons for its decision that the offer is suitable at this stage. The applicant will have been notified that if he or she refuses the final offer, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty may come to an end. He or she will also know that the safest course is to accept the offer, even if he or she considers it to be unsuitable, and to request a review of the suitability. It follows that it is good practice for an applicant to be informed of his or her right to accept the offer whilst requesting a review of its suitability. Indeed, the Local Government Ombudsman has found maladministration in one case where the local housing authority failed to inform the applicant in writing of his right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered.

3 HA 1996, ss 202(1)(f) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) and (1A). See 19.15–19.17 and 19.166–19.174.
4 Now the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman.

16.148 The question of suitability of accommodation is considered in Chapter 18. The location of the accommodation offered is relevant to whether or not the accommodation is suitable. Accommodation should be offered in the local housing authority’s district so far as is reasonably practicable. If that is not practicable, the local housing authority should try to secure accommodation as close as possible to its own district, and to where the applicant was previously living. Article 2 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 contains a checklist of factors which the local housing authority must consider before it can show that the offer of accommodation was suitable.

Viewing the property

16.149 Although the Court of Appeal has held that there is no obligation on a local housing authority to allow the applicant to view the property before accepting an offer of accommodation made to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, the English Code contains advice that applicants should be given the chance to view accommodation before required to decide on whether they accept or refuse the accommodation and before being required to sign any written agreement. It also contains advice that applicants should be given a reasonable period in which to consider offers of accommodation. The length of the reasonable period would depend on the applicant’s particular circumstances\(^2\).

\(^2\) English Code, paras 15.46–15.48.

Contractual or other obligations

16.150 Since the coming into force of the amendments to HA 1996, s 193(7F), by Localism Act 2011, s 148(9)\(^1\), the elements of HA 1996, s 193(7) will not be made out where the applicant is:

- under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation; and
- not able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the offer\(^1\).

\(^1\) Applicable to applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 9 November 2012: Localism Act 2011 (Commencement No 2 and Transitional Provisions) (England) Order 2012, SI 2012/2599. Prior to those amendments, the local housing authority was also obliged to consider whether it would be reasonable for the applicant to accept the offer of accommodation.

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 193(7F) and (8). See English Code, para 15.47.

16.151 This means that if an applicant cannot end the term of his or her tenancy or licence in order to take up the offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation, even though that accommodation is suitable and all the other elements of HA 1996, s 193(7) are made out, the local housing authority cannot decide that its HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end as a result of the applicant’s refusal of the offer. In practice, this is likely to apply to applicants who are occupying HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation on a fixed-term tenancy, with no break clause.

Refusal of offer

16.152 The key ingredient for ending the duty in these circumstances is that the applicant has refused the HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation offered. The wording in HA 1996, s 193(7) is that the applicant ‘refuses’ a final offer. It is not sufficient that there has been a simple failure to accept it. This must mean something more than that the applicant has failed to respond to an offer made to him or her. The local housing authority must be able to identify something that amounts to unequivocal rejection following receipt of the offer\(^1\).

\(^1\) R v Haringey London Borough Council ex p Maslin (2001) February Legal Action, p 29, QBD.

For an example where the local housing authority was wrong in law to characterise the applicant’s response to a private rented sector offer as a refusal, see Ciarcierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016), Legal Action, October, p 41, County Court at Central London.
Acceptance of a private rented sector offer

Since November 2012, local housing authorities have been able to make private rented sector offers to those applicants owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. Advice from the Secretary of State about private rented sector offers is contained at paras 17.11–17.29 of the English Code.

A ‘private rented sector offer’ is defined at HA 1996, s 193(7AC) as being:

(a) an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;

(b) made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by the authority with the landlord with a view to bringing the local housing authority’s main housing duty to an end; and

(c) the tenancy being offered is a fixed-term tenancy (within the meaning of Housing Act 1988 Pt 1) for a period of at least 12 months.

Power is given to the Secretary of State to provide by regulations that the minimum term may be increased from 12 months. That power has not been exercised. However, local housing authorities can choose to make private rented sector offers of tenancies with terms longer than the minimum of 12 months.

Local housing authorities may choose to make private rented sector offers to applicants who are owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. However, where the applicant is a restricted case, HA 1996, s 193(7AD) requires local housing authorities to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end by making a private rented sector offer ‘so far as reasonably practicable’.

The accommodation offered by way of a private rented sector offer must be suitable for the needs of the applicant and the members of his or her household. In addition to all the general considerations provided by HA 1996, Pt 7, and by case law, the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 which contains specific prescriptions regarding the physical characteristics and the management of a property offered by way of a private rented sector offer.

(8) Acceptance of a private rented sector offer

16.153 Since November 2012, local housing authorities have been able to make private rented sector offers to those applicants owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. Advice from the Secretary of State about private rented sector offers is contained at paras 17.11–17.29 of the English Code.

1 HA 1996, s 193(7AA)–(7AC); English Code, para 15.41(c).

2 Applicants whose applications for homelessness assistance were made on or after 9 November 2012: Localism Act 2011 (Commencement No 2 and Transitional Provisions) (England) Order 2012, SI 2012/2599. Applicants whose applications were made before 9 November 2012 can be made a qualifying offer of an assured shorthold tenancy, but there are no consequences if they refuse those offers: HA 1996, s 193(7B) and (7C) prior to repeal by Localism Act 2011, s 148 and Sch 25.

16.154 A ‘private rented sector offer’ is defined at HA 1996, s 193(7AC) as being:

(a) an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;

(b) made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by the authority with the landlord with a view to bringing the local housing authority’s main housing duty to an end; and

(c) the tenancy being offered is a fixed-term tenancy (within the meaning of Housing Act 1988 Pt 1) for a period of at least 12 months.

Power is given to the Secretary of State to provide by regulations that the minimum term may be increased from 12 months. That power has not been exercised. However, local housing authorities can choose to make private rented sector offers of tenancies with terms longer than the minimum of 12 months.

1 HA 1996, s 193(10)–(12).

16.156 Local housing authorities may choose to make private rented sector offers to applicants who are owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. However, where the applicant is a restricted case, HA 1996, s 193(7AD) requires local housing authorities to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end by making a private rented sector offer ‘so far as reasonably practicable’.

2 See English Code, para 15.43.

16.157 The accommodation offered by way of a private rented sector offer must be suitable for the needs of the applicant and the members of his or her household. In addition to all the general considerations provided by HA 1996, Pt 7, and by case law, the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 which contains specific prescriptions regarding the physical characteristics and the management of a property offered by way of a private rented sector offer.

4 See Chapter 18 for general considerations on suitability and 18.69–18.79 for the specific requirements in relation to a private rented sector offer. See English Code, paras 17.11–17.29.

16.158 The applicant will know that this is an offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, rather than an offer of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation, because of the special notification requirements.

16.159 Before or, at the latest, at the same time as the private rented sector offer is made, the local housing authority must:

(1) inform the applicant in writing of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer;

(2) inform the applicant in writing of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the private rented sector offer;

(3) unless the applicant is a ‘restricted case’, inform him or her in writing of the effect of the special provisions in HA 1996, s 195A on a further application for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority in England within two years of the date of acceptance of the offer;

(4) be satisfied that the offer is ‘suitable’ for the applicant and his or her household; and

(5) be satisfied that the applicant is not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation, or, if he or she is, that he or she is able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the offer.

It also need not contain any reasons for the local housing authority’s decision that the accommodation offered is suitable for the applicant: Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council v Khan [2014] EWCA Civ 41, [2014] HLR 33 CA.

8 HA 1996, s 193(7F) and (8), see 16.150–16.151.

16.160 If the applicant accepts the offer, all that the local housing authority has to do is to notify the applicant that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end as a result of his or her acceptance.

1 HA 1996, s 193(7AA).

Viewing the property

16.161 Although the Court of Appeal has held that there is no obligation on a local housing authority to allow the applicant to view the property before accepting an offer of accommodation made to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, the English Code contains advice that applicants should be given the chance to view accommodation before required to decide on whether they accept or refuse the accommodation and before being required to sign any written agreement. It also contains advice that applicants should be given a reasonable period in which to consider offers of accommodation. The length of the reasonable period would depend on the applicant’s particular circumstances.

16.162 The applicant might wish to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered. As with other offers which bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, he or she should usually be advised both to accept the offer and to request a review simultaneously. The question arises as to what happens if the applicant, having accepted the fixed-term tenancy, is then informed by the local housing authority that his or her request for a review has been successful and the local housing authority agrees that the accommodation was not suitable? The applicant at that point may wish to terminate the tenancy but will not be able to do so unless the terms of the tenancy contain a break clause. Alternatively, it may be that the accommodation is not suitable for a private rented sector offer, but might be considered suitable accommodation for accommodation made available under the HR 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. A third possibility might be that the local housing authority intervenes and pays the landlord any rent for the remaining period of the term of the tenancy, so that the applicant can move out of the accommodation without incurring debt.

1. HA 1996, s 202(1)(g), as amended by HCA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.63–19.64.
3. On the basis that expected duration of occupation is relevant to whether or not accommodation is suitable (Ali v Birmingham City Council, Moran v Manchester City Council [2009] UKHL 36, [2009] 1 WLR 1506, [2009] HLR 41, AC) and so accommodation that was not suitable for the term of the private rented sector offer could be suitable as performance of the main housing duty in HA 1996, s 193(2). See 18.62–18.88.

(9) Refusal of a private rented sector offer

16.163 Since November 2012, local housing authorities have been able to make private rented sector offers to those applicants owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. Advice from the Secretary of State about private rented sector offers is contained at paras 17.11–17.29 of the English Code.

1. HA 1996, s 193(7A)–(7C), English Code, paras 15.41(c) and 17.11–17.29.
2. Applicants whose applications for homelessness assistance were made on or after 9 November 2012: Localism Act 2011: Localism Act 2011, s 148 and Sch 25.

16.164 A ‘private rented sector offer’ is defined at HA 1996, s 193(7AC) as being:
16.164 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

(a) an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;
(b) made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by the authority with the landlord with a view to bringing the local housing authority’s main housing duty to an end; and
(c) the tenancy being offered is a fixed-term tenancy (within the meaning of Housing Act 1988, Pt 1) for a period of at least 12 months.

16.165 Power is given to the Secretary of State to provide by regulations that the minimum term may be increased from 12 months. That power has not been exercised. However, local housing authorities can choose to make private rented sector offers of tenancies with terms longer than the minimum of 12 months.

1 HA 1996, s 193(10)–(12).

16.166 Local housing authorities may choose to make private rented sector offers to applicants who are owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty. However, where the applicant is a restricted case, HA 1996, s 193(7AD) requires local housing authorities to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end by making a private rented sector offer ‘so far as reasonably practicable’.

2 See English Code, para 15.43.

16.167 The accommodation offered by way of a private rented sector offer must be suitable for the needs of the applicant and the members of his or her household. In addition to all the general considerations provided by HA 1996, Pt 7, and by case law, the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 which contains specific prescriptions regarding the physical characteristics and the management of a property offered by way of a private rented sector offer.

5 See Chapter 18 for general considerations on suitability and 18.69–18.79 for the specific requirements in relation to a private rented sector offer. See English Code, paras 17.11–17.29.

First notification to the applicant

16.168 The applicant will know that this is an offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, rather than an offer of HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty accommodation, because of the special notification requirements. The special notification requirements are designed to ensure that the applicant is fully informed of the consequences if he or she decides to refuse the offer.
16.169 The first notification to the applicant will have been on, or before, the private rented sector offer was made to the applicant. By the time of the offer, the local housing authority must have:

1. informed the applicant in writing\(^1\) of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer\(^2\);
2. informed the applicant in writing of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the private rented sector offer\(^3\);
3. unless the applicant is a ‘restricted case’\(^4\), informed him or her in writing of the effect of the special provisions in HA 1996, s 195A\(^5\) on a further application for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority in England within two years of the date of acceptance of the offer\(^6\);
4. been satisfied that the offer is ‘suitable’ for the applicant and his or her household\(^7\); and
5. been satisfied that the applicant is not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation, or, if he or she is, that he or she is able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the offer\(^8\).

\(^1\) The letter need not contain the exact words in HA 1996, s 193(7AB), provided that it conveys every matter of substance required by s 193(7A) and (7B) (Omar v Birmingham City Council [2007] EWCA Civ 610, [2007] HLR 43, CA). It also need not contain any reasons for the local housing authority’s decision that the accommodation offered is suitable for the applicant: Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council v Khan [2014] EWCA Civ 41, [2014] HLR 33 CA.

16.170 If an applicant, having received the required information, refuses the private rented sector offer, and the local housing authority is not willing to make him or her another offer, or to continue to secure accommodation under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, it will notify him or her accordingly. That second notification will contain the local housing authority’s decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended as a result of the applicant’s refusal and its reasons for that decision. The issues to be addressed by the local housing authority are:

1. whether the applicant was informed in writing of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the private rented sector offer, of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation and (in most cases) of the effect under HA 1996, s 195A\(^1\) of a further application to a local housing within two years of acceptance of the offer\(^2\);
2. whether the accommodation offered qualified as a private rented sector offer\(^3\);

(3) whether the applicant refused the offer;
(4) whether the offer was suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household;
(5) whether the applicant was under contractual or other obligations in relation to his or her existing accommodation; and
(6) if the applicant was under such contractual or other obligations, whether he or she was able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the tenancy.

16.171 The local housing authority will also inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review of the decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has come to an end and of the time within which the request for the review should be made.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17.

16.172 The applicant might wish to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered. As with other offers which bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, he or she should usually be advised both to accept the offer and to request a review simultaneously.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(g), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.90–19.99.

16.173 A significant issue for most applicants who refuse private rented sector offers is likely to have been the suitability of that offer, but it may be that the applicant is challenging another part of the local housing authority’s decision, for example disputing whether the accommodation offered was a private rented sector offer, or whether he or she could have brought his or her contractual obligations to an end. The key ingredient for ending the duty in these circumstances is that the applicant has refused the private rented sector offer. The wording in HA 1996, s 193(7AA)(b) is that the applicant ‘refuses’ a private rented sector offer. It is not sufficient that there has been a simple failure to accept it. This must mean something more than that the applicant has failed to respond to an offer made to him or her. The local housing authority must be able to identify something that amounts to unequivocal rejection following receipt of the offer.

1 R v Haringey London Borough Council ex p Muslu (2001) February Legal Action, p 29, QBD; for an example where the local housing authority was wrong in law to characterise the applicant’s response to a private rented sector offer as a refusal, see Ciercierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016), Legal Action, October, p 41, County Court at Central London.
Viewing the property

16.174 Although the Court of Appeal has held that there is no obligation on a local housing authority to allow the applicant to view the property before accepting an offer of accommodation made to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end, the English Code contains advice that applicants should be given the chance to view accommodation before being required to decide on whether they accept or refuse the accommodation and before being required to sign any written agreement. It also contains advice that applicants should be given a reasonable period in which to consider offers of accommodation. The length of the reasonable period would depend on the applicant’s particular circumstances.

Suitability of private rented sector offers 16.175 During the passage through Parliament of the Localism Act 2011, concern was raised about the possible cost, quality and location of accommodation offered by way of private rented sector offers. The Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 contains a list of ten factors relating to the physical condition of the property and the character of the landlord. Each of those factors must be complied with before a local housing authority can be satisfied that the accommodation offered is suitable.

1 SI 2012/2601.
2 See 18.70–18.76. See also English Code, paras 17.13–17.14.

16.176 The location of the accommodation offered is relevant to whether or not the accommodation is suitable. Accommodation should be offered in the local housing authority’s district so far as is reasonably practicable. If that is not practicable, the local housing authority should try to secure accommodation as close as possible to its own district, and to where the applicant was previously living.

1 Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012, SI 2012/2601, art 2, as amended by HRA 2017, s 12, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018, and English Code, paras 17.46–17.59. See 18.48–18.61.
2 HA 1996, s 208(1). See 18.52.
3 English Code, paras 17.46–17.59.

16.177 The English Code contains guidance on both the ten-point checklist for private rented sector offers and on the location of the accommodation. In addition, local housing authorities are directed by specific statutory instrument to consider the applicant’s financial resources (including any welfare benefits) and the total costs of the accommodation. If the accommodation is not affordable, it will not be suitable. The English Code also contains guidance on the cost of accommodation.

English Code, paras 17.44–17.45. For more on ‘affordability’, see 18.45–18.47.

16.178 In 2014, Shelter and Crisis published a joint report: A Roof over My Head, the final report of the Sustain project. The report contained research into the experiences and well-being of people who had been rehoused into the private rented sector following a period of homelessness. The report found that two-thirds of people were unhappy with their private rented tenancies. Key issues were the condition of the property and having to deal with problem landlords. Some people were moved into very cramped, unsuitable accommodation. People on low incomes felt vulnerable because they were less likely to be able to afford alternative accommodation when they needed to move. People with vulnerabilities found it particularly hard to cope with private rented sector accommodation. In response, the then Under-Secretary of State, Kris Hopkins MP, wrote to the leaders of local housing authorities in East and South East London, Greater Manchester and East Sussex on 28 February 2014. He reiterated the provisions of art 3 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012, the effect of which should mean that only ‘good-quality private rented sector accommodation’ would be used to bring the main housing duty to an end. He also drew attention to local housing authorities’ powers in relation to enforcement of housing standards in the private rented sector.

16.179 An applicant may raise on review any other issue, relating to the accommodation offered and/or to his or her personal circumstances or those of any member of his or her household, as a reason why the accommodation offered is not suitable for him or her and his or her household.

The special rules for ‘restricted cases’

The definition of a ‘restricted case’

16.180 The HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty applies differently to applicants who are ‘restricted cases’. An applicant is a ‘restricted case’ where:

- the applicant is eligible;
- the applicant’s household contains a ‘restricted person’; and
- it is the presence in the household of the restricted person that has led to the main housing duty having been accepted.

1. HA 1996, s 193(3B).
2. See Chapter 11.
4. HA 1996, s 193(3B).

16.181 A ‘restricted person’ is defined as a person:

- who is not eligible for assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7;

The HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty 16.184

- who is subject to immigration control within the meaning of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996; and
- who either does not have leave to enter or remain in the UK; or
- whose leave to enter or remain in the UK is subject to a condition to maintain and accommodate himself, and any dependents, without recourse to public funds.

1 HA 1996, s 184(7).
2 See Chapter 11.
3 See 11.101 and 11.26–11.31.
4 HR 1996, s 184(7)(c)(i).
5 HR 1996, s 184(7)(c)(ii).

16.182 Importantly, a restricted case only arises where the applicant’s entitlement to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is solely because of the presence in the applicant’s household of a restricted person. For example, if it was only the presence of the restricted person that resulted in the applicant becoming homeless, or having a priority need, the applicant’s case would be a restricted case. However, if the applicant would be entitled to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty regardless of the presence of the restricted person (if, for example, the applicant himself or herself had a priority need, or there were other members of the applicant’s household whose presence entitled the applicant to a priority need), the applicant’s case would not be a restricted case.

16.183 The applicant will know whether his or her case is a ‘restricted case’, because the local housing authority is required to notify him or her that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is owed because of the presence in his or her household of a restricted person. The applicant will have the right to request a review of any decision that he or she is a ‘restricted case’.

1 HA 1996, s 184(3A), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 9.54–9.56.
2 Such a decision would be a decision as to ‘what duty (if any)’ is owed to the applicant and therefore carries a right to request a review at HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 19.15–19.17.

Modifications to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty

16.184 For restricted cases, the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is modified in two ways:

(1) the local housing authority is required, so far as reasonably practicable, to bring its HR 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty to an end by making the applicant a private rented sector offer; and
(2) where an applicant is made a private rented sector offer, he or she need not be informed in writing of the effect under HA 1996, s 195A of a further application to a local housing authority within two years of acceptance of the offer.

1 HA 1996, s 193(7AD); English Code, para 15.43. See 16.152.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 193(7AB)(c).
16.185 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.185 The reason for this second modification is because part of the special provisions in HA 1996, s 195A\(^1\) do not apply to an applicant to whom the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty is only owed because of the presence in his or her household of a restricted person\(^2\).

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 8.100–8.107, 15.56–15.58 and 16.47–16.50.

Termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty

16.186 Accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty\(^3\) is usually provided for a longer period than accommodation provided under the other more short-term duties under HA 1996, Pt 7. A variety of types of accommodation might be used in order to perform the duty. For example: hostel accommodation provided either under a tenancy or a licence; accommodation let to the applicant by the local housing authority under a non-secure tenancy (either the local housing authority’s own stock or accommodation leased by the local housing authority from a private landlord); accommodation provided directly by a private landlord under an assured shorthold tenancy agreement; or accommodation provided by a private registered provider\(^4\).

\(^1\) See 16.94–16.199.

\(^3\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or before 3 April 2018.

\(^4\) See 18.155–18.162.

16.187 If the accommodation has been provided under an assured shorthold tenancy agreement, then the procedure for recovering possession set out in Housing Act 1988, Pt 1 would need to be followed by the landlord. That is, service of the relevant notice, followed by an application to the Court for a possession order. If the accommodation is provided by the local housing authority under a non-secure tenancy agreement, it is generally accepted that the accommodation will have been a ‘dwelling’ and so the tenancy must be terminated by notice to quit, in accordance with Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 5, and an application for a possession order must be made\(^5\).

\(^1\) Protection from Eviction Act 1977, ss 3 and 5.

16.188 What if the accommodation is provided under a licence? If the accommodation provider wants possession, the licence must be terminated in accordance with its own terms. Whether or not there must be a four-week notice to quit\(^6\), followed by an application to court for a possession order\(^7\), will depend on whether or not the applicant is occupying the accommodation as a ‘dwelling’. If the accommodation is occupied as a dwelling, the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 will apply\(^8\).

\(^3\) Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 3.
16.189 In Bucknall v Dacorum Borough Council the High Court considered the position of an applicant who occupied accommodation under a licence. The accommodation had been secured for her initially under the HA 1996, s 188(1), interim accommodation duty. She then continued to occupy the same accommodation once the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty had been accepted. Six weeks after the notification that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty was owed, the local housing authority made Ms Bucknall an offer of alternative accommodation, which she refused, and so the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty came to an end. Four months later, the local housing authority served a notice to quit purporting to terminate the licence. The High Court judge held that whether or not accommodation occupied in these circumstances was a ‘dwelling’ was a question of fact, depending on the particular circumstances. In this case, the original purpose of the arrangement had been overtaken by the subsequent acceptance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty, Ms Bucknall had expected to occupy the accommodation for an indefinite period until she was made an offer of private accommodation and she could reasonably have regarded it as her home. In those circumstances, the accommodation was a ‘dwelling’ and the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 applied.

1. [2017] EWHC 2094 (QB), [2017] HLR 40, QBD.
5. The notice was defective and did not comply with all the requirements of Protection from Eviction Act 1977, s 5.
6. There may be other circumstances when accommodation occupied under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty might not be a ‘dwelling’, for example if the notification to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty was owed included a notification that an offer of alternative accommodation would be made within seven days. Each case will, however, be fact specific.

Re-applying after the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty ends

16.190 An applicant in respect of whom the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty has ended is free to make a new application for homelessness assistance to the same local housing authority, or any local housing other authority, at any time.

The special rules for applicants re-applying within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer

16.191 The introduction of the facility for local housing authorities to end the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty by making private rented sector offers, of tenancies of only 12 months duration, raised the spectre of applicants for homelessness assistance constantly re-applying for homelessness assistance. As each private let came to an end, an applicant would once again apply for homelessness assistance and would need to pass, once again, through the obstacle course of HA 1996, Pt 7 before being owed another HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty and made just another short-term private rented sector offer.¹

16.192 To meet this possibility, at least in part, the Localism Act 2011 amended HA 1996, Pt 7, by inserting HA 1996, 195A.¹ In short, it provides that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty remains with the placing local authority for a 2-year period.² This is achieved by arranging that if an applicant becomes homeless within two years of the acceptance of a suitable private rented sector offer, and applies again for homelessness assistance, he or she will be fast-tracked through HA 1996, Pt 7 to the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty again with the benefit of special provisions and, most particularly:

(1) irrespective of whether he or she still has a priority need for accommodation; and
(2) without needing to face possession proceedings brought by the private sector landlord.

³ As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.193 The first special provision is that he or she will not normally require a priority need in order to be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.¹ The exception to this special provision is where the applicant would only be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty because of the presence in his or her household of a restricted person.² Even if this is the case, the presence of the restricted person might give the applicant a priority need and so he or she would be then owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty.

16.194 The second special provision is that applicants are deemed to be homeless on the day on which any Housing Act 1988, s 21, notice which has been served on them expires.¹

The HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty 16.197

16.195 An applicant should therefore make his or her application for homelessness assistance as soon as he or she is given a valid Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice by the private sector landlord. If the notice is valid, the local housing authority must accept that he or she is threatened with homelessness¹. There may be some further inquiries to be carried out, for example as to whether the applicant remains eligible for assistance². However, if the local housing authority is able to carry out any necessary further inquiries and make its decision on the application before the Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice expires – or in other words, whilst the applicant remains threatened with homelessness, as opposed to being actually homeless – it will be subject to the HA 1996, s 195(2)³, prevention duty.

³ As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.87–15.137.

16.196 If the decision on the application for homelessness assistance is taken on or after the date on which the notice expires, the applicant will be deemed to be homeless⁴. The HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty will come to an end⁵. If there is reason to believe that he or she remains eligible for assistance, the HA 1996, s 188(1), interim accommodation duty will apply without any consideration of whether there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need⁶. Subsequently, if the local housing authority satisfies itself that the applicant remains eligible for assistance, the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁷, relief duty will be owed and the interim accommodation duty will continue until the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁸, relief duty comes to an end or the applicant is notified what duty, if any, will be owed once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁹, relief duty has ended (whichever is the later event). Following this, if the applicant remains homeless, and did not become homeless intentionally, he or she will then be owed the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty⁷.

16.197 If the accommodation secured by the private rented sector offer was in the district of authority A, but had been offered to the applicant by authority B, and the applicant makes his or her further application for homelessness assistance... assistance to authority A, authority A can refer the performance of either the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty back to authority B provided that neither the applicant nor any member of his or her household will run the risk of domestic or other violence in the district of authority B.\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.}

If the applicant is not eligible for assistance, then no duty will be owed\footnote{HA 1996, s 183(2).} If the applicant is found to have become homeless intentionally from the private rented accommodation, eg because it was his or her actions that led the landlord to serve a Housing Act 1988, s 21 notice, then the applicant will be entitled to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and, when that comes to an end, if the applicant also has a priority need, to short-term accommodation under HA 1996, s 190(2)(a).\footnote{As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 14.123–14.127.} It may be that the local housing authority can arrange with the private landlord that the accommodation previously occupied as a result of the private rented sector offer can now be offered to the applicant again, perhaps if the local housing authority’s assistance were to include help with rent in advance or a rent guarantee.

These special provisions only apply once. If, on a re-application within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer, the applicant accepts another private rented sector offer (which might be of the same or different accommodation), and that subsequently comes to an end, he or she will have to apply in the usual way and will need to have a priority need in order to be owed any of the accommodation duties.

THE HA 1996, S 193C(4) ACCOMMODATION DUTY OWED TO APPLICANTS WHO HAVE DELIBERATELY AND UNREASONABLY REFUSED TO CO-OPERATE

Where the local housing authority has notified an applicant of its decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate, any HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty or HA 1996, s 189B(2),...
To whom is the duty owed?

16.201 The HA 1996, s 193C(4) accommodation duty can only arise where the local housing authority:

- owed the applicant the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty or the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty; and
- has given the applicant a notice in accordance with HA 1996, s 193B(2)–(6).

That notice will have informed the applicant of the local housing authority’s opinion that he or she had deliberately and unreasonably refused to take any step set out in his or her personalised housing plan. The giving of this notice has the effect of bringing the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty or the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end.

16.202 In these circumstances, the local housing authority will be required to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant, if:

- the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she is homeless;
16.202 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

• the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she is eligible for assistance;
• the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has a priority need; and
• the local housing authority is not satisfied that he or she became homeless intentionally.

It will be noted that this is the counterpart to the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty. But for the applicant’s unreasonable conduct, that duty would have been owed instead. The distinction between the two duties lies in the manner in which they may be brought to an end.

2 See 16.114–16.118 for the ways in which the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty can be brought to an end; and see 16.204–16.218 for the ways in which the duty at HA 1996, s 193C(4) can be brought to an end.
3 HA 1996, s 193C(4), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
4 See 15.196–15.221.

When does the duty start?

16.203 The duty to accommodate commences as soon as the notice that a local housing authority considers that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate has been given to him or her. For a notice to be ‘given’, it must be in writing. If it is not actually received by the applicant, having been physically handed over to him or her, or sent by post, or by email, then it is treated as having been given to him or her if it is made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection by the applicant, or on his or her behalf.

2 HA 1996, s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 HA 1996, s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

How can the duty end?

16.204 The HA 1996, s 193C(4) duty to accommodate will come to an end when any of the following events occurs:

• the applicant ceases to be eligible for assistance;
• the applicant becomes homeless intentionally from accommodation made available for his or her occupation;
• the applicant accepts an offer of an assured tenancy from a private landlord;
• the applicant otherwise voluntarily ceases to occupy, as his or her only or principal home, the accommodation made available for his or her occupation;
Accommodation duty and refusal to co-operate 16.205

- the applicant, having been informed of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance, and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation, refuses a final accommodation offer;
- the applicant, having been informed of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance, and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation, accepts a final accommodation offer;
- the applicant, having been informed of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance, and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation, refuses a final Pt 6 offer; or
- the applicant, having been informed of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance, and of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation, accepts a final Pt 6 offer.

The first four events are also events that would cause the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to come to an end and are discussed in the sections of this chapter dealing with that duty.

A final accommodation offer 16.205 The HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty will come to an end where the applicant refuses or accepts a final accommodation offer. Since the applicant has the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered, whilst also accepting the offer, acceptance must always be the safest course of action.

16.206 An offer will be a ‘final accommodation offer’ if:

- it is an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;
- it is made with the approval of the local housing authority in pursuance of arrangements made by the local housing authority with a view to bringing the HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty to an end; and
- the tenancy offered is a fixed term tenancy, (within the meaning of Pt 1, Housing Act 1988), for a period of at least six months².

16.207 Local housing authorities can choose to make final accommodation offers of tenancies with terms longer than the minimum of six months. The accommodation offered must be suitable for the needs of the applicant³. In addition to the general requirements of suitability⁴, the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012⁵ applies to final accommodation offers. Art 3 contains specific requirements relating to the physical characteristics and management of the accommodation⁶.

4 See 18.70–1.79 for these requirements and see further English Code, paras 17.11–17.22.

16.208 A local housing authority may not approve a final accommodation offer unless it is satisfied that the applicant is not under any contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation, or, that if he or she is, he or she is able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the offer⁷.

16.209 The applicant will know that this is an offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to an end, rather than an offer of HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation, because of the special notification requirements. In particular, the offer (or a document preceding or accompanying the offer) must:

- inform the applicant of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer⁸; and
- inform the applicant in writing of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation⁹.

A final Pt 6 offer

16.210 The HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty will come to an end where the applicant refuses or accepts a final Pt 6 offer. Since the applicant has the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered, whilst also accepting the offer, acceptance must always be the safest course of action.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 193C(6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 15.37.

16.211 A final Pt 6 offer is defined as:

- an offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6 (allocation of social housing);
- that is made in writing; and
- that states that it is a final offer for the purposes of HA 1996, s 193C.

1 HA 1996, s 193C(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.212 In addition, the offer (or a document preceding or accompanying the offer) must:

- inform the applicant of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer; and
- inform the applicant in writing of his or her right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation.

2 HA 1996, s 193C(6), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. The letter need not, however, contain the local housing authority’s reasons for being satisfied that the accommodation offered is suitable for the applicant: Solihull Metropolitan Borough Council v Khan [2014] EWCA Civ 41, [2014] HLR 33 CA.

16.213 The accommodation offered must be suitable for the needs of the applicant. In addition, a local housing authority may not make a final Pt 6 offer unless it is satisfied that the applicant is not under any contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation, or, that if he or she is, he or she is able to bring those obligations to an end before being...

Acceptance or refusal of the offer

16.214 If the applicant accepts or refuses a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer, the HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^1\), duty will come to an end automatically, without any further notification being required\(^2\). The deliberate use of the word ‘refuse’ in this context connotes something more than a simple failure to accept or respond to an offer. The local housing authority must be able to identify something that amounts to unequivocal rejection following receipt of the offer\(^3\).

\(^3\) R v Haringey London Borough Council ex p Muslu (2001) February Legal Action, p 29, QBD; for an example where the local housing authority was wrong in law to characterise the applicant’s response to a private rented sector offer as a refusal, see Ciercierska v Brent London Borough Council (2016), Legal Action, October, p 41, County Court at Central London.

16.215 The applicant might wish to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered\(^1\). As with other offers, he or she should usually be advised both to accept the offer and to request a review simultaneously\(^2\). The question arises as to what happens if the applicant, having accepted a fixed-term tenancy, is then informed by the local housing authority that his or her request for a review has been successful and the local housing authority agrees that the accommodation was not suitable? The applicant at that point may wish to terminate the tenancy but will not be able to do so unless the terms of the tenancy contain a break clause\(^3\).

Termination of accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate those who have deliberately and unreasonably failed to co-operate 16.216 Unlike accommodation secured under the HA 1996, s 188(1), interim accommodation duty\(^1\), or the HA 1996, s 190(2), duty\(^2\), this duty is not inevitably short-term. The accommodation might be occupied for an indefinite period. Whether the accommodation is occupied as a ‘dwelling’, thereby attracting the protection of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977, is likely to be a question of fact, which will require consideration of all of the circumstances. If the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 does not apply, the accommodation provider will have to terminate the licence under which the accommodation is occupied in accordance with its terms and upon reasonable notice.

Referral of the applicant’s case at the stage when the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty would be owed

16.217 Whichever local housing authority an applicant applies to, if that local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance, and have a priority need, the duty to secure initial interim accommodation is triggered. Interim accommodation must be secured, irrespective of whether or not the applicant appears to have a local connection with the local housing authority. That duty continues while it carries out its inquiries.

1 See 16.37–16.50. In the case of an application for homelessness assistance made within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer, the duty to secure interim accommodation applies whether or not there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need (HA 1996, s 188(1A), as amended by HRA 2017, ss 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018). See 16.47–16.50.
2 HA 1996, s 188(2).

16.218 If the local housing authority’s conclusion upon those inquiries is that the applicant:

1 is homeless; and
2 is eligible for assistance;

it would normally be subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty. But if it considers that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case to another local housing authority in England are made out, it may notify the other local housing authority that it holds that opinion. The notifying local housing authority (‘the first local housing authority’) must notify the applicant that it has notified, or intends to notify, another local housing authority (‘the second local housing authority’) of its opinion.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 The HA 1996, s 189(B)(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty cannot be referred to a local housing authority in Wales or to a local authority in Scotland: HA 1996, s 198(A1) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018).
4 HA 1996, s 198(A1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(8), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.139–15.142.

5 HA 1996, s 184(4), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.139.

16.219 The effect of these two notices is:

(a) to bring to an end the initial interim duty to accommodate; and
(b) to defer the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^1\), relief duty until the applicant has been notified whether or not the conditions for referral are met\(^2\).

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.

2 HA 1996, s 199A(1) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.220 HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\), creates a further interim duty on the first local housing authority so that it is required to continue to accommodate the applicant if it has reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need\(^2\). That further interim duty ends only when the applicant receives a further notice from the first local housing authority. That further notice will contain the final decision that the conditions of referral are, or are not, met\(^3\). That decision will have been reached either by agreement between the two local housing authorities or, if there is a dispute between them, by a referee\(^4\). Whilst any dispute between the two local housing authorities remains, the first local housing authority remains under the duty to secure interim accommodation until the dispute is resolved\(^5\).

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 199A(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, paras 18.21–18.25.

3 HA 1996, s 199A(3) as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

4 HA 1996, s 198(5).

5 HA 1996, s 199A(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.221 If the applicant is notified of a decision that the conditions for referral are not met, then the first local housing authority continues to owe an interim duty to accommodate until either the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end or the applicant has been notified as to what other duty he or she might be owed\(^1\).

1 Whichever is the later event: HA 1996, s 199A(4)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.222 If, however, the applicant is notified that both local housing authorities agree (or it has been determined by arbitration) that the conditions for referral are met, then the interim duty to accommodate on the first local housing authority comes to an end. The second local housing authority is then subject to the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and also, provided that the second local housing authority also has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, to secure interim accommodation for the applicant¹.

¹ HA 1996, s 199A(5) and (6), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.223 If the applicant requests a review of the decision to refer, and asks to remain in accommodation secured by the first local housing authority while the review is considered, the first local housing authority has no further duty but does have a power to continue to secure interim accommodation pending review and, later, pending any appeal to the county court¹. The refusal to exercise that power cannot be subject to a statutory review or an appeal to the courts. Any challenge would have to be by way of judicial review.

16.224 Obviously, when the first local housing authority considers whether or not to exercise its discretion to secure interim accommodation in these circumstances, one of the factors that it will take into account is the fact that there is an existing duty on the second local housing authority to perform the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and (provided that the second local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need) to secure interim accommodation, meaning that the applicant has accommodation available for his or her occupation.

Referral of the applicant’s case at the stage when the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty would be owed 16.225 Whichever local housing authority an applicant applies to, if that local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance, and have a priority need, the duty to secure initial interim accommodation is triggered¹. Interim accommodation must be secured, irrespective of whether or not the applicant appears to have a local connection with the local housing authority². That duty continues while it carries out its inquiries.

¹ See 16.37–16.50. In the case of an application for homelessness assistance made within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer, the duty to secure interim accommodation applies whether or not there is reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need (HA 1996, s 188(1A), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018). See 16.47–16.50.

16.226 Once the HA 1996, s 189B(2)¹, relief duty has come to an end, if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant:

(1) is homeless;
(2) is eligible;
(3) has a priority need; and
(4) did not become homeless intentionally, it would normally be subject to the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty². But if it considers that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case to another local housing authority (in England, Wales or Scotland) are made out, it may notify the other local housing authority that it holds that opinion. The notifying local housing authority ("the first local housing authority") may, in such a case, notify the applicant that it has notified, or intends to notify, another local housing authority ("the second local housing authority") of its opinion. The notification cannot be given to the applicant until the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end.

As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.

HA 1996, s 193(2). Where the applicant is making an application for homelessness assistance within two years of the acceptance by him or her of a private rented sector offer, the main housing duty will apply whether or not the applicant has a priority need (HA 1996, s 193A(1)). See 16.94–16.112 for the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty and 16.191–16.199 for the special rules for applicants re-applying within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer.

As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

HA 1996, s 200(1A), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(10), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.227 The effect of these two notices is:

(a) to bring to an end the initial interim duty to accommodate; and

(b) to defer the performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty until the applicant has been notified whether or not the conditions for referral are met.

By the notification to the applicant under HA 1996, ss 184(4) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(3), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) and 200(1).

HA 1996, s 200(1).

16.228 HA 1996, Pt 7, therefore, creates a further interim duty on the first local housing authority so that it is required to continue to accommodate the applicant. That further interim duty, which has been triggered by a notice given to the applicant by the first local housing authority, ends only when the applicant receives a further notice from the first local housing authority. That further notice will contain the final decision that the conditions of referral are, or are not, met. That decision will have been reached either by agreement between the two local housing authorities or, if there is a dispute between them, by a referee. Whilst any dispute between the two local housing authorities remains, the first local housing authority remains under the duty to secure interim accommodation until the dispute is resolved.

As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

housing duty\textsuperscript{1} owed by the first local housing authority\textsuperscript{2}.

The second local housing authority is then subject to a duty to secure accommodation for the applicant under the HR 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty\textsuperscript{1}.

\subsection*{16.231 If the applicant requests a review of the decision to refer, and asks to remain in accommodation secured by the first local housing authority while the review is considered, the first local housing authority has no further duty but does have a power to continue to secure interim accommodation pending review and, later, pending any appeal to the county court\textsuperscript{1}. The refusal to exercise that power cannot be subject to a statutory review or an appeal to the courts. Any challenge would have to be by way of judicial review\textsuperscript{2}.

\subsection*{16.232 Obviously, when the first local housing authority considers whether or not to exercise its discretion to secure interim accommodation in these circumstances, one of the factors that it will take into account is the fact that there is an existing duty on the second local housing authority to secure accommodation and that therefore, if the applicant is willing to take it up, he or she will no longer be homeless\textsuperscript{1}.

\(^2\) HA 1996, ss 202(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See also 19.12–19.69.

\(^3\) HA 1996, s 188(3) as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 15.25–15.27. The exception is where the applicant was accommodated during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty, has refused a final accommodation offer or final Part 6 offer and has requested a review of the suitability of the offer. In those circumstances the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty is deemed not to come to an end, and provided the local housing authority continues to have reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need, the interim accommodation duty continues until notification of the review: HA 1996, s 188(2A) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), see 16.64–16.239.

16.234 That power can be exercised irrespective of the nature of the decision which is being reviewed (provided it is a decision which may be subject to statutory review) and regardless of whether the applicant has previously had any accommodation (interim or otherwise) secured for him or her by the local housing authority.

16.235 The local housing authority is not required automatically to consider the exercise of the power every time it receives a request for review. An applicant who wants interim accommodation, pending a decision on the review, should ask for it. There is no need for the request to be made in writing or on any particular form.

16.236 Once a request has been made, a local housing authority that refuses even to consider, or simply fails to consider, the exercise of its power would be acting unlawfully and may be vulnerable to a judicial review challenge\(^1\). Likewise, a local housing authority which decided never to exercise the discretionary power to accommodate pending review would be unlawfully fettering that discretion.

\(^1\) For challenges to a refusal to exercise the power, see 16.248–16.257.

16.237 Busy local housing authorities, receiving large numbers of requests for reviews, may receive almost as many requests for accommodation pending decisions on those reviews. Although each such application must be given individual consideration, local housing authorities may draw up and apply policies governing the circumstances when they will exercise their powers to secure such accommodation. Local housing authorities that adopt policies restricting the provision of discretionary interim accommodation pending review to ‘exceptional circumstances’ are not necessarily acting unlawfully. But any such policy must be flexible enough to ensure that individual consideration is given to the circumstances of each applicant requesting interim accommodation pending review\(^1\).

Powers to secure accommodation 16.240

16.238 Whether or not it might represent best practice, it is not unlawful for the decision-maker who made the original decision that is the subject of the review also to make the decision as to whether or not accommodation will be secured pending a statutory review¹.

The exception

16.239 The exception to the principle that accommodation pending review is discretionary is where the applicant requests a review under HA 1996, s 202(1)(h)¹ of the suitability of accommodation offered to him by way of a final accommodation offer² or final Pt 6 offer³. This is one of the ways in which the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁴, relief duty may come to an end⁵. In this scenario, the HA 1996, s 189B(2)⁶, relief duty will continue until the decision on review has been notified to the applicant⁷. In such cases, where the applicant has a priority need or the local housing authority has reason to believe he may have a priority need, the local housing authority will be required to continue to accommodate the applicant until he or she has been notified of that decision⁸.

The factors to be considered for the exercise of the power

16.240 When a local housing authority considers the individual circumstances of each applicant, it must always take into account:

• the strength of the applicant’s case on review;
• whether any new material, information or argument has become known to the local housing authority since the decision which is the subject of the review was made;
• the personal circumstances of the applicant and the consequences for him or her if accommodation is not secured; and
• any other relevant considerations¹.

16.241 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.241 The task of taking into account these various factors is often referred to as the ‘Mohammed balancing exercise’ (after the name of the case in which the factors were set out).\(^1\)

\(^1\) R v Camden London Borough Council ex p Mohammed (1998) 30 ACR 315, QBD.

16.242 Additional considerations arise if the applicant’s household includes children. In such cases, the duty on local authorities, including local housing authorities, to safeguard and promote the welfare of any children found at Children Act 2004, s 11(2) will be engaged. The Supreme Court, in Nzolameso v City of Westminster City Council\(^2\), held that, when a local housing authority is making a decision which involves an exercise of discretion, or an evaluation, the duty to promote and safeguard the children’s welfare, colloquially referred to as ‘the best interests duty’, should always be considered. The duty is a primary but not the only consideration. The decision-maker should identify the principal needs of the children, both individually and collectively, and have regard to the need to safeguard and promote their welfare when making any decision\(^3\). A local housing authority should be able to evidence the discharge of this duty by reference to contemporaneous records\(^4\) and explain any choices that it makes that affect the welfare of children in the household, preferably by reference to published policies setting out how it makes such decisions\(^5\). Where the local housing authority has decided not to secure accommodation pending review for an applicant whose household includes dependent children, or for an applicant who is aged 16 or 17, this will usually be in the context of the local housing authority having decided that the applicant is not eligible for assistance, or has become homeless intentionally. In those circumstances, the local housing authority should ask the applicant for consent to notify the children’s services department or authority.

See also Mohamoud v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council, Saleem v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2015] EWCA Civ 780, [2016] PTSR 289, CA. Children’s services have a general duty, under Children Act 1989, s 17, to safeguard and promote the welfare of children within their area who are in need. It is well-established that if a child is in need of accommodation, children’s services could provide services to meet that need, including arranging for the child to be accommodated along with his or her parents. 16- and 17-year-olds who are homeless are likely to be considered ‘children in need’ who appear to require accommodation and accommodation should be provided for them by children’s services under the Children Act 1989, s 20. Children’s services’ powers and duties are discussed further at Chapter 20.

16.243 Additional considerations will also apply in cases where there is a ‘real possibility’ that the applicant, or a member of his household, has a disability within the meaning of Equality Act 2010, s 6. In such cases the public sector equality duty under Equality Act 2010, s 149 will be engaged. In one case, a local housing authority’s refusal to secure accommodation pending review was held to be unlawful, in part, because the decision appeared ‘to be the work of someone who is not carrying out the conscientious requirements under the

Public sector equality duty referred to by Lord Neuberger in the Hotak decision and it can properly be read as simply paying lip service to the points put\(^2\). The public sector equality duty can also be engaged on other grounds, as well as disability, such as age, race, or sex\(^3\).

16.244 Where a local housing authority has been provided with new information (in the sense that it was not available when the decision which is the subject of the review was made), the officer deciding on the request for interim accommodation pending review should consider the extent to which that material affects the strength of the applicant’s case on review\(^1\). In deciding whether to exercise its power to secure interim accommodation pending review, a local housing authority is also entitled to take into account the demands on its resources involved in securing interim accommodation, the scarcity of accommodation and the demand for accommodation from other homeless applicants (provided that it does also consider the applicant’s individual circumstances)\(^2\).

\(^1\) R v Newham London Borough Council ex p Lumley (2001) 33 ACR 11, QBD.

16.245 In R (Paul-Coker) v Southwark London Borough Council\(^3\), the local housing authority had decided that the applicant was not eligible because she was not habitually resident in the UK. She requested interim accommodation pending a review and her solicitors made a number of representations, both in relation to her personal circumstances and by providing new information that could have an effect on the review decision. The Administrative Court held that ‘there was a complete absence of any explanation or reasoning in the decision letter dealing with these various important aspects of the case’ and that the local housing authority, whilst referring to the Mohammed balancing exercise, had actually only paid ‘lip-service’ to it\(^4\). This decision reminds local housing authorities that ‘lip-service’ is not good enough. They must actually consider the representations made in support of the request for interim accommodation pending review and consider them in relation to the Mohammed factors, and any other factors that may arise for consideration.

\(^2\) See 11.130–11.136.

16.246 In another case, the local housing authority’s decision not to secure accommodation pending review had relied on documentation that had not been mentioned in the HA 1996, s 184, decision letter. The judge decided that there was an arguable case that relying on new information, and not giving the applicant an opportunity to comment on it, was an error of law.

Circumstances when power to secure accommodation pending review is restricted

16.247 The benefit of the power to secure interim accommodation pending a statutory review, and pending an appeal to the county court, is not available to:

- nationals of other European Economic Area (EEA) states;
- refugees given refugee status by other states (including EEA states);
- former asylum-seekers who have failed to co-operate with removal directions;
- people who are unlawfully present in the UK; and
- failed asylum-seekers with dependent children,

unless the local housing authority decides that securing accommodation is necessary in order to prevent a breach of the applicant’s rights under the European Convention on Human Rights or under European Union law. If interim accommodation is requested for former asylum-seekers who have failed to co-operate with removal directions, those who are unlawfully present in the UK, or for certain failed asylum-seekers with dependent children, local housing authorities are required to inform the Home Office.

See also R (Mohammed) v Harrow London Borough Council [2005] EWHC 3194 (Admin), [2006] HLR 18, Admin Ct, where the local housing authority’s decision that accommodation was not necessary to avoid a breach of European Union rights, as the claimant was not a worker or work-seeker and therefore not exercising those rights, contained no error of law. Note that these categories are due to be amended by Immigration Act 2016, Sch 12, para 9. At the time of writing it is not known when these amendments will come into force.

Challenges to refusal to exercise power to secure interim accommodation pending review

16.248 Where a local housing authority has:

- failed to consider a request for interim accommodation pending review;
- refused to secure interim accommodation pending a review;
- decided to secure interim accommodation for a limited period only; or
- decided to withdraw interim accommodation that had been secured pending the review, before the notification of the review decision, the appropriate avenue for the applicant to challenge any of these decisions is to bring a judicial review claim. In order to succeed, the applicant must show that the local housing authority’s decision (or failure to make one) was wrong in law.

16.249 Challenges to local housing authorities’ decisions not to exercise a discretionary power are generally much more difficult for the applicant than bringing a claim for breach of statutory duty. The courts can be particularly reluctant to intervene where Parliament has left local housing authorities free of duties and enjoying a discretion to exercise (or not exercise) powers.

16.250 The principles that a local housing authority must consider when deciding whether or not to secure interim accommodation pending review are set out at 16.240–16.246.

16.251 On applying for permission to bring a claim by way of judicial review, the applicant can also apply for an interim injunction requiring the local housing authority to secure accommodation pending the determination of the judicial review proceedings. The test that the Administrative Court will apply in considering whether or not to make an interim injunction is two-fold:

(1) whether the applicant has a strong prima facie case; and
(2) the likely consequences to each party of the granting or withholding of interim relief and the wider public interest.

The onus is on the applicant to demonstrate that he or she has a strong prima facie case, where he or she is applying for an interim injunction.

16.252 In cases of emergency, where the applicant is or is about to be street homeless, an application for an interim injunction can be made out of hours and over the telephone to a duty Administrative Court judge. In R (Lauer) v Restormel Borough Council, the applicant’s legal representatives were reminded that applications in these circumstances are exceptional and of the importance of their duties:

• to make full and frank disclosure of all the relevant documents to the judge; and
• to ensure that there has been compliance with the pre-action protocol in judicial review claims and service on the local housing authority’s legal department.

Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

Legal representatives should ensure that the Administrative Court has been provided with all the information required, as set out in the prescribed forms. In particular, reasons for any urgency must be explained, along with the time when the need for urgent consideration was first appreciated and the efforts made to notify the defendant. The consequences for legal representatives of failing to comply with those obligations can be severe.

1 R (Hamid) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2012] EWHC 3070 (Admin), Admin Ct.

In practice, if the Administrative Court judge considers that the claim for judicial review is a strong prima facie case, the judge is also likely to make an interim injunction, since otherwise the applicant would be homeless. However, the consequences of making the interim order against the local housing authority, and its effect on other applicants should also be considered.

1 De Falco v Crawley Borough Council [1980] QB 460, CA per Lord Bridge at 481.

Many judicial review claims against refusals to secure interim accommodation are disposed of at the time of, or shortly after, consideration of whether or not permission should be granted to bring the claim. If permission is refused, unless there is to be an appeal, that is the end of the matter for the applicant. If permission is granted, and an interim injunction made requiring the local housing authority to accommodate the applicant until the judicial review claim has been determined, many local housing authorities will then agree to accommodate pending review. Even if there is no agreement, it is not unusual for the review decision to be notified to the applicant before the judicial review claim has been finally heard, and so the claim for judicial review becomes academic.

Permission is granted where there is a reasonably arguable case. An interim mandatory injunction requires the claimant to show that he or she has a strong prima facie case. The fact that permission has been granted, whilst not determinative, is certainly a relevant factor when the court considers whether an interim injunction should continue (R (Omatoyo) v City of Westminster Council [2006] EWHC 2572 (Admin), (2006) December Legal Action, p 21, Admin Ct).

If the judicial review claim does proceed to a full hearing, the claim might be dismissed (if there is no error of law). If the claim succeeds, and the Administrative Court decides that the local housing authority did make an error of law in one or more of its decisions, it can set the decision aside (a ‘quashing order’). The local housing authority will either have to reconsider its decision or the Administrative Court may make a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to secure accommodation until the review decision has been notified to the applicant.

The case of R (Paul-Coker) v Southwark London Borough Council is an example of the Administrative Court deciding that a local housing authority, when it referred to the criteria involved in the Mohammed balancing-exercise, was in fact paying ‘lip-service’ to them. The refusal to exercise the power to secure accommodation in that case was unlawful.

Powers to secure accommodation 16.260

Accommodation pending appeal

Appeals to the county court

16.258 Review decisions (and original decisions which can be subject to a statutory review) can be appealed to the county court1. The fact that an applicant might lodge or has lodged an appeal does not impose a duty on the local housing authority to accommodate the applicant pending the hearing of that appeal. Sadly, in many areas, appeals cannot be heard for some weeks or months after they are lodged2.

2 HA 1996, s 204(4) as amended by HRA 2017, ss 4(6) and 5(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, paras 15.28–15.32.

16.259 However, there is a discretionary power available for the local housing authority to secure interim accommodation at two stages:

(1) during the 21-day period between notification of the review decision and the normal deadline for issue of a county court appeal1; and/or
(2) pending the determination of the appeal itself, once made2.

1 HA 1996, s 204(4)(a).
2 HA 1996, s 204(4)(b).

16.260 The power can only be used where the local housing authority has already1 owed one of the following duties to the applicant:

• the duty to secure interim accommodation2;
• the HA 1996, s 190(2), short-term accommodation duty owed to an applicant who has a priority need but has been found to have become homeless intentionally3;
• the duty to secure accommodation pending referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)4, relief duty, under the ‘conditions for referral’ provisions5; or
• the duty to secure accommodation pending referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2)6, main housing duty, under the ‘conditions for referral’ provisions7.

Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.260 The common thread running through the list is that the applicant either has, or the local housing authority initially had reason to believe that he or she might have, a priority need. Where the local housing authority has not been subject to any of those duties, there is no power under HA 1996, Pt 7, for a local housing authority to secure interim accommodation pending appeal. Where the power is available, an applicant may invite the local housing authority to exercise it while an appeal is being considered, prepared, or later, once the appeal has been lodged.

16.261 The power in HA 1996, s 204(4), can also be exercised by the local housing authority to continue to secure accommodation in the event of an appeal from the decision of a county court judge to the Court of Appeal, or further, to the Supreme Court. When the local housing authority is deciding whether to exercise its power to secure accommodation pending determination of an appeal to the Court of Appeal, it must again direct itself in accordance with the same principles discussed at 16.242–16.246. When considering whether or not to secure interim accommodation, the local housing authority is entitled to take into account the prospects of the Court of Appeal granting permission to bring a second appeal1, and, if permission was granted, the applicant’s prospects of success on appeal2.

Onward appeals

16.262 When considering whether or not to exercise a power to accommodate pending appeal to the county court, a local housing authority should carry out the same balancing exercise as it is required to undertake when considering a request for interim accommodation pending review. This is discussed in detail at 16.242–16.246. In overview, it should consider all the relevant circumstances, and any new information, material or argument. It is required to consider the applicant’s grounds of appeal, as part of its consideration of the merits of the case, but would not normally be expected to refer to any of the grounds of appeal in its decision letter, unless there is some important and striking ground which requires specific comment1. In addition, it will need to consider the applicant’s personal and household circumstances, the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of any children involved, the public sector equality duty under Equality Act 2010, s 149 (if applicable) along with the terms of any general policy it has adopted governing its discretion (if any), and the resources available2.

2 English Code, paras 15.28–15.32. For the possibility of challenging a refusal to accommodate pending appeal, see 16.266–16.277 and 19.280–19.292.
Powers to secure accommodation 16.266

16.264 If the local housing authority refuses to secure interim accommodation, and the HA 1996, s 204(1) appeal has been finally determined, at least in the county court, then the right to appeal against the refusal to secure interim accommodation in HA 1996, s 204A(1) is not available1. The Court of Appeal does not have any inherent power to order that the local housing authority secure accommodation pending the determination of the appeal to the Court of Appeal (or the Supreme Court). Accordingly, any challenge to the local housing authority’s refusal to secure interim accommodation pending determination of an appeal to the Court of Appeal, or subsequently to the Supreme Court, must be brought by judicial review2.

1 Nor is it available where the HA 1996, s 204 appeal is against an original decision (HA 1996, s 204(1)(b)). In those circumstances, a dissatisfied applicant should challenge any refusal to secure accommodation by way of judicial review: Davis v Watford Borough Council [2018] EWCA Civ 529, CA, see 19.281.

Circumstances when power to secure accommodation pending appeal is restricted

16.265 This power to secure interim accommodation pending appeal to the county court is not available to:

- nationals of other EEA states;
- refugees given refugee status by other EEA states;
- former asylum-seekers who have failed to co-operate with removal directions;
- people who are unlawfully present in the UK; and
- failed asylum-seekers with dependent children,

unless the local housing authority considers it necessary in order to prevent a breach of rights under the European Convention on Human Rights or European Union law1.

1 Nationality Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3, paras 1 and 3; see 16.47–16.48, 20.35–20.36 and 20.50–20.57, and English Code, para 15.24. Note that these categories are due to be amended by Immigration Act 2016, Sch 12, para 9. At the time of writing it is not known when these amendments will come into force. If accommodation is requested by a former asylum-seeker who has failed to co-operate with removal directions, anyone unlawfully present in the UK or a failed asylum-seeker with dependent children, the local housing authority is under an obligation to inform the Home Office (Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, Sch 3, para 14; English Code, para 15.24). In practice, there are very few people who might be eligible who would also fall within one of those three categories (see Chapter 11).

Challenges to refusal to exercise a power to secure interim accommodation pending appeal

16.266 If the local housing authority refuses to secure interim accommodation pending appeal (or if it decides to secure interim accommodation for a limited period only), there is no right to a statutory review of that decision. Instead, the applicant has the right to appeal against that refusal. The appeal lies to the county court on a point of law1. To distinguish this appeal from the main or substantive appeal (usually brought against the review decision of the local housing authority) it is described in the paragraphs that follow as the
16.266 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

‘accommodation appeal’. However, where the HA 1996, s 204 appeal is against an original decision under HA 1996, s 204(1)(b), the HA 1996, s 204A appeal route is not available. In those circumstances, a dissatisfied applicant should challenge any refusal to secure accommodation by way of judicial review\(^1\).

2 Davis v Watford Borough Council [2018] EWCA Civ 529, CA, see 19.281.

16.267 The principles that a local housing authority must consider when deciding whether or not to secure interim accommodation pending appeal are set out at 16.242–16.246.

16.268 The accommodation appeal may be against:

1. the refusal to accommodate at all pending appeal;
2. a decision to exercise the power to accommodate only for a limited period; or
3. a decision to withdraw interim accommodation that had been secured pending appeal\(^1\).

1 HA 1996, s 204A(2).

16.269 There is no appeal on the facts. The applicant must show that the local housing authority’s refusal, decision, or withdrawal was wrong in law. The court will adopt the principles applied generally in judicial review claims when it considers the lawfulness of the local housing authority’s decision-making\(^1\).

16.270 Prior to 30 September 2002, challenges to refusals to secure accommodation pending appeal were brought by way of judicial review\(^1\). The Court of Appeal had held that if the guidance given in R v Camden London Borough Council ex p Mohammed\(^2\) had been followed by a local housing authority, when considering whether or not to secure interim accommodation pending appeal, challenges to the exercise of that discretion were likely to be futile, and applications for judicial review should only be brought in exceptional cases. The appropriate step for an applicant without accommodation was to seek to expedite the hearing of his or her substantive appeal, rather than challenge the refusal to accommodate pending appeal\(^1\).

16.271 The Court of Appeal has taken the same approach now that challenges to refusals are brought by way of a county court appeal rather than by way of judicial review\(^1\). If the local housing authority has properly directed itself in accordance with the Mohammed principles\(^2\), the court will not intervene. The county court hearing an accommodation appeal should not embark on a consideration of the merits of the main or substantive appeal\(^1\).

Powers to secure accommodation 16.274

an appeal in the County Court under HA 1996, s 204(1)(b), having requested a review but not been notified of the decision on review (see 16.240–16.247), and has sought and been refused interim accommodation pending the determination of that appeal (HA 1996, s 204(4), as amended by HRA 2017, ss 4(6) and 5(11) for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018), the appropriate course of action is for the applicant to challenge the refusal of interim accommodation by way of judicial review: Davis v Watford Borough Council [2018] EWCA Civ 529, CA.

3 For a recent example, see Rother District Council v Freeman-Roach [2018] EWCA Civ 368, CA per Rose J at [41]–[44].

16.273 The decision in *Francis v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council*¹, begs the question as to what ‘properly directed itself’ means. Certainly, where a local housing authority fails to consider, at all, a request for accommodation pending appeal, it cannot be said to have properly considered the right factors, and must therefore have erred in law. Conversely, where a local housing authority has set out the Mohammed factors and carefully considered each of those, along with any other relevant factors and points raised by the applicant, then the decision is unlikely to be wrong in law. In practice, the decision in Francis means that accommodation appeals may now be rarely brought, but in the rare cases in which they may justifiably be brought they may well succeed.²

16.273 If the accommodation appeal succeeds, the court may quash the decision appealed against. At that point, the court may either refer the matter back to the local housing authority for re-consideration of the request for accommodation pending appeal, or it may make an order requiring the local housing authority to secure interim accommodation. It can only make the latter order if it is satisfied that:

‘... failure to exercise the section 204(4) power in accordance with the order would substantially prejudice the applicant’s ability to pursue the main appeal’.

1 HA 1996, s 204A(6).

16.274 This is a strikingly different test from that governing the local housing authority’s own exercise of discretion. The determinative factor for the court can only be the ability of the applicant to pursue his or her main or substantive appeal with or without the provision of accommodation. While an applicant’s other personal circumstances may be relevant, they cannot be determinative.³

1 For example, in Quadir v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council (2011), (2012) April Legal Action, p 47, Central London Civil Justice Centre, the appeal against the refusal to secure accommodation pending appeal was successful, and the local housing authority’s refusal was quashed by the judge. However, the judge did not consider that the strict test in HA 1996, s 204A(6) was satisfied and did not make an order requiring the local housing authority to secure interim accommodation.

16.275 An order to accommodate made by the court cannot extend beyond the conclusion of the main appeal. In other words, the county court has no jurisdiction to order the provision of accommodation pending any further appeal beyond the county court¹.

16.276 Accommodation appeals, like main or substantive appeals, can only be heard by a circuit judge or recorder, not by a district judge¹. Applications for interim orders, requiring the provision of accommodation pending determination of the accommodation appeal, can be made before the full accommodation appeal is heard. A judge hearing an interlocutory application will have to decide:

(1) whether there is an arguable error of law in the decision being appealed against; and, if so,

(2) whether, arguably, the ability of the applicant to pursue his or her main appeal would be substantially prejudiced if accommodation were not secured.

16.277 An interim order can only be made if the judge takes the view that the applicant has a strong prima facie case in respect of quashing the refusal to accommodate and in obtaining an order requiring the local housing authority to secure accommodation pending the determination of the HA 1996, s 204 appeal¹.

Power to secure accommodation under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention or HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duties

16.278 The HA 1996, s 195(2)¹, prevention duty and the HA 1996, s 189B(2)², relief duty will be owed to applicants who are eligible for assistance and who are, respectively, either threatened with homelessness or are homeless. As already discussed¹, these duties do not require the local housing authority to secure accommodation for the applicant; the duty in each case is to help the applicant secure his or her accommodation. However, HA 1996, 205(3)³, makes it clear that the local housing authority has the power to secure that accommodation is available in the performance of these functions if it takes the view that this is an appropriate course.

¹ As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.138–15.195.

Additional duties and powers 16.281

3 See 15.22–15.27.
4 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 6, for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See English Code, paras 15.33–15.35.

16.279 The Code advises that this power provides more flexibility for local housing authorities to pursue appropriate housing options for those who are owed either of these duties. It suggests that local housing authorities might use the power to deliver accommodation services for groups that are at higher risk of homelessness, for example young people with low incomes. The power might also be used to provide additional help to those least able to secure accommodation directly from a private landlord, such as people with an offending history or with a mental health problem.

There is no right to request a review of any decision not to exercise this power in the applicant’s favour. Consequently, any challenge would have to be by judicial review, or by internal complaint and subsequently to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman.

ADDITIONAL DUTIES AND POWERS

Duties to applicants whose household includes a person under 18

16.280 Special provision is made in HA 1996, Pt 7 for situations in which it appears to a local housing authority that it will be unlikely to owe a duty to a family with dependent children. The objective is to ensure that in those cases, where HA 1996, Pt 7, will not provide the necessary safety net, the alternative safety net of provision of accommodation for children (under the Children Act 1989) is ready to be used by the time the family is facing imminent homelessness.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.281 Where the applicant’s household includes a person under the age of 18, and the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant:

(1) may not be eligible for assistance; or
(2) may have become homeless intentionally, the local housing authority must ask the applicant to consent to the referral of the essential facts of his or her case to the local children’s services department or authority. The local housing authority should not wait until its actual decision is made on the application under HA 1996, Pt 7, but must obtain consent when it simply has reason to believe that it may not be able to help the applicant, which will usually be almost immediately after the application for homelessness assistance has been made.

1 In this context, the word ‘household’ is used to mean those persons who normally reside with the applicant as a member of his or her family, and any other persons who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant; see HA 1996, s 176 and 10.21–10.32.

2 HA 1996, s 213A(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 15.12.

3 HA 1996, s 213A(2).

4 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

16.282 This obligation is not triggered where the application is received from a lone applicant who is under 18, because such cases are covered by different liaison arrangements1.

16.283 Once the consent has been given, the essential facts and details of the application and of the subsequent HA 1996, Pt 7 decision must be communicated to the children’s services authority2. This early notification obligation applies to unitary authorities (thus requiring notification between departments) as well as to separate local housing authorities and children’s services authorities3. Children’s services should be alerted as quickly as possible, so as to have an opportunity to consider the case and plan their response well before the local housing authority has concluded its inquiries and reached any negative HA 1996, Pt 7 decision. The English Code advises that local housing authorities should consider having arrangements in place to manage the transition in responsibilities, so that there is no break in provision of accommodation4.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 213A(1) and (2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See also English Code, chapter 13 for guidance.

3 HA 1996, s 213A(3).

4 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.

5 English Code, para 15.12.

16.284 If the applicant does not give his or her consent, the local housing authority may still disclose information about an application to the children’s services department if it has reason to believe that a child is, or may be, at risk of significant harm1.

1 HA 1996, s 213A(4). See also English Code, para 13.7.

16.285 HA 1996, Pt 7, contains a provision designed to ensure that the local housing authority cannot simply wash its hands of the applicant and pass responsibility to children’s services. In the case of an applicant whose household includes a person under 18 and whom the local housing authority has decided:
Additional duties and powers 16.288

- is ineligible for assistance; or
- has become homeless intentionally;

the children’s services authority can call upon the local housing authority to provide such advice and assistance as is reasonable in the circumstances to help with the exercise of any children’s services functions under Pt 3 of the Children Act 1989. In this way it is intended that there should be a seamless scheme of social welfare provision for the most vulnerable families. In a Parliamentary debate initiated by a former housing minister, the then government spelt out its understanding that the scheme should work in this way.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 213A(5) and (6), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See also Children Act 1989, s 27, where a local authority can request the help of a local housing authority in the exercise of their functions. In R (M) v Islington London Borough Council [2016] EWCA Civ 1028, [2016] HLR 19, Admin Ct, the Administrative Court held that this provision did not apply directly between departments in a unitary authority, although it was reasonable to assume that departments within a unitary authority were expected to co-operate.

16.286 Any disagreement between the local housing authority and the children’s services authority should be resolved by discussion and negotiation and not by litigation. Where a local housing authority had placed an applicant and his household in a different district, and the accommodation was due to come to an end as a result of the local housing authority being satisfied that the applicant had become homeless intentionally, the Administrative Court found that there was a duty on both local authorities to assess the children’s needs. The duty lay on the first local authority’s children’s services department because, following a notification under HA 1996, s 213A, it had commenced, but not completed, an assessment of needs under Children Act 1989, s 17. The duty also lay on the second local housing authority’s children’s services’ department because it had been wrong to conclude that the children, who were facing eviction from the temporary accommodation, were not in need.

16.287 The assistance that the applicant, or, more particularly, the applicant’s children, can expect to receive from children’s services under the Children Act 1989 is outlined in Chapter 20.

Duties and powers to protect the applicant’s property

Introduction

16.288 The provisions of HA 1996, Pt 7, recognise that a safety net scheme of assistance for the homeless will not be comprehensive if all it achieves is shelter for the people involved. Most applicants who are actually homeless or threatened with homelessness will also have at least a few personal possessions that need safeguarding, ranging from a single bag containing a change of clothes at one extreme to a full house of furniture, personal possessions and pets at the other. HA 1996, Pt 7\(^2\), imposes duties, and provides powers, for the safeguarding of these possessions\(^3\).

When duties are owed

16.289 A duty is owed to certain applicants\(^1\) where the local housing authority has reason to believe that:

1. there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, any of the applicant’s personal property;
2. the danger arises because the applicant is unable to protect or deal with that property; and
3. no other suitable arrangements have been or are being made\(^2\).

\(^1\) Identified at HA 1996, s 211(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(12), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.291.

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 211(1). See English Code, para 20.2.

16.290 ‘Danger’ in this context means a genuine or real danger. That is, something more than a possible danger, a slight risk or remote possibility of injury. It denotes a ‘likelihood of harm’\(^1\). The duty will not therefore be triggered simply because property was left behind in a secure locked flat which was regularly visited by the applicant or by others on his or her behalf, giving rise to no greater risk of burglary than that experienced by a householder who is temporarily away from home\(^2\). Of course, the situation would be entirely different if the flat were insecure with ‘a front door opened and banging in the wind’, or the property was ‘left in the gutter’ after an eviction\(^3\).

\(^3\) Deadman v Southwark London Borough Council (2001) 33 HLR 75, CA at [25] per Ward LJ.

16.291 If the local housing authority is or has been subject to:

1. the HA 1996, s 188\(^1\) interim duty to accommodate;
2. the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\), relief duty;
3. the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^3\), prevention duty;
4. the HA 1996, s 190(2) short-term accommodation duty\(^4\);
5. the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty\(^5\); or
6. any of the accommodation duties owed towards applicants where the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty is being considered for referral\(^6\), it owes an applicant the duty to take reasonable steps to prevent the loss of property or prevent or mitigate any damage to it\(^7\).

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(4), for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 16.37–16.50.
Additional duties and powers 16.295

16.292 This list contains some surprising omissions. It does not include the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate applicants who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. Nor does it include the duty to accommodate an applicant where the local housing authority is considering the referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty. However, in each of those cases, the local housing authority is likely to have owed the HA 1996, s 188(1), interim accommodation duty. Even if no prescribed duty is or was owed to an applicant, the local housing authority has a power to take any steps it considers reasonable in order to protect personal property.

16.293 The local housing authority should therefore start by asking and answering the following questions:

(1) Is there a danger of loss or damage?
(2) Is that because the applicant is unable to protect or deal with his or her possessions?
(3) Is that because no other suitable arrangements have been made or are being made?

16.294 The local housing authority is only under the duty imposed by HA 1996, Pt 7, if all of the questions are answered positively.

16.295 If the applicant seeks to challenge a local housing authority’s decision that all or any of the questions are to be answered ‘NO’, the only challenge would lie in a claim by judicial review on the basis that the local housing authority’s decision was wrong in law.

1 Deadman v Southwark London Borough Council (2001) 33 HLR 75, CA. There is no right to request a statutory review in respect of any of the functions of the local housing authority that relate to the protection of possessions.
16.296 Accommodation – Duties/Powers on Local Housing in England

16.296 If the answer to all three questions is ‘Yes’, then the next question for the local housing authority is whether it owes or has owed the applicant any of the duties identified at 16.291. If it has done, even if that duty has since ended, it remains under a duty to take reasonable steps to prevent any loss of, or damage to, the property. If the local housing authority never owed the applicant any of those duties, it may still choose to take reasonable steps to prevent loss or damage.

The extent of the duties to prevent loss or damage

16.297 The local housing authority can deal with the personal property in any way that is reasonably necessary in order to prevent or mitigate loss or damage to it. This includes storing the property itself, or arranging for it to be stored by some other person. If the applicant’s previous home is still available, the local housing authority may be able to arrange for the personal property to remain there if it can be adequately protected.

1 HA 1996, s 212(1).
2 English Code, para 20.9.

16.298 The local housing authority has the right to impose conditions before it will take any steps to deal with personal property. These conditions can include levying reasonable charges and specifying in what circumstances the local housing authority may dispose of the property (usually upon reasonable notice to the applicant or if the applicant loses touch with the local housing authority and cannot be traced).

1 HA 1996, s 211(4)(a) and English Code, para 20.10. See 16.22–16.27 for a discussion of reasonable charges for accommodation.

16.299 In order to perform the duty and protect the property, the local housing authority is entitled to enter the applicant’s usual or last place of residence at all reasonable times.

1 HA 1996, s 212(1)(a).

Which possessions must be protected?

16.300 The powers and duties are concerned with the ‘personal property’ of the applicant. This is enlarged by HA 1996, Pt 7 to embrace the ‘personal property of any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him’. That terminology echoes wording used elsewhere in HA 1996, Pt 7. It is wide enough to include those with whom an applicant resides and others with whom an applicant proposes to reside.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 211(5).
3 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018. See 10.21–10.32.

16.301 The term ‘personal property’ is not defined in HA 1996, Pt 7. Given the wide variety of ways in which individuals accumulate possessions, the range will be enormous. In R v Chiltern District Council ex p Roberts, the applicants were travelling showmen and the question arose as to whether their fairground equipment constituted their ‘personal property’. Although, in the event, the case did not turn on the point, the judge said of ‘personal property’:

‘I am inclined to the view that it would not extend to equipment used by an applicant in his business, at any rate where the business is conducted other than at the relevant accommodation . . . The adjective “personal” is used to distinguish not only from real property, but from property used for commercial purposes, particularly if used elsewhere.’

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 (1990) 23 HLR 387, QBD.
3 R v Chiltern District Council ex p Roberts (1990) 23 HLR 387, QBD, at 396, per Pill J.

16.302 Nowadays, local housing authorities will want to avoid too restrictive a definition of personal property. Otherwise, they may run the risk of breaching the obligation on public authorities to take positive measures to prevent individuals losing their possessions contrary to the Human Rights Act, Sch 1, Art 1, First Protocol.

16.303 The most controversial issues in day-to-day practice arise where the personal possessions include pets. No local housing authority would deny that a goldfish bowl was ‘personal property’—so, no less, the goldfish inside it. The safeguard for a local housing authority faced with a menagerie of cats, dogs and other pets is the power to impose, in advance, a condition that the applicant pays a reasonable charge for the action it takes. Obviously, for applicants on a low income, the amount that is ‘a reasonable charge’ for them to pay may not meet the full cost to the local housing authority. But even the poorest applicant will have been paying something to feed the pets and so could be expected to pay a weekly charge equivalent to that amount so as to contribute to kennelling or other fees. Local housing authorities troubled by the need to arrange kennelling for a few dogs should sympathise with Harlow District Council, which faced the prospect of dealing with a homeless applicant with 56 cats.

The ending of the duties

16.304 In most cases, the duty to protect possessions will end at the same time as the most common form of the termination of several of the duties, ie with the applicant’s move to a longer-term home. There will usually be a notification that a duty has come to an end. But this is not necessarily so. In one case, the main housing duty ended by the applicant becoming homeless intentionally from his accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7. The duty to protect his possessions did not cease, and the local housing authority which had wrongly disposed of his personal possessions later agreed to pay £6,000.

compensation and waive its storage charges.1

2 Complaint against Sutton London Borough Council, 03/B/6452, 9 December 2004, (2005) April Legal Action, p 30; see also Complaint against Bournemouth Borough Council, 14 20 077, 16 December 2015 (2016) June Legal Action, p 42, where the decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty had come to an end because of the applicant's refusal of accommodation was defective and the local housing authority had been wrong to withdraw storage arrangements.

16.305 If the applicant requests that his or her property is moved to a particular address (whether it is the applicant's new long-term home or anywhere else), and the local housing authority agrees, the duty will have ended once the property has been moved. The authority must inform the applicant that this will be the case before it agrees to move the property.1

1 HA 1996, s 212(2); English Code, para 20.11.

16.306 Otherwise, the duty ceases if the local housing authority no longer has reason to believe that there is a threat of loss of, or damage to, the applicant's property. For example, there may have been a change of circumstances in that the applicant has found accommodation or has become able to afford to pay private storage charges.

16.307 Once the duty has ended, the local housing authority retains a power to continue to store any property previously in storage, upon the same or modified conditions.1

1 HA 1996, s 212(3); English Code, para 20.11.

16.308 If the local housing authority is no longer under the duty, and/or no longer intends to exercise the power to store the property, it must notify the applicant of that fact. The notification must include the reasons for the decision that the duty no longer applies.1

1 HA 1996, s 212(4); English Code, para 20.12.

16.309 Once the local housing authority has accepted a duty, then it is under a private law obligation to the applicant as bailee of his or her goods until the obligation is discharged and the goods are collected.1 If property is damaged or destroyed, the applicant would be entitled to bring a private law action for damages for breach of that duty, conversion and/or trespass to goods. The local housing authority may have a defence available if it can show that it took all reasonable steps to prevent the loss or damage, or if the loss or damage was not reasonably foreseeable.

17.1 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

HOUSING (WALES) ACT 2014, PT 2

17.1 The Housing (Wales) Act 2014 (H(W)A 2014), Pt 2, came into force on 27 April 2015, with the exception of H(W)A 2014, ss 75(3) and 78. Anyone who applied to a local housing authority in Wales for accommodation or for help in retaining or obtaining accommodation on or after 27 April 2015 is assessed under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Applicants whose applications for homelessness assistance were made to a local housing authority in Wales before 27 April 2015 continue to be dealt with under Housing Act 1996, Pt 7 (HA 1996, Pt 7).

1 Housing (Wales) Act (Commencement No 3 and Transitory Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2015, SI 2015/1272 (W 88), see the CD Rom with this book.

17.2 H(W)A 2014, s 75(3), which requires local housing authorities to secure accommodation for some applicants who have a priority need, whether or not they have become homeless intentionally, will not be brought into force until 2019. H(W)A 2014, s 78, which requires a local housing authority to make a decision as to whether or not it will have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test came into force on 1 July 2015.

Structure of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2

17.3 H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is clearly structured and written in plain language. Each section that sets out a duty is followed by a section containing the circumstances in which that duty can come to an end. The duties are as follows:

- general duty to provide information, advice and assistance in accessing help: H(W)A 2014, s 60;
- duty to carry out an assessment of a person’s case: H(W)A 2014, s 62(1);
- prevention duty to help to prevent an applicant from becoming homeless: H(W)A 2014, s 66(1);

17.4 After giving an initial overview of the approach to homelessness contained in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, this chapter deals first with the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty owed to applications who are threatened with homelessness, and the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty owed to applicants who are homeless. It then deals with the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty. We then consider the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty for applicants who have a priority need and (if appropriate) have not become homeless intentionally and the H(W)A 2014, s 82, duties towards applicants who are referred to other local housing authorities. We then review the other circumstances that can cause any of the duties to come to an end at H(W)A 2014, s 95, finally we consider the H(W)A 2014, ss 93–94, duties to protect property, the H(W)A 2014, s 95, duty on different authorities and departments to co-operate, and the H(W)A 2014, s 96, duty to co-operate in certain cases involving children. Finally, the chapter reviews the other circumstances that can cause any of the duties to come to an end at H(W)A 2014, s 79.

17.5 Given that none of the duties described in this chapter can be owed to applicants in respect of whom the local housing authority is satisfied are not eligible for help, reference in this chapter to ‘applicants’ means applicants who are eligible.

The Welsh approach to dealing with homelessness

17.6 When it came into force on 27 April 2015, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, contained a new approach towards homelessness duties. The thinking derived from two policy initiatives in the area of homelessness adopted by successive UK governments since 2002: early assistance to prevent homelessness and use of the private rented sector. The focus shifted away from the concept that local housing authorities should provide accommodation themselves, to the view that local housing authorities should assist people in finding and keeping their own accommodation, in the public or private rented sectors. The local housing authority became more of an enabler helping homeless people, than a provider of housing. Much of the thinking behind H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, has now been implemented for local housing authorities in England in the amendments to
17.6 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

17.7 The Welsh Government published statistics for 1 April 2016 to 31 March 2017. During that year, 62% of applicants who were owed the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty had been helped to retain accommodation, or find alternative accommodation available for at least six months. Prevention had not helped 18% of applicants owed the duty and they had become homeless. The remaining applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty had either withdrawn their applications (11%), been found not to have co-operated (5%) or had refused offers (3%). Of the applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty, 41% had been helped to find accommodation that was likely to last for six months, 37% remained homeless at the end of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty and just over half of those cases were then accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty. The remaining applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty had either withdrawn their applications (13%), been found not to have co-operated (6%) or had refused offers (2%).

17.8 The implementation of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, has been evaluated by both the Welsh Government and by Crisis. Both reports have been broadly positive. Local housing authorities and most service users felt that applicants could be assisted to find alternative accommodation by use of the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention and H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duties. Crisis commented that the new approach has had an array of positive impacts, including re-orientating the culture of local housing authorities towards a more preventative, person-centred and outcome-focused approach and providing a much better service to single homeless people in particular. It expressed concern about the cases which fall out of the system, and particularly about those applicants who were found not to have co-operated.

Prevention and helping the applicant

17.9 In the past, in both England and Wales, duties to provide advice and assistance were often neglected. The provisions of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, mean that local housing authorities in Wales will allocate resources towards early help, advice and information, so that an applicant can be more effectively helped to find or maintain his or her own accommodation. The Code of Guidance for Local Authorities on the Allocation of Accommodation and Homelessness\(^1\) (the Welsh Code\(^2\)) puts it in the following terms:

‘The purpose of the legislation is to achieve:

• fewer households experiencing the trauma of homelessness,

• better, more targeted, prevention work,

• increased help, advice and information for households who receive limited assistance under the current legislation,

• more focus on the service user, helping them to address the causes of homelessness and make informed decisions on finding solutions to their housing problem,

• more effective use of the private rented sector as a solution to homelessness,

• a stronger emphasis on co-operation and multi-agency working, and

• greater protection provided for children in households who are homeless or threatened with homelessness as well as additional help for children leaving care\(^3\).

\(^2\) Welsh Code, Introduction to Pt 2 ‘homelessness’.

17.10 H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, has sought to achieve this by:

• extending the definition of ‘threatened with homelessness’ to someone who is likely to become homeless within 56 days, rather than the previous period of 28 days, so that there is a longer period for the local housing authority to help to prevent the applicant from becoming homeless\(^4\);

• requiring local housing authorities to provide resources to help the applicant secure his or her own accommodation\(^5\);

• creating duties owed to all applicants who are eligible and either threatened with homelessness or homeless, to help them secure accommodation\(^6\);

• permitting a local housing authority to end any of the duties owed to help applicants if the applicant has either obtained or refused accommodation, including accommodation in the private rented sector provided that it is suitable and is likely to be available for a period of at least six months\(^7\);

• requiring that interim accommodation is secured for an applicant throughout the performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty if there is reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for help and have a priority need\(^8\); and

• permitting a local housing authority to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty\(^9\) to an end by making an offer of suitable private rented sector accommodation\(^10\).

17.10 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

7 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(b) and (4), see 17.173–17.177.

17.11 The duties to help applicants secure accommodation are owed to nearly all applicants. The only applicants who will not be owed any duty at all are:

- those assessed by the local housing authority as neither homeless nor threatened with homelessness; or
- those assessed as not being eligible for help, whether they are homeless (or threatened with homelessness) or not.

1 Defined in H(W)A 2014, ss 55–58 and see Chapter 10.
2 Defined in H(W)A 2014, s 61 and Sch 2 and see Chapter 11.

Accommodation duties

17.12 The duties to help an applicant to secure his or her own accommodation are augmented by duties to accommodate an applicant if he or she has, or if the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may have, a priority need. Those duties arise on three occasions.

Immediate duty to secure interim accommodation

17.13 When the applicant makes an application for homelessness assistance, there is a duty to secure interim accommodation for the applicant and all members of his or her household if the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, may be eligible for help and may have a priority need. That duty continues until the applicant is notified of the local housing authority's assessment of the applicant's case.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 68(1)–(2); Welsh Code, chapter 11. This interim duty is discussed further at 17.118–17.134.

Continuing duty to secure interim accommodation

17.14 If the applicant is homeless, eligible for help and the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has a priority need, or has reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need, and the applicant is being helped to secure his or her own accommodation under the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty, there is a duty to continue to secure interim accommodation that duty is being performed. The interim accommodation duty will generally end either when the local housing authority notifies the applicant of a decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is not owed to him or her, or when the applicant has been notified that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty has come to an end.

1 See 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 68(2), see 17.128–17.133.
3 H(W)A 2014, ss 68(3) and 69(3)–(5), see 17.128–17.133. Note that if the applicant is not to be accommodated under the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), he or she must be given accommodation for a sufficient period, from the date of notification, to allow him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation: H(W)A 2014, s 69(5), see 17.124–17.127. There are also other circumstances by which the local housing authority can bring the interim accommodation duty to an end at H(W)A 2014, s 68(7)–(9), discussed at 17.128–17.133.

Duty to secure accommodation for applicants in priority need

17.15 If the applicant is homeless, eligible for help, has a priority need and the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty has come to an end in certain circumstances, then the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty will arise.

1 See 17.84–17.102.
2 See 17.146–17.199.

17.16 The H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to secure accommodation for applicants who have a priority need, can currently be restricted to applicants who have not been found to have become homeless intentionally. However, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, permits local housing authorities to decide not to apply the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test and the Welsh Government’s intention is that it should be gradually phased out.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 75(2)(d), see 17.148.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 78, see CHAPTER 13 for the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test.
3 Welsh Code, paras 14.10 and 17.1.

The relevance of the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test?

17.17 H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, seeks to achieve the Welsh Government’s aim of gradually abolishing the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test in two ways.

Taking a decision to opt in 17.18 The starting-point is that the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test should not necessarily be applied by local housing authorities From 1 July 2015, local housing authorities have been required to take a positive decision to choose whether they will apply the test. If they do not take a positive decision to do so, then they cannot apply the test.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 78.

17.19 The mechanism by which local housing authorities can choose to apply the test is in H(W)A 2014, s 78, and the Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015. Guidance is given in chapter 17 of the Welsh Code. Local housing authorities may only apply the test if:

they have taken, published and notified to the Welsh Government a decision that they will have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test in relation to applicants who fall within certain specified categories; and the Welsh Ministers have specified those categories of person as being categories of applicants to whom the test could be applied in the Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015.

1 SI 2015/1265 (W 85), see the CD Rom with this book.
17.19 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

The decision must be notified to the Welsh Housing Minister (who will publish it) and published on the local housing authority’s own website at least 14 days before the policy is to be implemented: H(W)A 2014, s 78(3) and Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/1265 (W 85), regs 3–4.

17.20 Currently, the categories of person specified in the Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015 as those to whom the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test can be applied are all those categories of people who have a priority need. In other words, a local housing authority is free to decide that it will apply the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test to everyone who has a priority need and who it would otherwise have to accommodate under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty.

1 Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations 2015, reg 2; H(W)A 2014, s 70, see 12.29–12.30.

17.21 However, a local housing authority could also choose only to apply the test to some of the specified categories of people, but not to all of the categories. The published decision must specify which categories of people the test will be applied to. The Welsh Code advises ‘it may be that a Local Authority would want to gradually phase out considering intentionality and would choose to begin with certain groups such as young people, pregnant women and/or families’. It may also be that, in the future, the Welsh Ministers remove some of the current categories from the list of specified categories.

1 Welsh Code, para 17.7.

17.22 A local housing authority could, of course, decide not to apply the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test at all. Indeed, if, on or after 1 July 2015, a local housing authority has failed to make, notify and publish a decision that it will apply the test, and to which categories of people, then it cannot apply the test.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 78(2); Welsh Code, paras 17.7–17.11.

17.23 Once a local housing authority has published a notice that it will have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test in respect of any or all of the categories of applicants specified in the Homelessness (Intentionality) (Specified Categories) (Wales) Regulations, then it must apply that test to all applicants falling within the specified category or categories.

1 SI 2015/1265 (W 85).
The future of the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test

17.24 The second mechanism by which the Welsh Government aims to abolish the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test is contained in H(W)A 2014, s 75(3). That section has not yet been brought into force and the Welsh Government states that it does not intend to bring it into force until 2019. Welsh Code, para 14.10

17.25 H(W)A 2014, s 75(3) provides that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will apply to certain categories of applicants, even though the local housing authority might have decided that they have become homeless intentionally. When it does come into force, then the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty, will apply to an applicant if he or she:

• has been found to have become homeless intentionally; and

• does not have suitable accommodation available for his or her occupation or, if there is accommodation, it is not likely that it will be available for occupation for a period of at least six months from notification of the end of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty; and

• is eligible for help; and

• has a priority need; and

• is one of:
  – a pregnant woman or a person with whom the pregnant woman resides or might reasonably be expected to reside; or – a person with whom dependent children reside or might reasonably be expected to reside; or – a person who was under 21 when his or her application for help was made, or a person with whom such a person resides or might reasonably be expected to reside; or – a person who was aged between 21 and 25 when his or her application for help was made, and who was looked after, accommodated or fostered while under the age of 18, or a person with whom such a person resides or might reasonably be expected to reside; and

• was not previously given an offer of accommodation by that local housing authority, as a result of a previous application for help, where the offer was made within five years of the date when the current application for help was made.

1 See 17.146–17.199.

2 Which presumes that some local housing authorities will still be publishing their decisions to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test in 2019.

3 H(W)A 2014, s 75(3). Note that the last condition – an offer of accommodation made under a previous application for help – refers to offers being made specifically under H(W)A 2014, s 75, rather than to offers made under any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.

17.26 It will be seen that the intention is that households containing anyone aged under 21, or with former care-leavers aged under 25, should be accommodated under this duty, even though the applicant may have been found to have become homeless intentionally.
17.27 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

Use of the private rented sector

17.27 Until the commencement of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, local housing authorities in Wales only had a limited ability to use private rented accommodation. H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, permits local housing authorities in Wales to make much greater use of the private rented sector. The Welsh Code states ‘[f]or many, the private sector will offer the only realistic opportunity of finding the type of property they need in their preferred location and local authorities should ensure that they fully engage with landlords in order to exploit this significant source of housing’.

1  Welsh Code, para 12.31.

17.28 The use of the private rented sector can occur in three different ways:
- if the applicant is helped to secure his or her own accommodation, that is likely to be accommodation in the private rented sector;
- the accommodation secured for the applicant under any of the accommodation duties in the H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, could be in the private rented sector; or
- a private rented sector offer can be made to an applicant who is owed the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty with the consequence that the duty can come to an end if the applicant accepts or refuses it.

The use of private rented sector accommodation is discussed in more detail under the relevant duties.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), see 17.118–17.114; H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.73–17.117.

Duties to assist applicants

17.29 A list of the duties owed to applicants under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is set out for ease of reference:

Applicants who are eligible for assistance and threatened with homelessness:
- a duty to help to prevent the applicant from becoming homeless;

Applicants who are homeless:
- a duty to help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for his or her occupation;

Applicants who are homeless and have a priority need, or the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need:
- an interim duty to secure accommodation, where reason to believe applicant may have priority need; and Overview 17.29

- a duty to help to secure accommodation coupled with the interim accommodation duty where reason to believe the applicant may have priority need; or
- if the applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally, and is referred to another local housing authority:
  - a duty to notify the applicant that the local housing authority intends to refer him or her and to inform the applicant of her of the reasons for it; and
  - an interim duty to secure accommodation until the applicant is notified that the conditions for referral have been met; and
  - a duty to help to secure accommodation if the conditions for referral are not met; or
  - a power to secure accommodation if the conditions for referral are met and the applicant requests a review;
- an additional duty to secure accommodation when the duty to help to secure accommodation ends in certain circumstances if the applicant has a priority need and has not become homeless intentionally or if the local housing authority has decided not to have regard to whether an applicant has become homeless intentionally.

Applicants who are homeless and have a priority need, or there is reason to believe they may have a priority need, and who have become homeless intentionally:

- an interim duty to secure accommodation, where reason to believe applicant may have priority need; and
- a duty to help to secure accommodation coupled with the interim accommodation duty where reason to believe that the applicant may have priority need; and
- a duty to secure accommodation for a sufficient period from the date of notification that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty does not apply to allow the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her occupation;
- an additional duty to secure accommodation when the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty ends in certain circumstances, if the local housing authority has decided not to have regard to whether an applicant in that category has become homeless intentionally and the applicant has a priority need; and
- on a date to be appointed, if the applicant has a priority need relating to pregnancy, dependent children, being under 21 at the date of the application or aged under 25 and had been looked after, accommodated or fostered, a H(W)A 2014, s 75(3) main housing duty when the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty ends in certain circumstances.

NOTIFICATION DUTY

17.30 The applicant will know which, if any, of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, will be performed by the local housing authority because he or she will have received a notice of the outcome of the local housing authority’s assessment of his or her case1. That notice will inform the applicant whether the local housing authority will perform any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The details to be contained in the notice of the outcome of assessment are discussed at Chapter 9.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 63(1), see 9.90–9.110.

17.31 The local housing authority must review its assessment in two cases1:

• Case 1: where the local housing authority has concluded that the applicant is threatened with homelessness and that the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty applies2, and it subsequently appears to the local housing authority that the duty has come or is likely to come to an end because the applicant is homeless3; and
• Case 2: where the local housing authority has concluded that an applicant is homeless and that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty applies4, and it subsequently appears to the local housing authority that the duty has come or is likely to come to an end in circumstances where the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty may be owed5.

The applicant will be notified of the outcome of the review of the assessment of his or her case.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), see 17.45–17.72.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 67(2), see 17.55–17.61.
4 H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.73–17.117.

17.32 In addition, the local housing authority must keep its assessment under review throughout the whole of the period when any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, apply, in case the applicant’s circumstances change1. If the assessment is reviewed, then any change in the assessment or in the local housing authority’s conclusions must be notified to the applicant2.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 62(8); Welsh Code, para 10.44
2 H(W)A 2014, s 63(1).

17.33 The applicant will also be notified if the local housing authority concludes that any of its duties have come to an end. A duty owed to the applicant will not come to an end until the applicant has been notified of that decision. The notification must comply with H(W)A 2014, s 84, which requires:

- that the notification is in writing;
- that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as subject to the relevant duty, the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end, the applicant’s right to request a review and the time within which the request must be made; and
- that the details of the steps taken by the local housing authority to help the applicant secure his or her accommodation are set out, where the decision is that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty has come to an end because 56 days have expired, or because the local housing authority is satisfied that reasonable steps have been taken within a shorter period.

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, ss 67(1), 74(1), 76(1) and 79(1) all explicitly provide that the duty comes an end ‘if the applicant has been notified in accordance with’ H(W)A 2014, s 84.

The prevention and relief duties 17.36

The notification should be received by the applicant and is only effective on receipt. If the applicant has not received the notification, he or she is treated as having been notified if the notice was made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable time for collection by the applicant or by someone on his or her behalf.

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 84(4); Welsh Code, para 15.96.

17.35 The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that a duty has come to an end. The request for a review must be made before the end of 21 days, beginning from the day on which the applicant is notified of the decision, or such longer period as the local housing authority may agree in writing.

\(^2\) H(W)A 2014, s 85(1).

THE PREVENTION AND RELIEF DUTIES

Common characteristic

How to ‘help to secure’ accommodation

17.36 Both duties in H(W)A 2014, ss 66 and 73, contain the words ‘help to secure’. This phrase relates both to the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty, and to the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty. ‘Help to secure’ does not mean that accommodation must actually be provided, either directly by the local housing authority or through the private rented sector. It quite simply means ‘help’ so that the applicant can keep or find his or her accommodation.

The definition of ‘help to secure’ in H(W)A 2014, s 65 is that:
17.36 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

‘the authority—
(a) is required to take reasonable steps to help, having regard (among other things) to the need to make the best use of the authority’s resources;
(b) is not required to secure an offer of accommodation under Pt 6 of the Housing Act 1996 (allocation of housing);
(c) is not required to otherwise provide accommodation.’

1 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), see 17.45–17.72; H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.73–17.117.

17.37 Guidance is given in paras 12.7–12.11 of the Welsh Code. The guidance emphasises the limitations of the duty: ‘[t]his does not mean that the local authority has a duty to secure accommodation and it is vital that the applicant co-operates fully in developing and undertaking a housing solution’.

1 Welsh Code, para 12.7.

17.38 H(W)A 2014, s 64 contains a non-exhaustive list of examples of the ways in which accommodation might be secured, or an applicant might be helped to secure, accommodation. Guidance is given in paras 12.12–12.55 of the Welsh Code.

1 A long list of the type of help that could be provided is given in para 12.13 of the Welsh Code, described as ‘a minimum set of available interventions’.

17.39 Essentially, H(W)A 2014, s 64, permits the local housing authority:

- to provide the applicant with information and advice, including financial advice, so that he or she can find and keep his or her own accommodation;
- to provide the applicant with specific services, such as mediation, grant or loan payments, security measures, or advocacy, to help the applicant find or keep his or her own accommodation; and/or
- to provide the applicant with accommodation, either directly or by arranging for an offer of accommodation from a registered social landlord or private landlord, or even from family or friends.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 64(2)(a), (b), (c), (e), (f), (i).

17.40 The local housing authority may provide these services itself, or it may arrange for the applicant to receive these services from another organisation or individual, such as debt advice agencies, or mediation providers. However, the local housing authority must ensure that the applicant is provided with these services, and that they are tailored in order to assist the applicant either to retain his or her own home or to find another home. Provision of generic information should not be acceptable.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 64(1).
Availability and suitability of accommodation

17.41 Each of the two duties to help the applicant to keep or to secure his or her own accommodation will come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has suitable accommodation, which is likely to be available for his or her occupation for a period of at least six months, or has refused an offer of such accommodation. There is discussion of the requirement that accommodation must be ‘suitable’ at Chapter 18.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), see 17.45–17.72; and H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 67(3) and (4), see 17.62–17.72; H(W)A 2014, s 74(4) and (5), see 17.104–17.117.
3 See 18.28–18.31.

17.42 When H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, specifies that accommodation must be ‘available for occupation by the applicant’, that means that the accommodation must be both factually and legally ‘available’ for occupation. Accommodation must be available for occupation not only by the applicant but also by all members of his or her household. In this context, household means any person who normally resides with the applicant as a member of his or her family and any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(3) and (4), see 17.62–17.72; H(W)A 2014, s 74(4) and (5), see 17.104–17.117.
2 As defined in H(W)A 2014, ss 55–56, see 10.17–10.65.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 56(1) and (2), see 10.21–10.32.

17.43 The phrase ‘accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant’ does not specify accommodation of any particular type or tenure. It could be accommodation provided under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, by the local housing authority or a registered social landlord. More frequently, it will be an assured shorthold tenancy in the private rented sector, or even a licence granted by family or friends to occupy accommodation.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(3) and (4), see 17.62–17.72; H(W)A 2014, s 74(4) and (5), see 17.104–17.117.
2 Welsh Code, paras 12.20–12.37.

17.44 The period of ‘six months’ is the minimum period for which the accommodation must be available. It could, obviously, be available for a longer period. The period starts from the day when the notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end, made under H(W)A 2014, s 84(1), is sent to the applicant or first made available for collection in the local housing authority’s office. The Welsh Code advises that, in the case of assured, secure or assured shorthold tenancies, the local housing authority can expect the accommodation to be available for the minimum six-month period. In the case of more informal arrangements, such as accommodation provided by family or friends, or where the applicant has ‘returned home’, the local housing authority should satisfy itself that there is a realistic expectation that the accommodation will be available for the minimum six-month period.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(5); H(W)A 2014, s 74(7).
17.44 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

2 Welsh Code, para 15.11.
3 Welsh Code, para 15.10.

Duty to help to prevent homelessness

Applicants entitled to the duty

17.45 This duty is owed to an applicant whom the local housing authority is satisfied is:

• threatened with homelessness; and
• eligible for help.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1); Welsh Code, chapter 12.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 61 and Sch 2, see Chapter 11.

17.46 All applicants who are eligible, and who are likely to become homeless within 56 days, are entitled to this duty. The duty is not restricted to those applicants who have a priority need or who have not become homeless intentionally.

Performing the duty

17.47 The duty is to ‘help to secure’ that suitable accommodation does not cease to be available for the applicant’s occupation. The applicant is to be helped to remain in his or her existing home, if possible. If this is not possible, the applicant should be helped to find another home which he or she can move into without any intervening period of homelessness. It is implicit in the wording of H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), that the existing accommodation is suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household. This is because an applicant who is occupying unsuitable accommodation will normally be homeless, as the accommodation would not be reasonable for him or her to continue to occupy.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1).
2 Welsh Code, para 12.4.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 56(3) see 10.73–10.134.

17.48 As already noted, the phrase ‘help to secure’ is defined in H(W)A 2014, s 65, and further explained in H(W)A 2014, s 64 and Welsh Code, chapter 12. The H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty to ‘help to secure’ does not require the local housing authority to provide accommodation itself, although equally it does not preclude the local housing authority from providing accommodation. More usually, the local housing authority will use some of the services set out as examples in H(W)A 2014, s 64(2), and para 12.13 of the Welsh Code, to help the applicant stay in his or her existing accommodation.

1 See 17.36–17.40.
2 See 17.36–17.40.

17.49 These services can be provided directly by the local housing authority, or by any other person such as a registered social landlord, voluntary sector organisation or private landlord\(^1\). The local housing authority’s duty is to ensure that the applicant receives those services, from whoever provides them, and that those services are sufficient to help him or her secure that suitable accommodation does not cease to be available.

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 64(1).

17.50 The Welsh Code advises that ‘the first option to be considered should be for the client to remain at the current accommodation where suitable’\(^1\). This can be achieved by helping with financial options\(^2\), consulting with a landlord to explore the possibility of a tenancy continuing or at least of the tenant remaining for a reasonable period whilst alternative accommodation can be found\(^1\), and/or working with the local housing authority’s housing benefit department to prevent delays in responding to claims or to make a Discretionary Housing Payment\(^4\). The Welsh Code also advises that a homelessness prevention fund is a cost-effective option: ‘[t]his source of funding can be vital in preventing homelessness or even delaying it in order to allow a household to remain in their home until a settled housing option becomes available’\(^5\).

\(^1\) Welsh Code, para 12.20.
\(^2\) Welsh Code, paras 12.20–12.23.
\(^3\) Welsh Code, para 12.38.
\(^5\) Welsh Code, paras 12.56–12.57.

17.51 If the applicant cannot be assisted to remain in his or her existing home, then consideration should be given to finding alternative accommodation, so that the applicant can move directly, without having to undergo an intervening period of homelessness. The local housing authority is not precluded from accommodating the applicant itself, through its allocation scheme, but the Welsh Code advises that ‘local housing authorities’ allocation practices ‘should not encourage the view that people have to apply as homeless to the Local Authority in order to obtain a social tenancy’\(^3\). The local housing authority may assist the applicant to find private rented accommodation, or obtain accommodation from a registered social landlord. Applicants should be assisted to apply to registered social landlords, to consider low cost home ownership schemes and to access the private rented sector\(^2\). The Welsh Code advises: ‘[f]or many, the private sector will offer the only realistic opportunity of finding the type of property they need in their preferred location’\(^3\).

\(^3\) Welsh Code, para 12.31.

17.52 Provided the applicant is able to move directly from his or her existing accommodation into new, suitable accommodation, then the local housing authority will have performed its duty to the applicant. Of course, if there is an intervening period when the applicant has no accommodation, the applicant will no longer be threatened with homelessness but will be homeless and the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty will no longer apply\(^1\).

\(^1\) The duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) to help to secure accommodation will apply, see 17.73–17.117. There will be a duty to secure interim accommodation if the local housing
17.52 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

The authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need: H(W)A 2014, s 68, see 17.120–17.124.

17.53 The Welsh Code recognises that certain groups of people are at most risk of homelessness and require special targeted help. Specific guidance is provided in respect of people from minority ethnic backgrounds, armed forces personnel and veterans, hospital patients, former prisoners, former asylum seekers, people with mental impairment or learning disabilities, people with mental health needs, people with Autistic Spectrum Disorder, people with a substance misuse problem, and people experiencing domestic disputes, abuse, violence or harassment. The Welsh Code also emphasises that preventing homelessness from recurring is an important aim, and that underlying problems which led to the prospect of homelessness should be addressed in order to provide long-term solutions, and to avoid repeated episodes of homelessness.

2 Welsh Code, paras 12.61–12.64, see also Provision of accommodation for 16- and 17-year-old people who may be homeless (Welsh Assembly Government, September 2010) on the CD Rom with this book and 12.212–12.214.
3 Welsh Code, paras 12.65–12.70.
4 Welsh Code, paras 12.71–12.79.
5 Welsh Code, paras 12.80–12.82.
6 Welsh Code, paras 12.83–12.139, with specific guidance on resettlement of women prisoners in paras 12.124–12.130.
7 Welsh Code, paras 12.143–12.145.
8 Welsh Code, para 12.149.
9 Welsh Code, paras 12.150–12.152.

17.54 Obviously, the help provided will cost the local housing authority time and resources. The Welsh Code advises that ‘a Local Authority may have regard to making best use of the Authority’s resources’, and that ‘Local Authorities must ensure that resources are allocated effectively and efficiently’. It also advises that resources spent on homelessness prevention could provide ‘potential cost savings at a corporate level’. Local housing authorities should not be so conscious of resources that they prioritise applicants who have, or might have, a priority need in order to try to avoid the costs involved in subsequently having to accommodate those applicants under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1). All applicants should be treated in the same way. However, the Welsh Code notes that applicants who have, or might have, a priority need may be people who are likely to require additional support and resources.

2 Welsh Code, para 15.20.
3 See 17.146–17.199.
4 Welsh Code, para 15.25.

17.55 H(W)A 2014, s 66(2), specifically provides that the H(W)A 2104, s 66(1), prevention duty does not affect any right of the local housing authority to secure vacant possession of any accommodation. In other words, if a tenant is due to be evicted from his or her home rented from the local housing authority within 56 days and is eligible for help, the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty will be owed. But that does not prevent the local housing authority from continuing to exercise its functions as landlord and proceeding with an eviction. However, since the duty will be owed, efficient allocation of resources might involve the local housing authority, when exercising its homelessness functions, liaising with its housing department and seeking to prevent the eviction if possible, for example, by assisting to resolve housing benefit problems, by providing debt and budgeting advice, by helping to pay the tenant’s rent arrears or by providing any other service that would enable the tenant to remain in his or her home.

The prevention and relief duties 17.58

How does the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty come to an end?

17.56 H(W)A 2014, s 67 specifies three separate events upon which the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty can come to an end. Those three events are:

- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless;
- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is no longer threatened with homelessness and suitable accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant for a period of at least six months; or
- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation.

In addition, the duty will come to an end if any of the events specified in H(W)A 2014, s 79(2)–(5) occur.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(2), see 17.59–17.61.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 67(4), see 17.66–17.72.
4 See 17.189–17.197.

17.57 The H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty does not come to an end until the applicant is notified in writing of the local housing authority’s decision that it has come to an end. That notification must:

- contain the reasons for the decision;
- inform the applicant that he or she has a right to request a review of that decision; and
- inform the applicant of the 21-day period within which the review request must be made.

If no notification is received, or if the notification does not contain all of that information, the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty has not ended.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 84, see 17.33–17.35.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 67(1).

17.58 The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty has come to an end. If the applicant is offered suitable accommodation which is intended to end the duty, the duty will come to an end if he or she accepts it or refuses it, provided that the accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant for at least six months\(^2\). In those circumstances, the cautious approach must always be to accept the accommodation and request a review of whether or not it was suitable\(^3\).
17.58 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

2. As a result of H(W)A 2014, s 67(3) or (4). See 17.62–17.72.

THE APPLICANT HAS BECOME HOMELESS

17.59 The H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duty will come to an end if the local housing authority notifies the applicant that it is satisfied that she or he has become homeless\(^1\. The definition of ‘homeless’ is in H(W)A 2014, s 55\(^2\. The accommodation occupied by the applicant during the performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty might have ceased to be available for the applicant, or it might be that the accommodation is no longer reasonable for the applicant and his or her household to continue to occupy.

1. H(W)A 2014, ss 67(1) and (2).
2. See Chapter 10.

17.60 Although the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty ends when the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless, this does not mean that the applicant will be abandoned by the local housing authority. The local housing authority must first review its assessment of the applicant’s case\(^1\. Provided that the applicant is still eligible for help\(^2\), he or she will then be owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty, by which the local housing authority must help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for the applicant. So a duty to help the applicant, by providing the services suggested in H(W)A 2014, s 64(2), and chapter 13 of the Welsh Code, remains\(^3\).

2. See Chapter 11.
3. See 17.36–17.41.

17.61 In addition, if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need, or even if the local housing authority simply has ‘reason to believe’ that the applicant ‘may’ have a priority need, the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is augmented by the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3) interim accommodation duty\(^1\. So the applicant and his or her household must be provided with accommodation whilst they are being helped to secure alternative accommodation. The tests of ‘reason to believe’ and ‘may’ each have a low threshold\(^2\. It is only applicants in respect of whom there is no reason to believe that they may have a priority need who will not be accommodated.

1. See 17.120–17.123.
2. See 17.118.
The applicant is no longer threatened with homelessness and suitable accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant for a period of at least six months

17.62 The H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty will come to an end if the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant can remain in his or her existing home and that he or she will be able to stay there for at least six months. Alternatively, the applicant might have been helped to secure new accommodation which is available for at least six months. The accommodation must be suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household. The local housing authority must be 'satisfied' of both limbs:

- that the applicant is no longer threatened with homelessness, in other words that it is not likely that he or she will become homeless within 56 days; and
- that suitable accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant for at least six months.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(3); Welsh Code, paras 15.33–15.34.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 67(3), see Welsh Code, chapter 19 and Chapter 18.

17.63 This requires something more on the local housing authority’s part than simply an assumption. If the applicant has been assisted to remain in his or her existing home, or has gone to stay with friends or family, the Welsh Code advises that the local housing authority should 'satisfy itself that there is a realistic expectation that this solution will last for six months and that it is not intended by the family, friends, extended family or the applicant to be a temporary arrangement'. Where accommodation has been secured on a more formal basis, for example where the applicant has accepted an assured shorthold, secure or assured tenancy, the local housing authority is entitled to expect the accommodation for be available for the minimum period of six months.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.10.
2 Welsh Code, para 15.11.

17.64 The accommodation must actually be available for the applicant to move into. A promise from a private landlord of the offer of a future tenancy will not be sufficient for the local housing authority to be ‘satisfied’ that suitable accommodation is likely to be available. Similarly, assisting the applicant to join the local housing authority’s waiting list without actually securing accommodation would not bring the duty to an end.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.13.

17.65 The fact that both limbs must be satisfied gives the applicant a minimum of six months’ security. The period of six months begins on the day when the local housing authority sends notification of its decision that the duty has come to an end (or first makes the notification available for collection at its office).

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(5) and s 84; Welsh Code, para 15.13; see 17.57.
17.66 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

The applicant refuses an offer of suitable accommodation

17.66 The H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty can only come to an end where an applicant refuses an offer of accommodation if all of the following conditions are met:

- the applicant had been notified in writing of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer;
- the applicant has refused an offer of accommodation;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the offer of accommodation was suitable for the applicant and for his or her household; and
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation offered was likely to have been available for occupation by the applicant and the members of his or her household for a period of at least six months.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 67(4); Welsh Code, paras 15.35–15.36.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 67(4).

17.67 The applicant will have received at least two letters containing notifications. The applicant must first be notified of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer. The possible consequence of refusal is that the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty will come to an end and that the local housing authority will not necessarily be subject to any duty to accommodate the applicant. The possible consequence of acceptance is that the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty will come to an end. In either case, the applicant will still have the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered, even though he or she has also accepted it.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.16.
2 Welsh Code, para 15.15.

17.68 The first notification is likely to be contained in a letter making the offer of accommodation. The Welsh Code advises that local housing authorities must allow applicants a reasonable period for considering offers of accommodation that will bring H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties to an end. It also advises that there is no set reasonable period, and what is a reasonable period will depend upon an applicant’s circumstances. Applicants should be given an opportunity to view the accommodation before making any decision or signing any written agreement.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.14.
2 Welsh Code, para 15.15.

17.69 The second notification received by the applicant will have been the notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty has come to an end because the applicant refused the offer of accommodation and that all of the circumstances in H(W)A 2014, s 67(4) apply. The applicant has the right to request a review of that decision.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1); Welsh Code, para 15.16, see 17.57.
The prevention and relief duties 17.74

17.70 The offer of accommodation may have come from ‘any person’¹, so it may have been an offer of an allocation of a secure, assured or introductory tenancy made by the local housing authority under HA 1996, Pt 6, or an offer of accommodation made by any other landlord (registered social landlord or private landlord) or indeed an offer of accommodation made more informally by a friend or family member². The offer may not have been arranged by the local housing authority. However, the local housing authority will have had some involvement in or knowledge of the offer, because it will have notified the applicant of the consequences of acceptance or refusal.

² The accommodation would have to be offered on terms that gave the applicant a right to occupy it, as defined in H(W)A 2014, s 55(1), see 10.33–10.65.

17.71 As with the circumstances for the ending of the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty under H(W)A 2014, s 67(3)¹, the local housing authority must be satisfied that the accommodation would have been suitable for the applicant² and that it would have been available for occupation for a period of at least six months, beginning from the day on which the notification that the local housing authority had decided that the duty had come to an end was sent³.

³ H(W)A 2014, s 67(5); Welsh Code, para 15.13.

17.72 If the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty comes to an end for this reason, and the applicant remains threatened with homelessness, then no other duty will be owed to him or her. If he or she later becomes homeless, he or she can make a new application for homelessness assistance.

Duty to help to secure accommodation for homeless applicants

Applicants entitled to the duty

17.73 This H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is owed to an applicant whom the local housing authority is satisfied is¹:

- homeless²; and
- eligible for help³.

In addition, the local housing authority must not have decided to refer the applicant to another local housing authority⁴.

² As defined in H(W)A 2014, ss 55–58, see CHAPTER 10.
³ H(W)A 2014, s 61 and Sch 2, see CHAPTER 11.
⁴ H(W)A 2014, s 73(1). ‘Referral of case to another local housing authority’ is in H(W)A 2014, s 80, and discussed at CHAPTER 14.

17.74 An applicant need not be literally without a roof over his or her head for the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty to be owed. ‘Homeless’ is defined in
17.74 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

H(W)A 2014, ss 55–58 and includes the possibility that an applicant has accommodation available for his or her occupation, but that the accommodation is not reasonable for him or her to continue to occupy, or that an applicant has accommodation, but it is not available for the occupation of all the members of his or her household.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 56, see 10.21–10.32.

17.75 The Welsh Code advises that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is intended to help people where the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty has not been effective, or where the applicant was already homeless when he or she approached the local housing authority. In the former case, the local housing authority should review its earlier assessment of the applicant’s case, on the basis that the applicant is now homeless.

Performing the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty

17.76 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is to ‘help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by an applicant’. ‘Help to secure that suitable accommodation is available’ does not mean that the local housing authority must actually provide accommodation itself, or at all. The local housing authority simply has to ‘help’ the applicant find suitable accommodation. ‘Help to secure’ is defined in H(W)A 2014, s 65 and examples of how the local housing authority can ‘help to secure’ accommodation are given in H(W)A 2014, s 64 and chapter 12 and paras 13.12–13.24 of the Welsh Code. Any accommodation that is found must be available for occupation by the applicant and all members of his or her household. It must also be suitable for the needs of the applicant.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 73(1).
2 See 17.36–17.40 for a detailed discussion.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 56, see 10.21–10.32.
4 See Chapter 18.

17.77 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty lasts for up to 56 days, or for a shorter period if one of the events specified in H(W)A 2014, s 74(3)–(5) occurs during the 56-day period.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 74(2).

17.78 During the 56-day period, the local housing authority is expected to take ‘reasonable steps’ to help the applicant to secure accommodation. Those ‘reasonable steps’ might be helping to secure an offer of suitable accommodation, from the local housing authority’s own stock, or from that of a registered social landlord (and so offered under HA 1996, Pt 6) or a private rented sector offer from a private landlord. Alternatively, the applicant might simply be helped by being given information, advice, loans or small grants to find his or her own accommodation. The Welsh Code advises that a local housing authority that could not show that it had used the 56-day period to take reasonable steps were taken could be subject to a challenge by the applicant (by a request for a review and a subsequent appeal to the county court).

1 See 17.87–17.96.
2 H(W)A 2014, ss 65 and 73(1); Welsh Code, paras 13.8–13.10.
4 Welsh Code, para 15.52. There is, in addition, a freestanding right to request a review of whether or not reasonable steps were taken: H(W)A 2014, s 85(2), see 19.81–19.82.

Accommodating the applicant

17.79 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty does not include a duty to accommodate all applicants whilst the is being performed.

1 Although, H(W)A 2014, ss 64(1) and 65, read in conjunction with each other, arguably give a local housing authority a power to secure accommodation during the performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), duty.

17.80 If the applicant who is owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty also has a priority need, or if the local housing authority has reason to believe that he or she may have a priority need, the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty applies during the performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty. Only those applicants in respect of whom there is no reason to believe that they may have a priority need will not be accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 68, interim accommodation duty.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), see 17.120–17.123.

17.81 When the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty comes to an end, an applicant who has a priority need and still does not have suitable accommodation available, will generally be accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to secure accommodation for applicants who have a priority need. The local housing authority is obliged to review its assessment of the applicant’s case at the point when it appears to the local housing authority that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty has or is likely to come to an end and that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty might be owed. It is also required to notify the applicant of the outcome of this revised assessment.

1 See 17.146–17.199.

17.82 If the applicant is not entitled to the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty when the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty comes to an end, the H(W)A 2014, s 68, interim accommodation duty will come to an end. However, the interim accommodation should not be withdrawn immediately. The accommodation can only be withdrawn upon notice.

1 This might be for various reasons: the local housing authority might have satisfied itself that the applicant does not have a priority need; or the applicant might have suitable accommodation available for occupation for a period of six months (H(W)A 2014, s 74(4), see 17.104–17.108) or the applicant might have refused an offer of suitable accommodation.
17.82 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

(H(W)A 2014, s 74(5), see 17.109–17.117) or the local housing authority might have been satisfied that the applicant had become homeless intentionally (H(W)A 2014, s 75(2)).

3 The length of the notice should be provided for in the tenancy or licence agreement; if there is no express provision, then reasonable notice should be given: Minister of Health v Bellotti [1944] 1 KB 298, CA. For a recent discussion of the requirements to give notice, see R (N) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2014] UKSC 62, [2014] 3 WLR 1548, SC; and Gibson v Douglas [2016] EWC Civ 1266, [2017] HLR 11, CA.

17.83 In addition, where an applicant has a priority need, but the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has become homeless intentionally, so the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will not apply, then the accommodation should continue to be secured until the local housing authority is satisfied that it has been available to the applicant for a sufficient period to allow the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation. This provision is modelled on HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), where applicants who have a priority need but who have become homeless intentionally are entitled to interim accommodation for such period as the local housing authority considers will give him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation. What constitutes a ‘sufficient period’ is not spelled out, either in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or in the Welsh Code.

1 In the circumstance where the local housing authority is having regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test, see H(W)A 2014, s 78, and 13.252–13.255 and 17.18–17.23.

How does the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty come to an end?

17.84 H(W)A 2014, s 74, contains a list of four circumstances in which the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty can come to an end. Those circumstances are:

• that a period of 56 days has expired;
• that the local housing authority is satisfied that, before the end of the 56-day period, reasonable steps have been taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for the applicant;
• that the local housing authority is satisfied that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant for a period of at least six months; or
• that the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation.

In addition, the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will come to an end if any of the events in H(W)A 2014, s 79(2)–(5) occur.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 74(2), see 17.87–17.96.

6 See 17.189–17.197.
The prevention and relief duties 17.88

17.85 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty does not come to an end until the applicant is notified in writing:
• of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end;
• of the reasons for the decision;
• of the applicant’s right to request a review of that decision; and
• of the 21-day period in which to request a review.1

If no notification is received containing that information, the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty continues.2
1 H(W)A 2014, s 84, see 17.33.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 74(1).

17.86 The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty has come to an end.1 If the applicant is offered suitable accommodation which is likely to be available for his or her occupation for a period of at least six months, the duty will come to an end if he or she accepts it or refuses it.2 In those circumstances, the cautious approach must normally be to accept the accommodation and request a review of whether or not it was suitable.3
1 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c), see 19.77–19.80.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 74(4), see 17.104–17.108.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 74(5), see 17.109–17.117.

After 56 days

17.87 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty lasts for a maximum period of 56 days. It may come to an end sooner if any of the circumstances in H(W)A 2014, s 74(3)–(5) occur.1
1 H(W)A 2014, s 74(2); Welsh Code, paras 15.48–15.52.

17.88 However, this does not entitle the local housing authority simply to wait for the end of the 56-day period. It is required actively to help the applicant to secure suitable accommodation during that period. The Welsh Code advises that the local housing authority should identify the reasonable steps to be taken during that period, in partnership with the applicant, to try to secure accommodation.2 It also advises that, if reasonable steps are not taken, and the duty subsequently comes to an end, the local housing authority could be subject to a challenge.3 1 H(W)A 2014, ss 65(a) and 73(1).
2 Welsh Code, para 15.50.
3 Welsh Code, para 15.52. Challenges would be brought by the applicant requesting a review of whether or not reasonable steps were taken (H(W)A 2014, s 85(2)) and possibly by a subsequent appeal to the county court: H(W)A 2014, s 88(1), see 19.81–19.82.
17.89 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

17.89 The 56-day period begins on the day that the applicant is sent the assessment of his or her case carried out by the local housing authority under H(W)A 2014, s 63(1), or on the day when the assessment is made available for the applicant’s collection at the local housing authority’s office¹.

17.90 If, at the end of the 56-day period, the applicant remains homeless, or has accommodation available but it is not likely that the accommodation will be available for occupation for at least six months, the applicant will be owed a H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to accommodate him or her if:

- the applicant remains eligible for help;
- the applicant has a priority need; and
- either:
  - the local housing authority has not decided to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test; or
  - if the local housing authority has had regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test, it is satisfied that the applicant has not become homeless intentionally¹.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) and (2), see 13.252–13.255 and 17.18–17.23. From 2019, certain groups of applicants who have a priority need will be entitled to the duty to accommodate whether or not they have become homeless intentionally: H(W)A 2014, s 75(3), see 17.24–17.27.

17.91 The applicant will know if there is a duty to accommodate him or her, because the local housing authority will have reviewed its assessment of the applicant’s case and notified him or her of the outcome of that reviewed assessment¹.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 62(9), Case 2; see 9.151–9.153 and 17.31.

17.92 An applicant who is not entitled to the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty, usually because he or she does not have a priority need or, where relevant, has been found to have become homeless intentionally¹, will have to find his or her own accommodation. He or she will not be able to make a fresh application for homelessness assistance, unless his or her circumstances have changed materially since the previous assessment was made, or there is new information that materially affects the previous assessment².

¹ Or because he or she has accepted or refused suitable accommodation: H(W)A 2014, s 74(4) and (5), see 17.97–17.107.

17.93 It may be that the applicant has been accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty and the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has a priority need, but the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty does not apply, because the local housing authority has decided to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test and is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally. At that point, the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty will come to an end¹. However, the interim accommodation should not be withdrawn immediately. The accommodation can only be withdrawn upon notice². If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, the interim accommodation should continue for a sufficient period to allow him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation\(^3\).

1. H(W)A 2014, s 69(3).
2. The length of the notice should be provided for in the tenancy or licence agreement; if there is no express provision, then reasonable notice should be given: Minister of Health v Bellotti [1944] 1 KB 298, CA. See R (N) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2014] UKSC 62, [2015] AC 1259, SC and Gibson v Douglas [2016] EWCA Civ 1266, [2017] HLR 11, CA. For a more detailed discussion, see 16.29–16.30.
3. H(W)A 2014, s 69(4) and (5); Welsh Code, paras 15.42–15.44, see 17.124–17.128.

17.94 The notification to the applicant of the decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty has come to an end must inform him or her that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as subject to the duty, contain the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end, and inform him or her of the right to request a review of that decision and the time in which the request for the review must be made\(^1\). The notification must also contain details of the steps taken by the local housing authority to help to secure suitable accommodation\(^2\).

1. H(W)A 2014, s 84(1), see 17.33.
2. H(W)A 2014, s 84(2), see 17.33.

17.95 The applicant has the right to request a review of the decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason\(^1\). If the local housing authority had reason to believe that the applicant might have had a priority need, and so had been accommodating him or her during the 56-day period, it has a power to continue to accommodate pending notification of the review decision\(^2\).

2. H(W)A 2014, s 69(11), see 17.134.

17.96 The applicant has a separate right to request a review of whether or not reasonable steps were taken during the 56-day period to help to secure that suitable accommodation would be available for his or her occupation\(^1\). If the review, or subsequent appeal to the county court, results in a decision that reasonable steps were not taken, then the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will continue to be owed\(^2\). The new 56-day period will run from the day on which the review decision is notified to the applicant, or from whatever date a county court might order\(^3\).

3. H(W)A 2014, s 87(2); Welsh Code, para 20.33.

Reasonable steps have been taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant

17.97 If, during the 56-day period, the local housing authority is satisfied that reasonable steps have been taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant\(^3\), it can notify the applicant of its decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty has come to an end\(^4\).

2 H(W)A 2014, s 74(3).

17.98 Local housing authorities should be cautious about ending the duty for this reason, rather than simply waiting until the 56-day period has come to an end. A local housing authority would have to be able to show that it had ‘exhausted all reasonable steps’ and should be ‘able to evidence that there is no further action that can be taken to help to secure accommodation’ for whatever period remains of the 56 days. The Welsh Code advises that these circumstances might arise where the local housing authority had already pursued a number of reasonable steps with the applicant under the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duty.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.53.
2 Welsh Code, para 15.53, see 17.45–17.72.

17.99 If, on notification of the decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason, the applicant remains homeless or has accommodation available but it is not likely that the accommodation will be available for occupation for at least six months, the applicant will be owed a H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty if:

• the applicant remains eligible for help;
• the applicant has a priority need; and
• either:
  • the local housing authority has not decided to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test; or
  • if the local housing authority has had regard to the ‘becoming homeless ‘intentionally’ test, it is satisfied that the applicant has not become homeless intentionally.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 78, see 13.252–13.255 and 17.18–17.23.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) and (2), see 17.148.

17.100 The applicant will know if there is a H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to accommodate him or her, because the local housing authority will have reviewed its assessment of the applicant’s case and notified him or her of the outcome of that review.

17.101 It may be that the applicant has been accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty and the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has a priority need, but the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty does not apply, because the local housing authority has decided to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test and is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally. At that point, the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty will come to an end. However, the interim accommodation should not be withdrawn immediately. The accommodation can only be withdrawn upon notice. If the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally, the interim accommodation should continue for a sufficient period to allow him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her own accommodation.

17.102 The notification to the applicant of the decision that the duty has come to an end must inform him or her that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as subject to the duty, contain the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end, and inform him or her of the right to request a review of that decision and the time in which the request for the review must be made¹. The notification must also contain details of the steps taken by the local housing authority to help to secure suitable accommodation².

17.104 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will come to an end where the local housing authority is satisfied that¹:

- the applicant has accommodation available for his or her occupation (and for his or her household);
- the accommodation is suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household²; and
- the accommodation is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant for a period of at least six months.

The Welsh Code contains advice on ‘suitable accommodation’³ and on ‘likely to last for a period of six months’⁴.

17.105 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

17.105 There is no requirement that the accommodation was found as a result of any steps taken by the local housing authority. No particular types or tenure of accommodation are specified. So long as the accommodation is ‘accommodation available for the person’s occupation’, any type of accommodation may be sufficient, ranging from relatively informal arrangements with family or friends, to private rented sector tenancies, to hostels and more long-term accommodation offered by way of a secure or assured tenancy. However, in the case of more informal arrangements, the local housing authority should be satisfied that the accommodation will genuinely be available for a period of six months. A promise of accommodation is not sufficient.

4. Welsh Code, para 15.10, see 17.44.

17.106 The period of six months begins on the day on which the notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason is sent to the applicant, or is first made available for collection by the applicant at the local housing authority’s office.

17.107 The notification to the applicant of the decision that the duty has come to an end must inform him or her that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as subject to the duty, contain the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end, and inform him or her of the right to request a review of that decision and the time in which the request for the review must be made.

1. H(W)A 2014, s 84(1), see 17.33.

17.108 The applicant has the right to request a review of the decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason.

The applicant refuses an offer of suitable accommodation

17.109 The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will come to an end where:

- the applicant had been notified of the consequences of refusal or acceptance of an offer of accommodation;
- he or she refuses an offer of accommodation from any person;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and for his or her household; and
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation offered is likely to be available for occupation by the applicant and his or her household for a period of at least six months.

17.110 The applicant will have received at least two letters containing notifications. The applicant must first be notified of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer. The possible consequence of refusal is that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will come to an end and that the local housing authority will not necessarily be subject to any duty to accommodate the applicant. The possible consequence of acceptance is that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty will come to an end.

Welsh Code, para 15.16.

17.111 The first notification is likely to be contained in a letter making the offer of accommodation. The Welsh Code advises that local housing authorities must allow applicants a reasonable period for considering offers of accommodation that will bring H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties to an end. It also advises that there is no set reasonable period, and what is a reasonable period will depend upon an applicant’s circumstances. Applicants should be given an opportunity to view the accommodation before making any decision or signing any written agreement.

Welsh Code, para 15.15.

17.112 The second notification received by the applicant will have been the notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end because the applicant refused the offer of accommodation and that all of the circumstances in H(W)A 2014, s 74(5) apply. The applicant has the right to request a review of that decision. The offer of accommodation offered must also have been suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household. The offer of accommodation could have been made by the local housing authority itself, by a registered social landlord, by a private landlord or any other body (for example, a voluntary sector agency operating a hostel). It must have been available for occupation by the applicant for a minimum period of six months.

H(W)A 2014, s 84(1); Welsh Code, para 15.16, see 17.33.

17.113 The applicant must have actually refused the offer. The accommodation offered must also have been suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household. The offer of accommodation could have been made by the local housing authority itself, by a registered social landlord, by a private landlord or any other body (for example, a voluntary sector agency operating a hostel). It must have been available for occupation by the applicant for a minimum period of six months.

See Welsh Code, chapter 19 and Chapter 18.

See Welsh Code, paras 15.9–15.13 for accommodation available for a period of at least six months and see 17.41–17.45.

17.114 The period of six months begins on the day on which the notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason is sent to the applicant, or is first made available for collection by the applicant at the local housing authority’s office.

H(W)A 2014, s 74(7).

17.115 The notification to the applicant of the decision that the duty has come to an end must inform the applicant that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as subject to the duty, contain the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end, inform him or her of the right to request a review of that decision and the time in which the request for the review must be made.
17.115 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

1 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1), see 17.33.

17.116 Once the duty has come to an end for this reason, the applicant will not be entitled to the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty. If the applicant has been accommodated under H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty because he or she had, or the local housing authority had reason to believe that he or she might have had, a priority need, the H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), interim accommodation duty will also come to an end.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), see 17.146–17.199.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(3), see 17.128–17.133.

17.117 The applicant has the right to request a review of the decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason. If he or she has been assessed as having a priority need, and so had been accommodated during the performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty, the local housing authority has a power to continue to accommodate pending notification of the review decision.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c), see 19.77–19.80.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(11), see 17.134.

INTERIM ACCOMMODATION DUTIES AND POWERS

The initial duty to secure interim accommodation

17.118 Local housing authorities in Wales are under a duty to secure interim accommodation if they have reason to believe that an applicant may:

- be homeless;
- be eligible for help under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2; and
- have a priority need for accommodation.

The threshold for ‘reason to believe’ and ‘may’ is a low one. If there is any doubt, then interim accommodation should be secured.

1 H(W)A 2014, ss 68(1) and (2); Welsh Code, paras 11.3–11.9.
2 H(W)A 2014, ss 55–58, see Chapter 10.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 61 and Sch 2, see Chapter 11.
4 H(W)A 2014, s 70, see 12.29 and 12.195–12.228.
5 H(W)A 2014, s 68(2).
6 Welsh Code, para 11.4. See 8.75–8.76.

17.119 The H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty only comes to an end if one of the events specified at H(W)A 2014, s 69, occurs. Where a local housing authority decides that the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) interim accommodation duty is not owed to the applicant, it must notify the applicant of that decision in writing. The notification should contain the local housing authority’s reasons for coming to that decision, and inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review of the decision and of the time within which such a request must be made. The applicant has a right to request a review of that decision and, subsequently, to appeal to the county court on a point of law.

1 See 17.128–17.33.

3 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1).
4 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c) and s 88(1), see 19.77–19.80.

The additional interim duty to secure accommodation for homeless applicants in priority need

17.120 The H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) interim accommodation duty also applies to an applicant:

• to whom the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty1 applies;
• where the local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant has a priority need;
• where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need; or
• where the applicant has been referred from a local housing authority in England under HA 1996, s 198(1) ‘conditions for referral’2.

1 See 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 68(3); Welsh Code para 11.7.

17.121 This requires a local housing authority to accommodate an applicant in short-term accommodation1. Simultaneously, the local housing authority is helping the applicant to secure longer-term accommodation2.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 74(2); Welsh Code, paras 15.48–15.52.
2 The longer-term accommodation should be available for occupation by the applicant for at least six months: H(W)A 2014, s 74(4) and (5); Welsh Code para 15.56, see 17.73–17.117.

17.122 This duty will come to an end when the local housing authority notifies the applicant that the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty comes to an end1.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 69(3); Welsh Code, paras 15.42–15.45. This does not exclude the local housing authority deciding that the duty has come to an end as a result of any of the other nine circumstances in H(W)A 2014, ss 69 and 79 occurring, see 17.128–17.133 and 17.189–17.197.

17.123 If, on notification of the decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty has come to an end, the applicant remains homeless, the applicant will be owed a H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty if:

• the applicant remains eligible for help;
• the applicant has a priority need; and
• either:
  • the local housing authority has not decided to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test; or
17.123 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

- if the local housing authority has had regard to the ‘becoming homeless ‘intentionally’ test, it is satisfied that the applicant has not become homeless intentionally\(^2\).

2. H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) and (2), see 17.148.

Interim accommodation for applicants who have a priority need and who have become homeless intentionally

17.124 If the applicant has a priority need\(^1\), but the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she became homeless intentionally, then the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty will not come to an end until the local housing authority is satisfied that interim accommodation has been secured for the applicant for a sufficient period to allow him or her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her own occupation\(^2\). The effect is that the local housing authority should continue to secure short-term accommodation for an applicant who has a priority need but became homeless intentionally, while the applicant makes efforts to secure his or her own accommodation.

17.125 The period of further accommodation starts from the date of notification to the applicant that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty was not owed to him or her\(^1\). The length of the period cannot be less than the 56-day period during which the local housing authority was subject to the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty\(^2\). It could be a longer period, because the local housing authority must be satisfied that the accommodation had been available for a ‘sufficient’ period to allow the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for his or her occupation. The Welsh Code advises that the period for which the accommodation is available after the ending of the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty must be ‘of a reasonable time frame’\(^3\). While the language at H(W)A 2014, s 69(3)–(6), is slightly different to that in HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), useful reference can be made to the case-law decided in respect of that latter duty\(^4\).

2. H(W)A 2014, 69(5) and (6). For two useful examples, see Welsh Code, paras 15.43–15.44.
3. Welsh Code, para 15.42.

17.126 When the provisions of H(W)A 2014, s 75(3), are brought into force\(^1\), the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test will be abolished for applicants who have a priority need related to children or young people in the household\(^2\). At that point, an additional set of applicants will fall within this duty to secure accommodation for a sufficient period. The duty will apply where the local housing authority is satisfied that no H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty because the local housing authority had previously secured an offer of accommodation for the applicant within the preceding five years.\(^1\)

Intended by the Welsh Ministers to be in 2019, see 17.24–17.26.

Once in force, \((W)A\) 2014, s 75(1) and (3) will confer a duty to accommodate applicants who became homeless intentionally, who do not have suitable accommodation available for their occupation (or any such accommodation is not available for a period of six months), who are eligible for help and who have a priority need and because they are either a pregnant woman or a person with whom she resides or might reasonably be expected to reside, or a person with whom a dependent child resides or might reasonably be expected to reside, or a person who was under the age of 21 when the application for help was made or a person with whom such a person resides or might reasonably be expected to reside, or a person aged between 21 and 25 years when the application was made who was previously looked after, accommodated or fostered or a person with whom such a person resides or might reasonably be expected reside. See 17.24–17.26.

\(^{1}\) \((W)A\) 2014, s 69(4)(b), s 75(3)(f).

17.127 Where a local housing authority in Wales decides that the \((W)A\) 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty has ended or is not owed to the applicant, it must notify the applicant in writing of its decision, the reasons for that decision, of the applicant’s right to request a review of that decision and of the time within such a request must be made. The applicant has a right to request a review of that decision and subsequently to appeal to the county court on a point of law.

Ending the duty to secure interim accommodation

17.128 \((W)A\) 2014, ss 69 and 79, contain the only circumstances in which the \((W)A\) 2014, s 68, interim accommodation duty comes to an end. A local housing authority cannot decide that the duty has come to an end for any reason that is not provided for in those sections.

\(^{1}\) \((W)A\) 2014, s 69; Welsh Code, paras 15.38–15.46.

17.129 The circumstances in which the \((W)A\) 2014, s 68, interim accommodation duty can come to an end are:

1. the local housing authority has decided that no \((W)A\) 2014, s 73(1), relief duty is owed to the applicant;\(^1\)
2. the \((W)A\) 2014, s 73(1) relief duty has come to an end;\(^2\)
3. the applicant refuses an offer of accommodation secured under \((W)A\) 2014, s 68, which the local housing authority is satisfied is suitable for the applicant, and the applicant had been notified of the possible consequence of refusal;\(^3\)
4. the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from suitable interim accommodation made available for his or her occupation under \((W)A\) 2014, s 68;\(^4\)
5. the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant voluntarily ceased to occupy, as his or her only or principal home, suitable interim accommodation made available for his or her occupation under \((W)A\) 2014, s 68;\(^5\)
17.129 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

1. the local housing authority is no longer satisfied that the applicant is eligible for help;
2. the local housing authority is satisfied that a mistake of fact led to the applicant being notified that a duty was owed to him or her;
3. the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application;
4. the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is unreasonably failing to co-operate with it in connection with the exercise of its functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2; or
5. the local housing authority has notified the applicant that it intends to notify, or has notified, another local housing authority in Wales or England of its opinion that the conditions are met for the referral of the applicant’s case to that other authority.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(3); Welsh Code, paras 15.41–15.44. It may be that the applicant is then accommodated under the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), see 17.146–17.199. If the applicant has a priority need but the local housing authority is satisfied that he or she has become homeless intentionally, the duty to accommodate in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) will not apply, but the local housing authority must continue to secure accommodation for a sufficient period to allow the applicant a reasonable opportunity of securing his or her accommodation: H(W)A 2014, s 69(3)–(6). See 17.124–17.127 for further discussion.

10 H(W)A 2014, s 82(1). In this case, a duty to accommodate the applicant until notification of any decision whether the conditions for referral are met arises: H(W)A 2014, s 82(1) and Welsh Code paras 18.22–18.26. See 17.120–17.123.

17.130 If the local housing authority has decided that the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty has come to an end because of one of those circumstances, it must notify the applicant in accordance with H(W)A 2014, s 84. The H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty does not end until the applicant has received that notification.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 69(1); Welsh Code, paras 15.93–15.98.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(1).

17.131 The notification must be in writing and must inform the applicant:

1. that the local housing authority no longer regards itself as being subject to the duty;
2. of the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end;
3. of the applicant’s right to request a review of that decision; and
4. of the time within which such a request must be made.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1) and (3).

17.132 If the written notice is not received by an applicant, he or she may be treated as having been notified if the notice is made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection by the applicant or on the applicant's behalf.\(^1\)

1. H(W)A 2014, s 84(4); Welsh Code, para 15.96.

17.133 The applicant has the right to request a review of a decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty has come to an end.\(^1\) If the review confirms the original decision, the applicant has the right to appeal to the county court on a point of law.\(^2\)

Power to secure interim accommodation pending a statutory review

17.134 Local housing authorities in Wales have a power to secure, or to continue to secure, that suitable accommodation is available for an applicant's occupation pending a decision on a review.\(^1\) When deciding whether or not to exercise that power, a local housing authority should consider:

- the merits of the applicant’s case on review, and the extent to which it could be said that the decision was either one that appears to be contrary to the merits of the case, or one that required a very fine balance of judgment that could have gone either way;
- whether any new material, information or argument has been put to the local housing authority, which could have a real effect on the decision under review;
- the personal circumstances of the applicant;
- the consequences to the applicant of a decision not to exercise the discretion to accommodate;
- the public sector equality duty;\(^2\)
- the local housing authority's duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of any children; and
- any other relevant considerations.

These factors are colloquially known as 'the Mohammed factors'\(^4\) and are discussed further at 16.240–16.246.

Power to secure interim accommodation pending an appeal to the county court

17.135 Local housing authorities in Wales have a power to secure, or continue to secure, that suitable accommodation is available for an applicant's occupation pending any appeal to the county court.\(^1\) The power is only available where the local housing authority has previously owed one of the following duties to the applicant:
17.135 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

(1) the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) interim accommodation duty¹;
(2) the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty²; or
(3) the duty to secure accommodation pending referral under the ‘conditions for referral’ provisions⁴.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 88(5); Welsh Code, paras 20.42–20.45. The power in H(W)A 2014, s 88(5), is in almost identical terms to the power in HA 1996, s 204(4) for local housing authorities in England discussed further at 16.258–16.277.
² H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), see 17.118–17.119.
³ H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), see 17.146–17.199.
⁴ H(W)A 2014, s 82, see 17.120–17.123 and 17.138–17.145.

17.136 The common thread running through this list is that the applicant either has, or the local housing authority initially had reason to believe that he or she might have, a priority need. If the local housing authority had not been subject to any of those duties, there is no power in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, for a local housing authority to secure interim accommodation pending appeal.

17.137 Any challenge to a local housing authority’s refusal to secure accommodation pending the determination of a county court appeal must be brought by a separate appeal, also on a point of law, to the county court under H(W)A 2014, s 89¹.

Powers and duties to secure interim accommodation for applicants referred under the conditions for referral provisions

17.138 Where a local housing authority in Wales concludes that the conditions for referral¹ to another local housing authority are met², it must notify the applicant of that decision¹. The notification must be in writing and contain the reasons for the local housing authority’s decision, as well as informing the applicant of his or her right to request a review of the decision and of the time within the request for a review must be made³. The local housing authority will also notify the other local housing authority of its opinion that the conditions for referral have been met⁴.

² H(W)A 2014, s 80, see Chapter 14.
³ H(W)A 2014, ss 82(2) and 84(1), see 14.162–14.163.
⁴ H(W)A 2014, s 84(1).
⁵ H(W)A 2014, s 80(1) and (2).

17.139 Once that notification to the applicant has been received, the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty will come to an end. In these cases, the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty will not arise⁵. Instead, the local housing authority will be under a duty to continue to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant until the applicant is notified of the subsequent decision – either by agreement between the two local housing authorities or after resolution of the dispute under the procedure in the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998² – determining whether the conditions for referral are met, or not³.

Interim accommodation duties and powers 17.145

17.140 The applicant will then receive a second notification. That notification must be given by the first local housing authority. It must contain reasons for the decision that the conditions for referral are met, or are not met, and inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review and of the time within which to make the request.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 82(2).
2 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1).

17.141 If the second notification informs the applicant that it has been decided that the conditions for referral are not met, then the interim accommodation duty falls away and is replaced by the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty and the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty for applicants who have, or in respect of whom the local housing authority has reason to believe may have, a priority need under H(W)A 2014, s 68(3).

1 See 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, ss 68(3) and 82(3), see 17.120–17.123.

17.142 However, if the applicant is notified that both local housing authorities agree (or it has been determined by arbitration) that the conditions for referral are met, then the duty to accommodate on the first local housing authority comes to an end.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 82(5).

17.143 If the applicant has been referred to another local housing authority in Wales, that second local housing authority will be under the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty and any H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty.

1 See 17.73–17.117.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 82(4). The H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty will be owed if the second local housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need.

17.144 If the applicant has been referred to a local housing authority in England, that local housing authority will be under the main housing duty in HA 1996, s 193(2).

1 HA 1996, s 201A(2). For HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty on local housing authorities in England, see 16.94–16.199.

17.145 If the applicant requests a review of the decision to refer, and asks to remain in accommodation secured by the first local housing authority while the review is considered, the first local housing authority has no further duty to accommodate. However, it does have a power to continue to secure interim accommodation pending review and, later, pending any appeal to the county court. The refusal to exercise that power cannot be subject of a statutory review or a subsequent appeal to the county court. Any challenge would have to be by way of judicial review.

1  H(W)A 2014, ss 82(6) and 88(5). The Welsh Code recommends that applicants who may have a priority need are accommodated whilst their request for a review is being considered: para 18.25.

DUTY TO SECURE ACCOMMODATION FOR APPLICANTS IN PRIORITY NEED

Overview of the duty

17.146 This duty replaces the previous ‘main housing duty’ in HA 1996, s 193(2). It is intended to provide a safety-net for applicants who are homeless, eligible for help and have a priority need. However, the duty is not owed to certain applicants, even though they fulfil those conditions. Those applicants who are not owed the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) duty are:

- those who have been successfully helped to secure their own accommodation as a result of the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duty; and/or H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty;
- those who have refused offers of suitable accommodation made under the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty; or
- if the local housing authority is having regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test, and is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally.

2  H(W)A 2014, s 75(1); Welsh Code, chapter 14.
3  See 17.62–17.65.

5  H(W)A 2014, ss 74(5) and 75(1), see 17.109–17.117.

17.147 Provision of accommodation under this duty will not be for the long-term. It is expected that the applicant will either find his or her own accommodation or, more frequently, will be made a private rented sector offer or an offer of a secure or an assured tenancy. Provided that any of those offers is of suitable accommodation, the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will come to an end if the applicant accepts or refuses such an offer.

Applicants entitled to the duty

17.148 The H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty is owed to applicants:

- who were previously owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty; and
- that duty came to an end as a result of either:

Duty to secure accommodation for applicants in priority need 17.151

- the local housing authority being satisfied, before the end of the 56-day period, that reasonable steps had been taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation was available for the occupation by the applicant1;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant either:
  - does not have suitable accommodation available for occupation;
  - has suitable accommodation but it is not likely that the accommodation will be available for his or her occupation for a period of at least six months from the date of notification that the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73 does not apply;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is eligible for help2;
- the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need3; and
- if the local housing authority is having regard to the 'becoming homeless intentionally' test4, it is not satisfied that the applicant became homeless intentionally5.

17.149 It can be expected that anyone entitled to accommodation under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), would already have been accommodated under the interim duty in H(W)A 2014, s 68(3)6. That interim accommodation duty will come to an end when the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), comes to an end2.

1 Because the interim accommodation duty is owed to applicants whom the local housing authority is either satisfied have a priority need or where the local housing authority has reason to believe that they have a priority need: H(W)A 2014, s 68(3), see 17.120–17.123.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(3), see 17.128–17.133. Welsh Code, para 15.41, advises that the same accommodation can be used for performance of both the interim accommodation duty in H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), and performance of the subsequent H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), duty, provided that the accommodation remains suitable for the applicant and for the members of his or her household.

17.150 H(W)A 2014, s 75(3) is not due to come into force until 20191. Once it does come into force, the duty to accommodate in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), will be owed to certain categories of people who have a priority need, generally because they have dependent children, or are pregnant or young people, whether or not they have become homeless intentionally2.

1 Welsh Code, para 14.10.

Performing the duty

17.151 The accommodation secured under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will not be long-term accommodation, in the form of a secure or
17.151 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales assured tenancy. It might be an assured shorthold tenancy. Accommodation secured under this duty must always be suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household.¹

Charging for accommodation

17.152 The local housing authority can secure accommodation for applicants free of charge. More usually, it will require an applicant to pay whatever amount the local housing authority considers he or she can reasonably afford.
The provisions permitting a local housing authority to require an applicant to pay charges are in H(W)A 2014, s 90 and are identical¹ to the equivalent provision in HA 1996, s 205(2)².

¹ Save that the wording is in plainer English.
² See 16.22–16.27 for discussion.

17.153 Accommodation secured under this duty must be affordable for the applicant. If it is not affordable, it will not be suitable. Guidance on charges and on affordability is given in paras 11.12–11.14 and 19.26–19.29 of the Welsh Code.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 59(2), see 18.45–18.47.

Out of area placements

17.154 There is a presumption that the local housing authority will secure, or help to secure, accommodation for the applicant in its own district. If it does not, it is under an obligation to notify the local housing authority in which the accommodated is situated. These provisions are identical to those in HA

² H(W)A 2014, s 9(2).
³ See 18.48.

Terms and tenure

17.155 If accommodation is provided directly by the local housing authority, it will not be under a secure tenancy or contract.¹

¹ Housing Act 1985, Sch 1, para 4 and (when in force), Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016, Sch
2, Pt 4.

17.156 Where accommodation is provided by a private landlord, it will normally be on the terms of an assured shorthold tenancy. When the Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016 is brought into force, Sch 2, Pt 4, will provide that accommodation provided by a private landlord under any of the accommodation duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, including the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) duty, will not normally be an occupation contract (and so have the rights provided for in the Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016) for the first 12 months of the contract, unless the landlord gives earlier notice to the tenant that it is to be an occupation contract.

17.157 The terms of any tenancy are a matter of negotiation between the prospective tenant and landlord. If the landlord offers standard terms and conditions, the provisions of Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 are likely to apply.¹

How does the duty come to an end?

17.158 H(W)A 2014, s 76 specifies four separate circumstances by which the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), can come to an end. Those circumstances are:

• that the applicant accepts an offer of suitable accommodation²;
• that the applicant refuses an offer of suitable accommodation³;
• that the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from suitable interim accommodation made available for the applicant’s occupation⁴; or
• that the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has voluntarily ceased to occupy as his or her only or principal home, suitable interim accommodation made available for the applicant’s occupation⁵.

⁵ H(W)A 2014, s 76(7), see 17.185–17.188.

17.159 In addition, the duty will come to an end if any of the events in H(W)A 2014, s 79(2)–(5) occur.¹

¹ See 17.189–17.197.

17.160 The duty does not come to an end until the applicant is notified in writing:

• of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end;
• of the reasons for the decision;
• of the applicant’s right to request a review of that decision; and
• of the 21-day period in which to request a review.²

If no notification is received containing that information, the duty continues.³ The applicant has the right to request a review of the local housing authority’s decision.⁴

17.161 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

Applicant accepts an offer of suitable accommodation

17.161 The first circumstance is where the applicant has accepted an offer of suitable accommodation. The offer could be made under the provisions of HA 1996, Pt 6 (‘allocation of accommodation’), in which case it would be an offer of a secure, introductory or assured tenancy granted by a local housing authority or registered social landlord. Or it could be an offer made outside of HA 1996, Pt 6, of an assured tenancy (including an assured shorthold tenancy). This latter provision could apply to one of two scenarios:

- an offer of an assured tenancy made by a registered social landlord directly to the applicant, not through HA 1996, Pt 6; or
- an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy, made either by a registered social landlord or by a private landlord.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(2); Welsh Code, paras 15.61–15.62. See also Chapter 18.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 76(2)(a).
3 H(W)A 2014, s 76(2)(b).
4 Technically a private landlord could offer an assured, rather than an assured shorthold tenancy, but this would be unlikely.

17.162 There are no specific notification duties or other requirements that must be complied with before the duty can come to an end. The key is ‘acceptance’ of one of these types of tenancy. However, if the offer is made under HA 1996, Pt 6, or falls within the definition of ‘private rented sector offer’, if the applicant refuses the offer, the local housing authority is likely to decide that the duty has come to an end because of the refusal. A ‘private rented sector offer’ must be of a fixed-term tenancy for a minimum period of at least six months. If the assured shorthold tenancy being offered is for a fixed term of less than six months or is a periodic tenancy, then the applicant may accept the offer but would be free to refuse it without any consequences.

1 Although there are notification requirements if the local housing authority wishes to bring the duty to an end because the applicant has refused an offer: H(W)A 2014, s 76(3), see 17.169.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 76(4); see 17.173–17.179.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(b), see 17.165–17.179.
4 H(W)A 2014, s 76(4)(c), see 17.173–17.177.

17.163 The applicant has the right to accept the offer whilst also requesting a review of whether or not the accommodation offered is suitable for his or her needs. Given that the consequences if the applicant refuses an offer of accommodation are that the local housing authority need no longer accommodate the applicant and his or her household, this must normally be the safest course of action.

17.164 The applicant has the right to request a review of this decision that the duty has come to an end. The local housing authority has a power to secure accommodation pending the outcome of the review.

1 H(W)A 2014 s 85(1)(c), see 19.77–19.80.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(11), see 17.134. The local housing authority is unlikely to exercise that power if it is satisfied that the applicant has accepted suitable accommodation.
Duty to secure accommodation for applicants in priority need 17.170

Applicant refuses an offer of suitable accommodation

17.165 The local housing authority can decide that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty has come to an end because the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation\(^1\). Only three specific offers of accommodation have this effect. If a different offer of accommodation is made to the applicant, the applicant is free to refuse it without consequences.

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 76(3); Welsh Code, paras 15.63–15.66. See also Chapter 18.

17.166 The three types of offers of accommodation are:

- an offer of suitable interim accommodation under H(W)A 2014, s 75\(^1\);
- a private rented sector offer\(^2\); or
- an offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6\(^3\).

All accommodation offered must be ‘suitable’ for the needs of the applicant and the members of his or her household\(^4\).

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(a), see 17.172.
\(^2\) H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(b), see 17.173–17.177.
\(^3\) H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(c), see 17.178–17.179.
\(^4\) See Welsh Code, chapter 19; and Chapter 18.

17.167 The Welsh Code advises that, in the case of private rented offers and offers made under HA 1996, Pt 6, an applicant should receive a written offer, which states that:

- it is a final offer; and
- the local housing authority is satisfied that:
  - the accommodation is suitable;
  - the accommodation will be available for a minimum of six months; and
  - it would be reasonable for the applicant to accept the offer\(^1\).

\(^1\) Welsh Code, paras 15.67–15.72.

17.168 The Welsh Code also advises that applicants should be given the chance to view accommodation before being required to decide whether they will accept or refuse it, and before being required to sign any tenancy agreement\(^1\).

\(^1\) Welsh Code, paras 15.14–15.15.

17.169 Finally, the applicant must have been given notice in writing of the possible consequence of refusal or acceptance of the offer, and of the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation whilst also accepting the offer\(^1\). The duty cannot come to an end unless this notification has been given.

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 76(3) and 84(1). Welsh Code, paras 15.63–15.66.

17.170 The applicant has the right to accept the offer whilst also requesting a review of whether or not the accommodation offered is suitable for his or her needs\(^1\). Given that the consequences if the applicant refuses an offer of accommodation are that the local housing authority need no longer accommodate the applicant and his or her household, this must normally be the safest course of action.

17.171 If the applicant refuses the offer, he or she has the right to request a review of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end. The local housing authority will no longer be under a duty to accommodate the applicant and his or her household but has a power to secure interim accommodation pending the outcome of the review.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c) see 19.77–19.80.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 69(11), see 17.134.

AN OFFER OF SUITABLE INTERIM ACCOMMODATION

17.172 The duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), comes to an end if the applicant refuses suitable accommodation offered by the local housing authority under that duty. This provision is similar to that in HA 1996, s 193(5), for local housing authorities in England. The applicant must have been notified in writing of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(a); Welsh Code, para 15.63.

A PRIVATE RENTED SECTOR OFFER

17.173 A private rented sector offer is defined in H(W)A 2014, s 76(4) as:

- an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is available for the applicant’s occupation; and
- the offer is made with the approval of the local housing authority in pursuance of arrangements made by the local housing authority with the landlord with a view to bringing the local housing authority’s duty under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), to an end; and
- the tenancy being offered is a fixed-term tenancy for a period of at least six months.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(b); Welsh Code, paras 15.64 and 15.67–15.72.

17.174 Any offer of an assured shorthold tenancy that does not fall within this definition, most obviously a fixed term tenancy for a shorter period of six months or a periodic tenancy, will not be a private rented sector offer. The applicant can accept such an offer if he or she wishes to, but there will no consequences if he or she refuses the offer. A ‘fixed term tenancy’ is defined as ‘any tenancy other than a periodic tenancy’.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(2)(b), see 17.161–17.164.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 76(9); Housing Act 1988, s 45(1).
Duty to secure accommodation for applicants in priority need 17.178

17.175 A private rented sector offer will not be considered suitable if one or more of the following apply:

- the local housing authority is of the view that the accommodation is not in a reasonable physical condition;
- the local housing authority is of the view that the accommodation does not comply with all statutory requirements, such as requirements relating to fire, gas, electricity, carbon monoxide or other safety, planning, and licences for houses in multiple occupation; or
- the local housing authority is of the view that the landlord is not a fit and person within the meaning of H(W)A 2014, s 20, to act in the capacity of landlord.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 20, requires a local housing authority to have regard to all matters which it considers appropriate, when deciding whether a person is a fit and proper person to be licensed to carry out lettings and/or property management activities.
2 Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (Wales) Order 2015, SI 2015/1268, art 8; see the CD Rom with this book. See 18.173.

17.176 The applicant will know that this is a ‘private rented sector offer’, designed to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty to an end, because the written offer should state that it is a final offer, and that the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation is suitable, would be available for a minimum of six months and that it would be reasonable for the applicant to accept it. The written notification of the consequences of refusal or acceptance could be contained in the offer, or in a separate notification.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.65.

17.177 If the applicant is a ‘restricted case’, then the local housing authority should seek to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to an end by making a private rented sector offer, rather than by making an offer under HA 1996, Pt 6, ‘so far as reasonably practicable’. The applicant will know that he or she is regarded as a restricted case because the notice of the outcome of the local housing authority’s assessment will have informed the applicant that the duty under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), will only be owed to him or her because of the presence of the restricted person. The notice will also have explained that the presumption is that the local housing authority will make the applicant a private rented sector offer.

1 Defined as a case where the local housing authority would not be satisfied that it owed the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty without having regard to a restricted person: H(W)A 2014, s 76(5). For ‘restricted person’, see H(W)A 2014, s 63(5) and 9.54–9.56 and 11.163–11.167.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 76(5); Welsh Code, paras 15.73–15.74.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 63(2), see 9.54–9.56. If the applicant would have had a priority need in any event, without the presence of a restricted person, he or she will not be a restricted case.

An offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6

17.178 An offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6, will be an offer of a secure, introductory or assured tenancy. The offer might be made by the local housing authority which owes the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), or it might be made by another local housing authority. The tenancy offered might be a tenancy of the local housing authority’s own stock (offered as an introductory or secure tenancy) or of an assured tenancy from a registered social landlord.
17.178 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(c); Welsh Code, paras 15.65–15.66.
2 See 1.23.

17.179 The applicant will know that this is an offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6, designed to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty to an end, because the written offer should state that it is a final offer, that the local housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation is suitable, and that it would be reasonable for the applicant to accept it. The written notification of the consequences of refusal or acceptance could be contained in the offer letter, or in a separate notification.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.65.

The applicant has become homeless intentionally from suitable interim accommodation

17.180 The H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will come to an end where the local housing authority notifies the applicant that it is satisfied that he or she has become homeless intentionally from suitable interim accommodation. Interim accommodation is defined in H(W)A 2014, s 76(6) as either:

- accommodation that was initially made available to the applicant under the interim accommodation duty in H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), and the local housing authority then continued make it available under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty; or
- accommodation that was made available to the applicant under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 76(6); Welsh Code, para 15.75.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 76(6); for accommodation secured under the interim accommodation duty in H(W)A s 68(3), see 17.118–17.127.

17.181 H(W)A 2014, s 76(6) contains the same wording previously used in HA 1996, s 193(6)(b) and requires the familiar test of ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ to be applied by the local housing authority. It also requires the local housing authority to be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant became homeless intentionally. It follows that if there is doubt about the issue, that doubt must be decided in the applicant’s favour.

1 See 16.127–16.129.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 77; see Welsh Code, chapter 17; and see chapter 13.

17.182 This set of circumstances which can end the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty envisages a much broader range of scenarios than the applicant merely walking away from accommodation. The definition of ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ is wide enough to include numerous events where the accommodation ceased to be available for the applicant’s occupation because of the applicant’s deliberate actions or omissions, such as a failure to pay the rent, or any other fault of the applicant which led to the landlord obtaining possession of the property.¹

17.183 The interim accommodation lost must have been suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household. In addition, it must be the applicant’s own actions or omissions which led to the loss of the accommodation, rather than the acts or omissions of a member of the applicant’s household.²

² See Chapter 18.

Although an applicant can be found to have become homeless intentionally where he or she acquiesced in, or failed to control, deliberate actions or omissions by other members of his or her household. See 13.95–13.99.

17.184 The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty has come to an end for this reason. Once the decision has been notified to the applicant, the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will no longer be owed but the local housing authority has a power to secure accommodation for the applicant pending the outcome of the review.²

² H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c), see 19.77–19.80.

Applicant has voluntarily ceased to occupy suitable interim accommodation 17.185 The H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will come to an end where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has voluntarily ceased to occupy, as his or her only or principal home, suitable interim accommodation made available for his or her occupation.¹ Interim accommodation is defined in H(W)A 2014, s 76(7) as either:

• accommodation that was initially made available to the applicant under H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty, and the local housing authority then continued to make it available under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty arose; or

• accommodation that was made available to the applicant under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty.²

² H(W)A 2014, s 76(7); for accommodation secured under the interim accommodation duty in H(W)A s 68(3), see 17.118–17.127.

17.186 H(W)A 2014, s 76(7) is framed in the same terms as the test previously in HA 1996, s 193(6)(d)¹ and requires the local housing authority to be ‘satisfied’ that the applicant has voluntarily ceased to occupy the accommodation as his or her only or principal home. It follows that if there is doubt about the issue, that doubt must be decided in the applicant’s favour. Occupation as his or her ‘only or principal home’ is the statutory test by which a tenant has security of tenure under Housing Act 1985 (secure tenancies) or
Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

Housing Act 1988 (assured tenancies)².

1 See 16.140–16.141.

For this set of circumstances to apply, the accommodation must have been suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household¹. In addition, it must be the applicant who has voluntarily ceased to occupy the accommodation, not a member of the applicant’s household.

See Chapter 18.

The applicant has the right to request a review of any decision that the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty has come to an end for this reason¹. Once the decision has been notified to the applicant, the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty will no longer be owed but the local housing authority has a power to secure accommodation for the applicant pending the outcome of the review².

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c), see 19.77–19.80.
² H(W)A 2014, s 69(11), see 17.134.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH THE DUTIES CAN END

The circumstances in which each of the different duties to secure accommodation, or to help to secure accommodation, can come to an end are discussed by reference to the respective duties. In addition, there are four specific circumstances that can lead to a local housing authority notifying the applicant that any of the duties under H(W)A 2014, ss 66, 68, 73 or 75 have come to an end³.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 79; Welsh Code, paras 15.79–15.89.
² H(W)A 2014, s 79(2), see 17.192. For ‘eligible for help’, see Chapter 11.
³ H(W)A 2014, s 79(3), see 17.193.
⁴ H(W)A 2014, s 79(4), see 17.194.
Additional circumstances in which the duties can end 17.193

17.191 The decision that a duty has come to an end for any of these reasons is not effective until it is notified to the applicant in accordance with H(W)A 2014, s 84. That written notification must include the reason why the local housing authority has decided that it is no longer subject to the duty and must inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review and of the 21-day time limit for requesting a review. The applicant has the right to request a review of a decision that the relevant duty has come to an end for any of the above reasons. If he or she had been accommodated under the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty, the local housing authority has a power to secure accommodation pending the outcome of the review. In each case, the local housing authority has to be ‘satisfied’ of the relevant reason for the duty coming to an end. If there is any doubt, it should be applied in the applicant’s favour.

4 H(W)A 2014, s 69(11); see 17.134.

Applicant is no longer eligible for help

17.192 An applicant must remain eligible for help at all times in order to continue to be entitled to any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. If, at any point, an applicant who was being helped to secure accommodation, or was being accommodated under any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, finds that his or her immigration status has changed, and he or she is no longer eligible, the duty will come to an end.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 79(2); Welsh Code para 15.79; see Chapter 11 for ‘eligible for help’.

Mistake of fact

17.193 If a local housing authority in Wales discovers that its assessment of the applicant’s case was based on a mistake of fact, which led to the applicant having been notified that a duty was owed to him or her under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, then any duty to help the applicant or to accommodate the applicant can come to an end. The mistake of fact may have come about as a result of a simple mistake or misunderstanding by the applicant or by anyone else. However, anyone who knowingly or recklessly makes a statement which is false in a material point, or knowingly withholds information requested by the local housing authority, and did so intending to induce the local housing authority to believe that a person is entitled to accommodation or assistance under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, will have committed a criminal offence.

Applicant has withdrawn his or her application

17.194 If the applicant expressly withdraws his or her application, putting that withdrawal in writing¹, the local housing authority can notify him or her of its decision that the duty has come to an end because of the withdrawal. What if the applicant simply falls silent, and fails to respond to communications from the local housing authority? And what if the applicant verbally advises the local housing authority that he or she has withdrawn his or her application? Can either of those circumstances be interpreted as the applicant withdrawing his or her application? The Welsh Code advises that it would be good practice for applications to be considered ‘for closure’ (or withdrawn) if there has been no contact with the applicant for six weeks and that if the applicant then resumes contact, that should be considered as a fresh application². However, local housing authorities should be cautious about rigidly applying such a rule. The better course of action might be that if the applicant responds to notification of the local housing authority’s decision that the duty has come to an end, because he or she has withdrawn his or her application by failing to maintain contact, and requests a review or otherwise contests the decision, that very response will suggest that the application has not in fact been withdrawn³.

2. Welsh Code, para 15.84.
3. The Homelessness Statistics in Wales 2016–2017 (Welsh Government, July 2017) show that 11% of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty and 13% of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty had withdrawn their application, and roughly half of each of those groups were assessed as their applications having been withdrawn due to loss of contact, rather than expressly withdrawn. A smaller percentage of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), accommodation duty withdrew their applications: 3%.

Applicant is unreasonably failing to co-operate

17.195 A local housing authority should be cautious about ending the relevant duty on this basis¹. The local housing authority must be satisfied that the applicant is ‘unreasonably’ failing to co-operate, rather than simply making a mistake or there being a misunderstanding. The Welsh Code notes that the local housing authority must be satisfied that any failure of co-operate is not because the applicant is vulnerable, or because he or she has a support need which is not being met².

2. Welsh Code, para 15.86.

17.196 The Welsh Code gives examples of circumstances in which an applicant might be considered unreasonably to have failed to cooperate:

- where the applicant has agreed to take certain reasonable steps but then fails to take them, without any good reason, such as agreeing to mediation and then failing to engage with it;
- where, despite every effort by the local housing authority, the applicant has failed to provide necessary information; or
- where the applicant has unreasonably failed to agree to the steps identified by the local housing authority when it is helping the applicant to prevent his or her homelessness or secure accommodation.

1 Welsh Code, para 15.86.

17.197 The Welsh Code also advises that local housing authorities should make every effort to obtain the applicant’s cooperation and should explain the consequences of not cooperating. If it is considering whether or not to make a decision that the duty has come to an end for this reason, it should first explain its reasons to the applicant and give the applicant a reasonable opportunity to co-operate. The Welsh Code also states that, even if the local housing authority decides that its duty has come to an end for this reason, it would be good practice for limited assistance to be offered to the applicant in order to avoid the need for the applicant to make a fresh application.

1 Welsh Code, paras 15.87–15.88.
2 Welsh Code, para 15.89.

The Homelessness Statistics in Wales 2016–2017 (Welsh Government, July 2017) show that 5% of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty and 8% of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty had been notified that the relevant duty had come to an end due to non-co-operation. 3% of applicants owed the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty had been notified that the relevant duty had come to an end due to non-co-operation.

ADDITIONAL DUTIES

17.198 There are three duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, that are very closely modelled on the equivalent duties on local housing authorities in England set out in HA 1996, Pt 7. Those duties are discussed in detail in CHAPTER 17. We highlight any differences between H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 and HA 1996, Pt 7, in relation to each duty.

1 As amended by HRA 2017.
2 As amended by HRA 2017.

Duty to protect property

17.199 This duty is equivalent to the duty in HA 1996, ss 211–212. The duty applies where:

• the local housing authority has reason to believe that there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, the applicant’s property by reason of his or her inability to protect it or deal with it; and

• the applicant is, or has been, the beneficiary of one of the following duties:
  – the H(W)A 2014, s 68 interim accommodation duty, but only for applicants in actual or apparent priority need: H(W)A 2014, s 68;
  – the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty; or – the duties at H(WA) 214, s 82, owed to an applicant whose case is considered for referral or is referred, in the case of an applicant...
17.199 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales in priority need7.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, s 5(12).
5. See 17.146–17.199.
6. See 17.120–17.123.

17.200 The common thread between this list of duties is that the applicant either has a priority need, or at some point the local housing authority had reason to believe that he or she had a priority need1.

For priority need, see H(W)A 2014, s 70; Welsh Code, chapter 16 and 12.29 and 12.195–12.228.

17.201 Once the local housing authority becomes subject to this duty to protect an applicant’s property, the duty continues even though the duty under which the applicant has been helped, or accommodated, might itself have come to an end1.

17.202 The local housing authority also has a power, but not a duty, to protect the personal property of any applicant who is eligible for help by taking ‘any steps it considers reasonable’2. The power arises in the same circumstances as the duty applies, that is where the local housing authority has reason to believe that there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, the applicant’s personal property by reason of his or her inability to protect it or deal with it and no other suitable arrangements have been or are being made. The local housing authority could use the power to assist applicants who do not have a priority need, but whose possessions might be at risk of loss or damage.

17.203 The duty under H(W)A 2014, s 93(1) is to ‘take reasonable steps to prevent the loss of the personal property of the applicant or prevent or mitigate damage to it’3. In order to perform this duty, local housing authorities have the power to enter, at all reasonable times, the applicant’s usual, or last usual, place of residence in order to deal with the applicant’s personal property by reason of his or her inability to protect it or deal with it and no other suitable arrangements have been or are being made. If a local housing authority in Wales is proposing to exercise this power, its officer must produce the valid documentation setting out his or her authority to enter the premises, if requested to do so4. It is a criminal offence to obstruct officers of the local housing authority who are exercising this power unless the person has a reasonable excuse for the obstruction5. The local housing authority is entitled to impose conditions when it performs the duty, including conditions about reasonable charges and disposal of property6.

1. H(W)A 2014, s 93(1); Welsh Code, paras 11.15–11.19.
3. H(W)A 2014, s 94(2). This is not a requirement for local housing authorities in England.
5. H(W)A 2014, s 93(4); Welsh Code, para 11.19; see 16.298.
Additional duties 17.207

17.204 The duty comes to an end when:

- the local housing authority moves the applicant’s property to a particular location, at the applicant’s request and the applicant has been informed by the local housing authority that the duty has come to an end; or
- the local housing authority no longer has any reason to believe that there is a danger of loss of or damage to the applicant’s property by virtue of his or her inability to protect it or deal with it.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 94(4); Welsh Code, para 11.18.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 94(6); Welsh Code, para 11.20.

17.205 The applicant must be notified of the local housing authority’s decision that it is no longer subject to the duty, or no longer willing to exercise the power, to protect possessions. The applicant does not have a right to request a review of that decision, and so should initially ask the local housing authority to reconsider its decision. If that route is unsuccessful, the only avenue for challenge would be to bring a judicial review claim, challenging the lawfulness of the decision.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 94(8) and (9); Welsh Code, para 11.21.

Duties to co-operate and to provide information
17.206 There are two mechanisms by which a local housing authority can seek help with performing its functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95; Welsh Code, chapter 6.

General arrangements to promote co-operation between social services and housing departments or authorities

17.207 County councils and county borough councils in Wales are required, by H(W)A 2014, s 95(1), to make arrangements to promote general co-operation between their officers exercising social services functions and their officers exercising functions as the local housing authority. They must co-operate in order to achieve the following objectives in the local area:

(a) the prevention of homelessness;
(b) that suitable accommodation is or will be available for people who are or may be homeless;
(c) that satisfactory support is available for people who are or may become homeless; and
(d) the effective discharge of the council’s functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(1).
17.208 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

Specific requests for co-operation

17.208 The local housing authority may request a number of different bodies to co-operate with it in the exercise of its functions\(^1\) under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, ie helping the local housing authority to perform any of its duties or powers\(^2\). Those bodies might be located in Wales or in England. They are:

(a) another local housing authority;
(b) a social services authority;
(c) a registered social landlord;
(d) a new town corporation;
(e) a private registered provider of social housing; or
(f) a housing action trust\(^3\).

The list of specified bodies is the same as appears in HA 1996, s 213, which contains the list of bodies required to co-operate with a request for assistance from a local housing authority in England\(^4\).

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(2)–(5); Welsh Code, paras 6.3–6.4.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 95(2).
3 H(W)A 2014, s 95(5).
4 See 15.222–15.228. Note that H(W)A 2014, s 95, does not contain provision for a local housing authority in Wales to request a local authority in Scotland to co-operate.

17.209 This list of bodies can be amended by order of the Welsh Ministers\(^1\). There is detailed guidance in chapter 6 of the Welsh Code. In addition to the list of bodies specified in H(W)A 2014, s 95(5), the Welsh Code advises that local health boards are also under a duty to co-operate and that the Welsh Ministers intend to issue joint guidance on the duties of co-operation expected between local health boards and local housing authorities with regard to homeless persons\(^2\). The Welsh Code also advises that domestic abuse coordinators, registered social landlords, housing advice services, private rented sector representatives, Supporting People Teams, criminal justice agencies, community safety partnerships, the National Offender Management Service, Community Rehabilitation Companies, and Youth Offending Teams should be co-operating with local housing authorities in respect of tackling homelessness\(^3\).

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(6). Note that the Welsh Ministers may not add a Minister of the Crown to the list: H(W)A 2014, s 95(7).
2 National Health Service Act 2006, s 82 and National Health Service (Wales) Act 2006, s 12(3);
3 Welsh Code, paras 6.17–6.20 and 6.23–6.35.

17.210 Once one of these bodies has received a request for co-operation, it ‘must comply’ with the request\(^4\). It can only refuse if it considers that complying would either be incompatible with its own duties or otherwise have an adverse effect on the exercise of its own functions, and it must put those reasons in writing\(^5\). The Welsh Code advises: ‘[t]he presumption is now placed clearly on the other service to co-operate unless it can demonstrate that the proposed action would be incompatible with its duties. Their reasons would have to be given in writing and it would not be sufficient to say that there were other priorities that had to take precedence\(^6\).

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(2).
Additional duties 17.214

2 H(W)A 2014, s 95(2) and (4). The test under HA 1996, s 213, is that a body receiving a request shall co-operate so far as is reasonable in the circumstances.

3 Welsh Code, paras 6.3–6.4.

17.211 In addition, a local housing authority can request that any of the specified bodies provide it with information that it requires in order to exercise any of its functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Again, the body receiving the request must comply, and provide the information. It can only refuse to do so for the same reasons as apply to refusing to co-operate, and, again, must put in writing any reasons for refusal.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(3).

2 H(W)A 2014, s 95(3) and (4).

Duty to co-operate in certain cases involving children

17.212 Where a local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant with whom a person under the age of 18 resides, or might reasonably be expected to reside, may be ineligible for help under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or may not be owed any duty under H(W)A 2014, ss 66, 68, 73 or 75, then it must make arrangements for ensuring that the applicant is invited to consent to a referral to a social services department of the essential facts of the case and, if consent is given, that the social services department is made aware of those facts and of the local housing authority’s subsequent decision under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. This duty is equivalent to the duty on local housing authorities in England under HA 1996, ss 213A.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 61 and Sch 2; see Chapter 11.

2 See 17.45–17.72.

3 See 17.118–17.134.

4 See 17.73–17.117.

5 See 17.146–17.199.

6 H(W)A 2014, s 96; Welsh Code, paras 17.47–17.49.

7 H(W)A 2014, s 96(1) and (2).

17.213 This duty applies where the local housing authority has reason to believe that an applicant may:

• be ineligible for help; or
• be homeless but no duty to secure or help to secure accommodation under H(W)A 2014, ss 68, 73 or 75 is likely to apply; or
• be threatened with homelessness but no duty under H(W)A 2014, s 66, is likely to apply.

1 See Chapter 11.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 96(1).

17.214 The list is a little odd. The Welsh Code advises that applicants who may fall under this section will be those who are homeless or threatened with homelessness, but who will not be offered assistance because they are ineligible or have become homeless intentionally. Applicants who may be ineligible for help will not be entitled to any of those duties. All eligible applicants are entitled to the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duty or to the H(W)A 2014,
17.214 Duties to Assist the Homeless on Local Housing Authorities in Wales

s 73(1), relief duty so this duty would apply if any of those duties come to an end. Currently, the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty is only owed to applicants who have not become homeless intentionally and so this duty would apply to an applicant who has a priority need but has also become homeless intentionally. It would also apply if the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty came to an end in circumstances where the applicant remained homeless or threatened with homelessness.

1 Welsh Code, para 17.47.
2 For the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty, see 17.45–17.72.
3 Relief duty to help to secure accommodation for homeless applicants, see 17.73–17.117.
4 H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty ends on the occurrence of one of the events in H(W)A 2014, ss 67 and 79, see 17.59–17.72. The H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty ends on the occurrence of one of the events in H(W)A 2014, ss 74 and 79, see 17.84–17.117.
5 H(W)A 2014, s 75(2)(d), see 17.146. Provided of course that the local housing authority has chosen to have regard to the ‘becoming homeless intentionally’ test, see 13.252–13.255 and 17.18–17.23.
6 H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty comes to an end on the occurrence of one of the events in H(W)A 2014, ss 76 and 79, see 17.161–17.188.

17.215 Normally, an applicant will be asked to consent to the referral to social services. However, a referral can be made without that consent if the local housing authority has concerns about a child’s welfare.

INTRODUCTION

18.1 Any accommodation offered to an applicant either in performance of any of the duties under Housing Act 1996 (HA 1996), Pt 7, or the Housing (Wales) Act 2014 (H(W)A 2014), Pt 2, or in order to bring any of those duties to an end, must be suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household. Guidance as to ‘suitability’ is given in the Codes of Guidance.

1 As amended by Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.2 The amendments made to HA 1996, Pt 7, by the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017) mean that there are now a greater variety of circumstances in which local housing authorities may be required to secure, to may help to secure, accommodation for an applicant. The common thread running through all these situations is that any such accommodation must be suitable, even where it has been made available on a relatively informal basis, for example, where a family member of an applicant has agreed to allow the applicant to live with him or her. Any duty owed to the applicant under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, will not end if the applicant accepts or refuses accommodation that is not suitable.

1 For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.3 As later parts of this chapter demonstrate, ‘suitability’ is a flexible concept – what may be suitable for a few nights may not be suitable for a longer period. But there is always an irreducible minimum standard below which accommodation must not fall:

‘Although financial constraints and limited housing stock are matters that can be taken into account in determining suitability, there is a minimum and one must look at the needs and circumstances of the particular family and decide what is suitable for them, and there will be a line to be drawn below which the standard of accommodation cannot fall. If the accommodation falls below that line, and is accommodation which no reasonable local authority could consider to be suitable to the needs of the applicant, then the decision will be struck down, and an appeal to the resources argument will be of no avail.’

18.4 The courts recognise that, from time to time, local housing authorities may find it simply impossible to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation. Strictly, the local housing authority concerned will be immediately in breach of an acknowledged statutory duty. On any legal challenge it will need compelling evidence in order to avoid the making of a mandatory order. After all, if there is no accommodation reasonable for the applicant to occupy, he or she will still be ‘homeless’.

2 HA 1996, s 175(3); H(W)A 2014, s 55(3).

18.5 In Codona v Mid-Bedfordshire District Council, Auld LJ, giving the leading judgment, surveyed the case law and held that there are three aspects to the issue of whether or not accommodation is ‘suitable’:

1 suitability to a Wednesbury minimum level of suitability in the nature, location and standard of condition of the accommodation having regard to the circumstances of the applicant and his or her resident family, including the duration of their likely occupation of it;

2 the absolute nature of the duty which, though coupled with an elastic concept of suitability taking account of financial constraints and limited availability of accommodation, is not so elastic as to permit an offer below the Wednesbury minimum standard (or . . . outside the margin of appreciation); and

3 special consideration, in the regulatory provision for and in decision-making in individual cases, for the housing needs of particularly vulnerable applicants such as traditional gypsies with a view, so far as practicable and when considered with all the other circumstances, to facilitating their traditional way of life.

2 At [46].

18.6 Where the applicant for homelessness assistance is applying on the basis that, although he or she has accommodation that is available for him or her, the accommodation is not reasonable to continue to occupy, the accommodation might still be ‘suitable’ for the applicant to occupy. This is because the local housing authority will have to ask, and answer, two separate questions:

1 Is the accommodation reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy for as long as he or she would have to do unless the local housing authority takes action? If the answer is ‘No’, the applicant will be homeless.

2 If the applicant is entitled to an accommodation duty under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is the accommodation suitable for him or her to occupy for the period during which the applicant can expect to live there until he or she receives an offer of alternative accommodation?

If the accommodation is not reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy for one more night, then it will also not be suitable accommodation.

1 HA 1996, ss 175 and 176; H(W)A 2014, ss 55(3) and 56. See 10.17–10.32 for available accommodation and 10.73–10.134 for reasonable to continue to occupy.

18.6 Suitability of Accommodation

3 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See Chapter 16 for accommodation duties owed to applicants for homelessness assistance by local housing authorities in England.

4 See Chapter 17 for accommodation duties owed to applicants for homelessness assistance by local housing authorities in Wales.

'Suitable' accommodation for whom?

18.7 Any accommodation secured by a local housing authority in performance of its duties, or the exercise of its powers, under HA 1996, Pt 71, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or offered with a view to achieving a release from its duties, must be 'suitable'. But suitable for whom?

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.8 The focus throughout HA 1996, Pt 71, and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is on the 'applicant'.2 Accommodation secured for the applicant must be ‘available’ for him or her. 'Available' is given a special meaning, ensuring that accommodation is ‘available’ not only for the applicant, but also for all those people who might be included in his or her household.3 There is no precise mirroring of this expanded approach, beyond the needs of the individual applicant, in the treatment of 'suitability'.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 193(2) or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) for examples.

18.9 However, when dealing with ‘suitability’, HA 1996, Pt 71 refers to suitability for ‘a person’ rather than for ‘the applicant’. It follows that the determination of suitability requires regard not only for the individual needs of the applicant, but also for the needs of all those other persons who are members of the applicant’s family who normally reside with him or her or who might reasonably be expected to reside with him or her.4 This is certainly the approach taken in the Codes of Guidance, which, when dealing with suitability, specifically direct attention not only to the applicant but also to others in his or her family or household5.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 210(1). The equivalent provision in H(W)A 2014, s 64(1), retains the language of ‘applicant’.

3 HA 1996, ss 176, 206 and 210; H(W)A 2014, ss 56, 59 and 64(1) and (2). Although H(W)A 2014 uses different language, the same point applies.

4 English Code, para 16.6; Welsh Code, paras 19.4 and 19.11 (referring to ‘household’). In R (McCammon-Mckenzie) v Southwark London Borough Council [2004] EWHC 612 (Admin), [2004] All ER (D) 174 (Mar), Admin Ct, accommodation was not suitable for the applicant because her 16-year-old son could not occupy it with her (and had been taken into care as a result).

18.10 In 2001, the Court of Appeal proceeded on the uncontested assumption that the accommodation:

‘. . . has to be suitable for the particular homeless person and his or her family. There is no doubt that the question of whether or not the accommodation is suitable requires an assessment of all the qualities of the accommodation in the light of the needs and requirements of the homeless person and his or her family.’

‘Family’ was there used by the court in the sense of the household for whom accommodation must be made available.

2 R v Newham London Borough Council ex p Sacupima (2001) 33 HLR 2, CA at [32].

18.11 In 2013, the Supreme Court confirmed this approach in Sharif v Camden London Borough Council: ‘[i]t is still a fundamental objective of the Act to ensure that families can “live together” in the true sense’.

1 [2013] UKSC 10, [2013] HLR 16, SC.

‘Suitable’ accommodation from whom?

18.12 When performing a duty (or exercising a power) to secure accommodation, a local housing authority need not provide the particular accommodation itself. Both HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, enable the securing of accommodation to be achieved in any one of three ways. These are:

(1) By the local housing authority itself providing the accommodation. This might be, for example, by providing council-owned housing, a place in a council-run hostel or supported housing scheme, or accommodation that the local housing authority has itself rented from a private owner.

(2) By obtaining accommodation for the applicant from some other person. The other person may be a private landlord, a private registered provider in England or registered social landlord in Wales, another local housing authority, an adult care and children’s services authority, a voluntary organisation or anyone else.

(3) By giving the applicant such advice and assistance that she or he is able to obtain accommodation from another person. This would include helping an applicant to purchase accommodation from another person using her or his own funds, or giving advice and assistance so that an owner can obtain possession of his or her property from tenants.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
18.12 Suitability of Accommodation

2 HA 1996, s 206(1); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1).
3 HA 1996, s 206(1)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(b).
5 HA 1996, s 206(1)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(a).
7 HA 1996, s 206(1)(c); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(c) and (2)(h).

18.13 It is the local housing authority, and not the applicant, that chooses which of the three options will be used. For some local housing authorities (those which have transferred all their housing stock and other accommodation to new owners), only the latter two options will be available.

18.14 Where the local housing authority is relying on an offer of ‘suitable’ accommodation to release it from the duties owed under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, that offer may be of local housing authority accommodation (its own or obtained from another local housing authority) or of private registered provider or registered social landlord property, or of a tenancy made available by a private landlord.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

Suitability in general

18.15 In determining whether accommodation is ‘suitable’, local housing authorities must consider the applicant and his or her household’s particular individual needs. A general assessment of what accommodation may be suitable could be made in advance (for example, that a unit of accommodation of a particular size or type is likely to be required). However, the question posed by both HA 1996, Pt 7, and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is whether the specific property secured for, or offered to, the applicant is ‘suitable’\(^2\). Accordingly, local housing authorities cannot adopt blanket policies prescribing that certain types of accommodation will be suitable in certain circumstances\(^1\). If the applicant raises a reason why the accommodation that has been secured or offered is not suitable, the local housing authority must consider that particular reason. It cannot restrict itself to general considerations of whether the accommodation would be suitable for the average or ordinary applicant\(^4\).

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 English Code, para 17.9; Welsh Code, para 19.11.
4 R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Omar (1991) 23 HLR 446, QBD.

18.16 The duty to secure suitable accommodation is a continuing one. If an applicant’s circumstances change, so that the accommodation secured in performance of a power or duty ceases to be suitable, the local housing authority has a duty to secure other, suitable accommodation\(^1\).

Disputes over ‘suitability’

Avenues for challenge

RIGHTS TO REQUEST A REVIEW

18.17 Although all accommodation secured or arranged under the duties to help to secure under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, must be ‘suitable’, not every decision about suitability is amenable to the statutory review procedure\(^2\).

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 202(1), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; H(W)A 2014, s 85(1). See 19.12–19.69 for a full description of that procedure.

18.18 In both England and in Wales, the applicant has the right to request a review of a decision by the local housing authority that accommodation offered to him or her is suitable in the following scenarios:

1. accommodation secured in the ‘discharge’\(^1\) of the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^2\), relief duty, the HA 1996, s 190(2)\(^3\) short-term accommodation duty, the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty\(^4\), the HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^5\), accommodation duty, or the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^6\), prevention duty; or under the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duty\(^7\), the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) interim accommodation duty\(^8\), the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) relief duty\(^9\), or the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty\(^10\); or
2. if he or she has accepted or refused accommodation secured in the ‘discharge’ of any of those duties and the local housing authority has notified him or her that the duty has come to an end\(^11\);
3. a final offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation\(^12\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2) or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duties to an end\(^13\); or
4. a private rented sector offer\(^14\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2) or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duties to an end\(^15\).

\(^1\) In this context, ‘discharge’ means ‘performance’ of the duty.

\(^2\) As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018. It would be unusual for accommodation to have been secured under this duty. See 15.138–15.195.

18.19 There are additional rights to request a review in respect of certain offers of accommodation made by local housing authorities in England:

- where the applicant is made a final accommodation offer\(^1\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^1\) relief duty to an end\(^1\), he or she could accept or refuse the offer and request a review\(^6\);

18.20 It is plain, therefore, that there is no right to a statutory review of the suitability of accommodation offered in the exercise of a power. Equally, there is no right to a review of the suitability of interim accommodation secured by a local housing authority in England under the duty in HA 1996, s 188(1). Any challenge would have to be brought by way of judicial review.

18.21 If a review on suitability is available and has been requested by the applicant, but is either unsuccessful or has not been determined by the local housing authority, the applicant can appeal to the county court on a point of law.

18.22 ‘Suitability’ decisions that do not fall within the scope of the statutory review scheme will need to be challenged by way of judicial review proceedings or under the local housing authority’s complaints procedure.

18.23 If the local housing authority and the applicant are agreed that accommodation which has been offered or secured is not suitable, the appropriate procedure in order to obtain suitable accommodation is for the applicant to bring judicial review proceedings for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to secure such suitable accommodation. That remedy is discretionary. The Administrative Court could refuse permission to seek judicial review if the breach of statutory duty was not particularly significant and of short duration, or could refuse to make a mandatory order if the local housing authority demonstrated that it was doing all that it could to secure suitable accommodation. But if there is plain and continuing failure and no clear evidence that everything possible is being done, the

Administrative Court should grant a mandatory order.

Grounds for challenge

18.24 The question of whether or not accommodation is ‘suitable’ is a factual one for the local housing authority to ask and answer. It is not for the applicant, the applicant’s adviser, or for a judge to determine. Any applicant wishing to challenge the decision in the courts, and to argue that no reasonable local housing authority would have found that the accommodation was suitable for his or her needs, has a high hurdle to overcome. A challenge may have a better prospect of success if it attacks the local housing authority’s procedure in reaching its decision, or alleges a failure to consider a specific point raised, or a failure to have regard to a matter which ought to have been taken into account.

FACTORS THAT THE LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITY MUST TAKE INTO ACCOUNT

Local housing authorities in England

18.25 As a matter of law, when determining whether particular accommodation is ‘suitable’, local housing authorities in England are required to consider seven matters:

1. the provisions of the Housing Act 1985 relating to slum clearance and overcrowding;
2. the provisions of Pts 1–4 of the Housing Act 2004 relating to housing conditions, houses in multiple occupation and licensing of accommodation;
3. the affordability of the accommodation;
4. the location of the accommodation; a
5. the public sector equality duty in Equality Act 2010, s 149;
6. if the applicant is a child, or there are children in the applicant’s household, the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in Children Act 2004, s 11;
7. in respect of school-age children, the duty in the Human Rights Act 1998 that no person shall be denied the right to education;
8. the guidance given in the Code of Guidance;
9. the relevant content (if any) of their own homelessness strategies.

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.28 Local housing authorities in Wales are required to take the following into account when considering whether or not accommodation is suitable:
18.28 Suitability of Accommodation

1. the provisions of the Housing Act 1985 relating to slum clearance and overcrowding;¹
2. the provisions of Pts 1–4 of the Housing Act 2004 relating to housing conditions, houses in multiple occupation and licensing of accommodation;²
3. the provisions of H(W)A 2014, Pt 1, which relate to the regulation of private rented housing and require private landlords to be registered;³
4. the affordability of the accommodation is affordable;⁴
5. the location of the accommodation;⁵
6. the public sector equality duty in Equality Act 2010, s 149;⁶ and
7. if the applicant is a child, or there are children in the applicant’s household, the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in Children Act 2004, s 28;⁷
8. the guidance given in the Code of Guidance;⁸ and
9. the relevant content (if any) of their own homelessness strategies⁹.

⁸ H(W)A 2014 s 98(1); Welsh Code, chapter 19.

18.29 When considering whether accommodation is suitable for any applicant who has, or may have, a priority need, a local housing authority in Wales must also consider:

1. the specific health needs of the applicant or of any members of his or her household;
2. the proximity and accessibility of family support;
3. any disability of the applicant or of any members of his or her household;
4. the proximity and accessibility of medical facilities and other support services which are currently used by or provided to the applicant or a member of his or her household and are essential to that person’s wellbeing; and
5. the proximity of alleged perpetrators and victims of domestic abuse.¹

¹ SI 2015/1268, art 3, see 18.63–18.64 and the CD Rom with this book.

18.30 Local housing authorities in Wales considering the making of a private rented sector offer¹ must also take into account three additional factors relating to physical condition, safety requirements and the fitness of the landlord.²

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 76(4), see 17.173–17.175.
² SI 2015/1268, art 8, see 18.80 and the CD Rom with this book.
Factors local housing authority must take into account 18.34

18.31 Local housing authorities in Wales are prohibited from using bed and breakfast accommodation and other shared accommodation for any applicant who has, or may have, a priority need, except for very tightly defined periods of no more than two or six weeks (depending on the standard of the accommodation)¹.

¹ SI 2015/1268, arts 4–7, see 18.147–18.154 and the CD Rom with this book.

General points

18.32 The local housing authority’s file notes, if not the terms of any letter written to the applicant, should demonstrate that these mandatory factors have been considered in respect of each unit of accommodation offered or secured. The presence of these factors in the statutory scheme ensures that a local housing authority cannot rely on accommodation offered unless it has informed itself, at least, of the physical attributes of the specific accommodation, its cost and, if situated outside of the district, specific considerations relating to its location¹.

¹ English Code, para 17.58; See Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council [2015] UKSC 22, [2015] 2 All ER 952, [2015] HLR 22, SC, where the local housing authority’s letters, including the review decision, did not contain sufficient information to show that consideration had been given to the relevant statutory factors per Baroness Hale at [36]–[37]; and see also R (E) v Islington London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 1440 (Admin), Admin Ct where the file notes were deficient.

18.33 Beyond the mandatory matters, however, numerous judicial decisions – reviewed and applied by the Court of Appeal in Codona v Mid-Bedfordshire District Council¹ – have confirmed that ‘suitability’ has ‘a broad meaning’.

‘It must, as a matter of common-sense encompass considerations of the range, nature and location of accommodation as well as of its standard of condition and the likely duration of the applicant’s occupancy of it. Standards of the condition of property are clearly important².’

² Auld LJ at [34].

18.34 In the rest of this chapter, we consider first the mandatory matters set out at 18.35–18.61 and 18.65–18.79 (England) and 18.35–18.48, 18.62–18.70 and 18.80–18.81 (Wales); second, the suitability of private rented sector offers in both England¹ and Wales², and the suitability of final accommodation offers and other offers of accommodation made by private landlords to applicants who have a priority need in England³; third, the additional statutory factors for local housing authorities in Wales⁴; and fourth the broader range of matters relevant to ‘suitability’⁵. The specific statutory factors governing the use of bed and breakfast accommodation and of shared accommodation⁶ are discussed at 18.131–18.146 (England) and 18.131–18.135 and 18.147–18.154 (Wales).

Mandatory matters for local housing authorities in England and Wales

Demolition, clearance or overcrowding

18.35 The provisions of the Housing Act 1985 direct local housing authorities to take action where dwelling houses in their districts are in such condition as to require demolition or clearance or where they are statutorily overcrowded.

18.36 These strategic responsibilities would be wholly undermined if homeless households were to be placed in such poor or overcrowded premises at the initiative of the very same local housing authority. For that reason, the local housing authority is required by HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, to ‘have regard to’ those statutory provisions addressing such housing conditions when considering what would be ‘suitable’ accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 HA 1996, s 210(1); H(W)A 2014, s 59(1)(a) and (b).

18.37 Neither HA 1996, Pt 7, nor H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, expressly states that accommodation which fails to meet statutory minimum standards or would be statutorily overcrowded is unsuitable. It follows, therefore, that a local housing authority could determine that the state of the accommodation contravenes the statutory standards, but that it is still suitable, although it would seem that the local housing authority would need some compelling reasons for such a determination.

Housing conditions, houses in multiple occupation and licensing of accommodation

18.38 The Housing Act 2004 amended the statutory rubric regarding the mandatory considerations on the question of ‘suitability’ with effect from 6 April 2006 in England (16 June 2006 in Wales). From those dates, local housing authorities should have regard to ‘slum clearance and overcrowding and Pts 1 to 4 of the Housing Act’.

1 The following paragraphs provide only a summary outline of the scope of Pts 1–4 of the Housing Act 2004 to which attention is drawn.
2 Useful summaries are given in paras 19.6–19.10 and 19.35–19.38 of the Welsh Code; the English Code contains briefer references at paras 17.23–17.24.
Factors local housing authority must take into account 18.41

18.39 Part 1 of the Housing Act 2004\(^1\) contains duties and powers enabling local housing authorities to inspect the condition of residential premises in their areas and to assess them for hazards. A ‘hazard’ is a risk of harm to the health of an actual or potential occupier deriving from a deficiency in the dwelling or neighbouring land. Where there are hazards identified as ‘Category One’ hazards, the local housing authority will be under a duty to take enforcement action. Where there are ‘Category Two’ hazards, the local housing authority has a power, not a duty, to require remedial action. The hazards relate to physiological requirements (damp and mould growth, excess cold or heat, pollutants), psychological requirements (relating to space, security, light and noise), protection against infection and protection against accident. The assessment of hazards is a complex process, including an assessment of the likelihood of an occurrence, the risk to health and safety of an actual or potential occupant, and the spread of possible harms\(^2\).

\(^1\) Housing Act 2004, ss 1–54.
\(^2\) English Code, para 17.23; Welsh Code, para 19.7.

18.40 Neither the Housing Act 2004, HA 1996, s 210, nor H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, provide that accommodation will be, as a matter of law, unsuitable if it constitutes a Category One or Category Two hazard. However, the Codes contain recommendations that, as a minimum, local housing authorities should ensure that accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties is free of Category One hazards\(^2\). This should not be read as guidance that ‘suitable accommodation’ can contain Category Two hazards. The local housing authority should still normally consider the condition of the building and the risk to health and safety when deciding whether it is suitable\(^3\). However, it is for the local housing authority to decide whether an inspection and formal hazard assessment would provide it with any more information than it already had available, when making a decision on whether or not accommodation is suitable\(^4\).

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
\(^2\) English Code, para 17.24; Welsh Code, para 19.37.
\(^3\) In Firoozmand v Lambeth London Borough Council [2015] EWCA Civ 952, [2015] HLR 45, CA, the Court of Appeal considered the local housing authority’s obligation to ‘have regard’ to Pts 1–4 of the Housing Act 2004. It held that where, following the making of a complaint, the local housing authority had come to the conclusion that an inspection of the premises would be appropriate, or had come under a duty to carry out an inspection following an official complaint, then the local housing authority must take those circumstances into account when deciding whether the accommodation would be suitable. However, the local housing authority was not required always to carry out a full hazard inspection and assessment. It is a matter for the local housing authority whether the potential scale of the problem makes it inappropriate to offer accommodation to the applicant before a full hazard assessment had been undertaken, bearing in mind the possible delay involved in undertaking a full assessment, measured against the apparent seriousness of the problem.

18.41 Part 2\(^1\) of the Housing Act 2004 requires that some houses in multiple occupation (HMOs), which include privately owned bed and breakfast and hostel accommodation, should be licensed by local housing authorities. For a licence to be granted, the local housing authority must be satisfied that the
18.41 Suitability of Accommodation

House is reasonably suitable for occupation by a specified number of persons or households, that the proposed licence holder and manager are both fit and proper persons and that the proposed management arrangements are satisfactory.\

1 Housing Act 2004, ss 55–78.
2 English Code, paras 17.27–17.29; Welsh Code, paras 19.9, 19.46–19.49 and 19.55. There are different regulations governing standards of management in England and in Wales.

18.42 Local housing authorities also have a discretionary power, in Pt 3¹ of the Housing Act 2004, to designate areas in their districts as areas where there will be a requirement for the licensing of all privately rented housing.

1 Housing Act 2004, ss 79–100.

18.43 Where a local housing authority decides that there is no reasonable prospect of being able to grant a licence for a property under Pts 2 or 3 of the Housing Act 2004, Pt 4¹ of Housing Act 2004 obliges the local housing authority to make a management order, taking over the management of the property. The local housing authority may also make management orders in respect of HMOs which do not fall within Pts 2 or 3 of the Housing Act 2004 and so do not require licences. Management orders may also be made where the local housing authority believes that they are necessary for the health and safety of the occupiers of the property, or of others in the vicinity. Local housing authorities can make interim management orders (for a maximum period of 12 months) and final management orders (maximum period five years).

1 Housing Act 2004, ss 101–147.

18.44 There is nothing in the statutory schemes (HA 1996, Pt 7¹, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, and Housing Act 2004, Pts 2–4) explicitly providing that a house in multiple occupation which does not comply with these provisions is not ‘suitable’ accommodation. It would be difficult to describe a dwelling for which the owner does not have the requisite licence, or where he or she is in breach of the licence conditions, as ‘suitable’.² Although where the accommodation is being offered by a local housing authority in England as a private rented sector offer,³ a private accommodation offer,⁴ or under either the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty or HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty⁵ to an applicant who has a priority need, a house in multiple occupation which is subject to licensing and is not licensed will be not be suitable.⁶ The Welsh Code does contain advice that accommodation in a house of multiple occupation that is subject to the licensing scheme, and is not licensed, is not suitable.

Affordability

18.45 Local housing authorities in England and in Wales must take into account whether or not the accommodation is affordable for a person. If the accommodation is not affordable, it will not be suitable. Local housing authorities in England are directed, by specific statutory order, to consider an applicant’s financial resources (including any available social security benefits), and the total costs of the accommodation, in determining whether particular accommodation would be ‘suitable’. Local housing authorities in Wales are directed towards the same calculation by H(W)A 2014, s 59(2) supplemented by advice in the Welsh Code.

1 Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) Order 1996, SI 1996/3204 for local housing authorities in England, see APPENDIX 2; H(W)A 2014, s 59(2) for local housing authorities in Wales.
3 Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) Order 1996, SI 1996/3204, see APPENDIX 2.
4 Welsh Code, paras 19.26–19.29.

18.46 The English Code simply advises that local housing authorities in England will need to consider whether the applicant can afford the housing cost without being deprived of basic essentials. The Welsh Code is more robust and contains advice that not only will accommodation be unsuitable if the applicant would be unable to afford basic essentials, but also that it will not be suitable if his or her net income, after payment of housing costs, would be significantly less than income support or jobseekers allowance levels. If there is likely to be a substantial shortfall between housing benefit and the contractual rent, which the applicant would have to find from his or her own resources, the local housing authority will have to consider whether that shortfall is affordable, taking into account all forms of income and all reasonable expenses.

1 English Code, paras 17.44–17.45.
2 Welsh Code, para 19.28.

18.47 There are some applicants who might not be able to afford anything more than a nominal payment towards their housing costs. The fact that an applicant cannot pay for his or her housing costs does not allow the local housing authority to bring any duty to accommodate the applicant to an end. Local housing authorities should consider finding accommodation elsewhere, at a cheaper rent, or charging a nil or nominal amount in rent if the accommodation is secured from their own stock, or assisting the applicant to obtain other funding (such as from children’s services under Children Act

Location of accommodation

18.48 Local housing authorities in England and in Wales are all required to secure accommodation for the applicant, and for his or her household, within their own districts so far as is reasonably practicable\(^1\). In both cases, if accommodation is to be secured outside of their own districts, they must give notice to the local housing authority in whose district the accommodation is situated\(^2\). This is because the local housing authority in whose district the accommodation is situated will become responsible for any social services', or education, responsibilities\(^3\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 208(2); H(W)A 2014, s 91(2).

Local housing authorities in England

18.49 Local housing authorities in England are directed by Art 2 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012\(^1\), (the Order) to take into account the location of the accommodation secured. Guidance is given in the English Code, paras 17.46–17.61\(^2\).

\(^1\) SI 2012/2601, see Appendix 2.
\(^2\) See Appendix 2.

18.50 The Order\(^1\) contains a non-exhaustive list of factors relating to the location of any accommodation. The local housing authority must take into account:

- where the accommodation is situated outside of its district, the distance of the accommodation from its district;
- the significance of any disruption which would be caused by the location of the accommodation to the employment, caring responsibilities or education of the applicant or of members of the applicant’s household;
- the proximity and accessibility of the accommodation to medical facilities and other support which are currently used by or provided to the applicant, or used by or provided to members of the applicant’s household, and which are essential to the applicant’s well-being or to the well-being of members of the applicant’s household; and
- the proximity and accessibility of the accommodation to local services, amenities and transport².

1 SI 2012/2601.
2 SI 2012/2601, art 2.

18.51 These four factors must be considered by the local housing authority. The local housing authority must also, of course, consider any other factors regarding the location of the accommodation that might be relevant to its suitability, whether those other factors are already known to the local housing authority or are raised by the applicant.

18.52 Local housing authorities are reminded, in the Code that the starting point is that they should, so far as is reasonably practicable, secure accommodation within their own district¹. If that is not possible, local housing authorities must take into account the distance of the accommodation to be secured from their own district. If accommodation which is otherwise suitable and affordable is available nearer to the local housing authority’s district than the accommodation which has been secured, that accommodation is unlikely to be suitable unless the local housing authority has a justifiable reason for securing that accommodation, or the applicant has specified a preference². When local housing authorities are assessing whether or not suitable accommodation might be available in their own districts, they should consider not only the current availability but also look to the future and consider whether suitable accommodation closer to the home borough might become available and, if so, within what period³.

1 HA 1996, s 208(1), English Code, para 17.46.
2 English Code, para 17.47.

18.53 The Supreme Court considered art 2 of the Order in Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council¹. The judgment reaffirms the significance of the obligation on local housing authorities to place applicants within their own district so far as is reasonably practicable. ‘Reasonably practicable’ is a stronger duty than an obligation simply to act reasonably. If it is not reasonably practicable to secure accommodation within the local housing authority’s own district, it should try to place the applicant as close as possible to where he or she was previously living². Ideally, each local housing authority should maintain and publish a policy of procuring units of accommodation within its own district and a separate policy on the allocation of those units. The factors that the local housing authority will rely on in deciding which applicants will be offered accommodation within its own district should be set out in the published policy. When local housing authorities are making offers of accommodation, the offer letter should show that the local housing authority has considered the four factors at art 2 of the Order, and has assessed how practicable it would be for the applicant to move out of the area, whether there were any inquiries made to ascertain whether school places would be available, and whether any medical conditions had been considered. The offer letter should also indicate that the local housing authority had recognised that, if accommodation could not be secured within its own district, there was an obligation to offer accommodation as close to the district as possible³.

18.53 Suitability of Accommodation

18.54 There is substantial guidance on location in the English Code. Generally, local housing authorities should try to secure accommodation that is as close as possible to where an applicant was previously living. Where possible, they should try to ensure that the applicant can retain established links with schools, doctors, social workers and other key services and support. The Secretary of State advises that applicants whose household has a need for social services support, or a need to maintain links with other essential services within the borough, such as families whose children are subject to safeguarding arrangements, should be given particular attention to try and ensure that their accommodation is located in or close to the local housing authority’s own district. Similarly, careful consideration should be given to applicants with a mental illness or learning disability who may have a particular need to remain in a specific area, such as a need to maintain links with health services professionals or existing informal support networks or community links. Letters containing offers of accommodation should clearly set out why a local housing authority has considered a particular property to be suitable, taking into account the applicant’s needs and those of his or her household. Any offer letter should state how any medical needs will be met in a new district, how the impact on education on any school-age children has been assessed and what arrangements have been made for their education in the new district.

1 English Code, paras 17.46–17.61.
2 English Code, para 17.48.
3 English Code, para 17.56.
4 English Code para 17.58.

18.55 When considering the significance of disruption to employment, caring responsibilities and education, local housing authorities should take account of a person’s need to reach his or her normal workplace from the accommodation secured (rather than expect the person to change employment), and should take account of the type and importance of the care that household members provide and the likely impact that withdrawal of that care would cause (including any cost implications).

1 English Code, para 17.49

18.56 When considering the significance of disruption to education, local housing authorities have a number of additional obligations. Article 2, Protocol 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights states ‘no person shall be denied the right to education.’ This means that public authorities, including local housing authorities, should not deny effective access to the general educational facilities available. In addition, the duty at Children Act 2004, s 11(2) requires public authorities, including local housing authorities, to ensure that ‘(a) their functions are discharged having regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children; and (b) any services provided by another person pursuant to arrangements made by the person or body in discharge of their functions are provided having regard to that need.’

Factors local housing authority must take into account 18.59

3 Children Act 2004, s 11(2). See Baroness Hale in R (HC) v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions [2017] UKSC 73, [2017] 3 WLR 1486, SC, where she emphasised the need both to safeguard and to promote the welfare of children at [46].

18.57 As interpreted by the Supreme Court in Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council1, the Children Act 2004, s 11, duty, together with the requirements of art 2 of the Order, mean that local housing authorities need to address their minds to the educational consequences which follow any relocation and keep records of the factors they have taken into account and the process which by which the decision was reached. In R (E) v Islington London Borough Council2, a deputy High Court judge held that those legal obligations mean that the local housing authority has a continuing duty to satisfy itself, throughout the period of any temporary placement outside of its district, that the receiving authority has taken (and will continue to take) the necessary steps to safeguard the child’s educational welfare, that it must show that it has liaised with the education department of the receiving authority and satisfied itself that suitable arrangements were or will be in place; and that it has records demonstrating that it had taken those steps3.

18.58 The English Code advises that local housing authorities should take into account the need to minimise disruption to the education of young people, particularly at critical points such as leading up to taking GCSE or equivalent examinations. They should also liaise with the receiving authority and make every reasonable effort to ensure arrangements are or will be put in place to meet a child’s educational needs1. However, this should not be read as suggesting that disruption will not be caused if the child is not at GCSE or similar examination level2.

1 English Code, paras 17.50–17.51.
2 See Begum v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council (2015) (2016) September Legal Action, p 38, County Court at Central London, where the local housing authority had failed to consider the needs and well-being of the children, who were undertaking a daily commute of five hours to school and back and had failed to consider the disruption that would be caused to their education by being forced to change school; and Forsythe-Young v Redbridge London Borough Council (2015), (2016) February Legal Action, p 46, County Court at Central London, where there had been no consideration of the distances necessary to travel in order for the child to continue at her current school and no consideration of alternative schools that would be available or of which school would be best for her.

18.59 When taking account of the proximity and accessibility of medical facilities and other support provided to the applicant and to his or her household, local housing authorities should consider the potential impact on the health and well-being of the person receiving those facilities or support if they were no longer accessible. They should consider whether similar facilities are accessible and available near the accommodation being offered, and whether there would be any specific difficulties in the person using those essential facilities\(^1\).

\(^1\) English Code, para 17.52

18.60 Local housing authorities should avoid placing applicants in isolated accommodation away from public transport, shops and other facilities, where possible\(^1\).

\(^1\) English Code, para 17.53.

18.61 The English Code advises that, in some cases, there might be clear benefits for an applicant to be accommodated outside of the local housing authority’s district, for example where he or she (or a member of his or her household) would be at risk of violence in that district, where ex-offenders or substance abusers would benefit from being able to break links with previous contacts, or where an applicant might be able to find employment outside of the current district\(^1\).

\(^1\) English Code, paras 17.54–17.55.

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.62 As with local housing authorities in England, the starting point for local housing authorities in Wales is that accommodation should be secured within the local housing authority’s own area, so far as is reasonably practicable\(^1\). Since the wording of the prohibition on placing outside a local housing authority’s own district in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is identical to the wording in HA 1996, Pt 7, which was considered by the Supreme Court in \textit{Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council}\(^2\), the Supreme Court’s decision that ‘reasonably practicable’ is a stronger obligation than simply being reasonable applies equally to local housing authorities in Wales\(^3\).

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 91(1). See discussion at 18.48.

18.63 Local housing authorities in Wales are required to take into account, when considering whether accommodation is suitable for any applicant who has, or may have, a priority need:

(a) the specific health needs of an applicant and of the members of his or her household;
(b) the proximity and accessibility of family support;
(c) any disability of the applicant or of any member of his or her household;
(d) the proximity and accessibility of medical facilities and other support services which are currently used by or provided to the applicant or to a member of his or her household and which are essential to that person’s well-being;
(e) where the accommodation is situated outside the area of the local housing authority, the distance of the accommodation from the local housing authority’s area;
Factors local housing authority must take into account 18.66

(f) the significance of any disruption which would be caused by the location of the accommodation to the employment, caring responsibilities or education of the applicant or any member of his or her household; and

(g) the proximity of alleged perpetrators and victims of domestic abuse.¹

18.64 However, the Welsh Code does not confine itself to guidance on those specific points. It advises that the suitability of the location for all members of the household must be considered by the local housing authority. Where accommodation is located outside of the local housing authority’s district, the requirement to take into account the distance means that accommodation will not be suitable if there is accommodation which is closer, and is also suitable and affordable. The Code provides advice on assessing the significance of disruption to employment, caring responsibilities and education and on the proximity of a perpetrator of alleged domestic or other abuse.³

² Accommodation located further away could be suitable if the applicant had specified a preference for it: Welsh Code, para 19.14.
³ Welsh Code, paras 19.15–19.25. For considerations in relation to education, see R (E) v Islington London Borough Council (2107) EWHC 1440 (Admin), (2017) 20 CCL Rep 148, Admin Ct and the discussion at 18.57–18.58.

Public sector equality duty

18.65 The Equality Act 2010, s 149 requires all public authorities, including local housing authorities, to have:

‘due regard to the need to—

(a) eliminate discrimination, harassment, victimisation and any other conduct that is prohibited by or under this Act;

(b) advance equality of opportunity between persons who share a relevant protected characteristic and persons who do not share it;

(c) foster good relations between persons who share a relevant protected characteristic and persons who do not share it’.

18.66 They must have such ‘due regard’ when exercising any of their functions under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. So the duty to have ‘due regard’ to these equality issues applies not only when a local housing authority is deciding policy questions but also when any decisions are taken in respect of individual applications. In Hotak v Southwark London Borough Council, the Supreme Court held that a local housing authority decision-maker should ‘focus very sharply’ on whether an applicant has a protected characteristic under Equality Act 2010, and the extent of the protected characteristic.²

18.66 Suitability of Accommodation

18.67 The Court of Appeal considered what the public sector equality duty requires, in the context of local housing authorities assessing the suitability of accommodation, in Hackney London Borough Council v Haque1. It held that the duty required the decision-maker:

(i) to recognise that the applicant had a disability or other relevant protected characteristic;
(ii) to focus on specific aspects of his or her impairment or characteristics to the extent that they were relevant to the suitability of the accommodation;
(iii) to focus on the disadvantages he or she might suffer when compared to a person without those impairments or characteristics;
(iv) to focus on his or her accommodation needs arising from those impairments and the extent to which the accommodation met those needs;
(v) to recognise that the applicant’s particular needs might require him to be treated more favourably than a person without a disability or without that protected characteristic; and
(vi) to review the suitability of the accommodation, paying due regard to those matters2.

2 Hackney London Borough Council v Haque [2017] EWCA Civ 4, [2017] HLR 14, CA per Briggs LJ at [42]–[47]. The guidance was subsequently applied in Chotokai v Salford City Council [2017] July/August Legal Action, p 42, County Court at Manchester, where the reviewing officer had failed to consider whether it was reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy his accommodation, and thus whether he was homeless as a result of HA 1996, s 175(3) ‘through the prism of his subjectively experienced dysfunction’.

18.68 The local housing authority will need to inquire in any case where some feature of the evidence presents a real possibility that the applicant or a member of his or her household has protected characteristic which is relevant to the matter in issue1. Whether the evidence presents this real possibility is a question of fact for the local housing authority2.

Offers of accommodation in the private rented sector

18.69 Local housing authorities in both England and in Wales can bring their HA 1996, s 193(2) or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duties to an end by making the applicant a private rented sector offer of suitable accommodation1.
In both countries, there are factors specified by statutory instrument that a local housing authority must be satisfied about before such accommodation could be suitable. For local housing authorities in England, those specified factors also apply to final accommodation offers and to other offers of accommodation in the private rented sector made to applicants who have a priority need.

Factors local housing authority must take into account

For local housing authorities in England, those specified factors also apply to final accommodation offers and to other offers of accommodation in the private rented sector made to applicants who have a priority need.

Local housing authorities in England

The standards required by art 3

18.70 Article 3 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 provides that most offers of accommodation in the private rented sector made to an applicant who has a priority need will only be suitable if the local housing authority is satisfied of all of the following:

- (a) that the accommodation is in a reasonable physical condition;
- (b) that the electrical equipment supplied with the accommodation meets the requirements of regs 5 and 7 of the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1994;
- (c) that the landlord has taken reasonable fire safety precautions with the accommodation and any furnishings supplied with it;
- (d) that the landlord has taken reasonable precautions to prevent the possibility of carbon monoxide poisoning in the accommodation;
- (e) that the landlord is a fit and proper person to act in the capacity of landlord, following consideration of whether he or she has:
  - (i) committed any offence involving fraud or other dishonesty, or violence or drugs, or any offence listed in Sch 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003;

18.71 Guidance is given in the English Code at paras 17.11–17.22. Local housing authorities are advised to ensure that the property has been visited either by one of their officers or someone acting on their behalf. In determining whether the accommodation is in ‘reasonable physical condition’, the English Code advises that attention should be paid to signs of damp, mould, indications that the property would be cold and any other physical signs that would indicate that it is not in reasonable physical condition.

18.72 A visual inspection of the electrical equipment, checking for obvious signs of loose wiring, cracked or broken sockets, or lights switches that do not work, is said to be indicative that the relevant regulations have been applied. Landlords, owners or agents are required to carry out a fire risk assessment of the common parts and implement and maintain appropriate and adequate fire safety measures. They should put in place appropriate management and maintenance systems to ensure that any fire safety equipment, or equipment which may represent a fire hazard, is maintained in good working order and in accordance with the manufacturer’s instructions. Furniture and furnishings supplied must comply with the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988. Landlords are required to have at least one smoke alarm installed on every storey of their properties and a carbon monoxide alarm in any room containing a solid fuel burning appliance, and must make sure that the alarms are in working order at the start of each new tenancy. The accommodation must also have a valid energy performance certificate and a current gas safety record. Local housing authorities should satisfy themselves that the relevant regulations have been adhered to.

Factors local housing authority must take into account 18.77

18.73 Local housing authorities must satisfy themselves that landlords are fit and proper people to act in that capacity. This includes considering whether the landlord has committed any relevant criminal offence, practised unlawful discrimination in or in connection with the carrying on of any business, contravened any provision of housing law or acted contrary to any applicable code of practice for the management of a House in Multiple Occupation (HMO). Where the accommodation is outside of the local housing authority’s district, there should be liaison with the relevant district.

2 English Code, paras 17.20–17.21.

18.74 Any HMO that is required to be licensed will not be suitable accommodation unless it is licensed. Local housing authorities should be satisfied that a HMO is suitable for the number of households or occupants it is licensed for and that it meets statutory standards relating to shared amenities and facilities.

1 SI 2012/2601, art 3(1)(f) and (g), as amended by HRA 2017, s 12, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.75 Local housing authorities should ensure that the landlord has provided to them, in advance, the written tenancy agreement to be used for the purposes of a private rented sector offer.

1 SI 2012/2601, art 3(1)(i), as amended by HRA 2017, s 12, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; English Code, para 17.14(e).

18.76 In addition, the English Code recommends that local housing authorities remind prospective landlords, and tenants, that landlords are required to place any deposit in a tenancy deposit scheme.

Offers of accommodation to which art 3 standards apply

18.77 These standards apply to:

• private rented sector offers made under HA 1996, s 193(7AA), in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end;
• final accommodation offers as defined at HA 1996, s 193A(4), made under HA 1996, s 193A(1)(b), in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end.

- any accommodation which is made available for occupation under a tenancy with a private landlord and is secured for a person who has a priority need under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention or HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duties.

18.78 This last category would include any accommodation made available by a private landlord which the local housing authority is satisfied is, or would have been, available for the applicant’s occupation for at least six months. The common thread between these four groups is that the applicant will have a priority need. In general, the standards do not apply to applicants who do not have a priority need.

1 It is possible that an applicant could be made a final accommodation offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty to an end, even if he or she does not have a priority need: HA 1996, ss 189B(9)(a) and 193A(1)(b) as inserted by HRA 2017, ss 5(2) and 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018). See 15.181–15.184.

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.80 A private rented sector offer made by a local housing authority in Wales and intended to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty to an end will not be of ‘suitable’ accommodation if any one or more of the following apply:

1. the local housing authority is of the view that the accommodation is not in reasonable physical condition;
2. the local housing authority is of the view that the accommodation does not comply with all statutory requirements, such as, where applicable, requirements relating to fire, gas, electrical, carbon monoxide and other safety; planning; and licences for houses in multiple occupation; or
3. the local housing authority is of the view that the landlord is not a fit and proper person within the meaning of H(W)A 2014, s 20, to act in the capacity of landlord.

Guidance is given in paras 19.35–19.55 of the Welsh Code. The standards do not apply to other offers of accommodation.

Additional statutory factors for local housing authorities in Wales

18.81 Local housing authorities in Wales are additionally directed to consider the provisions of H(W)A 2014, Pt 1 when assessing the suitability of accommodation. This requires all landlords letting ‘domestic tenancies’ to be registered for each dwelling that is let, or marketed to be let, and licensed to let premises and to carry out property management activities. The requirements to be registered and licensed do not apply to local housing authorities or to registered social landlords or housing associations. In order to obtain a licence, the landlord must be a ‘fit and proper person’.

2 Defined in H(W)A 2014, s 2(1).
3 Because the definition of ‘domestic tenancy’ refers to assured, including assured shorthold, tenancies and to regulated tenancies: H(W)A 2014, s 2(1).
4 H(W)A 2014, ss 4 and 8.
18.82 Suitability of Accommodation

PARTICULAR ASPECTS OF ‘SUITABILITY’

Expected duration of occupation

18.82 The length of time that an applicant and his or her household is expected to occupy any accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties or powers, is relevant to the standard of the accommodation and its location:

‘What is suitable for occupation in the short term may not be suitable for occupation in the medium term, and what is suitable for occupation in the medium term may not be suitable for occupation in the longer term’.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.83 If the accommodation offered is a final offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, it would not necessarily be unreasonable for the local housing authority, when considering ‘suitability’, to expect the applicant to change schools, doctors, etc, although each case has to be considered on its individual facts. However, it could be far more disruptive for an applicant offered accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, to have to make those changes, as he or she would only be occupying the accommodation until the duties under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, ended. It might also be disruptive for an applicant made a private rented sector offer, a final accommodation offer, or other accommodation in the private sector to have to make those changes, since the applicant may not have any legal right to occupy the accommodation offered for more than six or 12 months. Similarly, it may be appropriate for an applicant to tolerate certain conditions for the short-term which would not be appropriate, and would render the accommodation unsuitable, if those conditions were to be experienced in the long-term.

Particular aspects of ‘suitability’ 18.88

18.84 It is for those reasons that local housing authorities in both England and in Wales are required to consider the significance of any disruption. For local housing authorities in England, the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012\(^1\) specifically requires them to consider the issue of the significance of any disruption to employment, caring responsibilities or education for the applicant and any member of his or her household\(^2\). There is guidance at paras 17.46–17.61 of the English Code\(^3\).

\(^1\) SI 2012/2601, as amended by HRA 2017, s 12, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018, see Appendix 2.

\(^2\) SI 2012/2601, art 2.

\(^3\) See Appendix 2.

18.85 For local housing authorities in Wales, the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (Wales) Order 2015, art 3(f), similarly requires them to take into account the significance of any disruption which would be caused by the location of the accommodation to the employment, caring responsibilities or education of the applicant or of any member of his or her household\(^1\).

\(^1\) SI 2015/12668, art 3(f), on the CD Rom with this book; Welsh Code, paras 19.13–19.25.

Space and arrangement

18.86 The English Code provides that space and arrangement of the accommodation are ‘key factors’ in determining its suitability\(^1\). But that, like the judicial pronouncement from which it is drawn\(^2\), is not intended to suggest to the local housing authority that it must do anything other than consider all relevant matters.

\(^1\) English Code, para 17.4; not in Welsh Code.

\(^2\) R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Awua [1996] AC 55, HL at 72 per Lord Hoffmann.

18.87 Particular issues in relation to space and arrangement of accommodation can arise where there are children in the household, or elderly or disabled persons\(^1\). Accommodation which is not suitable and requires adaptations could be suitable accommodation if the offer is accompanied with certain, binding and enforceable assurances as to the adaptations to be carried out before the accommodation is to be occupied in order to render it suitable\(^2\).

\(^1\) R v Newham London Borough Council ex p Gentle (1993) 26 HLR 466, QBD.

18.88 Where there are children, issues such as insecure door and window locks, access to a dangerous balcony, and inoperative fire doors will be relevant. They could produce a genuine risk to the health or safety of a child, and the local housing authority would be under a duty to consider those matters\(^1\). Where the applicant, or any member of his or her household, is disabled, then the accessibility of the accommodation itself is relevant, as is the internal layout in terms of the provision of accessible bathroom and toilet facilities\(^2\).

18.88 Suitability of Accommodation

1176, [2009] HLR 22, CA. See also the somewhat surprising decision in McDermott v Croydon London Borough Council [2011] EWCA Civ 1696 (2012) April Legal Action, p 47, CA, that there was no error of law where a local housing authority had decided that accommodation was suitable even where a disabled man could not access the kitchen, since his disability prevented him from using the kitchen facilities even if he could get access. In another case, the Local Government Ombudsman found that there was maladministration where an applicant occupied a second floor flat without lift access. During the course of his occupation there, he had become paralysed and had to use a wheelchair. The local housing authority acknowledged that the accommodation had become unsuitable but had only identified one alternative property in a six-month period and thus deprived him of suitable temporary accommodation for over six months: Complaint against Newham London Borough Council, 13 017 531, 3 June 2014 (2014) October Legal Action, p 51.

18.89 In one case, a local housing authority offered a five-bedroom house with one combined bathroom and toilet to an applicant to occupy with her husband, her ten children and two other family members. The applicant said that this accommodation could not be suitable as it would involve 14 people sharing one toilet. Rejecting that claim, the judge said that, when determining what is suitable accommodation, the local housing authority is entitled to take account of any general shortage of accommodation available to it in its district and the nature of the accommodation actually available to it.

18.90 The Supreme Court has considered whether the obligation to secure suitable accommodation for an applicant and all the members of his or her household requires a local housing authority always to secure one unit of accommodation, for occupation by all the household members. In Sharif v Camden London Borough Council, the Supreme Court held that the test was whether or not the household could ‘live together’. That test would be satisfied by a single unit of accommodation in which the ‘family’ could live together. But, depending on the individual circumstances, it could also be satisfied by two units of accommodation if they are located so that they enable the family to live ‘together’ in practical terms. That is a factual test, to be decided by the local housing authority. The issue, where there is more than one unit of accommodation, is whether they are close enough together to enable the household to ‘eat and share time together as a family’. However, if accommodation did not permit the family to ‘live together’ in that sense, then it would not be suitable.

1 As defined at HA 1996, s 176 or H(W)A 2014, s 56, see 10.21–10.32.
2 [2013] UKSC 10, [2013] HLR 16, SC.

18.91 A parent who has staying contact with his or her children, rather than the children actually residing with him or her, will not normally be entitled to expect a bedroom for the children. Where a local housing authority’s allocation scheme provided for an additional bedroom if the applicant needed overnight care, which was not given by a member of the applicant’s household, the local housing authority should apply its scheme and consider any evidence supporting a need for an additional bedroom.

2 Walsh v Haringey London Borough Council (2014) July/August, Legal Action, p 56, Clerkenwell & Shoreditch County Court.

Standard of accommodation

18.92 Although the courts have recognised a minimum standard of suitability below which accommodation must not fall, once that threshold is met it is for the local housing authority to determine the standard of the accommodation offered or secured. It must be remembered that even the ‘main housing duty’ under HA 1996, s 193(2), or under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), is only the safety net provision of temporary accommodation until the applicant’s longer term housing needs are resolved. It would be wrong to raise expectations that this short-term accommodation will be of a high standard.

1 See 18.3–18.6.

18.93 A local housing authority is entitled to have regard to the ‘realities’ in terms of the accommodation it can offer in areas of high demand where, therefore, ‘a high standard of suitability cannot be obtained’. The statutory references to ‘slum clearance’ and ‘overcrowding’ as mandatory considerations indicate ‘a relatively modest minimum standard that is relevant to the determination of suitability’.

1 R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Omar (1991) 23 HLR 446, QBD, at 459 per Henry J.

2 See 18.35–18.37. The Local Government Ombudsman found maladministration when an applicant was told to accept accommodation that was ‘filthy’ and in such a state as to be ‘stomach turning’. The local housing authority paid the applicant £2,450 on the Ombudsman’s recommendation in recognition of the distress caused (Complaint against Nottingham City Council, 05/C/02965, 19 April 2007).

18.94 Obviously, once the applicant has taken up occupation of the accommodation, he or she can rely on the express or implied provisions of the tenancy agreement to secure any necessary repairs. Disrepair, and any other problems with the standard of the property (eg lack of soundproofing), can also be addressed by inviting the local Environmental Health Officer to inspect the accommodation.

18.95 Where the accommodation is offered under the allocation arrangements in HA 1996, Pt 6 (normally of long-term housing accommodation), a higher standard might be expected before the accommodation was to be considered ‘suitable’.

Medical needs

18.96 The medical needs of the applicant and his or her household are clearly relevant to the question of suitability. When considering the suitability of accommodation offered to an applicant who has raised both medical and non-medical reasons as to why it might not be suitable, the local housing authority must take an overall or composite view of the applicant’s needs.

1 R v Lewisham London Borough Council ex p Dolan (1993) 25 HLR 68, QBD.

18.97 Some examples of court decisions where the issue was whether the accommodation was suitable given the applicant’s medical circumstances are:

- where an applicant suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder rejected an offer of accommodation situated on the twenty-seventh floor, the local housing authority was under a duty to consider the medical evidence properly;
- where an applicant with vertigo had a panic attack and collapsed in the lift after viewing a flat on the 16th floor of a tower block, the local housing authority acted irrationally in deciding the property was suitable;
- where no medical evidence had been provided in support of an assertion that the applicant’s child had a fear of heights, and there was nothing forthcoming in response to specific inquiries and a minded-to letter, the local housing authority was not wrong in law to conclude that any problems that the child might not have were not such that the applicant thought she should obtain a medical diagnosis;
- where an applicant produced evidence that she had suffered a violent sexual assault on a housing estate, the local housing authority was under a duty to consider that evidence when deciding whether the offer of accommodation on an estate was suitable;
- where a local housing authority had decided that a property on the third or fourth floor, with no access by lift, was suitable for a single parent who suffered from back problems and who had two young children, that decision was quashed because it had failed to have proper or adequate regard to the medical evidence;
- a local housing authority made no error of law in offering a maisonette with 13 internal steps to an applicant who suffered chronic back pain, even though there was medical evidence that climbing stairs would aggravate her back pain;
- a local housing authority was wrong in law not to have obtained any information as to the risk to an applicant who suffered from epilepsy of occupying a small studio-bedsit property, where she said that she was at greater risk of injury during a fit than she would have been had she had larger accommodation;
- where the applicant suffered from severe post-traumatic disorder and her treating psychotherapist had advised that the accommodation offered could do serious damage to her, and set back her psychological progress, the local housing authority was wrong in law to prefer the opinion of a psychiatrist, who had not met or examined the applicant, over that of the treating psychotherapist; and
- where the reviewing officer had considered the medical evidence but had concluded that it was based on assertions, made by the applicant to her medical advisers about the layout of the property, which did not match the facts, the local housing authority was not wrong in law to conclude that the accommodation was suitable.

2. El Dimnaoui v Westminster City Council [2013] EWCA Civ 231, [2013] HLR 23, CA, where the medical evidence made it clear that the applicant’s wife had a fear of heights.
4. R v Islington London Borough Council ex p Thomas (1997) 30 HLR 111, QBD, although, once the local housing authority had considered the medical evidence and decided that the offer was suitable, its decision was upheld.

18.98 Local housing authorities in Wales are directed to consider:

- the specific health needs of the applicant, and those of the members of his or her household;
- the proximity and accessibility of family support;
- any disability of the applicant, and those of the members of his or her household; and
- the proximity and accessibility of medical facilities and other support services, which are currently used by a person or by a member of his or her household and which are essential to that person’s well-being.

Terms and tenure

Contractual terms

18.99 When accommodation is being secured in performance of any of the accommodation duties or power at HA 1996, Pt 7, of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, there are no requirements for accommodation to be secured or offered on any particular terms, or with any security of tenure, in order for it to be ‘suitable’. However, if the accommodation is being offered on ‘standard terms’ set by the accommodation provider, those terms must be ‘fair’. There are minimum requirements for accommodation secured from a private landlords, and offered in certain circumstances.

2. Save that it must be affordable; see 18.45–18.47.
4. See 18.69–18.80.
18.100 Suitability of Accommodation

Tenure

18.100 If the accommodation is self-contained premises, occupation is likely to be under a tenancy rather than on a licence. But even then the fairly minimal protection of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 may not be available in respect of accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.\(^1\)

18.101 Although local housing authority accommodation can be secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, it cannot be made available on a secure or introductory tenancy.\(^2\) Likewise, accommodation rented by the local housing authority from a private owner and sub-let to the occupier will not be offered under a secure or introductory tenancy.\(^3\) The occupier will simply be a bare contractual tenant.

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.102 Accommodation obtained from a private landlord or a private registered provider or registered social landlord will not be offered on a full assured tenancy. So applicants will normally occupy their accommodation under, at best, assured shorthold tenancies. An assured shorthold tenancy offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty was held by the Court of Appeal, in principle, to constitute an offer of suitable accommodation.\(^1\)

18.103 The absence of any particular requirement for a minimum term, or for any security or stability, might enable a local housing authority to perform its duties under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, by moving an applicant through a succession of very short-term placements. However, each unit of accommodation must itself be suitable. Furthermore, the very fact that the accommodation offered is yet another short-term placement, with minimum stability for the applicant, could, depending on the particular circumstances, render the accommodation ‘not suitable’.\(^1\)

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.104 In a landmark case decided under the homelessness provisions of Pt 3 of the Housing Act 1985\(^1\), the House of Lords held that a local housing authority was not required to provide permanent accommodation in performing its duty to applicants for homelessness assistance. Lord Hoffmann said:

\[\text{‘[T]here is no reason why temporary accommodation should ipso facto be unsuitable. If the tenure is so precarious that the person is likely to have to leave within 28 days without any alternative accommodation being available, then he remains…’}\] threatened with homelessness and the council has not discharged its duty. Otherwise, it seems to me that the term for which the accommodation is provided is a matter for the council to decide. Provided that the decision is not Wednesbury unreasonable . . . I do not think that the courts should lay down requirements as to security of tenure.

1 R v Brent London Borough Council ex p Awua [1996] AC 55, HL. Prior to this decision, it had been widely assumed that the duty in s 65(2) of the Housing Act 1985 to secure suitable accommodation for applicants required local housing authorities to grant secure tenancies from their own stock.

18.105 Following on from that decision, the Court of Appeal held that a local housing authority could perform its duty to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation by arranging assured shorthold tenancies for applicants. Evans LJ considered that the tenure of the accommodation secured could be relevant to the local housing authority’s decision as to whether or not the accommodation was ‘suitable’ and held:

‘[T]he House of Lords’ ruling that there is no requirement of permanence does not lead to the conclusion that there is no temporal requirement whatever. In my judgment the question of tenure is not left to the unfettered discretion of the [local housing] authority: its decision must be proportionate to the relevant circumstances of the particular case. These include, in my judgment, both the needs of the applicant and the situation in the local housing market.

1 R v Wandsworth London Borough Council ex p Mansoor & Wingrove (1996) 29 HLR 801, CA. All of these cases were considering the duty to secure suitable accommodation under s 65(2) of the Housing Act 1985 which was the statutory predecessor to HA 1996, s 193(2).

18.106 Between 1997 and 2012 in England (1997 and 2015 in Wales), accommodation offered with a view to releasing the local housing authority from the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty was usually offered as an assured, introductory or secure tenancy, made under the local housing authority’s housing allocation scheme adopted pursuant to HA 1996, Pt 6. From 9 November 2012, local housing authorities in England have been released from the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty by the making of a private rented sector offer as well as by making final offers under HA 1996, Pt 6, if they choose to do so. Local housing authorities in Wales have been able to make private rented sector offers in order to release themselves from the main housing duty to applicants who have applied for help for accommodation on or after 27 April 2015.

3 H(W)A 2014, s 76(3)(c) and (4), see 17.173–17.177.

18.107 Now, in both England and Wales, private rented accommodation could be offered at various stages in the process of an application for homelessness assistance made under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A, Pt 2.

Use of private rented accommodation

Local housing authorities in England

18.108 For local housing authorities in England, offers of private rented accommodation can be made at any of these stages:

- in order to bring the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^1\), prevention duty to an end\(^2\);
- under the interim accommodation duty at HA 1996, s 188(1)\(^3\);
- in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty to an end\(^5\);
- bringing the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^6\), relief duty to an end by making a final accommodation offer\(^7\);
- performing any of the accommodation duties at HA 1996, ss 190(2)(a)\(^8\), 193(2)\(^9\), or 193C(4)\(^10\);
- bringing the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end by making a private rented sector offer\(^11\) or an offer of an assured tenancy from a private landlord\(^12\); or
- bringing the HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^13\), duty to an end by making a final accommodation offer\(^14\).

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.109 Local housing authorities in Wales can make the following offers of private accommodation:

• offers of, or arrangements for, accommodation made available by a private landlord which is suitable and likely to be available for the applicant’s occupation for at least six months, offered in order to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty\(^1\) to an end\(^2\);

• offers of interim accommodation under H(W)A 2014, s 68(1)\(^3\);

• offers of accommodation secured under the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty\(^6\); or

Minimum terms of private rented tenancies

18.110 Both HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\), and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, do contain some minimum requirements in relation to term and tenure\(^2\).

2 Rather than a tenancy with no security of tenure, as defined at Housing Act 1988, Sch 1.

Local housing authorities in England

18.111 For local housing authorities in England:

• a ‘private rented sector offer’ must be of an assured shorthold tenancy and have a minimum fixed term of at least 12 months\(^1\);

• a ‘final accommodation offer’ must be of an assured shorthold tenancy and have a minimum fixed term of at least six months\(^2\); and

• other accommodation provided in order to bring the HA 1996, s 195(2)\(^3\), prevention duty or the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty to an end need not be of any particular tenure but there must be a reasonable prospect that it, or other suitable accommodation, will be available for the applicant for at least six months\(^5\).

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.112 A private rented sector offer made with the approval of a local housing authority in Wales in order to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty to an end must be of an assured shorthold tenancy for a minimum period of six months.

1 HA 1996, s 193(4)(c), see 17.173–17.177 (Wales).

Information on private tenancies required to be given to the applicant

18.113 In 2006, the Court of Appeal considered the distinction between local housing authorities offering assured shorthold tenancies under what were then known as ‘qualifying offers’ (so bringing the main housing duty to an end if accepted by the applicant) and offering them in performance of the main housing duty in HA 1996, s 193(2). Considering ‘qualifying offers’, May LJ said:

‘The elaborate provisions for a qualifying offer of an assured shorthold tenancy from a private landlord in sub-section (7B) are there to recognise that, on the one hand, assured shorthold tenancies from private landlords have their disadvantages – the rent is not controlled and the tenure is technically insecure – but, on the other hand, some homeless applicants may reasonably prefer to accept the offer of such a tenancy rather than remain in temporary accommodation for a long time until they may be offered secure accommodation under Pt 6. Some homeless applicants may therefore be prepared to accept an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy from a private landlord as the permanent accommodation which in practice it is often capable of being. But they must only do so with their eyes fully open, and the local housing authority must be satisfied that it is reasonable for the applicant to accept the offer. Applicants are entitled to reject the offer. But if they do accept it, the local housing authority’s duty ceases’.

18.114 When an assured shorthold tenancy is offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty, it:

‘may be technically insecure, but may in practice extend for a number of years. If the applicant accepts the offer and the accommodation subsequently ceases to be available, the authority’s duty will have to be performed again, assuming that the applicant’s circumstances have not otherwise relevantly changed².

1 Or the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty.

18.115 Local housing authorities should be careful to inform applicants whether an assured shorthold tenancy is being offered to them as a performance of the main housing duty¹ or in order to bring that duty to an end in the circumstances described at 16.153–16.180 (England) or 17.173–17.177 (Wales). A number of these offers require specific information to be contained in the offer².

2 The relevant notification requirements are discussed under the paragraphs dealing with the various different types of offers.

Offers of secure tenancies

18.116 Where an applicant has been given an assurance that she or he would be offered a secure tenancy¹, that assurance might constitute a legitimate expectation². The local housing authority is then under a duty, when considering what accommodation is suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household, to take into account the applicant’s legitimate expectation to be offered a secure tenancy. That does not amount to a duty to give the applicant automatic priority above other applicants on the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, but it does require the local housing authority to adopt some method, such as the provision of additional points, to reflect that legitimate expectation³.

1 Or a secure contract, when Renting Homes (Wales) Act 2016 comes into force.
2 Where such assurances have been given, they were usually given to applicants under Housing Act 1985, Pt III, the previous homelessness provisions.

The applicant’s views

18.117 The decision on suitability is for the local housing authority to make. Neither HA 1996, Pt 7¹, nor H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, prescribes any specific inquiries to be undertaken before a local housing authority can determine whether particular accommodation will be suitable for a particular applicant. It need only ensure that it has had regard to the prescribed matters it is required to consider in every case², and to any other matters relevant to the circumstances of a particular case. Indeed, a local housing authority may decide that the applicant’s views as to suitability can be sufficiently aired at the review stage³.
18.117 Suitability of Accommodation

¹ As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.
² See 18.25–18.31.

18.118 A local housing authority may, if it wishes, invite the applicant’s views on any general issues affecting the suitability of accommodation for him or her, or on a specific proposed offer or provision of accommodation. Indeed, both the Codes contain advice that applicants should be given a chance to view the accommodation before being required to accept or refuse it¹. An applicant should be given a reasonable period when deciding whether or not to accept it, particularly when refusal or acceptance of the offer would have the effect of bringing a duty to an end. There is no set reasonable period; the length will depend on the applicant’s circumstances².

² English Code, para 15.48; Welsh Code, para 15.14.

Other considerations

18.119 The factors relevant to the question of whether or not accommodation offered to the applicant is suitable could encompass any issue raised by the applicant. A local housing authority cannot confine itself to consideration of the factors prescribed by HA 1996, Pt 7¹, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or the Regulations made under those provisions. Where a basement property on a large housing estate reminded the applicant, who was a refugee, of the prison in which she had been confined and tortured, the court quashed the local housing authority’s decision that the accommodation was suitable, holding that this was an exceptional case².

But see Poshteh v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2017] UKSC 36, [2017] AC 624, SC, where, on the particular facts, the review decision did not contain an error of law in its finding that the layout of the accommodation was not such that it recreated the conditions in which the applicant had been detained, and was not likely to have a significant impact on her mental health.

18.120 Where accommodation that was suitable when offered was then occupied by squatters before the applicant had been able to move in, it was held to be no longer suitable¹. A local housing authority’s decision, however, that squatted accommodation would be suitable once it had been repossessed and refurbished was held not to contain errors of law².

18.121 Where an applicant had a cultural aversion to conventional bricks and mortar accommodation (having lived a nomadic lifestyle all her life), an offer of conventional housing was held to be unsuitable for her needs. The local housing authority had failed to accord sufficient respect to her rights under the Human Rights Act 1998, Sch 1, Art 8(1). However, if no sites or pitches are available, the local housing authority is not in breach of its statutory duty, nor of the applicant’s rights under the Human Rights Act 1998 by making an offer of conventional accommodation unless that accommodation falls below the Wednesbury minimum standards of suitability.

18.122 The Codes recommend that local housing authorities should be ‘sensitive’ to the importance of pets to some applicants, particularly elderly people and/or rough sleepers, when considering the suitability of accommodation offered. If pets cannot be accommodated with the applicant, separate provision to kennel or otherwise look after them would fall under a local housing authority’s duty to protect the applicant’s property.

TYPES OF ACCOMMODATION THAT MAY BE ‘SUITABLE’

18.123 The English Code offers considerable guidance as to the types of accommodation that might be used by a local housing authority seeking to perform duties owed under HA 1996, Pt 7 to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England or after 3 April 2018.
2 English Code, chapters 16 and 17. See Appendix 2. The Welsh Code contains a list of types of accommodation that could be obtained through the duty to help the applicant secure accommodation. Welsh Code, para 13.14.

18.124 The following review deals first with the forms of accommodation least likely to be suitable and progresses to accommodation more likely to be suitable.

Homeless at home

18.125 Many applications under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 are made by individuals who have been asked to leave the homes of friends or relatives with whom they have been staying. An applicant who indicates that he or she has been asked to leave such accommodation plainly gives a local housing authority ‘reason to believe’ that he or she ‘may’ be homeless. If there is reason to believe that he or she may also be eligible and may have a priority need, then the duty to secure interim accommodation is triggered.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England or after 3 April 2018.
18.125 Suitability of Accommodation

In that situation the local housing authority may consider performing its interim duty by arranging for the friend or relative to provide further accommodation, at least until it concludes its inquiries and notifies its decision to the applicant. Often friends or relatives are prepared to do this, on the assumption (which is not always correct) that this will only be for a matter of days. From the applicant’s perspective, remaining where he or she is may be more attractive than other forms of interim accommodation that the local housing authority might provide. For obvious reasons, this common form of performance of the interim accommodation duty is called ‘homeless at home’.

1 Under HA 1996, s 206(1)(b) or (c); or under H(W)A 2014, ss 64(1)(a) or (c) and 66. See 18.12–18.14.

2 The HA 1996, s 195(2) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), and the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1) prevention duties specifically envisage helping an applicant to stay in his or her accommodation. See 15.91–15.96.

18.127 The arrangement is not altogether easy to square with the scheme of HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, not least because the readiness of the friend or relative to accommodate may suggest that there was no homelessness or threat of homelessness in the first place (or that the original request to leave was part of an arrangement to take advantage of HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2).

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.128 However, in practice these issues are overlooked. ‘Homeless at home’ has been a feature of the provision of interim accommodation for homeless applicants for over 40 years. Furthermore, even though local housing authorities make substantial financial savings by performing their duty in this way, rather than by paying for alternative forms of accommodation, it is very rare for a local housing authority to offer or pay anything to friends or relatives for providing this service. Many friends and relatives fail to make such payment a term for their co-operation.

18.129 It is important that the ‘homeless at home’ arrangement is made in the correct way. The accommodation must be ‘secured’ by the local housing authority. It is not sufficient for an applicant to be told ‘go back and see if they will let you stay until we make our decision’. It is for the local housing authority to ensure that accommodation is available, not for the applicant to take a chance that it might be. Plainly, the local housing authority must also make sufficient investigations to satisfy itself that the ‘homeless at home’ arrangement can secure ‘suitable’ accommodation for the applicant.

18.130 Where an applicant has made his or her application for homelessness assistance on the basis that he or she has accommodation available, but that accommodation is not reasonable for him or her to continue to occupy, it may still be suitable for the purposes of interim accommodation or even whilst the HA 1996, s 193(2), or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duties are being performed. That is because the local housing authority is required to consider whether the accommodation is reasonable to continue to occupy in the long term, even if the applicant could remain there in the short term. However, if the accommodation is not reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy for one more night, then it will not be suitable accommodation and the local housing authority should secure an alternative form of accommodation in performance of its interim duty.1

1 HA 1996, ss 175 and 176; H(W)A 2014, ss 55(3) and 56, see 10.73–10.134.

Types of accommodation that may be ‘suitable’ 18.133

Generally

18.131 In general, bed and breakfast accommodation should only be regarded as suitable accommodation for an applicant when emergency accommodation is required at very short notice, and there is simply no better accommodation available. It should only be used as a last resort and for the shortest period possible.1

1 English Code, paras 16.29; 17.30–17.43; Welsh Code, para 19.57.

18.132 Bed and breakfast accommodation allocated to a family with six children, in a hostel where the other residents were single men with histories of drug abuse, psychiatric illness and violent behaviour, was held not to be suitable for the family’s needs. In a case where the applicant had occupied bed and breakfast accommodation for over 18 months, in circumstances where her 16-year-old son could not live there and had been taken into care, the Administrative Court held that ‘the time has now come when the claimant cannot expect to return to hostel accommodation’.2

1 Driver v Purbeck District Council (1999) 10 CLD 407, Bournemouth County Court.

18.133 Relevant considerations as to whether bed and breakfast accommodation may be suitable include:

(1) the length of time that the applicant and his or her household are expected to occupy it;
(2) the efforts made by the local housing authority to find other suitable accommodation;
(3) the degree of likelihood of suitable accommodation becoming available in the near future; and
(4) any other factors affecting the individual applicant.
18.133 Suitability of Accommodation

However, lack of resources available to the local housing authority is not a relevant consideration1.

18.134 Where bed and breakfast accommodation has been secured, local housing authorities should ensure that the accommodation is of a good standard. Bed and breakfast accommodation will normally be provided in a building which falls within the definition of a house in multiple occupation1. Minimum standards are set out in the Codes of Guidance2.

2 English Code, paras 17.27–17.29 and 17.42–17.43; Welsh Code, paras 19.56–19.62. See 18.38–18.44.

18.135 If bed and breakfast accommodation has been secured under the local housing authority’s duty to secure suitable interim accommodation1, and the local housing authority subsequently accepts a main housing duty2, it must consider anew whether or not the bed and breakfast accommodation is suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household with reference to that new duty3.

The special rules in England

18.136 For local housing authorities in England, bed and breakfast accommodation is deemed to be unsuitable for applicants with family commitments1. It can only be used at all where ‘no accommodation other than bed and breakfast is available’2 and even then for no longer than a total period of six weeks3. Where an applicant has been referred from one local housing authority to another under the conditions of referral4, any period spent in accommodation secured by the notifying local housing authority will be disregarded when calculating the total period of occupation.

3 SI 2003/3326, art 4(1)(b).
4 See Chapter 14.

18.137 It follows that a local housing authority is required to satisfy itself that no other accommodation is available before it can use bed and breakfast accommodation for an applicant with family commitments. The English Code is unclear how a local housing authority in England can demonstrate that ‘no other accommodation’ can be secured for the applicant in order to be able to justify its use of bed and breakfast. It simply advises that, in making the determination that no other accommodation can be secured, local housing
Types of accommodation that may be ‘suitable’

Authorities should take account of the cost to the local housing authority in securing accommodation, its affordability and location. A local housing authority is not under an obligation to include accommodation which is to be allocated under its allocation scheme when considering whether there is any alternative accommodation. This suggests that a local housing authority could decide to secure bed and breakfast accommodation even though an empty council home or a stay at a five-star hotel might be technically ‘available’. The authors suggest that, for a local housing authority to demonstrate that no other accommodation was available, it must show that it has done more than merely check with its usual providers of short-term accommodation. It should have considered all possible means of providing accommodation other than bed and breakfast, including considering whether it has any empty properties that could be made available, and making inquiries of all potential providers, both in its own district and any other districts where it would be suitable for the applicant and his or her household to be located for the expected duration.

1 English Code, para 17.36.

A useful analogy might be made with the obligation on a local housing authority to secure accommodation within its own district, so far as reasonably practicable: HA 1996, s 208(1); H(W)A 2014, s 91(1), see 18.48. In Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council [2015] UKSC 22, [2015] 2 All ER 942, [2015] HLR 22, SC, the Supreme Court held that the local housing authority could not show, from its decisions on the suitability of the accommodation offered, that it had complied with the relevant obligations concerning location of accommodation, see 18.53. Baroness Hale said that ideally each local housing authority should have, and keep up to date, a policy on procuring sufficient units of temporary accommodation and setting out how those units would be allocated. Arguably, a local housing authority would need to do the same thing in order to be able to demonstrate that no other suitable accommodation was available before securing bed and breakfast accommodation.

18.138 It should also be noted that the obligation is a continuing one throughout the six-week period. It may be that no accommodation other than bed and breakfast is available for the first night after the local housing authority has come under a duty to secure accommodation, and so bed and breakfast accommodation will not be deemed to be unsuitable. That does not mean, however, that the local housing authority is then relieved of its obligation to consider whether any other accommodation is available after the first night. It cannot simply leave the applicant and his or her household in the bed and breakfast accommodation for a total period of six weeks.

1 The six-week period ‘does not allow the temporarily accommodating council to sit back – it must make all efforts to find suitable accommodation’ said Collins J in R (Nagaye) v Bristol City Council (2005) CO/3477/2005, (2005) August Legal Action, p 19, Admin Ct (consideration of permission).

18.139 ‘Applicants with family commitments’ are defined as applicants who are pregnant, or with whom a pregnant woman resides or might reasonably be expected to reside, or applicants with whom dependent children reside or might reasonably be expected to reside.

1 SI 2003/3326, art 2. English Code, para 17.32.

18.140 ‘Bed and breakfast accommodation’ is defined as accommodation which is not separate, self-contained premises and where any one of a toilet, personal washing facilities or cooking facilities are shared between more than one household\(^1\). It does not include accommodation owned or managed by a local housing authority, a private registered provider or a voluntary organisation, and so use of bed and breakfast establishments owned by any of those organisations is not, as a matter of law, deemed unsuitable (although it may still be unsuitable for the particular needs of a specific applicant)\(^2\).

1 SI 2003/3326, art 2. English Code, para 17.33.
2 SI 2003/3326, art 2.

18.141 This prohibition on the use of bed and breakfast by local housing authorities in England does not apply where accommodation is being secured in the exercise of a power, eg the power to accommodate pending a review or appeal\(^1\).

1 SI 2003/3326, art 1(2).

18.142 Since 2013, DCLG and now MHCLG has published quarterly statistics on families in bed and breakfast accommodation for more than six weeks\(^1\). These statistics show a significant increase in the use of bed and breakfast accommodation, and in the numbers of families with children occupying such accommodation for more than six weeks, from 2010\(^2\).

1 Table 793, DCLG. The figures date from 2007, but figures for the years 2007–2012 were only published in June 2013, following a Freedom of Information Act request.
2 As of June 2017, there were 6,660 households in bed and breakfast accommodation. Those included households urgently displaced from 14 June 2017 as a result of the Grenfell Tower fire. Excluding the Grenfell households, 2,710 households had dependent children and 1,200 of those had been living there for more than six weeks. Statutory Homelessness Statistics, April – June 2017 (DCLG, September 2017).

18.143 The Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman found several local housing authorities, principally London Borough Councils, to be guilty of maladministration for securing bed and breakfast accommodation for applicants with family commitments for periods substantially exceeding six weeks\(^1\). By October 2013, the then Ombudsman had become so concerned that she published a focus report: No Place like home: Councils’ use of unsuitable bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless families and young people\(^2\). She said that over the previous two years, the Ombudsman service had seen a 14% increase in the number of complaints about local housing authority homelessness services, and amongst those, an increasing number of cases where bed and breakfast accommodation had been inappropriately used as a stop-gap to house people. She noted the effect of poor accommodation on children’s lives\(^3\). She also gave a number of examples where local housing authorities:

- had failed to consider alternatives to bed and breakfast accommodation;
- had failed to plan to secure enough emergency and temporary accommodation to meet demand in the future;
- had accommodated significant numbers of families for more than six weeks;
- had no flexible approach to moving families out of bed and breakfast;
- or
- had not engaged in a joined-up approach (with children’s services) to secure suitable accommodation to young people.

Types of accommodation that may be ‘suitable’

The Ombudman advised that local housing authorities should use a range of targeted and coordinated measures to prevent homelessness arising, should discuss with the applicant at the outset any alternatives to bed and breakfast accommodation, and should have arrangements in place for cooperation between homelessness services and children’s services in all cases involving families and young people. Where use of bed and breakfast accommodation was unavoidable, she advised that applicants should be notified that the law says that it is unsuitable and that the local housing authority must secure alternative accommodation within six weeks. She also recommended that local housing authorities should have systems to prioritise sourcing alternative suitable accommodation for families in bed and breakfast within the six weeks, and should keep clear records in each case of what has been done to find alternative suitable accommodation. Where families are in bed and breakfast accommodation for more than six weeks, local housing authorities should have a strategy in place so as to tackle the problem within a reasonable timescale. Councillors should be regularly informed of the local housing authority’s performance regarding placement of families and young people in bed and breakfast accommodation. Despite this focus report, the Ombudsmen has continued to find instances of local housing authorities using bed and breakfast accommodation in circumstances that can amount to maladministration. The Ombudsmen was so concerned about the continued placement of applicants with family commitments in bed and breakfast accommodation that he published Still No Place like Home in December 2017. In the foreword, the Ombudsmen said: ‘our cases show some people are still spending far, far too long in unsuitable accommodation – two and a half years in one case. We are also routinely seeing people housed in poorly maintained accommodation with significant damp or infestations’.

2 Still No Place like Home, Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman, December 2017.

In 2013, Shelter published Nowhere to go, the scandal of homeless children in B&Bs. It quoted the DCLG statistics for children living in bed and breakfast accommodation, and the numbers of families who had been living there for more than six weeks. It also interviewed 25 families who were, or recently had been, living in bed and breakfast accommodation. It found that living in bed and breakfast accommodation can result in children feeling unsafe or witnessing traumatic events, that the lack of amenities for normal Family life can damage children’s physical or mental health, that children’s education can be affected, that living in bed and breakfast accommodation can be expensive, and make it harder for family members to find work, and that the lack of space and privacy can mean that children struggle to enjoy day-to-day aspects of family life. It recommended that the Government urgently consider exempting homeless households in temporary accommodation from the household benefit cap, so as to make it easier for local housing authorities to secure local self-contained accommodation, and the rates paid for leased temporary accommodation, the local housing allowance level and universal credit should all be reviewed. Shelter also recommended that, in the long-term, both central and local government should take a more strategic approach to preventing homelessness by ensuring that there is an adequate supply of genuinely affordable homes for families who cannot afford to buy or pay private sector rents and ensuring there is adequate funding for high quality advice and advocacy to prevent families from losing their homes.

1 Shelter, October 2013.

18.146 The Secretary of State has advised, in statutory guidance, that bed and breakfast accommodation is not considered to be suitable accommodation in any circumstances for the needs of homeless 16- and 17-year-olds. Despite that guidance, children’s services authorities have been found guilty of maladministration for using bed and breakfast accommodation for ‘looked-after’ children.

The special rules in Wales

18.147 When H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, came into force on 27 April 2015, the Welsh Government issued the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (Wales) Order 2015. This new statutory instrument also came into effect on 27 April 2015. It contains limits on the use of bed and breakfast accommodation and, separately, other ‘shared accommodation’.

1 SI 2015/1268 (W 87), see the CD Rom with this book.

18.148 ‘Bed and breakfast accommodation’ has the same statutory definition in Wales as it does in England’. The Welsh Order requires that ‘bed and breakfast accommodation’ must meet one of two standards – the ‘basic’ or the ‘higher’ standard – in order to be ‘suitable’.

1 SI 2015/1268, art 2, see the CD Rom with this book; Welsh Code, para 19.75; and see 18.131–18.135.

2 Detailed guidance is given in Welsh Code, paras 19.73–19.107.

18.149 ‘Basic standard’ is defined as accommodation that meets all the prescribed statutory requirements and has a manager who has been deemed by the local housing authority to be a fit and proper person with the ability to manage bed and breakfast accommodation. ‘Higher standard’ is basic standard accommodation which also complies with various additional standards relating to minimum amounts of space, adequate heating, facilities for storing and cooking food, exclusive washing and toilet facilities, lockable entrance doors, a common room and appropriate standards of management.

18.150 There is also an additional category of ‘small Bed and Breakfast accommodation’, defined as bed and breakfast accommodation where the manager resides on the premises and there are fewer than seven bedrooms available for letting.

18.151 Since 7 April 2008, bed and breakfast accommodation has not been regarded as suitable for any applicant who has a priority need unless it is occupied for no more than two weeks (basic standard) or six weeks (higher standard). If an offer of suitable alternative accommodation has been made during those periods and the person has chosen to remain in his or her bed and breakfast accommodation, higher standard small bed and breakfast accommodation can be considered suitable for an indefinite period. In the case of basic standard small bed and breakfast accommodation, two offers of suitable alternative accommodation must be made and refused for it to be considered suitable indefinitely.

18.152 The Welsh Order also effectively outlaws use of ‘shared accommodation’, which it defines as accommodation which is not separate and self-contained premises, and where at least one of a toilet, personal washing facilities or cooking facilities are shared between more than one household, provided that it is not an institution registered under the Care Standards Act 2000. Unlike ‘bed and breakfast accommodation’, ‘shared accommodation’ can be owned or managed by local housing authorities, registered social landlords or voluntary organisations.

18.153 ‘Shared accommodation’ is not regarded as suitable for an applicant who has a priority need unless it meets the higher standard. Basic standard shared accommodation may be regarded as suitable for a period of no more than two weeks, or for a six-week period if during the initial two-week period an offer of suitable alternative accommodation has been made but the person has chosen to remain in the basic standard shared accommodation.

Types of accommodation that may be ‘suitable’ suitable alternative accommodation (rejected by the applicant) could be made at any time during the six-week period.

18.154 Although the Explanatory Notes to the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (Wales) Order 2015 and the Welsh Code both state that the prohibition applies only to accommodation secured under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties (and therefore not to accommodation secured under any powers), there is nothing in the Order that contains such a restriction. The plain wording of the Order appears to apply the prohibition to accommodation secured either under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties to secure accommodation or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, powers to secure accommodation. The prohibitions do not apply where the applicant has, or may have, a priority need as a result of an emergency. They also do not apply if the local housing authority has offered suitable accommodation to the applicant but the applicant has decided to accept other accommodation. If an applicant is referred from one local housing authority to another under the conditions of referral, the period spent in accommodation secured by the notifying local housing authority will be disregarded when calculating the total period of occupation.

Hostels

18.155 The English Code recommends that providing accommodation in a hostel may be a means of securing suitable accommodation for applicants in order to meet specific accommodation and support needs, particularly young people or adults who need a period of stability and individual support to help them to prepare to live independently. The Welsh Code does not specifically refer to hostels but contains detailed guidance on the standards to be met in shared housing and/or in houses of multiple occupation before the accommodation can be considered to be suitable. The hostels referred to are not the night shelter variety that simply secure accommodation overnight, leaving the applicant homeless again the next day. Some hostels, if privately run, will fall within the English or Welsh definition of ‘bed and breakfast’ accommodation. Since 7 April 2008, privately run hostels in Wales have been likely to fall within the definition of ‘shared accommodation’. Hostels are also likely to fall within the definition of houses in multiple occupation and be subject to Pts 1–4 of the Housing Act 2004.

7 See 18.38–18.44.
Lodgings

18.156 Some young applicants, particularly those who are vulnerable, may benefit from lodgings rather than hostel or self-contained accommodation. Generally, such lodgings would be offered by landlords who provide a service for young people with support needs\(^1\).

1 English Code, para 16.32; Welsh Code, para 19.65.

Women’s refuges

18.157 Women’s refuges should generally be considered as emergency accommodation only and not be used to perform accommodation duties under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2\(^2\). Whether or not a particular refuge is suitable for a particular woman and her household will depend on the characteristics of the refuge and the applicant. The English Code advises local housing authorities that placements in a refuge should generally be for the short term, except where a longer period of support is required to enable applicants to prepare to manage independently. The English Code contains a chapter on providing homelessness services to people who have experienced domestic violence or abuse or are at risk of domestic violence or abuse, including advice on securing suitable accommodation\(^3\).

2 See 10.12 and 10.126. See also Baroness Hale in Ali & others v Birmingham City Council, Moran v Manchester City Council [2009] UKHL 36, [2009] 1 WLR 1506, HL, when she said, referring to submissions made by the Women’s Aid Federation of England and Wales: ‘They point out that a refuge is not simply crisis intervention for a few nights. It is a safe haven in which to find peace and support. But it is not a place to live. There are rules which are necessary for the protection of residents that make it impossible to live a normal family life. It is a place to gather one’s strength and one’s thoughts and to decide what to do with one’s life.’ at [43].

Mobile homes

18.158 Mobile homes are unlikely to be suitable for families with children, for the elderly, or for disabled applicants. Generally, if used at all, they should be used for emergency accommodation, when the local housing authority has not had an opportunity to arrange anything else. Holiday caravans should not be regarded as suitable at all\(^1\).

1 English Code, paras 16.43–16.45; Welsh Code, para 19.65.

18.159 If the applicant normally occupies moveable accommodation and is homeless because she or he has no place at which to place the moveable home and reside in it\(^1\), the local housing authority is not required to provide a site or berth itself, but should consider whether sites, berths or pitches are reasonably available\(^2\). These may be its own sites, sites provided by other local housing authorities (in which case provision can be made by arrangement with the appropriate local housing authority), or private sites on which the local housing authority has been able to persuade the owner to receive the applicant and his or her home.1

2 English Code, para 16.44.

3 HA 1996, s 206(1)(a)–(c); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(a)–(c).

18.160 Where an applicant has a strong cultural aversion to living in bricks and mortar accommodation, the only accommodation that would be suitable for his or her needs would be the provision of mobile or caravan accommodation, or a site on which to put the caravan or other mobile accommodation. However, if no sites or pitches are available, the local housing authority is not in breach of its statutory duty, nor of the applicant’s rights under the Human Rights Act 1998 by making an offer of conventional accommodation unless that accommodation falls below the Wednesbury minimum standards of suitability.1

Accommodation leased from a private landlord

18.161 Local housing authorities are able to lease accommodation from private owners, and then let it themselves to applicants who are owed a housing duty. This option is known as ‘private sector leasing’. Although the applicant becomes a tenant of the local housing authority, the tenancy is not an introductory or secure tenancy.1

18.162 The English Code encourages local housing authorities to test approaches that would enable such accommodation let as temporary accommodation to become settled accommodation.1 That eventual offer could be a private sector rented offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty to an end or a final accommodation offer designed to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty to an end. The Welsh Code encourages greater use of the private rented sector generally, particularly by use of private rented sector offers.1

1 English Code, paras 16.25–16.28. The implication is that, once the lease of the private rented accommodation let to the local housing authority expires, the local housing authority could negotiate with the private landlord to see if he or she would be willing to make an offer of a tenancy of that same accommodation.

7 Welsh Code, paras 12.20–12.33.

Local housing authority properties

18.163 Local housing authorities can use their own stock (if they have any) to secure accommodation in order to perform their duties under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Tenancies granted by local housing authorities in performance of their own homelessness duties will not be secure or introductory tenancies.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 206(1)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(b). See also English Code, paras 16.10–16.11.

Accommodation provided by other local housing authorities or social landlords 18.164 Local housing authorities may request other local housing authorities, other social landlords and/or social services authorities to assist them in the performance of their duties by providing accommodation for applicants who are owed housing duties. If requested by a local housing authority in England, those bodies must co-operate and render assistance so far as is reasonable in the circumstances. Where requests for co-operation are made by a local housing authority in Wales, the recipient must comply unless it considers that doing so would be incompatible with its own duties or have an adverse effect on its functions. If it refuses to comply for one of those reasons it must put the refusal in writing, with reasons. Other local housing authorities and social landlords could therefore assist either by providing temporary accommodation to meet a duty owed under HA 1996, Pt 7, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or by agreeing to accept a nomination made under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, thus enabling the local housing authority which owes the duty under HA 1996, Pt 7 or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, to make the applicant an offer of HA 1996, Pt 6 accommodation, so as to release it from its HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties.

offer defined at HA 1996, ss 193(7A), 193A(5) or 193C(8) in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty, the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4) duty to an end, as inserted by HRA 2017, ss 5(2) and 7(1) for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 16.142–16.152, 15.185–15.188 and 16.210–16.213.

18.165 A local housing authority cannot normally discharge its responsibility to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation by leaving the identification of the actual unit of accommodation to another local housing authority or social housing landlord. The decision about ‘suitability’ remains with the local housing authority which owes the duty under HA 1996, Pt 7 or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, so it must be able to assess the suitability of a specific property.¹

² R (Cafun) v Bromley London Borough Council [2000] All ER (D) 1425, Admin Ct.

18.166 If temporary accommodation is obtained from another local housing authority, the housing duty owed towards the applicant remains with the first local housing authority to which the applicant applied.

18.167 These voluntary arrangements are different from the arrangements for the referral of an applicant under the conditions for referral¹. The Codes advise that accommodation secured under such voluntary, and often reciprocal, arrangements is particularly appropriate for the needs of applicants who might be at risk of violence or serious harassment in the area of the local housing authority to which they applied².

² English Code, para 16.15; Welsh Code, para 19.23.

Accommodation provided by private registered providers or by registered social landlords

18.168 As already noted¹, local housing authorities can discharge their duty to secure accommodation by ensuring that suitable accommodation is obtained from another person². That might be a private landlord or a private registered provider or registered social landlord.

¹ See 18.12–18.14.

18.169 Private registered providers and registered social landlords are required by HA 1996, s 213(1)(a) and by H(W)A 2014, s 95, and by regulatory guidance to provide assistance to local housing authorities in the carrying out of those local housing authorities’ homelessness duties¹.

18.170 Where nomination arrangements have been set up, an offer of an assured, or an assured shorthold, tenancy from a private registered provider or registered social landlord could be made under the local housing authority's allocation scheme. Those offers would therefore be capable of amounting to a final offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, sufficient to release the local housing authority from the main housing duty or (for local housing authorities in England) as a final Pt 6 offer to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4) accommodation duty to an end.

Accommodation provided by private landlords

18.171 Private landlords can also make accommodation available to help the local housing authority meet duties owed under HA 1996, Pt 7 or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The Court of Appeal has held that assured shorthold tenancies can be secured under the local housing authority's main housing duty, provided that, if the accommodation subsequently ceases to be available and the applicant's circumstances have not changed, the local housing authority acknowledges that its main housing duty will have to be performed again. For a fuller discussion of the circumstances in which private rented accommodation can be secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, see 18.69–18.81 and 18.108–18.115.

4 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.172 It is not unusual for there to be confusion as to the identity of the landlord in these circumstances. Accommodation is often secured under tripartite arrangements between a property owner, a local housing authority and an applicant. That accommodation could either have been leased by the local housing authority from the private landlord, or the local housing authority may have arranged for the applicant to be granted a tenancy by the property owner. The identity of the landlord is therefore a question of fact.

1 Apczynski v Hounslow London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 1833, (2007) April Legal Action, p 21, CA, at [6] per Neuberger LJ. In that case, the applicant occupied a room in a hotel owned by a private company, having been booked into the hotel by the local housing authority in performance of its housing duty owed to the applicant. He brought a claim against the local housing authority for damages for disrepair to the room. His claim was dismissed because the local housing authority was not his landlord.

2 See 18.161–18.162.

18.173 In both England and Wales, there are specific factors to be considered regarding the suitability of private rented accommodation. In England, the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 containing a non-exhaustive list of four factors to be considered regarding the location of the accommodation and ten specific tests on the physical condition of the property and the standard of management of it before private rented accommodation can be considered to be suitable. The ten specific tests apply to private rented sector offers, final accommodation offers or any other accommodation made available by a private landlord to an applicant who has a priority need in order to perform or to bring the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention or HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duties to an end. The Welsh Government has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (Wales) Order 2015 which contains a non-exhaustive list of seven factors to be considered principally in relation to location of the accommodation and three tests to be made before a private rented sector offer can be considered to be suitable.

18.174 An applicant will know whether an assured shorthold tenancy is being offered to him or her in performance of the main housing duty, or other accommodation duties or as a private rented sector offer or final accommodation offer because there are specific notification requirements, see 15.181, 16.114, 16.169 and 16.209 for notification requirements by local housing authorities in England and 17.167–17.169 for notification requirements by 18.175 Where the applicant has the right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation¹, any fixed-term tenancy should contain a break clause in order to be suitable. Otherwise what happens if the applicant accepts the offer and requests a review of the suitability of accommodation and the review is successful? Without a break clause, the applicant remains contractually committed to pay rent for the remainder of the term.

PARTICULAR APPLICANTS AND THEIR NEEDS

18.176 Precisely because the question of ‘suitability’ requires a person-centred approach, considerable statutory guidance is offered for those cases in which the provision of accommodation will need to be handled with particular sensitivity.

18.177 The Codes identify that some applicants may need support from adult care or children’s services to assist them to maintain the accommodation which is to be secured. The applicant’s needs and the support that the local housing authority and any other agencies might provide to help the applicant find and keep accommodation will be recorded in the personal housing plan or assessment¹.

¹ HA 1996, s 189A, as as inserted by HRA 2017, s 37(1) for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018 and English Code, chapter 11, see 15.62–15.86; H(W)A 2014, s 62(5) and (6) and Welsh Code, paras 12.61–12.64, see 17.30–17.35. The Local Government Ombudsman found maladministration where a vulnerable applicant who was being moved from one unit of temporary accommodation to another ended up with overlapping liabilities to pay rent. The Ombudsman said ‘although the council says it offered and provided a degree of support, there apparently is not evidence to support substantial support and other advice’ (Complaint against Birmingham City Council, 10 000 145, 20 December 2010, (2011) March Legal Action, p 28).

Young people

18.178 Providing ‘suitable’ accommodation for young people can superficially seem difficult because of the rule that minors (persons aged under 18) cannot be the legal owners of an interest in land, which includes a tenancy. But they can be beneficial owners under a trust, and a tenancy granted to a young person takes effect as the grant of that tenancy on trust for the young person. The English Code states that there needs to be sufficient support in place and a licence agreement may be more appropriate¹. This was also the view of the Court of Appeal which discussed the difficulties of granting a tenancy on trust to a minor, and suggested that licences to occupy accommodation where the minor does not have exclusive possession of that accommodation should normally be granted\(^1\). Alternatively, the authors suggest, a tenancy could contain a declaration of trust appointing another person as the legal owner and trustee of the land.
18.178 Suitability of Accommodation

\(^1\) English Code, para 16.46. See also Complaint against Dover District Council, 09 017 510, 31 July 2012 (2012) October Legal Action, p 36.

18.179 Some homeless young people may need help with managing tenancies or with household budgeting. Close liaison with the children’s services team is recommended as essential. Other young people may benefit from supported accommodation before they are sufficiently independent to manage a tenancy, although local housing authorities are reminded that they must consider each applicant’s individual circumstances and not just assume that supported accommodation will be suitable for all young people. Generally, if the minor is also a parent, semi-independent accommodation with support is recommended. If the young parent is aged less than 16, she or he should always be referred to children’s services for an assessment of his or her care needs\(^1\).

\(^1\) English Code, paras 8.19–8.23; Welsh Code, paras 12.61–12.64.

18.180 In R (M) v Hammersmith & Fulham London Borough Council\(^2\), the House of Lords held that local housing authorities should always refer children, aged less than 18 years, for an assessment by children’s services. The expectation is that, unless the child’s need for accommodation is relatively short-term, the responsibility for providing accommodation should be met by children’s services under Children Act 1989, s 20, and so the child will receive not just accommodation but also additional assistance to help and support him or her in the transition to independent adult living. The House of Lords stressed joint working between local housing authorities and children’s services.

\(^1\) [2008] UKHL 17, [2008] 1 WLR 535, HL, see 8.45–8.46 and 12.150–12.159.

18.181 The referral to children’s services does not avoid the local housing authority’s duty to secure accommodation for the child while children’s services carry out an assessment and consider whether he or she is a child in need pursuant to Children Act 1989, s 20 (or under the Social Services and Well-Being (Wales) Act 2014)\(^1\). This emphasis on joint working between local housing authorities and children’s services’ authorities was reiterated by the House of Lords in R (G) v Southwark London Borough Council\(^2\), where the children’s services’ department was criticised for referring a homeless 17-year-old to the housing department, to make an application for homelessness assistance, rather than assessing the child’s needs under the Children Act 1989. Both the UK Government and the Welsh Government subsequently published statutory guidance to local housing authorities and children’s services. Each set of guidance emphasises that homeless children are likely to be children ‘in need’ and services should primarily be provided under Children Act 1989\(^1\). If the child is being accommodated under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, duties, each set of guidance advises that bed and breakfast accommodation

Care leavers

18.182 The English Code contains a specific chapter on duties towards care-leaves and guidance is given on the suitability of accommodation for this group. Local housing authorities should work with children's services. When considering suitability, they should bear in mind that care leavers who are homeless may lack skills in managing their affairs and may require help with managing their own accommodation and operating a household budget. There should be no blanket presumption that a young person aged 18 who has left care will be ready for his or her own tenancy. Bed and breakfast accommodation, including hotels and nightly let accommodation with shared facilities, is not considered suitable and should only be used in exceptional circumstances. Supported lodgings, supported accommodation or independent accommodation with visiting support could be suitable, depending on the particular applicant’s needs. When considering the location of accommodation, local housing authorities should take into account that a care leaver may want to live as near as possible to a significant adult such as a friend or ex-foster carer, or may need to avoid certain locations due to childhood experiences or associations.

1 English Code, chapter 22, advice on suitable accommodation is at paras 22.24–22.29.

Families with children

18.183 When offering or securing accommodation for families with children, local housing authorities in England are advised to ensure that families with children who are subject to safeguarding arrangements should be given particular attention to try to ensure that accommodation is located in or close to the local housing authority’s own district. Where there are school age children, and the local housing authority is considering placing the applicant outside of its district, it should liaise with the receiving authority and make every reasonable effort to ensure that arrangements are or will be put in place to meet the child’s educational needs. The local housing authority should keep records of how it has assessed the impact on the child’s education and what arrangements have been made for the child’s education.

1 English Code para 17.56.
18.183 Suitability of Accommodation

Gypsies and Travellers

18.184 Local housing authorities are advised to consider the needs and lifestyles of applicants who are gypsies or travellers when considering how to secure suitable accommodation. Where an applicant has a ‘cultural aversion to the prospect of “bricks and mortar” accommodation’, local housing authorities are advised that sites, or pitches, should be provided. It is for the local housing authority to determine whether a particular applicant has ‘a cultural aversion’.

18.185 In determining whether there is a ‘cultural aversion’, local housing authorities should:

‘carefully . . . examine a gypsy’s claim for such special consideration and, if satisfied that it is genuine, whether in all the circumstances of the case, it should attempt to meet it, and, if so, how. Those circumstances should, of course, include the likely duration of occupation in respect of which an offer is to be made’.

18.186 In particular, a local housing authority should consider:

(1) whether the applicant and his or her family lived in a caravan;
(2) whether they subscribe to a gypsy culture;
(3) whether they are itinerant or nomadic for a substantial part of the year;
(4) whether itinerancy is linked to their livelihood; and
(5) whether they subscribe to the relevant features of the gypsy life.

1 Codona v Mid-Bedfordshire District Council [2004] EWCA Civ 925, [2005] HLR 1, CA, at [49]–[51] per Auld L.J. In that case, it was not wrong in law for the local housing authority to conclude on the facts that ‘bricks and mortar’ accommodation could be secured for a short time. See also Slattery v Basildon Borough Council [2014] EWCA Civ 30, [2014] HLR 16, CA, where the Court of Appeal upheld the local housing authority’s finding that the applicant’s depression was related to the circumstances of her eviction, rather than to the possibility of being accommodated in ‘bricks and mortar’ accommodation.

18.187 The English Code adds, drawing on decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, that local housing authorities must give consideration to their obligations to act consistently with the Human Rights Act 1998, and in particular the applicant’s right to respect for his or her private and family life, and his or her home.

1 For example, Chapman v United Kingdom (2001) 33 EHRR 18, ECHR.
Local housing authorities will have to address whether or not sites are available on four different occasions:

1. in determining whether or not they have ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant may be homeless, in that there is no place where the applicant is entitled or permitted to place and live in his or her mobile home or caravan – if so, and if they also have ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant may be eligible and may have a priority need, they have a duty to secure suitable interim accommodation pending notification of their decision;¹
2. in determining whether or not the applicant is actually homeless or threatened with homelessness according to the statutory test²;
3. in carrying out their assessment of the applicant’s case and drawing up his or her personalised housing plan³;
4. in determining, what suitable accommodation could be offered to the applicant in performance of any accommodation duty; and
5. in determining whether any duty has come to an end⁴.

If, during any part of this process, a place on an acceptable permanent site becomes available, is suitable for the applicant’s needs, and has been secured for him or her to occupy, the applicant will no longer be ‘homeless’, as there will be somewhere where he or she is entitled or permitted to park his or her mobile home or caravan and to live in it. If this arrangement comprises suitable accommodation for the applicant, and there is a reasonable prospect that the arrangement will be available for at least six months, the prevention or relief duties will come to an end⁵.

If no permanent site is available, the local housing authority’s duty is to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation. The starting point is that, if the applicant is accepted as having a cultural aversion to bricks and mortar, a temporary site should be found, so that, at least, ‘suitable’ accommodation has been secured¹.

1. HA 1996, ss 195(8)(a) and (d),189B(7)(a) and (c), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, ss 4(2) and 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.105–15.109, 15.118–15.122, 15.162–15.165 and 15.169–15.173.

If no permanent site is available, the local housing authority’s duty is to secure ‘suitable’ accommodation. The starting point is that, if the applicant is accepted as having a cultural aversion to bricks and mortar, a temporary site should be found, so that, at least, ‘suitable’ accommodation has been secured¹.

But, given the shortage of permanent and temporary sites for travellers, what if no site is available? The Court of Appeal has held that:
18.191 Suitability of Accommodation

‘where land is not available, or cannot readily be made available, on which a gypsy applicant can station his or her caravan, it is open to a local authority to provide other accommodation of the conventional bricks and mortar kind, providing that it satisfies the Wednesbury minimum line of suitability.’

The Codes contain the same advice\(^2\).

People who have experienced or at risk of domestic violence or abuse

18.192 HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, contain provisions to recognise the specific circumstances in which people who have experienced or are at risk of domestic violence or abuse are homeless\(^3\), may have a priority need\(^4\) and may not be referred under the conditions for referral\(^5\). But, incongruously, neither HA 1996, Pt 7, nor H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, contain any specific requirements as to what accommodation might be suitable for people who have experienced or are at risk of domestic abuse.

18.193 The English Code contains a chapter advising local housing authorities in England on specific issues relating to such people\(^6\). Within that it advises that consideration should be given to safe temporary accommodation, planning for victims to remain in or return to their homes, or finding accommodation that cannot be found by the perpetrator and which has security measures and appropriately staff to protect the occupants\(^7\). Refuges may be the most appropriate choice for people at risk from highly dangerous perpetrators but refuges should not be seen simply as a substitute for other forms of temporary accommodation\(^8\).

People with an offending history

18.194 The English Code\(^9\) contains a chapter advising local housing authorities in England on specific issues relating to people with an offending history\(^10\). It advises a multi-agency approach for securing accommodation, so that local housing authorities take the advice of the probation service or the Multi Agency Public Protection Agency. There may be particular issues concerning the location of accommodation and also support needs.

People who have experienced or at risk of modern slavery or trafficking

These are no specific provisions in either HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, contain provisions to recognise the specific circumstances in which people who have experienced or are at risk of modern slavery or trafficking might have a priority need. However, the English Code contains a chapter advising local housing authorities in England on specific issues relating to people who are in this position. It advises that local housing authorities should consider what accommodation options would be the most appropriate for each person on a case by case basis. If there is no option but emergency hostel or bed and breakfast accommodation, the accommodation should be gender-specific and have appropriate security measures. Risks of violence or racial harassment should be borne in mind, along with the risk of possible re-trafficking. There could be benefits in accommodation being secured outside the local housing authority’s own district.

ADVICE AND ASSISTANCE WHICH SECURES SUITABLE ACCOMMODATION

As already noted, as an alternative to providing accommodation (or arranging for someone else to secure accommodation), a local housing authority may discharge its duty to secure that suitable accommodation is available for the applicant and his or her household by:

‘... giving him such advice and assistance as will secure that suitable accommodation is available from some other person.’

1 See 18.12.
2 HA 1996, s 206(1)(c); H(W)A 2014, s 64(1)(b) and (2)(h).

This is different from the distinct duty under HA 1996, Pt 7 on local housing authorities in England to provide advice and assistance to applicants who have a priority need and have become homeless intentionally. It is also different from the HA 1996, s 195(2) or H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention...

18.198 If the advice and assistance provided under HA 1996, s 206(1)(c) or help provided under H(W)A 2014, s 64(2)(h) enables the applicant to succeed in obtaining suitable accommodation that is likely to be available for his or her occupation normally for at least six months, the local housing authority’s duty to him or her under HA 1996, Pt 7¹, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, will have been performed. Both Codes of Guidance contain chapters on the help that can be given to the applicant under the duties to help the applicant to secure accommodation¹.

SUITABILITY: DECISIONS AND CHALLENGES

Decisions

18.199 Save in the exceptional cases mentioned at 16.114, there is no strict requirement for a local housing authority to notify its decision that it considers particular accommodation secured in performance of a duty owed under HA 1996, Pt 7¹ or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 (or under a power) to be ‘suitable’ for the applicant. Nor is there any duty to provide reasons for such a decision².

¹ As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

18.200 Usually, however, such a decision will be notified in writing if:

(1) an applicant is being told that accommodation initially secured under an interim duty is subsequently being treated as suitable accommodation secured in performance of a different accommodation duty (if an applicant remains in the same accommodation during different stages of the local housing authority’s handling of his or her application under HA 1996, Pt 7¹ or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2), since the local housing authority is under a duty at each stage to consider whether the accommodation is suitable for an applicant’s needs²;

(2) for local housing authorities in England, the accommodation is being offered as a final accommodation offer¹;

(3) for local housing authorities in England, the accommodation is being offered as a final Pt 6 offer¹;

(4) the accommodation is being offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), or H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty¹;
(5) the accommodation is a private rented sector offer²; or
(6) the accommodation is a Pt 6 offer³;
(7) the applicant has raised a concern or complaint about the accommodation secured or offered; or
(8) there is some other reason why it would be good administrative practice to give such a notice.

⁴ HA 1996, ss 193A(S), or 193C(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; see 15.185–15.189 and 16.210–16.213.

18.201 For local housing authorities in England making offers of HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty accommodation, private rented sector offers, final accommodation offers, or final Pt 6 offers, the applicant must be advised of any right to review the local housing authority’s decision that the accommodation offered was ‘suitable’. It would be good practice to inform applicants in other circumstances of the right to request a review. It would also be good practice to inform applicants of the time within which the right to request a review should be exercised, in order to ensure that the right is effective.

18.202 There is no obligation on local housing authorities in Wales to inform applicants of their right to request a review of the suitability of any offers made, at the time of making the offer, but again it would be considered to be good practice to do so.

Statutory reviews

Statutory reviews in England

18.203 As already noted¹, an applicant to a local housing authority in England has the right to request a statutory review of any the local housing authority’s decisions that accommodation offered to him or her under HA 1996, ss 189B², 190(2)³, 193⁴, or 193C⁵ is suitable⁶. He or she also has the right to request a review of any decision that any duty has come to an end, including where the duty has come to an end as a result of the applicant’s acceptance or refusal of accommodation⁷. Additionally, the applicant may seek a review of the ‘suitability’ of:

- a final accommodation offer⁸;
18.203 Suitability of Accommodation

- a final Pt 6 offer;
- a final offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6 where that is being relied upon to bring a main housing duty to an end; or
- a private rented sector offer.

Where an applicant has requested a review of the suitability of a final accommodation offer or a final Pt offer, offered in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end, and the applicant had been occupying interim accommodation, the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty does not end until the decision on review has been notified to the applicant. The duty to secure interim accommodation will not come to an end until the decision on review has been notified to the applicant.

18.204 An applicant can, at any time, request that the local housing authority reconsider its decision that the accommodation secured under HA 1996, Pt 7, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is suitable. An applicant might need to take that step if accommodation that was originally suitable for the applicant when first occupied has become unsuitable as a result of a change in the applicant’s circumstances.\(^1\)

In Muse v Brent London Borough Council [2008] EWCA Civ 1447, (2009) February Legal Action, p 32, CA, the applicant refused to move from main housing duty accommodation which had become unsuitable to new accommodation offered to her which the local housing authority had decided was suitable for her and her household. As a result, the local housing authority’s main housing duty to her came to an end under HA 1996, s 193(5) (see 16.114–16.123).

Statutory reviews in Wales

18.205 Applicants to local housing authorities in Wales can request a statutory review of the decision that accommodation offered under any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 is suitable.\(^2\) Unlike applicants to local housing authorities in England, they can request a review of the suitability of accommodation secured under the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) interim accommodation duty.\(^3\) They can also request a review of any decision that accommodation offered to them in order to end any of those duties is suitable.\(^4\) They have the right to accept the accommodation offered under any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, while also requesting a review.\(^5\)

Offers which end duties

Local housing authorities in England

18.206 Seven types of offer of ‘suitable’ accommodation raise special issues. If these offers are refused by an applicant, the making of the offer can bring to an end the relevant duty owed under HA 1996, Pt 7.\(^6\) They are:

1. a final accommodation offer\(^7\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end;\(^8\)
2. a final Pt 6 offer\(^9\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end;\(^10\)
3. a final accommodation offer\(^11\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to an end;\(^12\)
4. a final Pt 6 offer\(^13\) made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to an end;\(^14\)

2 H(W)A 2014, s 83(3).

3 H(W)A 2014, s 83(1)(a); see 19.83–19.85.

18.206 Suitability of Accommodation

(5) an offer of suitable accommodation in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
(6) a final offer of suitable accommodation made through the allocation arrangements in HA 1996, Pt 6; and
(7) a private rented sector offer.

As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

As inserted by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; see 15.181–15.184.

As inserted by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; see 15.185–15.189.

18.207 Because these offers are of crucial importance, they are subject to special preconditions before they operate to bring relevant duties to an end.

As inserted by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; duty to secure accommodation to applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have not become homeless intentionally and have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, see 16.200–16.216.

As inserted by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018; duty to secure accommodation to applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have not become homeless intentionally and have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, see 16.210–16.213.

18.208 They also, exceptionally, confer on the applicant the right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation whilst simultaneously accepting it. Given the serious consequences which may follow if an offer is refused but is later upheld as ‘suitable’, accepting the offer while also requesting a review of the decision that the accommodation offered was suitable must normally be the advisable course of action.

1 HA 1996, ss 202(1A) and (1B), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.90–19.99.

18.209 Even if the applicant has not requested a review of a decision that accommodation offered in one of these ways is suitable, he or she is still entitled to a review of any later decision (if one is made) that the duty on the local housing authority has ended by reason of the refusal of that accommodation1. If the applicant’s reasons for refusing the offer are that the accommodation is not suitable, the local housing authority must consider his or her representations to that effect on review.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to a local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.15–19.17 and see Warsame v Hounslow London Borough Council (2000) 32 HLR 335, CA.

18.210 The general rules governing what facts, law and other circumstances the reviewing officer should consider are modified in relation to reviews of decisions to end a duty as a result of the applicant having refused an offer of accommodation that the local housing authority has considered to be suitable for the applicant and his or her household. The reviewing officer is required to look at the facts that existed at the date of the applicant’s refusal of the offer, albeit that some of those facts might only come to the local housing authority’s attention after the refusal1.

18.211 In Nzolameso v City of Westminster Council4, the Supreme Court held that the local housing authority’s letter containing its decision that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty had come to an end because the applicant had refused an offer of suitable accommodation2 could not demonstrate that it had considered the location of the accommodation, the applicant’s needs and all of the issues in art 2 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 20123. There was no indication that the reviewing officer recognised, in particular, the obligation to offer accommodation as close to the local housing authority’s district as possible (if it was not reasonably practicable to offer accommodation within its district)4.

Local housing authorities in Wales

18.212 Six types of offer of accommodation raise special issues. If these offers are refused by an applicant, the making of the offer can bring to an end the relevant duty owed under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. They are:
18.212 Suitability of Accommodation

- an offer of accommodation made in order to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty to an end;
- an offer of accommodation made in order to bring the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty to an end;
- an offer of accommodation made in performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty;
- an offer of suitable accommodation made in performance of the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty;
- a final offer of suitable accommodation made through the allocation arrangements in HA 1996, Pt 6; and
- a private rented sector offer.

As for applicants to local housing authorities in England, the applicant has the right to accept the offer whilst simultaneously requesting a review of the suitability. Given the serious consequences which may follow if an offer is refused, but is later upheld as suitable, accepting the offer whilst also requesting a review of the decision that the accommodation offered was suitable must normally be the advisable course of action.

Legal challenges

18.213 There is no explicit duty to assess the suitability of the accommodation in relation to the applicant’s needs before making the offer of accommodation. Nor is there any duty on the local housing authority to give the reasons, in its letter offering the accommodation, why it considers that the accommodation is suitable.

Disputes over suitability

18.214 It is expected that, if the accommodation appears to the applicant to be unsuitable, the applicant will have the opportunity to raise reasons why the accommodation is or was not suitable during the review process. However, it makes good administrative sense for a local housing authority to satisfy itself as to the suitability of accommodation to be offered, before making the offer, not least in order to minimise dissatisfaction and the prospect of a review.

18.215 Where the local housing authority decides on review that the accommodation was suitable for the applicant, it has a duty to give reasons for that decision. Those reasons must be adequate and intelligible to the applicant and must address the issues relating to suitability raised by the applicant and by the legislation\(^1\). Where a review decision is in the applicant’s favour, the review officer is not required to give reasons for the decision that the accommodation was not suitable\(^2\).

18.216 If the review decision confirms that the accommodation offered was suitable, the applicant may appeal to the county court on a point of law\(^1\). An applicant can only seek to challenge a particular decision that the accommodation was suitable for his or her needs. The courts will not entertain a challenge to the local housing authority’s policy on certain types of offers in the abstract\(^2\).

Failure to secure suitable accommodation

18.217 If the local housing authority agrees that the accommodation is not suitable for the needs of the applicant and members of his or her household but does not secure any alternative accommodation, the applicant’s remedy is to bring a claim in judicial review for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to secure suitable accommodation\(^1\).

18.218 If the dispute between the applicant and the local housing authority as to the suitability of accommodation does not attract a right to request a review\(^1\), the applicant’s remedy is to bring a claim by way of judicial review proceedings arguing that the local housing authority’s decision is wrong in law, or to invoke the local housing authority’s complaints procedure\(^2\).

1 See 18.20.

Handling ‘suitability’ disputes

18.219 The general conduct of reviews, appeals and court challenges is dealt with in Chapter 19, but several specific points can be made about the conduct of cases which concern ‘suitability’ issues.

18.220 Where an applicant pursuing a review raises new information as part of his or her argument that the accommodation is unsuitable, the reviewing officer must take that information into account. If the fact that the information was not previously raised causes the reviewing officer to disbelieve the applicant, the reviewing officer must put those concerns to the applicant and give him or her an opportunity to deal with them\(^1\). If the reviewing officer is relying on inconsistencies in the applicant’s account, those too should be put to the applicant for explanation\(^2\). If a reviewing officer, in the course of deliberations into whether or not accommodation offered was suitable, obtains information from a third party causing him or her to believe that the accommodation was suitable, the information should be put to the applicant for comment.\(^3\)

\(^1\) R v Hackney London Borough Council ex p Decordova (1995) 27 HLR 108, QBD.

18.221 Where both medical and non-medical considerations are raised as reasons for the refusal of an offer, the local housing authority must take an overall or composite view of those reasons as affecting the suitability of the accommodation for the individual applicant.\(^4\) If there is conflicting medical evidence or opinion, the local housing authority is under a duty to act fairly and not merely to rely on the view of its medical adviser without explaining why it had rejected the contrary views of other medical practitioners.\(^5\) It should also put to the applicant for comment any adverse medical views on which it is proposing to rely.\(^6\) Where a consultant’s report was rejected after referral to the local housing authority’s medical adviser, the subsequent decision of the local housing authority was quashed because it had failed to give reasons for rejecting the report.\(^4\) Where the local housing authority does not make its own investigations into the applicant’s medical condition or obtain its own medical advice, it is bound by the medical evidence on suitability submitted by the applicant.\(^5\)

\(^1\) R v Lewisham London Borough Council ex p Dolan (1993) 25 HLR 68, QBD.
\(^2\) R v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council ex p Assister (1996) September Legal Action, p 13, QBD.

\(^5\) R v Haringey London Borough Council ex p Karaman (1997) 29 HLR 366, QBD.

18.222 The letter containing the decision or review decision should be able to demonstrate that the local housing authority had not only considered all the issues on suitability raised by the applicant, but had also considered the relevant law, before deciding that its duty had come to an end. In the case of accommodation located outside of the local housing authority’s district, the letter should show the local housing authority’s assessment of how practicable it would be for the applicant and his or her household to move out of the area, what inquiries had been made to ascertain whether school places would be available (if relevant)\(^7\) and what the applicant’s particular medical conditions required. It should also indicate what accommodation was available in the local housing district, why that had not been offered to the applicant and should make it clear that the local housing authority had understood that there is an obligation to offer accommodation as close to its district as possible.\(^8\)

Suitability: decisions and challenges 18.224

18.223 Where an applicant has accepted the accommodation and simultaneously sought a review of the suitability, the reviewing officer should consider all the circumstances at the date of the review. It follows that, if there have been any developments between the date of the request for a review and the reviewing officer's decision, and those developments might render the accommodation unsuitable, they should be considered.

18.224 If a review is determined in the applicant's favour, and the reviewing officer decides that the accommodation offered to the applicant, and accepted by him or her, is not suitable, then the local housing authority must take steps to secure that suitable accommodation is available. The Ombudsman has found maladministration, and recommended compensation of £1,400, where there had been a delay in dealing with a review and a subsequent delay in identifying a suitable alternative property when the review succeeded.

INTRODUCTION

19.1 Inevitably, some applicants are disappointed with the decisions made by local housing authorities on their applications for assistance under the Housing Act 1996, Pt 7 (HA 1996) (‘Homelessness’) or under the Housing (Wales) Act 2014, Pt 2 (H(W)A 2014) (‘Homelessness’). Others may be concerned at the way in which they have been treated by a local housing authority or the way in which it has performed its obligations.

1 As amended by Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.2 Disputes about the content of decisions were not addressed at all in the earliest versions of the statutory homelessness provisions. From 1977 onwards, those who were disappointed sought recourse to the courts, initially by ordinary civil claims in the county courts and in the Chancery and Queen’s Bench Divisions of the High Court. But from the early 1980s, challenges to decisions could only be made by bringing judicial review proceedings in the Crown Office List of the High Court, now the Administrative Court. As a result, challenges were confined to claims alleging breach by the local housing authority of administrative law principles.
19.2 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.3 Only a modest number of judicial review applications were brought, but, partly at least to reduce the numbers of those challenges, later versions of the Codes of Guidance encouraged local housing authorities to establish and operate their own in-house mechanisms to review disputed decisions. Applicants who expressed concern about decisions on their applications could then request an extra-statutory, internal review of those decisions by the relevant local housing authority. The approach was widely adopted by local housing authorities, but in practice did little to diminish the numbers of judicial review applications to the courts.

19.4 The current regime in HA 1996, Pt 7 and, for local housing authorities in Wales, in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, built on both approaches (in-house reviews and access to the courts to challenge the contents of unlawful decisions). First, HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, each contain a statutory scheme for internal review by a local housing authority of some of its own decisions. Second, most legal challenges are diverted away from the High Court to the county court, where there is a limited right of appeal against those decisions capable of being subject to statutory review. Third, judicial review remains available for a residual category of disputes under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, in particular those relating to non-reviewable decisions. Concerns that this three-pronged arrangement for challenging decisions might not comply with the ‘fair hearing’ requirements of the European Convention on Human Rights were quickly put to rest by the House of Lords. Since then, in 2010 and again in 2017, the Supreme Court has held that decision-making on an application for homelessness assistance did not involve a determination of the applicant’s ‘civil rights’ and therefore that Art 6(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights did not apply.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.5 Where the applicant’s concern is over the way in which his or her application has been handled, or the way in which the duties owed have been performed, HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, provide no means of redress. For that, the applicant must look first to the local housing authority’s own complaints procedure. That procedure is underscored by:

(1) a right of further complaint to the Local Commissioner for Administration or to the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales;
(2) the local housing authority’s own monitoring officer, who deals with alleged maladministration or unlawful conduct; and
(3) an enhanced statutory power permitting local authorities to give compensation to complainants.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2. Known as ‘the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman’.

3. Local Government and Housing Act 1989, ss 5 and 5A, which are each slightly modified for the two different jurisdictions in England and in Wales.

19.6 Of course, in the process of performing its functions under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, the local housing authority may also infringe the applicant’s rights under the European Convention on Human Rights (giving rise to a possible claim under the Human Rights Act 1998) or be guilty of discrimination on the grounds of one or more of the eight protected characteristics set out in the Equality Act 2010. A full consideration of such specialist claims is beyond the scope of this book. In addition, if the local housing authority is not performing its acknowledged duty under HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or is failing to consider exercising an available power, the Administrative Court can grant a mandatory order in judicial review proceedings, requiring it to perform its statutory obligations.

4. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

5. See 19.312.

19.7 Any particular application for homelessness assistance may trigger more than one of the different possibilities for redress. This chapter considers each potential remedy in turn. The reader will need to consider the portfolio as a whole before deciding which remedy, or which selection of remedies, to pursue.

REVIEWs

Statutory reviews

An overview

19.8 Where an applicant is disappointed with a decision made by the local housing authority on his or her application for homelessness assistance, the statutory review processes provided by HA 1996, Pt 7, and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, may give that applicant an opportunity to have all the relevant facts and the law reconsidered by the local housing authority. In most cases, the reviewing officer must look at all the circumstances afresh, and as they exist at the date of the review decision. The process is not confined to considering matters as they stood when the applicant first applied or as at the date of the initial decision. The statutory review is, therefore, the opportunity for the applicant to have his or her case completely re-examined by the local housing authority itself.

19.8 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

2 HA 1996, ss 202–203, as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018; H(W)A 2014 ss 85–87.

4 Case law has developed two exceptions to the general rule that a reviewing officer considers all the circumstances at the date of the review decision. The first exception is where the decision made under HA 1996, s 184 or the assessment under H(W)A 2014, s 63(1) was unlawful, and had deprived the applicant of rights that he or she would have had if there had been a lawful decision, so that the reviewing officer should restore those rights (Robinson v Hammersmith & Fulham London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 1122, [2007] HLR 7, CA). See 9.93–9.94 and 12.136–12.139. The second exception is where the review relates to a decision that the local housing authority’s duty to the applicant has come to an end, because the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation, see 15.118–15.123, 15.169–15.173, 15.181–15.188, 16.114–16.123, 16.142–16.152, 16.163–16.179 and 16.205–16.216 (England) and 17.66–17.72, 17.109–17.117, 17.129, 17.165–17.179 (Wales). In those circumstances, the reviewing officer should consider the facts and circumstances as at the date of the refusal (Omar v Westminster City Council [2008] EWCA Civ 421, [2008] HLR 36, CA). See 16.111.

19.9 There is no free-standing right to a review of every adverse decision made by a local housing authority under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The statutory review schemes apply only to a specific band of decisions. However, nothing in either HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, prevents a local housing authority from adopting its own informal arrangements enabling it to look again at any other decisions about which applicants express concern. Such informal reviews are no part of the statutory scheme, but can nevertheless help to reduce the number of formal complaints or claims for judicial review.

19.10 When the scheme of statutory reviews was first introduced by HA 1996, Pt 7, it was hoped that this new regime would be monitored so as to establish its success or failure. Regrettably, there has been very little feedback on whether or not the scheme of statutory reviews has been a success.

19.11 The first government-commissioned research targeted a geographic area in which there had been relatively little review activity. The little empirical information that is available has come mainly through independent academic research. In 2011, the magazine Inside Housing published the result of its own investigations, showing that, on average, 42% of initial decisions... that reached the review stage were overturned by the reviewing officer.

2 Cowan, Halliday and Hunter ‘Homelessness reviews – findings published’ (2002) July Legal Action, p 6; and ‘Homeless applicants and internal reviews’ (2003) March Legal Action, p 8; Cowan, Dymond, Halliday, and Hunter ‘Reconsidering mandatory reconsideration’ Public Law, April 2017, 215–234 confirm a substantial attrition rate between initial applications, internal reviews and subsequent appeals. They also found evidence that, the higher the internal review caseload of local housing authorities, the more likely those local housing authorities were to consider that internal review improved the quality of their ongoing initial decision-making.

Which decisions by a local housing authority in England can be reviewed?

19.12 An applicant who is dissatisfied with a local housing authority’s decision in his or her case can only request a review if the decision falls into one of the categories specified at HA 1996, s 202(1). Between them, these categories encompass many of the most important decisions that a local housing authority is likely to make on an application. We consider each of the categories in turn.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.13 If a local housing authority’s decision does not fall into one of the specified categories, there is no right to request a statutory review, and any legal challenge to the decision itself can only be by way of judicial review. The procedure to be followed on review is set out at Homelessness (Review Procedure etc.) Regulations 2018 and Chapter 19 of the English Code.

1 See 19.306–19.332.

2 SI 2018/223, see Appendix 2. These Regulations apply to requests for review made on or after 3 April 2018: reg 11(2) SI 2018/223. Requests for review made before 3 April 2018 are governed by the Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Review Procedures) Regulations 1999, SI 1999/71.

(1) Any decision as to the applicant’s ‘eligibility’ for assistance

19.14 ‘Eligibility’ is primarily a matter of immigration status and is fully discussed in Chapter 11. The decision capable of statutory review is the decision of the local housing authority, not any decision of the immigration or benefits authorities on essentially the same subject matter.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(a), English Code, para 19.3(a).

(2) Any decision as to what duty (if any) is owed to the applicant

19.15 The right to a review is only available in respect of decisions as to whether a duty is owed under the following sections of HA 1996, Pt 7:

- the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation;
19.15 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

- the HA 1996, s 190(2)(a), duty to accommodate applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have become homeless intentionally and in respect of whom the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end;
- the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
- the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have not become homeless intentionally and who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate; and
- the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available for his or her occupation.

7. HA 1996s, 193(2), duty to accommodate applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have not become homeless intentionally and in respect of whom the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end: see 16.94–16.199.

19.16 The applicant will know whether or not the decision falls within one of the categories which entitle him or her to request a review, as he or she will receive a written notification, informing him or her of the right to request a review and of the time within which the request must be made.

1. See 9.90.

19.17 This category is also broad enough to include a right to a review of any decision that a duty once owed (under one of the specified sections) is no longer owed. Some decisions by which a duty can come to an end contain separate rights to request a review and so do not need to be reviewed under this category. Accordingly, this category includes:
Reviews 19.18

- any decision of a local housing authority that the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty\(^1\) has come to an end by reason of one of the events at HA 1996, s 193(5)–(7AA)\(^4\) inclusive; and
- any decision of a local housing authority that the HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^6\), accommodation duty\(^7\) has come to an end by reason of one of the events at HA 1996\(^8\), s 193C(5)–(6)\(^9\) inclusive\(^10\).

\(^1\) Warsame v Hounslow London Borough Council (2000) 32 HLR 335, CA. Note the special rules regarding the scope of the review where the decision is that an accommodation duty has come to an end as a result of the applicant having refused an offer of accommodation. See 16.111.

\(^2\) Any decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, relief duty has come to an end has a right to request a review at HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(ii) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 19.24–19.29. Any decision that the HA 1996, s 195(2), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, prevention duty has come to an end has a right to request a review at HA 1996, s 202(1)(bc)(ii) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 19.42–19.48.

(3) Any decision of the local housing authority as to the steps it is to take under HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty

19.18 Once the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant is eligible for assistance and is homeless, so that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^1\), relief duty is owed, the local housing authority is under a separate duty\(^2\) to make an assessment of the applicant’s case and to notify the applicant in writing of the assessment\(^3\). It is also under a duty to try to agree a personalised housing plan with the applicant\(^4\). That personalised housing plan will include the steps that the local housing authority is to take in order to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation\(^5\), and the steps that either the applicant agrees to take for the same purpose\(^6\), or the local housing authority considers that it would be reasonable to require him or her to take\(^7\). The plan must be recorded in writing and given to the applicant\(^8\).

\(^1\) As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.

5 HA 1996, s 189A(4)(b), (5) and (6)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72–15.86.
6 HA 1996, s 189A(4)(a) and (5), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72.
7 HA 1996, s 189A(6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.73.
8 HA 1996, s 189A(5), (6) and (8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.75.

19.19 This right to request a review allows an applicant to ask for a reconsideration of the steps that the local housing authority has decided that it should take. It does not permit the applicant to ask for a reconsideration of the steps that he has agreed, or more relevantly, is recorded as required to take. This is an opportunity for the applicant to make representations as to what would actually help him or her to find and keep his or her own accommodation.

1 A challenge to the steps that an applicant has agreed, or is required, to take can only be brought after the event, ie if notice of a decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate is served on him or her under HA 1996, s 193B(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.196–15.221. The right to request a review of that decision is at HA 1996, s 202(1)(bb), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.30–19.35.

19.20 The steps that the local housing authority have decided, or agreed, to take will dictate to how it performs the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty. Indeed, these steps, together with those agreed by the applicant or required to be taken by him or her, will comprise the personalised plan setting out how the local housing authority will help the applicant to secure his or her own accommodation. If the applicant is dissatisfied with the steps to be taken by the local housing authority in the personalised housing plan, he or she should therefore exercise his or her right to request a review.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.138–15.195.

19.21 The 21-day period within which to request a review will begin on the day when the written record of the personal housing plan is given to the applicant or the end of the period when it is made available for collection at the local housing authority’s office.

1 HA 1996, ss 189A(8) and (12), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, and 202(3) see 15.70 and 15.75.

19.22 There is a short period prescribed for the completion of the review. The applicant will have two weeks from the date he or she requested the review in which to provide representations. That period could be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer. The review decision itself must be notified to the applicant three weeks from the date when the review request was made (not received) or, if a minded-to letter had been sent, three weeks from the applicant’s response to the minded-to letter. The applicant and the reviewer could agree in writing that there will be a longer period for notification of the review decision.

3. SI 2018/223, reg 9(1)(a)(i); English Code, para 19.23.
4. SI 2018/223, reg 9(1).

19.23 The reviewing officer will consider the facts and circumstances as they exist at the date of the review, so any new developments, or any information that was not previously known to the local housing authority, can be taken into account. This is an opportunity for the applicant to ask for additional, or different, steps to be taken by the local housing authority, and, essentially, to ask for the personalised housing plan to be reconsidered.

(4) Any decision of the local housing authority to give notice to the applicant under HA 1996, s 189B(5), that the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty has come to an end

19.24 The local housing authority can give notice to the applicant of a decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end if it is satisfied of any of the following:

- that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for occupation and there is a reasonable prospect of having suitable accommodation available for occupation for at least six months;
- that the local housing authority has complied with the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty for a period of 56 days beginning with the day that the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty was owed, and the 56 day period has ended;
- that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and, on the date of refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation for at least six months;
- that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation that was made available to him or her as a result of the exercise of the local housing authority’s HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief functions;
- that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance; or
- that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application for homelessness assistance.

19.25 The applicant will have been notified in writing of any such decision. That notification must specify which of the circumstances applies, and inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review and of the 21 day period within which the request must be made. The 21 day period will run from the date of notification, ie the date when the applicant actually receives the notification or, if the notification is not received by the applicant, after a reasonable period from it having been made available at the local housing authority’s for collection.

19.26 Two of the circumstances refer to the applicant either having suitable accommodation or having refused an offer of suitable accommodation. HA 1996, s 202(1)(f), permits an applicant to request a review of the suitability of that accommodation. However, there is no express stipulation that an applicant requesting a review under HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(ii), is permitted both to accept the accommodation and to request a review.

4 As amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

5 HA 1996, s 202(1A) and (1B) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018)
Reviews 19.29

refer to the applicant being able to accept offers and to request a review of their suitability where those offers are made under HA 1996, s 193(5), (7), (7AA) or final accommodation offers or final Part 6 offers made under HA 1996, ss 193A or 193C (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018).

19.27 An applicant who has been offered accommodation, and considers the accommodation to be unsuitable should accept the offer. If he or she refuses the offer, and a subsequent review upholds the original decision and concludes that the accommodation was suitable, the applicant will no longer be owed the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty and may face the prospect of being homeless.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.28 Having accepted the offer, he or she will then receive notification of a decision that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end as a result of his or her acceptance of the offer under HA 1996, s 189B(7)(a). That notification would entitle the applicant then to request a review and to make representations to the effect that the duty has not come to an end because the accommodation offered, and accepted, is not suitable. Or to make any other representations the applicant felt to be relevant. If the reviewing officer agrees that the accommodation is not suitable, the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty will not have ended. If the reviewing officer decides that the accommodation is suitable, and upholds the original decision, the applicant will at least not be homeless.

1 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.162–15.165.

3 As inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.29 It should be noted that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty can also come to an end in four other circumstances:

- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need and is not satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally and the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end at the end of 56 days from the date when the local housing authority was first satisfied that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty was owed;
- where the applicant has refused a final accommodation offer made under HA 1996, s 193A(1); or
- where the applicant has refused a final Part 6 offer made under HA 1996, s 193A(1); or
- where an applicant has been given a notice of the local housing authority’s decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate.

These mechanisms for the ending of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty do not fall within the scope of this right to request a review, but there are separate rights to request reviews of those decisions at HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), (bb), and

(5) Any decision of the local housing authority to give notice to the applicant under HA 1996, s 193B(2), that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate 19.30 Section 193B(2) permits a local housing authority to give notice to an applicant of its decision that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate\(^\text{a}\). The only basis on which the local housing authority can reach that decision is if it considers that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take any step, either that he or she had agreed to in the personalised housing plan\(^\text{b}\), or that the local housing authority had recorded that it was reasonable to require him or her to take\(^\text{c}\). Guidance as to what might constitute a deliberate and unreasonable refusal is given in the English Code\(^\text{c}\).

4 HA 1996, s 189A(6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.73.

19.31 The request for a review must be made within 21 days of notification of the decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. That period runs either from the date on which the applicant has received the notice or, if the notice is not received by the applicant, after it has been made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection.

2 HA 1996, s 193B(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.211.

19.32 There is no right to request a review of the warning notice given before the decision was notified. The applicant does not have any opportunity, at this stage or even earlier, when the personalised housing plan is being drawn up, to challenge the steps which he or she has either agreed to, or, more likely, is required to take under the personalised housing plan. The applicant could consider a claim in judicial review in order to challenge the decisions as to those steps, or the decision to send a warning notice.

1 HA 1996, s 193B(5) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), see 15.207.

2 See 15.72–15.80.

3 HA 1996, s 189A(4) (a) and (6)(b), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72–15.73.

4 See 19.306–19.332.

19.33 It follows that the only statutory opportunity that the applicant has to challenge the steps that he or she is required to take under the personalised housing plan is after a notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate has been served on him or her. Of course, he or she may have raised issues about those steps at an earlier stage, when the personal housing plan was being drawn up. However, there is no opportunity for the applicant formally to require another housing officer, or a senior officer of the local housing authority, to review what steps he or she is required to take. Those steps will only be reconsidered after the applicant is said to have deliberately and unreasonably refused to take them, a notice to that effect has been served, and the applicant requests a review.

1 HA 1996, s 189A(4)–(6) inclusive, as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72–15.80.

19.34 There is a short period prescribed for the completion of the review. The applicant will have two weeks from the date he or she requested the review in which to provide representations. That period could be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer. The review decision itself must be notified to the applicant three weeks from the date when the review request was made (not received) or, if a minded-to letter had been sent, three weeks from the applicant’s response to the minded-to letter. The applicant and the reviewer could agree in writing that there will be a longer period for notification of the review decision¹.

3 SI 2018/223, reg 9(1)(a)(i); English Code, para 19.23.
4 SI 2018/223, reg 9(1).

19.35 The reviewing officer will consider the facts and circumstances as they exist at the date of the review, so any new developments, or any information that was not previously known to the local housing authority, can be taken into account¹. This is an opportunity for the applicant to make the case that the steps that he or she either agreed to take, or, more likely, was required to take were not reasonable or not realistic, and, essentially, to ask for the personalised housing plan to be reconsidered.

(6) ANY DECISION OF THE LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITY AS TO THE STEPS IT IS TO TAKE UNDER HA 1996, s 195(2), PREVENTION DUTY

19.36 Once the local housing authority is satisfied that an applicant is eligible for assistance and is threatened with homelessness, so that the HA 1996, s 195(2)¹, prevention duty is owed, the local housing authority is under a separate duty² to make an assessment of the applicant’s case and to notify that assessment in writing³. It is also under a duty to try to agree a personalised housing plan with the applicant⁴. That personalised housing plan will include the steps that the local housing authority is to take in order to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation does not cease to become available for his or her occupation⁵, and the steps that either the applicant agrees to take for the same purpose⁶, or the local housing authority considers would be reasonable for him or her to take⁷. The plan must be recorded in writing and given to the applicant⁸.

3 HA 1996, s 189A(4)(a), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72–15.74.

5 HA 1996, s 189A(5), (6) and (8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.74–15.75.
19.37 This right to request a review allows an applicant to ask for a reconsideration of the steps that the local housing authority has decided that it should take. It does not permit the applicant to ask for a reconsideration of the steps that he or she has agreed, or more relevantly, is recorded as being required to take¹.

¹ A challenge to the steps that an applicant has agreed, or is required, to take can only be brought after the event, ie if notice of a decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate is served on him or her under HA 1996, s 193B(1), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.196–15.221. The right to request a review of that decision is at HA 1996, s 202(1)(bb), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.30–19.35.

19.38 The steps that the local housing authority have decided, or agreed, to take will dictate how it performs the HA 1996, s 195(2)¹, prevention duty. Indeed, these steps, together with those agreed by the applicant or required to be taken by him or her, will comprise the personalised housing plan, setting out how the local housing authority and the applicant will work together either to secure his or her existing accommodation or to find alternative accommodation². If the applicant is dissatisfied with the steps to be taken by the local housing authority in the personalised housing plan, he or she should therefore exercise his or her right to request a review.

19.39 The 21-day period within which to request a review will begin on the day when the written record of the personalised housing plan is given to the applicant, or at the end of the period when the record is left for collection at the local housing authority’s office¹.

19.40 There is a short period prescribed for the completion of the review. The applicant will have two weeks from the date he or she requested the review in which to provide representations. That period could be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer¹. The review decision itself must be notified to the applicant three weeks from the date when the review request was made (not received) or, if a minded-to letter² had been sent, three weeks from the applicant’s response to the minded-to letter³. The applicant and the reviewer could agree in writing that there will be a longer period for notification of the review decision⁴.

19.41 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.41 The reviewing officer will consider the whole of the facts and circumstances available at the date of the review, so any new developments, or any information that was not previously known to the local housing authority, can be taken into account¹. This is an opportunity for the applicant to ask for additional, or different, steps to be taken and, essentially, to ask for the plan to be reconsidered.

(7) Any decision of the local housing authority to give notice to the applicant under HA 1996, s 195(5), that the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty has come to an end

19.42 The local housing authority can give notice to the applicant of a decision that the HA 1996, s 195(2)¹, prevention duty has come to an end if it is satisfied of any of the following²:

• that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for occupation and there is a reasonable prospect of having suitable accommodation available for occupation for at least six months³;
• that the local housing authority has complied with the HA 1996, s 195(2)⁴, prevention duty for a period of 56 days beginning with the day that the local housing authority was first satisfied that the duty was owed, and the 56 day period has ended, unless the applicant has been served with a valid Housing Act 1998 s 21 notice⁵;
• that the applicant has become homeless⁶;
• that the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and, on the date of refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for occupation for at least six months⁷;
• that the applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation that was made available to him or her as a result of the exercise of the local housing authority’s HA 1996, s 195(2)⁸, prevention functions⁹;
• that the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance¹⁰; or
• that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application for homelessness assistance¹¹.

Reviews 19.43

19.44 Two of the circumstances refer to the applicant either having suitable accommodation, or having refused an offer of suitable accommodation. HA 1996, s 202(1)(t), permits an applicant to request a review of the suitability of that accommodation. However, there is no express stipulation that an applicant requesting a review under HA 1996, s 202(1)(bc)(ii), is permitted both to accept the accommodation and to request a review.

1 HA 1996, s 195(8)(a), as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.105-15.109.

5 HA 1996, s 202(1A) and (1B) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) refer to the applicant being able to accept offers and to request a review of their suitability where those offers are made under HA 1996, s 193(5), (7), (7AA) or final accommodation offers or final Part 6 offers made under HA 1996, ss 193A or 193C (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018).
19.45 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.45 An applicant who has been offered accommodation, and considers the accommodation to be unsuitable should accept the offer. If he or she refuses the offer, and a subsequent review upholds the original decision and concludes that the accommodation was suitable, the applicant will no longer be owed the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.87–15.135.

19.46 Having accepted the offer, he or she will then receive notification of a decision that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end as a result of his or her acceptance of the offer under HA 1996, s 195(8)(a). That notification would entitle the applicant then to request a review and to make representations to the effect that the duty has not come to an end because the accommodation offered, and accepted, is not suitable. Or to make any other representations the applicant felt to be relevant. If the reviewing officer agrees that the accommodation is not suitable, the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty will not have ended. If the reviewing officer decides that the accommodation is suitable, and upholds the original decision, the applicant will at least not be facing the prospect of imminent homelessness.

2 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.101.

19.47 There is a short period prescribed for the completion of the review. The applicant will have two weeks from the date he or she requested the review in which to provide representations. That period could be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer. The review decision itself must be notified to the applicant three weeks from the date when the review request was made (not received) or, if a minded-to letter had been sent, three weeks from the applicant’s response to the minded-to letter. The applicant and the reviewer could agree in writing that there will be a longer period for notification of the review decision.

4 SI 2018/223, reg 9(1).

19.48 It should be noted that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty can also come to an end where an applicant has been given a notice that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate. This mechanism for the ending of the duty does not fall within the scope of this right to request a review, but there is a separate right to request a review at HA 1996, s 202(1)(bb).

(8) Any decision to notify another local housing authority under HA 1996, s 198(1)

19.49 Under HA 1996, s 198(1)1 (‘conditions for referral’)2, a local housing authority can initiate the procedure for the referral of the performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty3 to another local housing authority4. The procedure starts when the local housing authority that has received the application notifies the other local housing authority that it believes that one of the three conditions for a referral is made out.

19.50 As a result of amendments to HA 1996, Pt 71, made by HRA 2017, there is no obligation on the notifying local housing authority to give to the applicant that such a notification is going to be made or has been made2. It follows that the applicant will also not be informed the right to seek a review of the decision to notify. However, there is provision to notify the applicant that the local housing authority intends to notify another local housing authority or has already done so3.

2 HA 1996, s 184(5), as amended by HRA 2017, s 5(10), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.51 The applicant has the right to request a review once the notifying local housing authority has made two decisions on his or her application. The applicant will have been notified of that decision by the notifying local housing authority and notified of his or her right to request a review.4 The decisions are:

(1) that it considers that the conditions for referral are met; and
(2) that it is going to exercise its discretion to notify the other local housing authority on that basis2.

The applicant’s request for a review can cause either or both of those decisions to be reconsidered.

1 HA 1996, s 184(4) and (5), see 14.155–14.156.

19.52 It follows that the review request can be made before the notification is actually sent from the first to the second local housing authority. In those circumstances, it may be sensible for the first local housing authority to conduct and determine the review before it notifies the second local housing authority, as, if the review is successful and the decision set aside, there may be no need to notify. This is particularly true if the applicant is challenging a decision as to which (of several) local housing authorities he or she should be referred.\(^1\)

\(^1\) In Berhane v Lambeth London Borough Council [2007] EWHC 2702 (QB), (2008) March Legal Action, p 28, QBD, the High Court criticised a county court judge’s decision to adjourn the applicant’s appeal against a decision to notify another local housing authority until the two local housing authorities had resolved their dispute as to whether or not the conditions for referral were made out. Where there had been undue delay on the part of the notifying local housing authority, it was wrong, and deprived the applicant of effective access to the courts, to wait for the referee’s decision. This decision emphasises that the applicant’s right to challenge a decision to refer him or her to another local housing authority is entirely separate from the procedure used by two local housing authorities to resolve disputes between themselves. See 14.176–14.190 for disputes between two local housing authorities; and see 14.191–14.211 for challenges by the applicant.

19.53 Where the second local housing authority is notified before a review is requested, or concluded, any response it makes does not affect the applicant’s right to a review or the conclusions of that review.

19.54 There is no right available, either under this category or any other, to review a decision not to notify another local housing authority under the referral provisions.\(^1\) Nor is there any right to request a review of a decision to notify another local housing authority to refer the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2),\(^2\) relief duty under HA 1996, s 198(A1),\(^3\) If the applicant is notified of a decision to refer the HA 1996, s 189B(2),\(^4\) relief duty and wishes to challenge that decision, he or she would have to wait for the decision to be made between the two local housing authorities as to whether the conditions for referral are met.\(^5\)

(9) Any decision under HA 1996, s 198(5) as to whether the conditions for referral are met

19.55 The right to request a review of the decision set out in the preceding category enables an applicant to challenge the opinion of the notifying local housing authority that the conditions for referral are made out.\(^1\) This additional category confers a right to a review of the final decision as to whether the referral conditions are actually made out. The applicant therefore has a right to request a review of either one of two decisions:

- a decision that the conditions are met, or are not met, for the referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2),\(^2\) relief duty to another local housing authority;\(^3\) or
- a decision that the conditions are met, or are not met, for the referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty\(^4\) to another local housing

19.56 The final decision arises after the first local housing authority has notified the second local housing authority. They may either agree between them that the conditions are made out (or that they are not), or, if they cannot agree, they may invite a referee to decide the matter under the disputes procedure.

19.57 There are special modifications made to the ordinary review procedures where the request for a review is in respect of either a joint decision or a referee’s decision.

(10) Any decision under HA 1996, s 200(3) or (4)

19.58 In the light of amendments made to HA 1996, s 200(3) and (4) by the Homelessness Act 2002, this category is arguably redundant. The only decision to which these two subsections now refer is the final decision that the conditions for referral are or are not met and those can be raised under the previous category. However, for clarity, this provides a right to request a review of any decision that:

• the conditions for referral of the main housing duty to another local housing authority are not met and so the notifying local housing authority is subject to the main housing duty;

• the conditions for referral of the main housing duty are met and a notified local housing authority in either England or Wales is subject to the main housing duty.

(11) Any decision as to the suitability of accommodation

19.59 This category concerns decisions as to the suitability of accommodation offered to the applicant in performance of the following duties owed under HA 1996, Pt 7:

• the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available for his or her occupation.

- the HA 1996, s 1930(2)(a), duty to accommodate applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have become homeless intentionally and in respect of whom the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end;
- the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
- the HA 1996, s 193C(4), duty to accommodate applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have a priority need, have not become homeless intentionally and who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate;
- the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure that accommodation does not cease to be available for his or her occupation;
- the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty owed to an applicant where it has been decided that the conditions for referral of his or her case are not met; and
- the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty owed to an applicant by the notified local housing authority where it has been decided that the conditions for referral of his or her case are met.

19.60 The meaning of ‘suitability’ in respect of the accommodation offered under the statutory provisions referred to in this category is considered in Chapter 18.

19.61 In addition, those provisions of HA 1996, Pt 7, obliging the local housing authority to provide some form of interim accommodation, or giving the local housing authority powers to provide accommodation, are omitted.

from this category. As a result, there is no right to a review of a decision as to the suitability of accommodation provided:

(1) under the duty to secure pre-decision accommodation;
(2) under the duty to secure interim accommodation during the performance of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
(3) under the duty to secure accommodation pending the outcome of a local connection referral for referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
(4) under the duty to secure accommodation pending the outcome of a local connection referral for referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty; or
(5) under the power to accommodate pending review;
(6) under the power to accommodate pending a review of the referral of the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
(7) under the power to accommodate pending a review of the referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty; or
(8) under the power to accommodate pending appeal.

19.62 Finally, this review category does not give everyone made an offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6 a right to a review of its suitability. The only HA 1996, Pt 6 offer addressed here is a final offer made to an applicant owed the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty, where the refusal of that offer may bring that duty to an end. If other offers, not expressed as ‘final offers’ of Pt 6 accommodation, and therefore not bringing the s 193(2) main housing duty to an end, have been made, there is no right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered. The suitability of final Pt 6 offers, made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty to an end, can be raised in a request for a

(12) Any decision as to the suitability of accommodation contained in a private rented sector offer

19.63 This provision \(^1\) applies to applicants who have been made a private rented sector offer \(^2\) in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end \(^3\). For ‘private rented sector offer’, see 16.153–16.180. For ‘suitability’, see Chapter 18.

3 HA 1996, s 193(7AC).

19.64 As with other disputes over the suitability of an offer of accommodation, the applicant has the right both to accept the offer and to request a review of its suitability. This must normally be the sensible course of action \(^2\). Here, the applicant is being required to enter into a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy \(^3\). He or she will need a break clause to be contained in the tenancy, so as to permit the applicant to terminate the tenancy before the end of the fixed term upon notice to the landlord, if the outcome of the review (or any subsequent appeal) is a decision that the private rented sector offer was unsuitable.

3 HA 1996, s 193(7AC).

(13) Any decision as to the suitability of accommodation contained in a final accommodation offer or a final Pt 6 offer

19.65 Final accommodation offers \(^1\) and final Pt 6 offers \(^2\) can be made in two circumstances \(^3\):
- in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2)\(^4\), relief duty to an end \(^5\); and
- in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193C(4)\(^6\), accommodation duty to an 19.66 Final accommodation offers are defined, in similar terms, in both HA 1996, ss 193A and 193C, as being:

- an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord to the applicant in relation to any accommodation which is, or may become, available for the applicant’s occupation;
- made, with the approval of the local housing authority, in pursuance of arrangements made by the local housing authority in discharge of its HA 1996, s 193C(4), relief duty or with a view to bringing its HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end; and
- the tenancy offer is a fixed term tenancy within the meaning of Housing Act 1988, Pt 1, for a period of at least six months.

19.67 The local housing authority must be satisfied that the final accommodation offer is suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household and that the applicant is not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation which he or she is not able to bring to an end before being required to take up the offer. In addition to all of the other considerations relating to suitability, a final accommodation offer must comply with all the criteria at Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012, art 3 in order to be suitable. It should be noted that the applicant is being required to enter into a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy. He or she will need a break clause to be contained in the tenancy, so as to permit the applicant to terminate the tenancy before the end of the fixed term upon notice to the landlord, if the outcome of the review (or any subsequent appeal) is a decision that the private rented sector offer was unsuitable.

19.68 Final Pt 6 offers are also defined in similar in both HA 1996, ss 193A and 193C, as being:

- an offer of accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 6 (allocation of housing);
- made in writing in discharge of the local housing authority’s HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or with a view to bringing its HA 1996, s 193C(4) accommodation duty to an end; and
- stating that it is a final offer for those purposes.

The local housing authority must be satisfied that the final Part 6 offer is suitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household and that the applicant is not under contractual or other obligations in respect of his or her existing accommodation which he or she is not able to bring to an end before being required to take up the offer.

Which decisions by a local housing authority in Wales can be reviewed?

19.70 The right to request a review, where an applicant is dissatisfied with a local housing authority’s decision, applies where the decision falls within one of five specified categories\(^1\). We consider each of the categories in turn.

19.71 If a local housing authority’s decision does not fall into one of the specified categories, there is no right to request a statutory review, and any legal challenge to the decision itself can only be by way of judicial review\(^1\).

\(^1\) See 19.306–19.332.

19.72 The applicant will know whether or not the decision falls within one of the categories which entitle him or her to request a review, because the notice of the outcome of the local housing authority’s assessment will inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review and of the time within which the request must be made\(^1\).

(1) Any decision as to the applicant’s ‘eligibility’ for help

19.73 ‘Eligibility’ for help is primarily a matter of immigration status and is fully discussed in Chapter 11. The decision capable of statutory review is the decision of the local housing authority, not any decision of the immigration or benefits authorities on essentially the same subject matter\(^2\).

\(^2\) See 17.45–17.72.

19.74 The right to a review is available in respect of a decision that any of the following duties under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is not owed to the applicant:

- the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty\(^3\);
- the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty for homeless applicants who may be homeless, may be eligible for help, and may have a priority need\(^4\);
- the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty; or
- the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty for applicants in priority need when the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73 ends: (H(W)A 2014, s 75(1))\(^5\).

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(b); Welsh Code, para 20.3(b).
\(^2\) H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(a); Welsh Code, para 20.3(a).

\(^3\) See 17.118–17.134.
\(^4\) See 17.73–17.117.
\(^5\) See 17.146–17.199.

19.75 It follows that the applicant will have the right to request a review if the local housing authority has notified him or her of its assessment\(^1\) that he or she is not homeless or threatened with homelessness, or does not have a priority need, or (in the case of the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 75(2)) is satisfied that the applicant has become homeless intentionally.

19.76 Unlike the law governing local housing authorities in England, the list of duties includes the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim duty to secure accommodation for the applicant¹. For that duty not to apply, the local housing authority would have to have no reason to believe that the applicant might be homeless, might be eligible for help or might have a priority need. If there is any doubt as to any of those matters, interim accommodation should have been secured².

1 The duty at H(W)A 2014, s 68(1).

(3) Any decision of the local housing authority that a duty owed to the applicant has come to an end

19.77 This category applies where the applicant has been notified of a local housing authority’s decision that a duty owed to him or her has come to an end¹. The specified duties are:

- the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty²;
- the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation³;
- the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty⁴ or
- the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1) main housing duty⁵.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c); Welsh Code, para 20.3(c).
2 The events which bring the H(W)A 2014, s 66(1), prevention duty to an end are at H(W)A 2014, s 67, and see 17.56–17.72.
3 The events which bring the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1), interim accommodation duty to an end are at H(W)A 2014, s 69, and see 17.128–17.133.
4 The events which bring the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), relief duty to an end are at H(W)A 2014, s 74, and see 17.84–17.117.
5 The events which bring the H(W)A 2014, s 75(1), main housing duty to an end are at H(W)A 2014, s 76, and see 17.158–17.188.

19.78 The wording of the subsection states that the right to request a review also applies:

- to any decision to refer the applicant’s case to another local housing authority; and
- to any decision that the conditions for referral are met¹.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(c); see CHAPTER 14 for conditions for referral.

19.79 Any of the specified duties could also come to an end if one of the circumstances in H(W)A 2014, s 79, occurs. Those circumstances are:

- where the local housing authority is no longer satisfied that the applicant is eligible for help²;
- where the local housing authority is satisfied that a mistake of fact led to the applicant being notified under H(W)A 2014, s 63, that a duty was owed to him or her³;
- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has withdrawn his or her application⁴; or
Reviews 19.82

- where the local housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is unreasonably failing to cooperate with it in connection with the exercise of its functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, as they apply to the applicant.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 79(2); for ‘eligible for help’, see Chapter 11; for the duty coming to an end for this reason, see 17.192.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 79(3); see 17.193.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 79(4); see 17.194.
4 H(W)A 2014, s 79(5); see 17.195–17.197.

19.80 In all cases, the relevant duty only comes to an end once the applicant has been notified in writing of the local housing authority’s decision to that effect. That notification must contain:

- the local housing authority’s decision that it no longer regards itself as subject to the relevant duty;
- the reasons why it considers that the duty has come to an end;
- the applicant’s right to request a review; and
- the time within which the request for a review must be made.

2 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1).

(4) WHETHER OR NOT REASONABLE STEPS WERE TAKEN

19.81 If the local housing authority has decided that the duty under H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) has come to an end because the 56-day period has ended or because the local housing authority is satisfied that reasonable steps have been taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant, the written notification that the duty has come to an end must include notice of those steps taken by the local housing authority.

The applicant has a right to request a review of whether or not reasonable steps were taken during the 56-day period. This is a separate right from the right to request a review of the decision that the duty has come to an end.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 74(2), see 17.87–17.96.
2 H(W)A 2014, s 85(2); Welsh Code, para 20.3(d).

4 H(W)A 2014, s 84(1) and (3).
5 H(W)A 2014, s 84(2), see 17.102.

19.82 H(W)A 2014, s 87, provides that if the review decision, or subsequent appeal to the county court, concludes that reasonable steps were not taken, and so the duty under H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) continues to apply, a new 56-day period for the performance of the duty will arise, starting on the day when the review decision is notified to the applicant, or on a date that the county court orders.

(5) Suitability of accommodation offered

19.83 An applicant has the right to request a review of the suitability of any accommodation offered\(^1\) under any of the duties in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2\(^2\).

1. H(W)A 2014, s 85(3); Welsh Code, para 20.3(h).

19.84 This category refers to accommodation offered either in order to perform any of the duties, or offered in order to bring any of the duties to an end, whether the applicant has refused or accepted the offer of accommodation\(^1\). The applicant has the right both to accept the offer and to request a review of its suitability\(^2\). This must normally be the sensible course of action for the applicant\(^3\). Unlike applicants to local housing authorities in England, an applicant may request a review of the suitability of any interim accommodation offered under the H(W)A 2014, s 68(1) duty\(^4\).

19.85 This category does not give the applicant a right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation offered under a power to secure accommodation\(^1\).

1. H(W)A 2014, s 85(3) refers only to ‘accommodation in, or in connection with, the discharge of any duty under this chapter’.

Notifying rights to request a review

19.86 It might be expected that, whenever a local housing authority takes any decision that carries a statutory right to a review, it should be required to notify the applicant not only of the decision, but also of the applicant’s right to request a review and the time limit within which he or she should make the request. However, this is not always the case.

19.87 For local housing authorities in England, the following notifications must inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review and of the time limit within which to make the request:

- decisions as to whether an applicant is eligible for assistance\(^1\);
decisions as to whether any duty, and if so what duty, is owed to the applicant;
• decisions that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end as a result of one of the circumstances specified at HA 1996, s 195(7)(a)–(g) inclusive;
• decisions that the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty has come to an end as a result of one of the circumstances specified at HA 1996, s 189B(8)(a)–(f) inclusive;
• notification of the consequences of refusal of a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty to an end;
• notification of an offer of accommodation made under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty and of the consequences of refusal or acceptance;
• notification of a final offer of Part 6 accommodation made under HA 1996, s 193(7), and of the consequences of refusal or acceptance;
• notification of a private rented sector offer under HA 1996, s 193(7), and of the consequences of refusal or acceptance;
• a notice of the local housing authority’s decision that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate; and
• decisions that the HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty has come to an end as a result of the applicant having refused a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer.

19.88 Even in those cases, there is no requirement that the applicant should also be informed of any advice or other help available to assist him or her in pursuing a review. There is no obligation to inform the applicant about the procedure at this stage. Nor is there any obligation to provide a pro-forma on which the applicant can request a review. Notification can be given either directly to the applicant or, where the applicant has signed a form of authority appointing solicitors or other advisers as his or her agents, to those agents.

1 Only when a review has been requested is the local housing authority obliged to notify the applicant of the procedure: SI 2018/223, reg 5(3)(c), at Appendix 2.

19.89 Local housing authorities in Wales are required to notify the applicant of their assessment of his or her case and also of any decision that any of the duties have come to an end. Both of those notifications must be in writing, contain the reasons for the decision, inform the applicant of his or her right to request a review of the decision and of the time within which to request the review.

Seeking a review and also accepting Accommodation

ENGLAND

19.90 Where an applicant to a local housing authority in England requests:

- a review of the suitability of accommodation provided for him or her under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty;
- a review of the suitability of a final offer of accommodation made under HA 1996, Pt 6;
- a review of the suitability of a private rented sector offer;
- a review of the suitability of a final accommodation offer; or
- a review of the suitability of a final Pt 6 offer, he or she has the right to accept the offer while also requesting the review.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(f), (g) and (h), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.59–19.69.

2 HA 1996, s 193(2) and (5), see 16.114–16.123.

5 Defined at HA 1996, ss 193A(4) and 193C(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.181–15.184 and 16.205–16.209.

6 Defined at HA 1996, ss 193A(5) and 193C(8), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.185–15.189 and 16.209–16.213.
19.91 The way in which the applicant’s options might be put in the notification has been neatly summarised as follows:

‘[T]he choice which has to be presented to a person to whom an offer is made has to be in substance to this effect: you may accept or refuse a house. In either event you are entitled to seek a review of the decision to make this offer to you. If, though, you refuse to accept this accommodation you will not be able to retract your refusal, so that if the review goes against you, we shall be discharged of any duty towards you. On the other hand, if the review goes in your favour, we shall, in the light of the review decision, have to make you a different offer or reconsider our position.’

19.92 If the local housing authority fails to provide this information, it risks a subsequent complaint that the whole procedure has been unfair. See Akhtar & Naseem v Manchester City Council (2003) April Legal Action, p 28, Manchester County Court, but also Ali-Ahmed v Islington London Borough Council [2004] EWCA Civ 128, (2004) April Legal Action, p 35, CA, where the process was not unfair, although the offer letter did not contain this information.

19.93 Since the consequences of refusing an offer of suitable accommodation in any of these cases will be that the relevant duty owed by the local housing authority’s under HA 1996, Pt 7, will end, and the applicant will face the possibility that he or she will be homeless and left without any help or accommodation, acceptance of the accommodation whilst simultaneously requesting a review of its suitability must normally be the prudent approach. For private rented sector offers, or final accommodation offers, where the applicant is being required to enter into a fixed term assured shorthold tenancy, the terms of the tenancy should contain a break clause, so as to permit the applicant to terminate the tenancy before the end of the fixed term upon notice to the landlord, if the outcome of the review (or any subsequent appeal) is a decision that that the accommodation was unsuitable.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.94 However, it is only in the case of these specific offers of accommodation that the right to request a review whilst also accepting the offer is available. Applicants who are contemplating refusing accommodation arranged by a local housing authority with a view to bringing either a HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or a HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty to an end have the opportunity to accept the accommodation and also request a review of its suitability.

19.95 Where an applicant has rejected accommodation offered in performance of the HA 1996, s 193(2) main housing duty, as a final offer under HA 1996, Pt 6, as a private rented sector offer, as a final accommodation offer, or as a final Part 6 offer and has requested a review of its suitability and then subsequently sought to accept the offer, the decision whether to re-offer the accommodation or not is one for the local housing authority. There is no requirement on the local housing authority to keep the accommodation available for the applicant during the review process.

19.96 Where an applicant is occupying interim accommodation, secured under HA 1996, s 188(1), while the local housing authority is performing its HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty, and the applicant requests a review of a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer, the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty is deemed not to come to an end until the review decision has been notified to the applicant. So, unless the local housing authority were to notify the applicant during the review process that he or she does not have a priority need, interim accommodation must continue.

19.97 What happens if an applicant accepts accommodation offered as a final offer without requesting any review, and then subsequently decides to request a review of its suitability? The present tense used in s 202(1A) and (1B) suggests that the express statutory right to request a review, whilst also accepting the accommodation, remains open for the period of the statutory time limit in which to request a review. Where the applicant has accepted the offer of accommodation and also requested a review of its suitability, the reviewing officer should consider all the facts and circumstances as at the date of the review decision.

1. A final offer of Pt 6 accommodation or a private rented sector made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end: HA 1996, s 193(7) and (7AA). Or a final accommodation offer or final Part offer made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief or HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duties to an end: HA 1996, ss 193A(1) and 193C(5) (as inserted by HRA 2017, ss 5(2) and 7(1), for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018).
2. HA 1996, s 202(1A) and (1B), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.90–19.99.
3. 21 days beginning with the date on which the applicant is notified of the local housing authority’s decision: HA 1996, s 202(3); and see 19.109–19.115.

19.98 If the review (or any subsequent appeal) against the decision that accommodation offered, and accepted, was suitable is successful, so that the accommodation is considered to be unsuitable, then the relevant duty under HA 1996, Pt 7, will not have come to an end. The accommodation might be considered to be suitable for the applicant to continue to occupy in the short-term or medium-term, since expected duration of occupation is relevant to the issue of suitability. Or it might be so unsuitable that it should not be occupied by the applicant even in the short-term in which case the local housing authority will have to secure alternative accommodation which is suitable.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

19.99 In contrast, the right to request a review of the suitability of accommodation being occupied by an applicant under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty remains available to the applicant throughout the period when he or she is occupying the accommodation.

Wales

19.100 Applicants to local housing authorities in Wales have the right to accept an offer while also requesting a review of the suitability of accommodation offered either in performance of any of the duties under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or in order to bring any of those duties to an end.

19.101 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.101 Applicants will have been notified of their right to request a review, and of the time within which to request it, in any decision that the duty has come to an end. If the duty has come to an end because the applicant has refused:

- an offer of suitable accommodation made under H(W)A 2014, s 66(1);
- an offer of suitable interim accommodation made under H(W)A 2014, s 68(1);
- an offer of suitable accommodation made under H(W)A 2014, s 73(1); or
- an offer of suitable accommodation made under H(W)A 2014, s 75(1);

the applicant will have been notified of the possible consequences of refusal or acceptance of the offer, before he or she receives notification of the decision that the duty has been discharged. It will normally be the safest course of action to accept the offer while simultaneously requesting a review of the suitability of the accommodation offered.

Who may seek a review?

19.102 The statutory review rights are only available to ‘an applicant’. No member of the applicant’s household has that statutory right. Nor can the review process be activated by others who may have an interest in challenging the local housing authority’s decision, eg a different local housing authority, a private registered provider of social housing in England or a registered social landlord in Wales, or another homeless person.

19.103 An applicant’s request for review does not need to be made personally. It may be made by someone else as the applicant’s formal or informal agent (by a solicitor or anyone else asked to act on the applicant’s behalf).

Who may seek a review?
How to seek a review

19.104 The obligation on a local housing authority to carry out a review is triggered ‘on a request being duly made to them’.

1 HA 1996, s 202(4); H(W)A 2014, s 85(6).

19.105 Beyond those words, neither HA 1996, Pt 7, nor H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, say anything about the form or content of the request. In particular:

- the request need not be in writing;
- there is no prescribed form;
- the applicant need not use a form provided by the local housing authority (even if a form is available);
- no grounds or reasons for requesting the review need be given; and
- no particular office or officer is the specified recipient of the request.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

19.106 However, it must be tolerably clear that the applicant is asking for a review of the decision made and not, for example, requesting a disciplinary investigation into the conduct of the officer(s) who took the decision.

1 See for example: R (Taylor) v Commissioner for Local Administration [2003] EWCA Civ 1088, (2003) September Legal Action, p 28, CA. In Nzamy v Brent London Borough Council, [2011] EWCA Civ 283, [2011] HLR 20, CA, a letter from an unrepresented applicant which set out reasons why an offer of main housing duty accommodation was unsuitable and concluded ‘I ask you please to offer us a permanent accommodation for us, but until that time we can wait in our current flat’, was a request that the reviewing officer should look both at the issue of whether the accommodation offered was suitable and also at the question of whether the local housing authority had validly discharged its duty: see Black LJ at [19].

19.107 The use of the words ‘made to them’ suggests that the request must not only have been made to, but also received by, the local housing authority.

1 Simply posting a letter containing a written request for a review will probably not suffice (although a local housing authority might agree to extend the time limit for requesting a review if it was satisfied that the request had been posted in good time but was not subsequently received in time or at all).

1 HA 1996, s 202(4); H(W)A 2014, s 85(6).
2 See R (Lester) v London Rent Assessment Committee [2003] EWCA Civ 319, [2003] 33 HLR 53, [2003] 1 WLR 1449, CA – a rent is not ‘referred’ to the RAC until a notice of referral is received by it.

19.108 The local housing authority to which the request is to be made is normally the local housing authority that made the decision sought to be reviewed. Where review is sought of a decision that the conditions for referral to another local housing authority are met, the request is to be made to the ‘notifying local housing authority’ which made the referral.

3 SI 2018/223, reg 5(2); SI 2015/1266, regs 1(3)(b) and 2(1).

Time in which to request a review

19.109 The applicant has 21 days, ‘beginning with the day on which he [or she] is notified of the authority’s decision’, in which to make the request to the local housing authority for a review. Because it is relatively short, the time limit needs careful consideration.

1 HA 1996, s 202(3) and (4); H(W)A 2014, s 85(5) and (6).

19.110 The time limit begins with the day on which the original decision is ‘notified’. So, for example, if the local housing authority’s decision is received by the applicant or his or her agents on 2 April, the review request must be made to the local housing authority by midnight on 22 April. Provided that it is physically delivered to the local housing authority’s offices before midnight, it will be in time, even if 22 April is not a working day, or if the office has already closed.

1 Which may be different from the day on which the decision was actually taken, and the day on which it was put in writing. See Robinson v Hammersmith & Fulham London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 1122, [2007] HLR 7, CA, and 8.69 and 8.93–8.94.

2 The phrase ‘beginning with’ includes the day of notification as the first day of the period: Trow v Ind Coope (West Midlands) Ltd [1967] 2 QB 899, CA, and Zoan v Rouamba [2000] 1 WLR 1509, CA. See also RJF Mining (UK) Ltd v National Union of Mineworkers (1995) [1995] IRLR 556, CA, where the Court of Appeal held time limits couched in terms of days expire at midnight, not part of the way through a day. However, the 21-day time limit for the issue of an appeal under HA 1996, s 204 or H(W)A 2014, s 89, commences on the day after notification, see 19.244–19.245.

19.111 The local housing authority may decide that a particular request for review was not made in time and that it therefore has no duty to conduct a review. If it will not agree to extend the time, the applicant can apply for judicial review of the refusal to carry out the review. The issue of whether a request was made and, if so, whether it was made in time, will have to be resolved by the Administrative Court as a matter of fact.

19.112 The local housing authority has a discretion to agree a longer period in which an applicant can request a review. When a local housing authority receives a request for a review made out of time, it should consider the explanation offered for the applicant's delay in making the request and the prospects of success on the review. The precise weight to be given to the balance between these two factors, and all other relevant considerations, is a matter for the local housing authority. Nothing in HA 1996, Pt 7, in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or in the regulations made under them, requires the decision on extending time to be taken by the person who would be conducting the review. As a matter of fairness and good practice, however, it probably should not be taken by the original decision-maker.

1. HA 1996, s 202(3) and English Code, para 19.4; H(W)A 2014, s 85(5); Welsh Code, para 20.7.

3. As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

4. It should be noted, however, that the Administrative Court, in R (Abdi) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2007] EWHC 1565 (Admin), [2008] HLR 5, Admin Ct, held that there was nothing in HA 1996, Pt 7, the relevant regulations, or the general law on issues of bias, that prevented an original decision-maker from deciding a request for accommodation pending review.

19.113 Most (and for applicants to local housing authorities in Wales, all) notifications of decisions carrying rights of review, will spell out the time limit. A failure on the part of the local housing authority to comply with the obligation to notify the time limit would be a powerful factor in support of a request to extend time. The exact wording of HA 1996, s 184(5) (or of H(W)A 2014, s 63(2) and 84(1)) need not be duplicated but the notification must contain the substance of the information required to be notified by HA 1996, Pt 7 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. If the time limit was notified and emphasised in the notification letter, any request to extend time will be more difficult to sustain.

1. HA 1996, ss 184(5), 189B(6)(b) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2) for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), 193B(3)(b) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1) for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), 195(7)(b) (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(2) for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), 199A(3) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(9) for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), and 200(2); H(W)A 2014, ss 63(4)(a) and 84(1)(d).

2. As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

19.114 If the local housing authority accedes to the request to extend time, it must notify the applicant in writing accordingly. This curious provision (not mirrored by any obligation to give written notice of a refusal to extend time) is presumably intended to avoid applicants suggesting that they were verbally given an indication that a late request would be allowed.

1. HA 1996, s 202(3); H(W)A 2014, s 85(5).

19.115 If the local housing authority refuses to extend the time limit for a review, where the request has been made late, the only challenge to that decision would be by way of judicial review. A refusal to extend time is not itself a decision that can be subject to statutory review. If the decision to refuse to extend time was irrational, or for some other reason unlawful, it will be quashed and the local housing authority will be required to take the decision again on whether to extend time. In an exceptional case, the Administrative Court may even grant a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to extend the time limit.

1 As happened in R (Casey) v Restormel Borough Council [2007] EWHC 2554 (Admin), (2008) January Legal Action, p 38, Admin Ct. See also R (Dragic) v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2012] EWHC 1241 (Admin), (2012) July Legal Action, p 42, Admin Ct, where the request for a review was two weeks' late and the judge held that 'two weeks in other contexts may not be regarded as very long, but in the context of a tight time limit of three weeks, two weeks has a different complexion'. She refused the claimant permission to apply for judicial review.

Procedure on receipt of a request for a review

PROCEDURE LOCALLY

19.116 Only the barest outline of the procedure to be followed on review is set out in HA 1996, Pt 7 or in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Little more detail is given in the current versions of the review procedure regulations for local housing authorities in England and for local housing authorities in Wales. Accordingly, the day-to-day procedural operation of the review process is largely left to each local housing authority to determine with the benefit of the guidance given in HA 1996, Pt 7, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, the relevant set of regulations and in the respective Codes.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, ss 202–203 (as amended by HRA 2017, s 9 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018); H(W)A 2014, ss 85–86.

3 Homelessness (Review Procedure etc) Regulations 2018, SI 1999/71, see Appendix 2.

4 Homelessness (Review Procedure) (Wales) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/1266 (W 86), see the CD Rom with this book.

6 English Code, paras 19.8–19.28; Welsh Code, paras 20.8–20.28.

19.117 The expectation is that each local housing authority will formulate and apply a written statement of its own procedure. On receipt of the review request the local housing authority must, if it has not earlier done so, notify the applicant of the ‘procedure to be followed in connection with the review’.

Failure to comply with that obligation might undermine the fairness of the whole review process.

1 SI 2018/223, reg 5(3); SI 2015/1268 (W 86), reg 2(2)(b). See also English Code, para 19.18; Welsh Code, para 20.12.

19.118 The Court of Appeal has considered the failure of two local housing authorities to comply with the requirement to notify the review procedure. In both cases, the original decision letter had correctly notified the applicants that they had the right to request a review and had also notified them of their right to make representations and to provide new information, and that someone else could help them put their cases. It was also relevant that, in both cases, the applicants had solicitors representing them throughout the review process and that the solicitors were aware of their right to make representations on the review. Accordingly, the underlying purpose of the regulations had been achieved in that the applicants knew about their right to make representations. The judge giving the leading judgment in one of those cases said:

‘the self-evident purpose of imposing the duty to notify is not to inform an applicant who already had professional legal advisers about the right to make representations, but to protect those who did not have professional advisers, so that they can make representations themselves, or get someone else to do it for them’.

As a result, the local housing authorities had not made any errors of law in their conduct of the review procedures.

19.119 If the review is being sought of a referee’s decision, the person appointed to conduct the review must notify the applicant of the procedure that he or she is going to follow.

2 SI 2018/223, reg 5(4)(b); English Code, para 19.19; SI 2015/1266 (W 86), reg 2(3)(b); Welsh Code, para 20.12(ii).

Notification of time limits for certain review requests

19.120 For most review requests, there is no time limit specified for the receipt of representations. The English Code advises that representations should be made within a reasonable period to allow sufficient time for the local housing authority to complete the review within the prescribed time-frame.

1 English Code, para 19.17. For the prescribed time-frame, see 19.188–19.195.

19.121 However, for local housing authorities in England, some review requests have to be completed within a short prescribed time-frame of three weeks or such longer period as may be agreed in writing. As a result, the Regulations provide that the applicant must be notified that any written representations made in respect of these review requests must be made within two weeks beginning with the date on which the applicant requested the review, or such longer period as the applicant and the reviewer might agree in writing.

1 SI 2018/223, reg 9(1)(a), see 19.188–19.189.

19.122 The review requests that must be completed within three weeks (or longer period as agreed in writing) are:

• a review of a decision as to the steps that the local housing authority is to take under the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
• a review of a decision to give notice to the applicant that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate;
19.122 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

• a review of a decision as to the steps that the local housing authority is to take under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty; and
• a review of a decision to give notice to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end by reason of one of the events specified at HA 1996, s 195(8).

INVITING WRITTEN REPRESENTATIONS

19.123 As already noted, there is no requirement that the applicant should set out any grounds or reasons in the request for review. Accordingly, not least so that any particular issues can be drawn out, the regulations require that once the request for a review has been received, the local housing authority which received it must notify the applicant that he or she, or a representative, may make written representations to the local housing authority in connection with the review. If the applicant has already been notified of the right to make representations, and particularly if he or she is represented by solicitors, there will be no error of law if the requirement is not strictly complied with after the request for the review has been received.

1 See 19.105.
2 SI 2018/223, reg 5(3)(a)(4)(a); SI 2015/1266 (W 86), regs 2(2)(a) and 2(3)(a). A notification which read ‘you will be given an opportunity to make oral and/or written representations to the Panel’ was described as wording which the local housing authority would be ‘well advised’ to reconsider, but was sufficient for the applicant to know that a review was under way and of his right to make representations (Jama v Islington London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 45, (2006) June Legal Action, p 36, CA).

19.124 For applicants to local housing authorities in England, there is no right in HA 1996, Pt 7, or in the Regulations to make oral representations, except in the special circumstances where there is a deficiency or irregularity. Local housing authorities in Wales must notify the applicant that he or she has the right to make representations orally, or in writing, or both orally and in writing.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
Reviews 19.128

19.125 The invitation to submit representations must be issued in every case, either in the original decision or after the applicant has requested a review. The invitation must be sent either to the applicant personally or to agents nominated by the applicant.¹

19.126 If the review is being sought of a referee’s decision, the person appointed to conduct the review will notify the applicant of the right to make written representations direct to him or her and not to the local housing authority.²

19.127 There is no obligation on the applicant to respond to the invitation to make representations. The review will take place whether or not a response is received. For most review requests, there is no deadline prescribed for the receipt of representations, and therefore they can be submitted at any stage before the decision on review is actually made.³ For local housing authorities in England, dealing with requests for review decisions falling under HA 1996, s 202(1)(ba)(i), (bb)³, (bc)(i)³, or (bc)(ii)³, the representations must be made within two weeks beginning with the day on which the applicant requested the review, or such longer period as the applicant and the reviewer may agree in writing.⁴

³ Request for review of decision as to what steps the local housing authority is to take under the HA 1996, s 189B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(2), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018) relief duty, see 19.18–19.23.

⁴ Request for review of decision of to give notice that an applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate under HA 1996, s 193B(2) (as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018), see 19.24–19.29.

19.128 Self-evidently, if the applicant has specific criticisms of the original decision, those criticisms should be set out at the earliest possible stage so as to ensure that they are properly considered. The review process is the applicant’s last opportunity to have the facts relevant to his or her application re-considered. The applicant, or his or her advisers, should therefore ensure that any fact that he or she believes might be relevant, and ought to be considered by the reviewing officer, is specifically brought to the reviewing officer’s attention. It can often be helpful for the applicant, or his or her adviser, to ensure that the whole of the applicant’s circumstances and representations are put together in one, full, letter, even if some or all of those representations have previously been put to the local housing authority in a more piecemeal fashion.

19.129 However, this does not mean that the reviewing officer is excused from considering points the applicant has not made. For example, even if the review request is primarily disputing whether an applicant did or did not personally do something that caused him or her to become homeless intentionally, and the reviewing officer is satisfied that the applicant did do the act in question, he or she must then go on, whether or not this point has been raised, to look at whether or not that act was ‘deliberate’. That is true even if the applicant is professionally represented by experienced solicitors and has made detailed written representations which do not raise that point\(^1\).

\(^1\) O’Connor v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2004] EWCA Civ 394, [2004] HLR 37, CA. A later Court of Appeal decision held that it was only those issues that fell within ‘the circumstances of obviousness’ that should be considered by the reviewing officer if they had not been raised by the applicant or his or her representatives (Aw-Aden v Birmingham City Council [2005] EWCA Civ 1834, (2005) July Legal Action, p 29, CA, at [12b] per Kay LJ). For another example, see Black v Wandsworth London Borough Council (2008) February Legal Action, p 41, Lambeth County Court, where the reviewing officer was obliged to consider the questions of causation and intervening settled accommodation, even though the applicant had not raised the issues, because those issues arose from the established facts before the reviewing officer.

19.130 A failure to inform the applicant of the right to make representations, either in the original decision or subsequently, would make the review process unfair, particularly if the applicant would have responded with representations\(^1\). The resultant review decision would be likely to be quashed on an appeal to the county court.

\(^1\) But see Maswaku v Westminster City Council [2012] EWCA Civ 669, [2012] HLR 37, CA; and El Goure v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2012] EWCA Civ 670, [2012] HLR 36, CA where the applicants had been notified of their right to make representations in the original decision and were represented by solicitors during the review process, even though they had not been notified of the procedure to be followed in connection with the review. See 19.118.

The identity of the reviewing officer

19.131 The review decision must be made by the local housing authority which made the original decision or, in the case of a review of a joint decision that the conditions for referral to another local housing authority are met\(^1\), by the two or more local housing authorities which made that decision\(^2\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 202(1)(d), see 19.55–19.57; H(W)A 2014, ss 80(5)(b) and 85(1)(c); see 19.77–19.80.

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 202(4); H(W)A 2014, 85(6).

19.132 Neither HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\); H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, nor the relevant regulations, prescribe that a particular officer or committee of the local housing authority (or authorities) should undertake the review. It is therefore for the local housing authority (or authorities) to decide whether:
Reviews 19.135

- to delegate the task to an officer; or
- to devolve it to a committee or subcommittee of the council; or
- to contract the function out.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.
2 But not to an individual councillor.

19.133 For local housing authorities in England, if the original decision (which is the subject of the request for a review) was made by an officer of the local housing authority, and the local housing authority has decided that the review will also be carried out by an officer, then the local housing authority is required to ensure that the person conducting the review was not involved in the original decision and is senior to the original decision-maker. Reviews of decisions made by local housing authorities in Wales can be made by an officer of the same local housing authority provided that he or she was not involved in the original decision. There is no requirement under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, that the reviewing officer should be senior to the original decision-maker.

Housing Act 1996, s 203(2)(a); SI 2018/223, reg 8(2); and English Code, para 19.9. See Butt v Hounslow London Borough Council [2011] EWCA Civ 1327, (2012) January Legal Action, p 22, CA, where the judge heard oral evidence as to which officer had taken the review decision.

19.134 The original decision-maker is not excluded from assisting the reviewing officer or reviewing committee by, for example, writing and receiving letters, making further inquiries, or even attending a further interview or review hearing, but the review decision must be made by the reviewing officer or committee.

19.135 In some local housing authorities, all reviews are conducted by a single senior officer. This can cause difficulties. For example, where an earlier review decision has been quashed on appeal, the same officer would be taking the new review decision. Likewise, the review might be a second one in the history of a single application where the first review decision was withdrawn. An applicant may be aggrieved if the reviewing officer on the second review is the same officer who considered his or her case at an earlier stage and reached an adverse decision on a different issue. The courts have considered how fairness might be achieved in such circumstances. In Feld v Barnet London Borough Council and Poor v Westminster City Council it was decided that neither the regulations nor the need to avoid bias required that any second review be conducted by a different reviewing officer. Applying the test of a ‘fair-minded and intelligent observer’, such an observer would conclude that reviewing officers were competent, conscientious, able to engage with issues on a reasonable and intelligent basis, and able to change their position on particular issues¹.

19.136 If the decision subject to review was that the conditions were met for the applicant’s case to be referred to another local housing authority¹, that decision will have been made either by agreement between two local housing authorities or by a referee². If the decision was one made by agreement between two local housing authorities, then the review must be made by them jointly³. Presumably this will mean an arrangement for a joint committee or a joint panel of officers.

¹ HA 1996, s 202(1)(d); H(W)A 2014, ss 80(5) and 85(1)(c).
³ SI 2018/223, reg 4(a); SI 2015/1266, reg 4(1).

19.137 If a referee made the original decision¹, then the reviewing officer should be a person jointly appointed by the local housing authorities within 5 working days from the day on which the review request was received by the notifying local housing authority². This appointee could be anyone to whom both local housing authorities are prepared to entrust the review process³. If an appointment is not agreed within that time frame, the notifying local housing authority (which has received the review request) has a further 5 working days to ask the chair of the Local Government Association (LGA) or Welsh Local Government Association (WLGA) to appoint another referee⁴. The chair must then appoint a referee within a further 5 working days for local housing authorities in England, or 7 working days for local housing authorities in Wales from among the membership of a panel appointed by the LGA or WLGA⁵. That person then undertakes the review. Although this may appear to be a very tight time frame⁶, the membership of the panel comprises only a handful of referees, one of whom is already eliminated because he or she took the original decision⁷. Whether the reviewing officer is appointed by the local authorities or by the LGA or WLGA chairs, in this chapter we will refer to that person as the ‘appointed’ reviewing officer⁸.

⁸ SI 2018/223, reg 6(4) and SI 2015/1266, reg 4(4), each refer to the reviewing officer appointed in these circumstances as ‘the appointed person’.
Conduct of the review

The paper review

19.138 The reviewing officer’s first task will be to gather together the relevant documents. These will consist of:

1. the original decision;
2. the request for review (if in writing);
3. the local housing authority’s file relating to the application;
4. any written representations the applicant or his or her representative has made;
5. the relevant Code of Guidance; and
6. the local homelessness strategy.

19.139 An ‘appointed’ reviewing officer1 will, within five working days of his or her appointment, receive files from each of the local housing authorities involved containing the original decision and the ‘information and evidence on which that decision was based’2. Presumably, if the ‘appointed’ reviewing officer is reviewing a referee’s decision, she or he will ask for the documents that the referee had.

1 See 19.131–19.138.

19.140 The reviewing officer is required by HA 1996, Pt 71 or H(W)A 20145, Pt 2, and by the relevant regulations, to consider in every case:

(a) any representations made;
(b) the relevant Code of Guidance; and
(c) the local homelessness strategy4.

19.141 Additionally, an ‘appointed’ reviewing officer must distribute any representations received from the applicant to the two or more local housing authorities involved1, and must then consider any representations they make2.

1 SI 2018/223, reg 6(5); SI 2015/1266 (W 86), reg 4(5).
2 SI 2018/223, reg 7(1)(a); SI 2015/1266, reg 5(1)(a).

Oral hearing

19.142 The reviewing officer must obviously adopt and apply a fair procedure at the review stage. For local housing authorities in England, there is no general right for the applicant to have an oral hearing, or even to have a meeting or interview with the reviewing officer. It will normally be for the reviewing officer to determine whether the facts or circumstances of the particular case warrant an oral hearing1. Local housing authorities in Wales must offer the applicant the opportunity to make oral representations instead...
19.142 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions of, or in addition to, written representations if he or she so wishes.

2 Homelessness (Review Procedure) (Wales) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/1266 (W 86), regs 2(2)(a) and (3)(a); Welsh Code, paras 20.11–20.12.

19.143 There is one circumstance in which ‘an oral hearing’ must be convened. That occurs when:

1. the reviewing officer has issued a ‘minded-to’ letter; and
2. the applicant responds indicating that she or he wishes to make representations orally (either personally or through a representative).

1 HA 1996, s 203(2)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 86(2)(b).

19.144 Neither HA 1996, Pt 7, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, the relevant regulations, nor the Codes of Guidance, specify how an oral hearing is to be conducted. The Court of Appeal considered this in Makisi v Birmingham City Council. It held that, where an applicant requests the right to make oral representations, he or she must be given the option of a face to face meeting with the reviewing officer. However, the applicant does not have any right to insist that any witnesses are called, or that he or she may cross-examine them. The hearing should be ‘a simple and relatively brief opportunity for the applicant to make oral representations to the review officer’.

Fairness

19.145 The reviewing officer will consider not only the material originally before the decision-maker but also any further relevant material received. If a reviewing officer is minded to draw an adverse inference, or to call into question the applicant’s credibility, or hold matters against the applicant, those should be put to the applicant for comment, especially if he or she has not already had an opportunity to comment prior to the original decision. Both Codes of Guidance advise that a reviewing officer should be flexible about allowing further exchanges. The reviewing officer should also consider whether there was a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision or in the manner in which it was made. If so, the special procedure should be activated.

Neither HA 1996, Pt 7, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, nor the relevant regulations specifically require or encourage the reviewing officer to make further inquiries at his or her own initiative. The reviewing officer should, however, be prepared to make further inquiries, if necessary, and to consider asking the applicant to agree to extend the time for a review to be completed if further inquiries need to be made, or an oral hearing needs to be arranged. It is a decision for the reviewing officer as to what inquiries, if any, are necessary before the reviewing officer can take and notify the decision on the review.

INDEPENDENCE IN THE CONDUCT OF THE REVIEW

Review decisions are ultimately made by the very local housing authorities which made the original decisions and are usually made by staff of the local housing authorities concerned. Only where the review is conducted by an ‘appointed’ reviewing officer will there be anything resembling independence in the review process.

1 See 19.131–19.137.
2 In Runa Begum v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council [2003] UKHL 5, [2003] 2 AC 430, HL, the House of Lords held that reviewing officers employed by local housing authorities were not independent of the local housing authority. In De-Winter Heald v Brent London Borough Council [2009] EWCA Civ 930, [2010] HLR 8, CA, the Court of Appeal held that a reviewing officer contracted by the local housing authority to carry out the review (instead of being employed by the local housing authority) was not necessarily any more or less independent of the local housing authority than its employees were (per Stanley Burnton LJ at [52]–[54]).

19.148 The review procedure itself is therefore not compliant with the requirements of Art 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which provides that:

‘... everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law.’

19.149 However, the opportunity of an appeal to the county court on a point of law against the eventual review decision (and the judicial control exercisable within the appeal) safeguards the fairness of the proceedings and renders the overall process compliant with Art 6(1) of the Convention. Indeed, the Supreme Court has held that decision-making on an application for homelessness did not involve a determination of an applicant’s ‘civil rights’ at all and so Art 6(1) did not apply.

2 Ali v Birmingham City Council [2010] UKSC 8, [2010] 2 AC 39, SC. The applicant complained to the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) that her right of access to a fair trial by an impartial and independent tribunal had been infringed. On, the applicant’s petition to the ECtHR, a Chamber of the ECtHR held that an application for homelessness did involve a determination of the applicant’s ‘civil rights’ but that the availability of an appeal to the county court on a point of law rendered the process compatible with Art 6: Ali v UK
19.149 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

(2016) 63 EHRR 20. However, the Supreme Court has declined to follow the case of Ali v UK (2016) 63 EHRR 20, and confirmed its earlier decision that an applicant’s civil rights are not determined in these circumstances: Poshteh v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2017] UKSC 36, [2017] AC 624, SC at [37].

The special procedure where there is a deficiency or irregularity

19.150 A reviewing officer must consider, on review of the material initially collected¹, whether there was a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision or in the manner in which it was made². If the reviewing officer decides that there was a deficiency or irregularity, special provisions apply³.

19.151 If the reviewing officer is satisfied that there was a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision, but is minded to make a decision in favour of the applicant, the reviewing officer may immediately proceed to make that review decision.

19.152 If, however, the reviewing officer is satisfied that there was a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision or in the manner in which it was made, but is still minded to make a decision that is against the interests of the applicant, the reviewing officer must notify the applicant:

(1) of his or her intention; and
(2) of the reasons why he or she is so minded.

19.153 The reviewing officer must also give the applicant an opportunity to make representations, either orally or in writing, or both¹.

19.154 This preliminary notification (‘minded-to’) letter gives the applicant an opportunity to persuade the reviewing officer away from an expressed intention to reach a substituted, but nevertheless unfavourable, decision¹. When the applicant receives this notification, he or she could respond by requesting an oral hearing, or could choose simply to make further representations in writing, or could choose to do both.

¹ In one case, the reviewing officer had given the applicant a deadline for the submission of written representations of a week from the date of the letter inviting representations. That was held to be an ‘unreasonably short’ period by the judge, particularly since the letter took five days to arrive, so the two days’ actual notice was ‘manifestly too short’: Harman v Greenwich London Borough Council (2010) January Legal Action, p 36, Lambeth County Court. In another case, seven days’ notice was again held to be too short: Connors v Birmingham City Council (2010) May Legal Action, p 25, Birmingham County Court.

19.155 Sending the minded-to letter is a mandatory obligation on the reviewing officer. There is no room for the reviewing officer to decide, if he or she has concluded that there was a deficiency or irregularity, not to send a ‘minded-to’ letter because there is no apparent benefit to the applicant. The wording of the regulations makes it clear that the duty must be complied with. One Court of Appeal judge has said:

‘The minded-to notice gives an opportunity to the applicant to try to persuade the review officer that his reasoning for his provisional conclusion is mistaken and is, at the very least, potentially of great benefit to an applicant, and to be deprived of that right is or may be seriously prejudicial.’

19.156 The Codes provide some guidance as to the types of deficiencies or irregularities that a reviewing officer might consider render the original decision flawed. Examples given are:

1. failure to take into account relevant considerations;
2. taking into account irrelevant considerations;
3. failure to base the decision on the facts;
4. bad faith or dishonesty;
5. a mistake of law;
6. decisions that run contrary to the policy of HA 1996, Pt 7 \(^1\) (or, for local housing authorities in Wales, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2);
7. irrationality or unreasonableness; or
8. procedural unfairness, eg where an applicant has not been given a chance to comment on relevant matters \(^2\).

1. As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

19.157 In Hall v Wandsworth London Borough Council\(^1\), the Court of Appeal considered what was meant by ‘deficiency’. It held that it meant ‘something lacking’. It was not limited to failings which would provide grounds for legal challenge, although it must be something sufficiently important to the fairness of the process to justify the operation of these special provisions and the ‘minded-to’ notification. In the two linked cases considered by the Court of Appeal, there was a deficiency in one (in that it was unclear whether the original decision-maker had applied the correct test for vulnerability). The reviewing officer should have treated that failing as a ‘deficiency’ and should have applied the special provisions.

19.158 An ‘irregularity’ means something lacking in the manner in which the original decision was made, that is a procedural flaw or error.\(^1\)

19.159 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.159 How significant should this flaw be? In *Hall v Wandsworth London Borough Council*¹, the Court of Appeal had held that the ‘something lacking’ must be of sufficient importance to the fairness of the procedure to justify the extra procedural safeguard involved by application of reg 8(2)². In *Banks v Kingston upon Thames Royal London Borough Council*³, the Court of Appeal said that the test of ‘sufficient importance’ should be understood ‘in the sense that further representations made in response could have made a difference to the decision that the reviewing officer had to make’⁴. A third Court of Appeal decision, *Bury Metropolitan Borough Council v Gibbons*⁵, applied the decision of Hall v Wandsworth London Borough Council, and the judge said: ‘[w]here the reviewer rejects the factual basis of the original decision and proposes to substitute a different factual basis leading to the same conclusion, it seems to me that the review has identified as “deficiency” within the meaning of regulation 8(2)”⁶.

2. Carnwath LJ at [29].
4. Lawrence Collins LJ at [72].
6. Per Jackson LJ at [45].

19.160 In *Mitu v Camden London Borough Council*¹, the local housing authority argued that a flaw in the original decision would only amount to a ‘deficiency’ if it was a flaw in the reasoning on an issue which the reviewing officer was minded to find against the applicant and if it was sufficiently serious. The Court of Appeal, by a majority, rejected that argument as entailing writing words into the regulation which are not there. The judge giving the leading judgment said:

‘[l]ooking at the matter broadly and untechnically, it seems to me that if the reviewing officer considers that the original decision maker was wrong on an important aspect of the case, then he has identified a deficiency in the original decision . . . To hold otherwise means that the reviewing officer has the power to decide, in effect, that nothing the applicant can say will cause him to change his mind on the issue on which he has found against the applicant.’²

2. Per Lewison LJ at [28].

19.161 There may also be a ‘deficiency’ that requires the activation of the special procedure³, even where the original decision did not contain any errors in its conclusion on the facts as they stood at the time of the original decision. In *Banks v Kingston-upon-Thames Royal London Borough Council*², the original decision had been that the applicant was not homeless. The applicant requested a review. Before the reviewing officer had completed the review, the applicant had been served with a notice to quit. The reviewing officer decided that the applicant was homeless but that he did not have a priority need. The Court of Appeal held that, once it was decided that the applicant was homeless, the original decision had become deficient because it had not addressed his priority need. As a result, where the reviewing officer is minded to decide the review against the interests of the applicant, reg 8(2) should operate so as to ensure that the applicant be given the opportunity to make representations

1. SI 2018/223, reg 7(2) or SI 2015/1266, reg 5(2).

19.162 The Codes, accordingly, advise that the reviewing officer must consider whether there is ‘something lacking’ in the decision under review. They suggest that significant issues which were not addressed, or addressed inadequately, which could have to led to unfairness, constitute ‘something lacking’.

19.163 The Court of Appeal has considered whether or not the special procedure in reg 7(2) should apply where there was ‘a plainly deficient homelessness decision when the deficiency has had no adverse consequences for the applicant’. The deficiency in that case was that the local housing authority’s original decision had concluded that the applicant, who had a priority need, had become homeless intentionally. The decision had, erroneously, informed her that the local housing authority’s duty towards her was limited to providing her with advice and assistance. The decision did not notify her that the local housing authority had a duty to secure accommodation for such period as it considered would give her a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for herself. The applicant did not suffer any detriment because the local housing authority agreed to secure accommodation pending the review, and then pending her appeal to the county court and subsequently to the Court of Appeal.

19.164 The reviewing officer did not identify that there was a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision and did not apply the special procedure, although the reviewing officer did notify the applicant of the duty under HA 1996, s 190(2)(a) in the review decision. The Court of Appeal decided that, although the original decision was wrong, it did not contain a ‘deficiency’ for the purposes of reg 8(2) and that the reviewing officer was correct not to activate the special procedure.

1. Ibrahim v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2013] EWCA Civ 20, [2015] HLR 15, CA: the judgment contains different reasoning by the different Lord Justices. Sir Stephen Sedley, giving the leading judgment, regarded the error as a ‘deficiency’, but held that the county court judge was right to exercise her discretion to confirm the review decision because the deficiency was not of sufficient importance to justify engaging the special procedure. Etherton LJ held that the error was not a ‘deficiency’ for the purposes of the then reg 8(2) procedure because the applicant had not made any complaint about it in her representations on review and the reviewing officer had not made the same error but had stated the HA 1996, s 190(2)(a) duty correctly. The third judge, Mummery LJ, agreed with Etherton LJ.

19.165 Examples from case-law as to when there may have been 'something lacking' include:

- where it is unclear, from the wording of the original decision, whether or not the decision-maker had applied the correct legal test\(^1\);
- where the original decision-maker had failed to make adequate inquiries of the applicant’s medical advisers and had failed to give a reasoned explanation for preferring the in-house medical advice against that of the applicant’s advisers\(^2\);
- where the original decision had not mentioned the medical evidence that had been submitted by the applicant\(^3\);
- where the original decision had been made 11 months after the applicant had been interviewed, and by a different officer from the one who had interviewed the applicant\(^4\);
- on a ‘broad reading’ of the regulations, where the original decision had become ‘deficient’ simply because it did not deal with a matter raised by a changed factual situation since the original decision was made\(^5\);
- where no reasons had been given in the original decision as to why offered accommodation had been suitable\(^6\);
- where both the applicant and the original decision maker had only viewed the accommodation, the suitability of which was subject to the request for a review, after the original decision had been made\(^7\);
- where the reviewing officer had rejected the factual basis of the original decision\(^8\);
- where the original decision had simply set out the statutory elements necessary for the ending of the main housing duty under HA 1996, s 193(5)\(^9\), and had not given any reasons for the decision\(^10\);
- where the original decision had concluded that the applicant had become homeless intentionally without giving reasons or explaining what that meant\(^11\);
- where the decision as to whether or not the applicant had become homeless intentionally had been overturned by the reviewing officer even though the duty owed to the applicant had not changed\(^12\);
- where the applicant had raised new information in her representations on review which the reviewing officer had been inclined not to accept\(^13\); and
- where the applicant had raised new information in response to a letter which had not been considered in the original decision, a further minded to letter should have been sent\(^14\).

Note that in the third of these cases considered together by the Court of Appeal (Nagi v Birmingham City Council), the Court of Appeal found that there had not been a deficiency in the original decision even though the letter was ‘poorly worded’. Despite that, the decision had addressed all the important aspects and could not have left a reasonable reader with any real doubt as to the basis of the decision (Etherton LJ at [77]).

Scope of the review

19.166 It is not possible for an applicant to restrict the scope of the review only to a specific part of the decision that she or he has asked to be reviewed. This is particularly important where the original decision falls under the second category of reviewable decisions, ie a decision as to ‘what duty, if any’ is owed to the applicant\(^1\). The general rule is that the reviewing officer is charged with the task of considering the whole matter (of whether any duty is owed) afresh on the latest material available\(^2\). There are two potential scenarios in which this can create difficulties for applicants.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(b), as amended by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018; see 19.15–19.17. Or, for applications to local housing authorities in Wales, where the decision is that ‘a duty is not owed to the applicant’: H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)(b), see 19.74–19.76.

19.167 First, an applicant owed the benefit of a duty as a result of the original decision may find that the reviewing officer concludes (on consideration of the same material) that he or she is owed not a higher but a lesser duty. For example, the original decision may have been that the applicant was eligible, homeless, and in priority need, but had become homeless intentionally. The reviewing officer, on reconsideration, may conclude that the applicant did not become homeless intentionally but has never had a priority need, and that therefore there is no accommodation duty at all. The ‘minded-to’ procedure ought to ensure that the applicant is not taken by surprise by such a decision\(^1\).

1 See 19.150–19.165.

19.168 Second, the applicant may find that new information, or a change of circumstances between the original decision and the conclusion of the review, undermines the benefits of the original decision. For example, the original decision may have been that the applicant was eligible, homeless, and had a priority need but had become homeless intentionally. The reviewing officer may be satisfied (by either new information or a change of circumstances) that the applicant is not eligible or no longer has a priority need. Even if the original decision was correct on the facts available at the time, the new information or change of circumstances renders the original decision subject to a ‘deficiency’.
19.168 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

The reviewing officer should send a ‘minded-to’ letter inviting the applicant to make representations if the reviewing officer is minded to decide the review against the interests of the applicant1.

1. SI 2018/223, reg 7(2); SI 2015/1266, reg 5(2); and Banks v Kingston-upon-Thames Royal London Borough Council [2014] EWCA Civ 877, [2014] HLR 39, CA, the original decision had found that the applicant was homeless and eligible for assistance but did not have a priority need. By the time of the review decision, the applicant had obtained an assured shorthold tenancy of a bed-sitting room and her daughter had come to live with her. The reviewing officer, having used the special procedure in reg 8(2), decided that the applicant was not homeless. See 19.150–19.165.

19.169 A difficult situation arises where the applicant is not provided with accommodation pending review1 and then has obtained his or her own accommodation before the conclusion of the review. If the applicant has managed to obtain something better than emergency accommodation, the reviewing officer will be entitled – indeed required – to conclude that the applicant is not homeless as at the date of the decision on review2.

2. See Chapter 10. This is exactly what happened in Temur v Hackney London Borough Council

19.170 Another difficult situation is where the applicant has accepted a private rented sector offer1 or a final accommodation offer2 and simultaneously requested a review of its suitability3. The applicant will have entered into a fixed-term assured shorthold tenancy and so he or she will be liable to the landlord for the rent for the whole of the term. What happens if the reviewing officer agrees with the applicant that the accommodation is not suitable for the applicant? Arguably, in order to provide for this situation, all private rented sector offers should contain break clauses, exercisable by the applicant.
Otherwise, the applicant would either have to pay large sums of money to the landlord to be released from the agreement, or would have to remain living in accommodation which is agreed not to be suitable4.

2. As defined at HA 1996, ss 193A(4) and 193C(7), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, and made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or HA 1996, s 193C(4) accommodation duty to an end: HA 1996, ss 193A(1) and 193C(6)(a), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 7(1), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing
3. HA 1996, ss 202(1)(g) and (h), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April
4. This scenario is not addressed at all in either Code of Guidance.

19.171 Obviously, any new information or change of circumstances could equally well work in an applicant’s favour. Between the request for, and conclusion of, the review, he or she may have acquired priority need status, established a new local connection or had any other change of circumstance which could produce a more favourable review decision. Provided that this material comes to the attention of the reviewing officer, it must be taken into account.

2 Temur v Hackney London Borough Council [2014] EWCA Civ 877, [2014] HLR 39, CA per Jackson LJ at [35]. If that is the case, the review decision will be favourable for the applicant and the special procedure need not be activated.

19.172 There are two exceptions to the general rule that the reviewing officer must consider the whole matter on the latest material available.

19.173 First, the Court of Appeal has held that, where the original decision was unlawful and had deprived the applicant of a benefit to which he or she would have been entitled had the original decision been lawfully taken, the reviewing officer should take a different approach from the normal course of considering all the facts and law at the date of the review decision. In those circumstances, the reviewing officer should restore to the applicant the rights he or she would have had if the decision had been lawful, even if the applicant’s circumstances have changed such that he or she would normally not be entitled to that benefit. The obvious example, and that considered by the Court of Appeal, is where a 17-year-old is notified that he or she does not have a priority need, requests a review and the review is decided after his or her eighteenth birthday. These unusual circumstances apply where the original decision was unlawful, in this case because the 17-year-old could not have been anything other than in priority need at the date of the original decision. The position if, for example, the original decision had been that the 17-year-old had a priority need but had become homeless intentionally, and a reviewing officer is considering the position after the applicant’s eighteenth birthday, is much more difficult. The original decision was not unlawful, certainly as far as the priority need part of the decision is concerned. Should the reviewing officer confine himself or herself to considering the part of the decision that did not relate to priority need? The Court of Appeal’s approach in Crawley Borough Council v B suggests not and that all of the circumstances that go towards a decision as to what duty, if any, is owed to the applicant should be considered by the reviewing officer as at the date of the review. In those circumstances, reg 7(2) requires the reviewing officer to send the applicant a ‘minded-to’ letter if he or she is minded to decide the review against the interests of the applicant.

19.174 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.174 Second, where the reviewing officer is considering the applicant’s reasons for refusing an offer of accommodation, the reviewing officer should consider the facts and circumstances that existed at the date of the refusal, not at the date of the review. Some of those facts may only come to the attention of the local housing authority after the date of the refusal, but the correct question for the reviewing officer is what facts existed at the date of the refusal.

Effect of a review against a decision as to steps to be taken to help the applicant

Local housing authorities in England

19.175 As previously noted, an applicant to a local housing authority in England can request a review of what steps the local housing authority has decided are reasonable for it to take either under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty or under the HA 1996, s 189B(2) relief duty. A short time-frame is prescribed for completion of these review decisions: representations must be made within two weeks from the date when the review is requested, and the decision on review must be notified within three weeks from receipt of the representations or, if no representations are made, from the date when the review was requested. Each time limit can be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer.

4 SI 2018/223, regs 5(3)(b) and 9(1)(a).
5 SI 2018/223, regs 5(3)(b) and 9(1)(a)

19.176 The Code of Guidance advises local housing authorities to encourage applicants to raise any concerns they have about the steps, which will be contained in the personalised housing plan, more informally so that they can resolve disagreements. However, this does not, of course, restrict an applicant’s right to request a review of the steps set out in the personalised housing plan.

1 HA 1996, s 189A(4)(b) and (6)(c), as inserted by HRA 2017, s 3(1), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, see 15.72–15.80.
2 English Code, para 11.36.

19.177 The question arises as to what happens if the review decision is to the effect that the steps proposed, and being undertaken by the local housing... authority, are not reasonable. Arguably, that would mean that the 56 day period should commence from the date of the review decision, or even from a later date if the reviewer does not decide what steps would be reasonable but simply requires the original decision-maker to reconsider the steps in the personalized housing plan. The English Code is much more ambiguous than that. It advises that 'review officers are recommended to use their discretion to assess the impact of the failure across the whole period of the relevant duty and make recommendations which seek to remedy this’\(^1\).

\(^1\) This is the effect of a review decision for local housing authorities in Wales, see 19.81–19.82.

\(^2\) English Code, paras 19.34–19.35.

LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN WALES

19.178 As previously noted\(^1\), an applicant to a local housing authority in Wales can request a review of whether reasonable steps were taken by the local housing authority in performance of its H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), duty to help the applicant to secure accommodation\(^2\). This right to request a review arises if the local housing authority has decided that the duty has come to an end, either because the 56-day period has expired or earlier than 56 days if the local housing authority is satisfied that reasonable steps have been taken to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant\(^3\). Detailed guidance on the procedure when a review is sought of a local housing authority’s decision that reasonable steps were taken is in the Welsh Code\(^4\).

\(^1\) See 19.81–19.82.

\(^2\) H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), see 17.76–17.78.

\(^3\) H(W)A 2014, ss 74 (2) and (3) and 85(2).

19.179 If the review decision confirms that reasonable steps had not been taken, then the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), has not come to an end, and a new 56-day period should commence from the date when the review decision is notified to the applicant\(^1\).

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 87; Welsh Code, para 20.33.

Notification of the review decision

19.180 Every review decision must be notified to the applicant or to his or her authorised agent by the local housing authority or authorities concerned, even if the review has been conducted by an 'appointed' reviewing officer\(^1\). That notice must be given in writing\(^2\). If the local housing authority is for some reason unable to give the applicant the written notice, it may make the review decision available for collection at its office for a reasonable period, and that can constitute notification\(^3\). It is important to establish the exact date of notification, because the very tight 21-day time-limit for the filing of an appeal to the county court runs from the date of notification. If there is any doubt as to the exact date of notification, the county court judge will have to determine the date. In those circumstances, if there might be any doubt as to the correct deadline, an applicant should be advised to apply for an extension of time when he or she issues his or her Appellant’s Notice, in case the judge finds that the appeal has been issued out of time.\(^4\)
19.180 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

4 HA 1996, s 204(2A); H(W)A 2014, s 88(3). See 19.251–19.255.

19.181 The local housing authority must notify the applicant of the reasons for the review decision\(^1\) if the review decision:

- confirms the original decision against the interests of the applicant on any issue;
- confirms the original decision to give a notice of referral under the conditions for referral;\(^2\)
- confirms the original decision that the conditions are met for referral of the applicant’s case;\(^3\)
- (for local housing authorities in England) confirms that reasonable steps are being taken under the HA 1996, ss 189B(2), relief or 195(2), prevention duties;\(^4\) or
- (for local housing authorities in Wales) confirms that reasonable steps were taken to help to secure that suitable accommodation would be available for the applicant under the H(W)A 2014, s 73(1) duty.\(^7\)

In any other case, where applicants would be expected to be pleased with the review decision, reasons are not required to be given.\(^8\) It might, however, be expected that an ‘appointed’ reviewing officer\(^9\) would have given written reasons to the local housing authorities involved and that they would be passed on to the applicant.

19.182 Whatever the outcome of the review, the same notice of the review decision must also inform the applicant of the right to appeal to the county court on a point of law and of the 21-day period in which the appeal must be made.\(^1\)

1 HA 1996, s 203(5); H(W)A 2014, s 86(5). The exact wording of this sub-section need not be set out so long as the substance is conveyed: Dharmaraj v Hounslow London Borough Council [2011] EWCA Civ 312, [2011] HLR 18, CA. It may seem surprising that this information has to be notified even in a review decision which decides all the issues in the applicant’s favour but the wording in both HA 1996, 203(5) and H(W)A 2014, s 86(5) is ‘[i]n any case . . . ’.
19.183 A review decision notification that fails to provide either the reasons for the decision or the information about rights to appeal (where those are required) will not be effective as a review decision.¹ This will mean that the review has not been concluded.

19.184 The applicant’s remedy in that case might be to appeal on a point of law against the original decision (because there is no review decision)². However, the better course might be to invite the reviewing officer to conclude the review properly by giving the required notice, seizing the opportunity to put forward any additional material before that notice is given².

² See 19.224. The Local Government Ombudsman found maladministration where a local housing authority failed to notify the applicant of her right of appeal: Complaint against Croydon London Borough Council 13 002 818, 6 November 2013 (2014) February Legal Action, p 32; and Complaint against Kingston upon Hull City Council, 13 002 073, 23 January 2014 (2014) March Legal Action, p 24 where the review decision additionally failed to give reasons for deciding the issue against the applicant’s interests.

Time scale for completion of the review

LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND

19.185 For local housing authorities in England, the Regulations prescribe different time limits, depending on the different decisions which are subject to the request for a review. The different time limits are separately discussed below.

19.186 In most of the cases below¹, the period runs from day on which the applicant made his or her request for a review, not the date on which the request was received². The period for notification of the review decision can be extended by written agreement between the applicant and the reviewer³. This allows for flexibility and also the certainty provided by a written record of the agreement which contains the period of the extension. The wording of reg 9(1) was considered to be ‘defective drafting’ by the House of Lords and House of Commons Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments⁴.

¹ The three week period for notification runs from either the date on which the request for the review was made, or the date on which representations were received, see 19.189.
² SI 2018/223, reg 9(1).
³ SI 2018/223, reg 9(1).
⁴ House of Lords and House of Commons Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments (Eighteenth Report of Session 2017–19, 28 March 2018). The Joint Committee stated that the wording was not grammatical and did not achieve the purpose of HA 1996, s 203(7), which allows regulations make provision as to the period in which the review must be carried out and notice given of the decision. The Joint Committee noted the MHCLG’s explanation that reg 9(1) has the effect of making provision for the period in which the review must be carried out, but it did not agree. The Joint Committee said: ‘Regulation 9(1) could have stated expressly that notice is to be given within the period specified; or it could simply have stated that the period for the purpose of section 203 is a specified number of weeks; but it does neither one nor the other. Stating that notice must be given “a period of X weeks” is not the same as stating that it must be given within that period.’
19.187 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.187 The time limit of 21 days for bringing an appeal to the county court against a review decision runs from the date of written notification of the review decision to the applicant or to his or her agent. That must mean the date on which the review decision is received if it is sent by post, and not the date of posting or the date on the letter itself.

1 See 19.244–19.245.
3 Demetri v Westminster City Council (1999) 32 HLR 470, CA, at 471, in which the review decision was posted on 7 December but not received until 17 December. See Lambeth London Borough Council v Namegembe [2006] EWHC 3608 (Ch), (2007) February Legal Action, p 31, ChD, and Dawkins v Central Bedfordshire Council [2013] EWHC 4757 (QB), (2013) September Legal Action, p 31, QBD, for examples of a judge having to determine conflicts of fact between the parties as to when a review decision had been received by the applicant.

Review decisions which must be notified within three weeks

19.188 The three-week time limit applies to the following requests for a review:

- in respect of a decision as to steps that the local housing authority is to take under the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty;
- in respect of a decision to give notice to the applicant that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate, where the effect of the decision is to bring the HA 1996, s 195(2) prevention duty to an end;
- in respect of a decision as to the steps that the local housing authority is to take under the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty; or
- in respect of a decision to give notice to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duty has come to an end.

19.189 The review decision must be notified to the applicant within three weeks of one of the following dates:
• the date on which the applicant requested the review if the applicant made no further representations; or
• the date on which the applicant made representations in response to the reviewer’s notification that he or she could make representations1.

Review decisions which must be notified within eight weeks

19.190 The eight-week time limit applies to the following requests for a review:

• in respect of a decision as to the applicant’s eligibility for assistance1;
• in respect of a decision as what duty (if any) is owed to the applicant2;
• in respect of a decision to give notice to the applicant that the HA 1996, s 189B(2)3, relief duty has come to an end4;
• in respect of a decision to give notice to the applicant that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate where the effect of the decision is to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2)5, relief duty to an end6;
• in respect of a decision to notify another local housing authority for referral of the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty7;
• in respect of a decision that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case are or are not met8;

• in respect of a decision as to the suitability of a private rented sector offer made under HA 1996, s 193(7AA)15; or offer16 or a final Part 6 offer17 made under HA 1996, ss 193A(1) or 193C(6)18.

The review decision must be notified to the applicant within eight weeks of the date on which the applicant requested the review19.

Review decisions which must be notified within ten weeks

19.191 A ten-week time limit applies to the request for a review of a decision that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case are met, and the review has been carried out by the notifying local housing authority and the notified local housing authority. The review decision must be notified to the applicant within ten weeks of the date on which the applicant requested the review.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(d), see 19.55–19.57.

2 SI 2018/223, reg 9(1)(c) and English Code, para 19.23.

Review decisions which must be notified within twelve weeks

19.192 A 12-week time limit applies to the request for a review of a decision that the conditions for referral of the applicant’s case are met when the original decision had been made by a referee, and the review has been carried out by a person appointed by the notifying local housing authority and the notified local housing authority or appointed by the Local Government Association. The review decision must be notified to the applicant within 12 weeks of the date on which the applicant requested the review.

1 HA 1996, s 202(1)(d), see 19.55–19.57.

2 SI 2018/223, regs 6 and 9(1)(d) and English Code, para 19.23.

19.193 Since responsibility for notifying the applicant of the review decision is on the two local housing authorities concerned, not the appointed person, the appointed person must send the review to the local housing authorities one week either eleven-weeks after the review was requested, or, if a longer period had been agreed, no later than one week before the expiry of that period. This gives the local housing authorities sufficient time to notify the applicant within the 12-week period.

1 SI 2018/223, reg 9(2).
LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN WALES

19.194 In most cases, the time limit is that the review decision must be notified to the applicant within eight weeks from the receipt of the request for a review. Different time limits apply if the review has been sought of a decision that the conditions for a referral to another local housing authority are met. If the review is of a decision made by the two local housing authorities involved, the review period is ten weeks. If the review is of a decision made by a referee, the period is 12 weeks. In the latter case, in order to give the local housing authorities concerned time to notify a review decision within the 12-week period, the 'appointed' reviewing officer must notify them of his or her decision within 11 weeks.

1 H(W)A 2014, ss 80(5) and 85(1)(c); and see 19.77–19.80.
2 SI 2015/1266 (W 86), reg 6(1)(b).
3 SI 2015/1266, reg 6(1)(c).
4 SI 2015/1266, reg 6(3).

19.195 The period for completion of a review can be longer than these prescribed periods if both the applicant and local housing authority agree in writing that the period should be extended. The time limit of 21 days for bringing an appeal to the county court against a review decision runs from the date of written notification of the review decision to the applicant or to his or her agent.

1 SI 2015/1266, reg 6(2).
2 See 19.244–19.245.

Remedies for failure to complete the review in time

19.196 If no review decision has been notified by the end of the prescribed (or any agreed extended) period, the applicant has 21 days from the end of that period in which to bring an appeal against the original decision on a point of law.

1 HA 1996, s 204(1)(b) and (2); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1)(b) and (2).

19.197 However, it may be that pursuing an appeal on a point of law against the original decision is not the most appropriate option available to the applicant. The original decision may have been one that the local housing authority was lawfully entitled to take. But the applicant may disagree with the factual conclusions or may have submitted new information in the course of the review process which might alter the local housing authority's approach. In these cases, what the applicant requires is a reconsideration of the facts relevant to his or her application, not an appeal on a point of law. The local housing authority's failure to complete the review will have prevented the applicant from having his or her case reconsidered on its facts.
19.198 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.198 The appropriate procedure in these circumstances would be for the applicant to apply by way of judicial review proceedings for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to complete the review and to notify the applicant of its decision on review¹.

19.199 It may be sensible for the applicant to lodge an appellant’s notice against the original decision in any event¹, and then request that the appeal is stayed until the judicial review application (seeking a review decision) has been determined². If the applicant does not succeed in obtaining a review decision through the judicial review process, his or her appeal against the original decision will still have been issued within the time limit.

Extra-statutory reviews

Preliminary reviews

19.200 As already noted¹, prior to the introduction of HA 1996, Pt 7², many local housing authorities had adopted informal local review procedures where decisions were disputed.

¹ See 19.1–19.7.
² HA 1996, Pt 7, applied to local housing authorities in England and in Wales from its commencement on 20 January 1997. For applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in Wales, H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, came into force on 27 April 2015.

19.201 Since 1997, as the statutory review process has become more familiar, the use of these informal preliminary reviews and of multi-layered reviewing has declined and, to the best of the authors’ knowledge, no local housing authority in England or Wales operates a multi-staged scheme. Of course, local housing authorities may still offer informal extra-statutory reviews of those decisions which carry no right to a statutory review³.

³ See 19.12–19.70 for decisions by local housing authorities in England that carry a right to request a review; see 9.71–19.86 for decisions by local housing authorities in Wales that carry a right to request a review.

Second reviews

19.202 There is no statutory provision for any further review of a review decision, and there is no right to request a statutory review of a review decision¹.

19.203 A local housing authority is not precluded from reconsidering its decision on review, if the applicant consents, just as it is not precluded from reconsidering any other decision¹. But if the review is reconsidered, the exercise is simply an extra-statutory reconsideration. It is not a statutory review, and is not, and cannot be, a second statutory review.

19.204  The local housing authority may be prepared voluntarily to carry out an additional, extra-statutory reconsideration if, for example:

(1) new relevant information has come to light since the review decision; or
(2) an appeal against the review decision is likely to be mounted so that an early reconsideration would be a sensible opportunity to ensure the review decision is likely to survive judicial scrutiny; or
(3) there is some other good reason to justify looking at the matter again.

19.205  If the applicant is requesting that the local housing authority look again at the review decision, he or she should seek to dissuade the local housing authority from conducting only an informal or extra-statutory reconsideration. Instead, the applicant should ask the local housing authority to agree to treat the first review decision as withdrawn and the statutory review process as re-opened. The applicant should ask that the local housing authority confirms in writing that it is proceeding on this basis. That confirmation should also contain written agreement to any necessary extension of the time limit for completion of that review (if the original time limit has expired or is about to expire).

19.206  The applicant will need to take this course because only a true review decision, and not an extra-statutory reconsideration, can be subject to an appeal to the county court.

1  Demetri v Westminster City Council (2000) 32 HLR 470, CA.

19.207  If the local housing authority only agrees to an informal reconsideration, the applicant who wishes to preserve his or her position should bring an appeal against the statutory review decision. That appeal must be lodged within the normal 21-day period, even if the local housing authority has agreed to carry out an informal reconsideration of the review decision.

19.208  Theoretically, the decisions not to withdraw a review decision and/or not to undertake an extra-statutory reconsideration are amenable to judicial review. However, save in the most exceptional case, any such challenge is highly unlikely to be successful. The better course would be to bring an appeal against the review decision or, if necessary, apply for an extension of time within which to bring that appeal.

1  Exceptionally, a claim for judicial review succeeded in quashing the local housing authority’s informal reconsideration in R (Van Der Stolk) v Camden London Borough Council [2002] EWHC 1261 (Admin), (2002) July Legal Action, p 26, Admin Ct. In R v Westminster City Council ex p Ellioua (1999) 31 HLR 440, CA, the applicant’s claim for judicial review of a refusal to reconsider did not succeed; the county court was the correct forum for an appeal against the statutory review decision. In R (C) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2003] EWCA Civ 927, (2004) 36 HLR 4, CA, the Court of Appeal held that the local housing authority’s exercise of its extra-statutory discretion in considering an extension of time in which to request a review, a further reconsideration of a review decision or a further extension of time is close to being an absolute discretion and unlikely to be amenable to challenge by judicial review; and see R (Slaiman) v Richmond upon Thames London Borough Council [2006] EWHC 329 (Admin), (2006) HLR 20, Admin Ct, where a similar challenge failed.

19.209 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.209 Of course, a review decision only affects the position between the applicant and the particular reviewing local housing authority. An applicant unable or unwilling to challenge an adverse review decision of a local housing authority in the county court is always free to apply to a different local housing authority. The local housing authority receiving the second application for homelessness assistance can take into account any decisions or review decisions made by previous local housing authorities but must reach its own conclusions. See 9.50–9.56.

Accommodation pending the outcome of the review

19.210 The local housing authority has a discretion, but not a duty, to provide accommodation for the applicant and the members of his or her household during the review process. The discretion is available whether or not the applicant has been accommodated prior to the original decision.

1 HA 1996, ss 188(3), 199A(6), as amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 5(4) and (9), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018, and 200(5); H(W)A 2014, ss 69(11) and 88(5). See also English Code, paras 15.25–15.27; Welsh Code, paras 20.29–20.32. See 16.233–16.257 (England) and 17.134 (Wales).

19.211 The local housing authority is under no obligation to consider, in every case, whether it should exercise the power. An applicant who wants accommodation pending the review should ask for it.

19.212 If the local housing authority declines to exercise this power, a court will only intervene if the local housing authority has made an error of law in considering the exercise of its discretion (or has failed to consider the request for accommodation at all). Any challenge to the local housing authority’s exercise or non-exercise of discretion can only be made by way of judicial review proceedings.

1 See 19.306–19.332.

19.213 Full descriptions of the powers to accommodate pending review, its various features and the scope for challenges to decisions are given in Chapter 16 (England) and Chapter 17 (Wales).

APPEALS

Right to appeal

19.214 As already noted, prior to HA 1996, Pt 7 all legal challenges to local housing authority decisions made under the statutory homelessness provisions were brought by way of judicial review. Since 20 January 1997, challenges to most decisions are pursued instead by way of an appeal on a point of law to the county court$^1$.

1. See 19.1–19.7.

Appeals 19.217

However, there is no free-standing or general right of appeal to the county court against every decision made under H A 1996, Pt 7$^2$ or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. The prerequisites (examined in more detail below) for a county court appeal against a substantive H A 1996, Pt 7$^2$ or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, decision are that:

1. the initial decision must have been a reviewable decision$^3$;
2. the applicant must have made a request for a review$^4$;
3. the review decision must have been properly notified$^5$;
4. the time limit for proper notification of a review decision must have expired$^6$;
5. the appeal must be on a point of law$^7$; and
6. the appeal must be brought within the prescribed time limit (or such extension of it as the court may allow)$^8$.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.
2. As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.
3. See 19.12–19.70 for decisions made by local housing authorities in England that carry the right to request a review; see 19.71–19.86 for decisions made by local housing authorities in Wales that carry the right to request a review.

19.216 There is no need for the applicant to first obtain permission to appeal from the court (or from anyone else)$^1$.

Was the initial decision a reviewable decision?

19.217 An appeal can only be brought against one of the decisions set out in the categories of decision conferring the right to request a review which are listed at H A 1996, s 202(1)$^1$ or H(W)A 2014, s 85(1)–(3)$^2$.

19.218 Reviewing andAppealing Homelessness Decisions

19.218 If the decision does not fall into one of the categories specified, the applicant had no right to request a statutory review and has no right to bring a county court appeal. The appropriate challenge to any such decision is made by a claim for judicial review.

1 See 19.306–19.332.

Did the applicant make the request for a review?

19.219 The statutory appeal rights are only available to ‘an applicant’. No member of the applicant’s household, however closely related, has that statutory right. In Lewis v Brent London Borough Council, one of two joint applicants appealed to the county court, relying on the strength of the other joint applicant’s case (her husband). The appeal was dismissed and the Court of Appeal refused permission to appeal, holding that the husband was not a party to the proceedings and the wife could not rely, in her own case, on any error in the decision relating to her husband. Nor can the appeal process be activated by others who may have an interest in challenging the local housing authority’s original or review decision, eg a different local housing authority, a private registered provider or registered social landlord, or another homeless person.

1 HA 1996, s 204(1); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1).

19.220 In addition, the applicant must actually have requested a statutory review in order to be able to bring an appeal. If the applicant did not request a review of a reviewable decision, no appeal is available. The applicant in that situation could only reinstate his or her appeal rights by first asking the local housing authority to review its original decision. If the time limit for making a review request has expired, the local housing authority will also have to agree to extend the time limit for the making of the review request.

1 HA 1996, s 204(1); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1).

Was the review decision properly notified?

19.221 Because the right of appeal is only available to an applicant who has sought a review, the appeal will normally be brought against the review decision.

1 HA 1996, s 204(1)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1)(a).

Has the time limit for proper notification of a review decision expired?

19.222 However, if the local housing authority has failed to notify the applicant of its review decision within the prescribed time limit (or any agreed extension of that time limit), the applicant can bring an appeal against the original decision, which was the subject of the request for the review. This important provision prevents the applicant from being denied access to the courts by the local housing authority unduly prolonging the review procedure.

19.223 Even if the local housing authority has attempted to notify a review decision in time, a negative review decision is of no effect unless it has been communicated by written notice:

- containing reasons for the review decision;
- informing the applicant of the right to appeal; and
- setting out the time limit for an appeal.\(^1\)

\(^1\) See 19.181.

19.224 Faced with a review decision which is invalid by reason of non-compliance with one or more of these provisions, the applicant can appeal against the original decision (although adding an appeal against the defective review decision in the alternative in the Appellant's Notice might be a sensible precaution)\(^1\). Alternatively, if the applicant requires consideration of the facts relevant to his or her application, rather than an appeal on a point of law, he or she could apply by way of judicial review proceedings for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to complete the review and notify the applicant of its decision on review.\(^2\)

\(^1\) In Bellamy v Hounslow London Borough Council (reported under the name of William v Wandsworth London Borough Council, Bellamy v Hounslow London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 535, [2006] HLR 42, CA), no review decision had been notified within the statutory time limits and the applicant appealed against the original decision. Before the appeal was heard in the county court, the local housing authority notified the applicant of its review decision. The appeal was then brought against both the original and the review decision. The Court of Appeal, considering an appeal against the decision of the county court judge, doubted whether HA 1996, s 204 conferred a right of appeal against the original decision once the review decision had been notified (albeit late), and approved the first-instance judge's decision to treat the appeal as being against the review decision. See 19.214–19.216.

\(^2\) See 19.312.

What is a ‘point of law’?

19.225 Appeals can only be brought on a point of law ‘arising from the decision’ appealed against.\(^1\)

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 204(1); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1).

19.226 Points of law include any of the grounds of challenge that would normally be available in judicial review proceedings. Traditionally those grounds for judicial review have been classified as ‘illegality’, ‘irrationality’ and ‘procedural impropriety’\(^1\).

\(^1\) Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service [1985] AC 374, HL.

19.227 A point of law can be properly said to arise from any decision that:

- is based on a misconstruction of HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, or of the relevant regulations;

---

1 HA 1996, s 204(1)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1)(b).

Appeals 19.227
19.227 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

- is ultra vires, ie beyond or in excess of the local housing authority’s powers;
- is irrational;
- is taken in breach of natural justice;
- is the result of bias or bad faith;
- is reached without all necessary inquiries having been undertaken;
- is reached where there is no evidence to support factual findings made;
- is reached without regard to relevant factors;
- has failed to have regard to relevant factors; or
- gives inadequate reasons.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

19.228 Questions of fact, as distinct from questions of law, are for the local housing authority to decide, unless the local housing authority’s decision cannot be supported (in which case it will have made an error of law). Lord Millett in Runa Begum v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council summarised the distinction between disputes of law and disputes of fact:

‘A decision may be quashed if it is based on a finding of fact or inference from the facts which is perverse or irrational; or there was no evidence to support it; or it was made by reference to irrelevant factors or without regard to relevant factors. It is not necessary to identify a specific error of law; if the decision cannot be supported the court will infer that the decision-making authority misunderstood or overlooked relevant evidence or misdirected itself in law. The court cannot substitute its own findings of fact for those of the decision-making authority if there was evidence to support them; and the questions as to the weight to be given to a particular piece of evidence and the credibility of witnesses are for the decision-making authority and not the court.’

1 Puhlhofer v Hillingdon London Borough Council [1986] AC 484, HL.

19.229 Procedural errors in the making of inquiries, or in the making of the decision or review decision, are errors of law and can render the relevant decision unlawful. However, procedural unfairness in the appeal process, such as a failure to provide a copy of the applicant’s housing file until six days before the county court hearing, does not necessarily render the decision under appeal wrong in law.

19.230 What happens when the appellant is arguing that the review decision was based on a mistake of fact? In administrative law, there are two competing lines of authority. One argues that the issue of a mistaken fact should be absorbed into a traditional error of law approach, in that the decision-maker must have taken account of an irrelevant consideration, or failed to provide adequate or intelligible reasons, or failed to base the decision upon any evidence\(^1\). The other, more modern, approach holds that a mistake of fact giving rise to unfairness to the applicant can be a separate head of challenge in an appeal on a point of law. This latter view has prevailed in the context of asylum appeals\(^2\). The High Court has held that decisions about housing assistance fall within the scope of this principle\(^3\). There would ordinarily be four requirements that must be met before a mistake of fact could render a local housing authority’s decision unfair and therefore unlawful:

- there must have been a mistake as to an existing fact, including a mistake as to the availability of evidence on a particular matter;
- the fact or evidence must have been ‘established’ in the sense that it was uncontroversial and objectively verifiable;
- the applicant (or his or her advisers) must not have been responsible for the mistake; and
- the mistake must have played a material, but not necessarily decisive, part in the reasoning for the decision\(^4\).

Appeals 19.232

Chadwick LJ put it succinctly in Williams v Wandsworth London Borough Council:\(^1\)

‘where what is alleged is a misconstruction of ascertained facts, “obvious perversity” is required before the court can properly interfere with the authority’s findings of fact.’

Disputes facts

19.232 Should the court hear evidence as to factual issues that are contested between the parties? It is well-established that discretionary decisions, such as whether accommodation is suitable for the needs of the applicant and of his or her household, involve evaluative judgments and should be left to the local housing authority and its officers to determine (subject to the court ensuring that no errors of law were made)\(^1\). However what about factual decisions that do not involve those evaluative judgments but instead require the local housing authority’s officer to make a determination of hard fact, such as the age of a person, or whether or not the applicant had been ‘notified’ as required by HA 1996, Pt 7\(^2\) or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2? The Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal have held that there is no scope for a court which is hearing an appeal on a point of law, brought under HA 1996, s 204, to determine factual disagreements for itself. The judge should only decide whether or not the conclusion of a reviewing officer is wrong in law, and is not entitled to consider the factual issues.\(^1\)

\(^1\) Ali v Birmingham City Council [2010] UKSC 8, [2010] 2 AC 39, SC. The applicant complained to the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) that her right of access to a fair trial by an impartial and independent tribunal had been infringed. On, the applicant’s petition to the ECHR, a Chamber of the ECHR held that an application for homelessness did involve a determination of the applicant’s civil rights but that the availability of an appeal to the county court on a point of law rendered the process compatible with Art 6: Ali v UK (2016) 63 EHRR 20. However, the Supreme Court has declined to follow the case of Ali v UK (2016) 63 EHRR 20, and confirmed its earlier decision that an applicant’s civil rights are not determined in these circumstances: Poshteh v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2017] UKSC 36, [2017] AC 624, SC at [37].

As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.

\(^3\) Ali v Birmingham City Council [2010] UKSC 8, [2010] 2 AC 39, SC; Bubb v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2011] EWCA Civ, 1285, [2012] HLR 13, CA and Richmond-upon-Thames Royal London Borough Council v Kubicek [2012] EWHC 3292 (QB) (2013) January Legal Action, p 42, QBD. A judge retains jurisdiction to consider whether, as a matter of fact, the applicant has complied with the procedural requirements for bringing an appeal under HA 1996, s 204, for example whether the appeal has been issued within the 21-day time limit, or the disputed identity of the reviewing officer, see Butt v Hounslow London Borough Council [2011] EWCA Civ 1327, (2012) January Legal Action p 22, CA. In R (Edwards) v Birmingham City Council [2016] EWHC 173 (Admin), [2016] HLR 11, Admin Ct, the Administrative Court judge rejected a submission that the test at HA 1996, ss 183(1) and 188(1) of whether the local housing authorities has ‘reason to believe’ that an applicant may be homeless was a question of hard-edged fact, to be determined by a Court, and instead found that it was a value judgment to be determined by the local housing authority, at [69]–[71].

19.233 A recent review of the earlier case-law by the High Court concluded that there are two purposes for which factual evidence may be relevant on an appeal:

- to show how the review decision was reached, including what material was before the reviewing officer and what procedure was followed, this may be relevant where the allegation is that there was a failure to comply with the requirements of natural justice; or
- to demonstrate that the decision subject to appeal was based on a material error of fact giving rise to unfairness.\(^2\)

Fresh evidence

19.234 The starting-point is that a county court will not generally admit fresh evidence on an appeal at all. However, if an applicant is seeking to argue that the local housing authority made a mistake of fact, such as to amount to an error of law, or that it failed to carry out all necessary inquiries, or there has been some procedural impropriety, he or she may have to present new information to the court in order to show that one of the local housing authority’s factual conclusions was based on a mistake of fact, or a failure to carry out necessary inquiries.\(^3\) The authorities on the presentation of new information have been described as ‘unusually fact-sensitive’ rather than laying down general propositions of law. Even if the evidence put forward passes the relevance test, the party seeking to rely on that evidence also has to address the traditional test for the submission of new information on an appeal which can be found in Ladd v Marshall. That case decided that the court will only permit new evidence to be produced at an appeal stage if:

1. it is evidence that could not have been obtained without reasonable diligence for use at trial (or, in a homelessness context, at the review or original decision stage);
2. the evidence would probably have an important (although it need not be decisive) influence on the outcome; and
3. the evidence is such as is apparently credible.

1 See 19.225–19.231.
2 In Cramp v Hastings Borough Council [2005] EWCA Civ 1005, [2005] HLR 48, CA, the Court of Appeal overturned county court decisions that inadequate inquiries had been made, and noted that the inquiries said by the appellants’ solicitors to be necessary in the grounds of appeal had not been suggested by those same solicitors during the review process.
3 See 19.233.
4 [1954] 1 WLR 1489, CA.

19.235 In Cramp v Hastings Borough Council, the Court of Appeal warned that:

‘judges in the county court need to be astute to ensure that evidential material over and above the contents of the housing file and the reviewing officer’s decision is limited to that which is necessary to illuminate the points of law that are to be relied on in the appeal, or the issue of what, if any, relief ought to be granted. An undisciplined approach to the admission of new evidence may lead to the danger that the reviewing officer is found guilty of an error of law for not taking into account evidence that was never before her, notwithstanding the applicant’s opportunity to make representations about the original decision.’

2 At [71] per Brooke LJ.

19.236 If fresh evidence is admitted, it will generally be in the form of witness statements and not oral evidence, so there will be no cross-examination.

Paying for an appeal

19.237 Taking cases to court is not cheap, and an appeal in the county court is no exception. The court fee for issuing the appeal is £140, and the normal rule is that the unsuccessful party will pay the other party’s legal costs, so there is a considerable financial risk. Usually, appeals take a day, or half a day, of court time and require considerable preparation.

1 At the time of writing, although it may increase. This can be waived where a litigant in person can satisfy a disposable capital and monthly income test: Civil Proceedings Fees Order 2008,
19.237 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

SI 2008/1053, art 5 and Sch 2, as amended. The up-to-date figures are at www.justice.gov.uk/courts/fees/.

19.238 Some applicants will qualify for free preliminary advice from a lawyer or legal adviser under the Legal Help scheme. If an appeal is thought to have merit, application can be made for full legal aid (certificate for legal representation) to fund the appeal. Specialist housing solicitors and agencies with Legal Aid Agency (LAA) housing contracts will be able to grant emergency legal aid so that work on an appeal can start quickly. The criteria under which the LAA will grant public funding for homelessness appeals are set out in regs 53–56 of the Civil Legal Aid (Merits Criteria) Regulations. As already noted, the normal rule is that the unsuccessful party will pay the other party’s legal costs.

2. SI 2013/104.
3. See Waltham Forest London Borough Council v Maloba [2007] EWCA Civ 1281, [2008] HLR 26, CA, where the local housing authority argued unsuccessfully that there should be a general practice on HA 1996, s 204 appeals that any order for costs made against a local housing authority should be subject to a stay until after the re-determination of the decision under appeal and any subsequent appeal from that re-determination. If the losing party is in receipt of legal aid, the court will postpone determination of the amount which he or she should pay: Legal Aid Sentencing and Punishment of Offenders Act 2012, s 26.

19.239 It is not unusual for appeals brought either under HA 1996, s 204, or under H(W)A 2014, s 88, to be settled after the appeal has been issued, but before the hearing of the appeal. Usually the local housing authority will agree that the review decision should be quashed and therefore that a new review decision should be made. What should be the normal order as to costs in such circumstances? The principles can be found in R (M) v Croydon London Borough Council. The general rule is that a successful party who obtains all the relief he or she sought, whether by consent or after a contested hearing, is entitled to have his or her costs paid by the unsuccessful party. This general rule applies in judicial review claims and appeals brought under HA 1996, s 204, or H(W)A 2014, s 88 as it does in other areas of civil litigation. Each case turns on its own facts. A case might have an unusual feature which could justify departing from the usual costs order. The Court of Appeal has identified four types of case:

- Case (i): where the claimant has been wholly successful either following a contested hearing or pursuant to a settlement: the claimant should, as the successful party, recover his or her costs unless there are special circumstances;
- Case (ii): the claimant has only succeeded in part, whether following a contested hearing, or pursuant to a settlement: when deciding how to allocate liability for costs, the court will normally consider how reasonable the claimant was in pursuing the unsuccessful part of the claim, how important that part of the claim was compared to the successful part of the claim, and how much the costs were increased as a result of the claimant pursuing the unsuccessful part of the claim; where there has been a trial, the court will be in a reasonably good position to make those findings; where there has been a settlement, the court may be able to form a view as to the appropriate costs orders but 'there is often much to be said for concluding that there is no order for costs'\(^5\);

- Case (iii): where there has been some compromise which does not actually reflect the claimant's claims: the court is often unable to gauge whether there is a successful party and there may be an even more powerful argument that the position should be no order for costs; but it may also be sensible to look at the underlying claims and inquire whether it was tolerably clear who would have won, if the matter had not settled; if it is tolerably clear who would have won, that may strongly support a contention that that party did better out of the settlement, and therefore did win and should be awarded his or her costs\(^6\); and

- Case (iv): where the appeal has become academic as a result of new evidence produced after the review decision, either the local housing authority should recover its costs, or there should be no order for costs, depending on an assessment on whether the local housing authority would have succeeded or not\(^7\).

3. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.240 The Court of Appeal has also observed that parties should be willing to try to agree not only the substantive issues in the case, but also the position on costs. Where a judge cannot fairly and sensibly make a decision on the liability for costs without spending disproportionate time, the default position should be an order that there be no order for costs\(^1\).

1. Which has the effect that each party pays his or her own costs or, if a party is receiving legal aid, the LAA will pay that party’s costs: CPR PD44, para 4.2. For one example of a decision that the costs order should be no order for costs, see Ersus v Redbridge London Borough Council [2016] EWHC 1025 (QB).

19.241 These principles were applied to appeals brought under HA 1996, s 204\(^1\), or under H(W)A 2014, s 88, in Unichi v Southwark London Borough Council\(^2\).

1. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
19.242 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.242 Part of the Court of Appeal’s reasoning in R (M) v Croydon London Borough Council relied on the fact that, in judicial review claims, the claimant will have sent a letter before claim in accordance with the Pre-Action Protocol for Judicial Review. There is no equivalent pre-action protocol for appeals brought under HA 1996, s 204 or H(W)A 2014, s 88. However, advisers could consider sending any draft grounds of appeal to the local housing authority before the appeal has to be issued, so as to give the local housing authority an opportunity to consider the merits of the appeal. Or, if the appeal has to be issued urgently in order to comply with the 21-day deadline, advisers could consider issuing the appeal and asking for a stay so as to provide the local housing authority with an opportunity to consider the grounds of appeal, and the merits of the appeal.

2. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.243 Since December 2013, the Administrative Court has published guidance which applies where parties have settled a judicial review claim, but have been unable to agree the issue of costs'. The Guidance provides for a judge to decide liability for costs on the basis of written submissions from the parties. The Guidance does not directly apply to appeals brought under HA 1996, s 204 or H(W)A 2014, s 88. However, it can be taken to represent best practice in order to avoid accruing legal costs. The Guidance provides that if the parties are able to agree settlement of all issues in the case except for those of costs, they could jointly apply to the court for an order permitting them to file written submissions on the issue of costs and for those submissions to be considered by a judge without holding an oral hearing'.

2. As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3. The practice in the County Court sitting in Central London is for costs to be determined in a short hearing, rather than on the basis of written submissions.

How an appeal is brought

Time limit

19.244 If the appeal is being made against a decision reached on review, the appeal must be brought within 21 days of the appellant being ‘notified’ of the review decision'. The time limit therefore begins to run on the day after the notice of review decision is actually received by the appellant or by his or her agent rather than the date on the review decision letter or the date it was sent’. The last day of the 21-day period is the twenty-first day from the date of receipt, so that if a review decision is received on 4 July, the last day for bringing the appeal is 25 July’.

1. HA 1996, s 204(2); H(W)A 2014, s 88(2).
2. Aadan v Brent London Borough Council (2000) 32 HLR 848, CA at 851 per Chadwick LJ. This is a different calculation to the time limit for receipt of requests for review, where HA
19.245 If the appeal is brought in respect of an original decision made under HA 1996, s 184(3) or notice of assessment made under H(W)A 2014, s 63(1), the appeal must be brought within 21 days of the date on which the review of that decision should have been notified. This time limit will therefore be calculated from the last day of the time limit for the conclusion of the review

As already noted, that will usually be a date eight weeks after the date on which the request for a review was made, meaning that an appeal against an original decision should be brought within 21 days from the end of the eight-week period.

4 Note the different time limits for notification of the review decision for different types of review decisions made by local housing authorities in England, see 19.188–19.193.

Bringing the appeal

19.246 The procedure for the appeal brought under HA 1996, s 204, or under H(W)A 2014, s 88, is governed primarily by CPR Pt 52 and PD52A, PD52B and PD52D, para 28.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6) and 5(11), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.247 An appeal is brought when an Appellant’s Notice (court form N161) is filed at the county court. ‘Filing’ means ‘delivering it, by post or otherwise, to the court office’. The form can be sent by fax or, in certain specified courts, by email or by online form. Although criticised by the Court of Appeal, Practice Directions 5A and 5B specify that, where a fax or email is received after 4pm on a working day, the document sent should not be recorded as ‘filed’ until the next working day. However, documents physically posted through a court’s letterbox after close of business on a working day, but before midnight, are ‘filed’ on that day, and not on the following working day. Where the final day falls on a non-working day, the period in which the form must be filed ends on the next day on which the court office is open.

5 PD5A, para 5.3(6); PD5B, para 4.2.
7 CPR 2.8(5); Aadan v Brent London Borough Council (2000) 32 HLR 848, CA.

19.248 If there is any dispute over the date on which the appellant was notified of the review decision (or as to the date on which the time limit for review expired), the court itself will have to decide the question of the correct date, and go on to decide whether or not the appeal was filed within the 21-day

time limit.\(^1\)

See Bakare v Waltham Forest London Borough Council (1998) December Legal Action, p 27, Bow County Court, where the local housing authority put in evidence as to the method and likely date of delivery and the appellant had no contrary evidence. The court held that he had been notified more than 21 days before the appeal had been filed; Lambeth London Borough Council v Namegembe [2006] EWHC 3608 (Ch), (2007) February Legal Action, p 31, ChD; and the unusual case of Dawkins v Central Bedfordshire Council [2013] EWHC 4757 (QB) (2013) September Legal Action, p 31, QBD. These decisions are made under the county court’s own jurisdiction to apply the Civil Procedure Rules and are different from the prohibition on courts making factual decisions in areas that were the province of the local housing authority’s decision-maker, see 19.232–19.233.

19.249 As already noted\(^1\), notification is treated as having occurred if the decision has been made available at the local housing authority’s office for a reasonable period for collection\(^2\). However, this deeming provision only applies where the review decision has not been sent to the appellant.

\(^1\) See 19.180.

Extending the time limit

19.250 The county court may give permission for an appeal to be brought after the end of the 21-day period if it is satisfied that there was a good reason:\(^1\):

- for the failure to bring the appeal in time; and
- (where permission is sought after the expiry of the deadline for issue) for any delay in applying for permission to extend time.\(^2\)

Permission may be applied for either during the 21-day period, or after it has ended.\(^3\)

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 204(2A); H(W)A 2014, s 88(3).
\(^2\) HA 1996, s 204(2A); H(W)A 2014, s 88(3).
\(^3\) HA 1996, s 204(2A); H(W)A 2014, s 88(3).

19.251 If the appellant is seeking permission to extend time that application should be made in the Appellant’s Notice and should be supported by a witness statement explaining the good reason for the failure to bring the appeal in time and for any delay since the time limit expired.\(^1\)

\(^1\) CPR 52 and PD52B, paras 3.1–3.3.

19.252 The court may give permission to extend time before the expiry of the 21-day period.\(^1\) This provision might be thought helpful where it is appreciated that the time limit is about to expire but an Appellant’s Notice cannot be prepared in time. But if the applicant can manage to lodge an application to extend the time limit, it is difficult to envisage a case in which the applicant (or his or her advisers) could not have filed even a very basic Appellant’s Notice. Indeed, a professional adviser may be in difficulties if no such Appellant’s Notice is filed in time, because it is always possible that a time extension, for which an application is made instead, will be refused.

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 204(2A)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 88(3)(a).
19.253 If the concern is that it is getting late on a working day, and that day is the last day of the 21-day time limit, some comfort can be taken from the Court of Appeal’s decision in Van Aken v Camden London Borough Council<sup>1</sup>. The appellant’s advisers, confronted with the imminent expiry of the 21-day period, should aim to file the notice of appeal by posting it through the letterbox of the court (if one exists) at any time until midnight of that twenty-first day, rather than apply for permission to extend time.

19.254 In Short v Birmingham City Council<sup>1</sup>, the High Court upheld the county court judge’s approach to whether or not to grant permission to appeal out of time. The court should first consider the reasons for delay and only consider the merits of the appeal, and the hardship to the applicant, if there were good reasons for that delay. In Barrett v Southwark London Borough Council<sup>2</sup>, the judge said ‘good reason is a phrase in common parlance, which . . . does not need elaboration’ and that all the circumstances were relevant<sup>3</sup>. Once it had been decided that there was ‘good reason’, permission should be given, unless the appeal is ‘hopeless’<sup>4</sup>. In Peake v Hackney London Borough Council<sup>5</sup>, the High Court upheld a decision of a county court judge to refuse permission. It held that it was not helpful to talk of an objective or subjective test; the court must be satisfied whether there is good reason. Whether a reason or combination of reasons amounts to a good reason is a question of fact, involving a value judgment. The circumstances of the individual applicant may be relevant if there is a link between those characteristics and the failure to bring the appeal in time. The judge should first identify the reasons for the failure to bring the appeal in time and for any delay in applying for permission, and then determine whether or not those reasons are good reasons in the particular case<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> In Barrett v Southwark London Borough Council [2008] EWHC 1568 (Comm), (2008) September Legal Action, p 26, QBD, permission was given to bring an appeal four weeks late, where a profoundly deaf applicant had made diligent attempts to obtain legal advice and had continued to try to find legal representation, even though she had received unfavourable advice.
<sup>7</sup> Peake v Hackney London Borough Council [2013] EWHC 2528 (QB), (2013) September Legal Action, p 31, QBD per Lewis J at [16]–[19]. See Ali & Grover v Ealing London Borough Council (2013) November Legal Action, p 33, Brentford County Court, for an example of a county court judge finding that there was a good reason both for the one day’s delay in filing the notice of appeal and for the delay in making the application to extend time; and see also Ranza v Northern Ireland Housing Executive [2015] NIQB 13, where there was good reason for a delay of three days.

19.255 The Court must consider both limbs of the test before granting permission. In Poorsalehy v Wandsworth London Borough Council<sup>7</sup>, the court found that there was a good reason for the delay of one working day in filing...
19.255 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

the appeal, but that there was no evidence of any reasons for the delay in applying for permission. It followed that the applicant had failed to discharge the burden of explaining to the court the delay in applying for permission. It followed that the applicant had failed to discharge the burden of explaining to the court the delay in applying for permission. It followed that the applicant had failed to discharge the burden of explaining to the court the delay in applying for permission.

2. In that case, the applicant argued that the irresistible inference, given the facts of the case, was that it was his legal representatives who were responsible for the delay in making the application and not him. The High Court was not prepared to draw that inference without evidence. He also found that there was no rule of law that delay by legal representatives would exculpate the applicant and, by inference, always amount to ‘good reason’. Each case must depend on the evidence available on the particular facts. See also Lounis v Newham London Borough Council [2016] EWHC 1857 (QB) where the judge was not wrong in law to refuse to draw an inference, without there being any evidence, that because the applicant had handed the review decision to apparently competent solicitors within the time-limit, incompetence by the solicitors should be inferred.

Procedure

19.256 The Civil Procedure Rules (CPR) and Practice Directions (PD) (particularly CPR 52 and PDs 52A, 52B and 52D) govern the procedure for the county court appeal. The appellant should file and serve the following documents:

- the Appellant’s Notice on form N161 plus two additional copies for the court and a copy for the respondent;
- grounds of appeal attached to the N161;
- a copy of the decision subject to the appeal; and
- proposed case management directions.

1. General procedure is at PD52A. Procedure for county court appeals is at PD52B. Specific requirements for HA 1996, s 204 (as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018), or H(W)A 2014, s 88, appeals are at para 28 of PD52D.
2. See PD52B, para 4.2) and PD52D, para 28.1

19.257 If the appellant has not received the whole of the homelessness file from the local housing authority, then an application should be made in the Appellant’s Notice for a direction requiring the local housing authority (which in the appeal will be described as ‘the respondent’) to disclose it. The application can be made in the proposed case management directions which are filed when the Appellant’s Notice is issued. The case management directions will normally propose that respondent disclose the whole of the homelessness file within a specified time (usually 14 days), that the appellant may amend his or her grounds of appeal, if required, within 14 days of receipt of the disclosure and should file and serve a skeleton argument and any witness statements within the same period, and that the respondent file and serve its skeleton argument and any witness statements 14 days from receipt of the appellant’s skeleton argument.

1. PD52D, para 28.1 and 19.256.
2. See 19.232–19.236 for the limited circumstances when witness statements might be admitted.

19.258 The respondent should consider the proposed case management directions and either agree them or file and serve its own proposed directions.
within 14 days of having been served with the Appellant’s Notice. It should also disclose any documents relevant to the appeal which had not previously been disclosed within the same 14-day period¹.

19.259 As soon as practicable, and in any event within 35 days of the filing of the Appellant’s Notice, the appellant should file an appeal bundle which contains:

- a copy of the Appellant’s Notice;
- a copy of the appellant’s skeleton argument and any skeleton argument filed at that stage by the respondent;
- a copy of the decision subject to the appeal;
- any witness statements; and
- any other relevant documents such as extracts from the homelessness file, if received from the local housing authority, and any relevant correspondence¹.

¹ PD52B, para 6.4. In Cramp v Hastings Borough Council [2005] EWCA Civ 1005, [2005] HLR 48, CA, the Court of Appeal stated that it was ‘thoroughly bad practice to state the barest possible grounds in the original notice of appeal . . . and then to delay formulating and serving very substantial amended grounds of appeal for five months so that they surfaced for the first time less than a week before the appeal hearing’ (Brooke LJ at [72]). It also said that the appeal bundle should be limited to the grounds of appeal, the decision being appealed and only those documents which the appellant reasonably considers necessary to enable the appeal court to reach its decision on the hearing. Documents extraneous to the issues to be considered on appeal must be excluded, and it was quite wrong to photocopy the entire contents of a bulky housing file regardless of whether it was necessary to do so.

19.260 The usual practice is that witness statements need not be filed by either party. If the points of law raised can be determined solely on the contents of the review decision and the relevant parts of the homelessness file, there will be no need for any witness statement by the applicant. If, on the other hand, one of the points of law is that the local housing authority has failed to make all necessary inquiries, it can be helpful for the applicant to make a witness statement in which he or she sets out what inquiries should have been made and, if possible, what the results of those inquiries would have been. If the local housing authority is satisfied that its review decision is correct, there will normally be no need for a witness statement from the reviewing officer or any other officer. Sometimes local housing authorities will want to put in witness statements, usually by the decision-maker, to explain or elucidate the reasons contained in the written decision. The purpose and admissibility of those witness statements (formerly affidavits) was considered in detail by the Court of Appeal in *R v Westminster City Council ex p Ermakov*¹. Where the contents of the witness statement serve to elucidate the reasons contained in the decision letter, they will be admissible. Examples of circumstances in which evidence might elucidate, rather than alter, the original decision were said to include where: ‘an error has been made in transcription or expression, or a word or words inadvertently omitted, or where the language used may be in some way lacking in clarity.’² Where, however, the contents fundamentally alter the reasons in the decision letter, they should not be admitted.

19.260 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

2 R v Westminster City Council ex p Ermakov (1996) 28 HLR 819, [1996] 2 All ER 302, CA at 315H per Hutchison LJ; and see also R v Westminster City Council ex p Khanam (unreported) 9 May 1997, QBD, and Hijazi v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2003] EWCA Civ 692, [2003] HLR 72, CA. In Swords v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government [2007] EWCA Civ 795, [2008] HLR 17, CA, the Court of Appeal approved five reasons for admitting a witness statement into evidence, including “[i]t must, as a matter of common sense, be easier for a decision-maker to secure permission to make a belated assertion that she took into account a factor to which she had not previously referred but gave it no weight than that she gave weight to a factor to which she had not previously referred; for in the former case the lack of previous reference would be inherently less significant”: Wilson LJ at [47].

19.261 In Bellamy v Hounslow London Borough Council\(^2\), the Court of Appeal made some cautionary remarks about the use of witness statements in second appeals\(^2\), which also hold true for first-instance appeals to the county court:

> “Witness statements are a proper vehicle for relevant and admissible evidence going to the issue before the court, and for nothing else. Argument is for advocates. Innuendo has no place at all.”

2 See 19.293–19.303.

19.262 Once the homelessness file has been disclosed, any witness statements and skeleton arguments have been filed, and a bundle of documents has been prepared\(^1\), the appeal will generally be ready for hearing. The hearing itself will consist of oral argument, based on the skeleton arguments. Since the appeal is on a point of law, there is not generally any need for live evidence to be given\(^2\).

19.263 Homelessness appeals may only be heard by a circuit judge, not a district judge\(^1\).

1 CPR Pt 2 and PD2B, para 9.

Powers of the county court on an appeal

19.264 If the court concludes that there has been an error of law, it may confirm, quash or vary the decision which is the subject of the appeal\(^1\). If there is no error of law, it will dismiss the appeal.

1 HA 1996, s 204(3); H(W)A 2014, s 88(4).
Confirming the decision

19.265 The court is only entitled to confirm a decision that contains an error of law in one of two circumstances:

1. if it is satisfied that a properly directed local housing authority, which did not make the same error of law, would inevitably have reached the same decision; or
2. if it is satisfied that the bringing of the appeal was an abuse of process in the sense that bringing the appeal was for practical purposes 'pointless', even though there was some irregularity in the decision appealed against.

The test is one of inevitability. If there is any real possibility of a different conclusion being reached, it is wrong for the court to confirm the decision: Ali and Nessa v Newham London Borough Council [2001] EWCA Civ 73, [2002] HLR 20, CA.

Quashing the decision

19.266 Normally, where there is an error of law, the court will simply quash the decision that has been the subject of the appeal. If a review decision is quashed on appeal, then the review process will not have been concluded because no legally correct review decision has been reached. The reviewing officer will need to re-open the review and the applicant and the local housing authority will need to agree in writing a new deadline for the completion of the review (as the original prescribed time limit will inevitably have expired by this stage).

The local housing authority has applied for permission to bring a second appeal, the Court of Appeal has suggested that both parties should agree that the new review decision should not be notified until the appeal process has been concluded: William v Wandsworth London Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 535, [2006] HLR 42, CA at [42] per Chadwick LJ.

19.267 If the decision quashed on appeal is the original decision, then the local housing authority will have to take a fresh decision, having carried out such further inquiries as it considers necessary. It is by no means inevitable that, following a successful appeal, the new decision reached will be different in effect from the one quashed. In either case, the reviewing officer or the local housing authority must make the fresh decision on the basis of the facts and information as they stand at the date of that new decision, which may be very different from how they stood at the date of the quashed decision or even at the date of the quashing.
19.268 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

Varying the decision

19.268 It is unusual for the court to exercise its power to vary the decision appealed against. It may do so where it is satisfied, on the evidence, that there was only one lawful conclusion for the local housing authority to have reached, or, as Sedley LJ has put it: ‘where the decision was erroneous in law and only a contrary decision was lawfully possible’. In Purewal v Ealing London Borough Council, Sullivan LJ said: ‘[t]he normal consequence of a decision being flawed because of a failure to take into consideration relevant factors is that the decision is quashed and the matter is remitted to the decision taker to reconsider the matter, taking into account the factors which were omitted from the previous, unlawful decision. [Counsel for the local authority] accepts that there may be cases in which the material that the decision taker has not considered is so compelling that it could rationally lead to only one conclusion, and that in such a case the court may vary the decision to give effect to that sole, permissible conclusion.’

3 Purewal v Ealing London Borough Council [2013] EWCA Civ 1579, [2014] HLR 5, CA per Sullivan LJ at [16]. See also Johnston v City of Westminster Council [2015] EWCA Civ 554, [2015] HLR 35, CA, where the Court of Appeal directed itself that a county court was not limited to allowing or dismissing the appeal but may make such order varying the decision as it thought fit per Gloster LJ at [39]. In that case, part of the review decision was varied and the remainder of the decision confirmed.

19.269 In Bond v Leicester City Council, the Court of Appeal held that, had the local housing authority asked itself the right question, it was ‘more likely than not’ that it would have found that the applicant was homeless and the court varied the decision accordingly. In Ekwuru v Westminster City Council, the Court of Appeal held that, where the local housing authority had conceded that three successive statutory review decisions had been wrong in law, and there was no material which would entitle it to reach a conclusion other than that the applicant had not become homeless intentionally, it would exceptionally vary the latest decision rather than quash it.

19.270 In *Tower Hamlets London Borough Council v Deugi*¹, the local housing authority had conceded that its decision that the applicant was not eligible was wrong, and the Court of Appeal held that varying the decision would provide some enduring benefit to the applicant, and so the county court judge was correct to vary it. In *Slater v Lewisham London Borough Council*², the Court of Appeal agreed with the county court judge that there was no real prospect that the local housing authority, acting reasonably and with the benefit of any further inquiries it might make, could conclude that it was reasonable for an offer of accommodation to be accepted, and it upheld the county court judge’s decision to vary a review decision to a finding that the duty to provide accommodation had not been discharged.

19.271 The House of Lords varied a review decision in *Moran v Manchester City Council*³, having found that the applicant could not have become homeless intentionally from a women’s refuge, because, as a matter of law, the refuge in that case had not been reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy⁴.

19.272 It may also be appropriate to use this power where the behaviour of the local housing authority has been open to criticism, eg where it has repeatedly made and then withdrawn defective decisions⁵.

¹ Mohamud v Lambeth London Borough Council (2002) May Legal Action, p 30, Wandsworth County Court. In Wandsworth London Borough Council v Brown [2005] EWCA Civ 907, (2005) Legal Action, p 16, CA, the county court judge varied a decision that the appellant was not ‘vulnerable’, which he held to be perverse, to a decision that he was ‘vulnerable’. The local housing authority was refused permission to bring a second appeal, as no important point of principle was raised; see 19.293.

19.273 The county court does not have any power to make a mandatory order to require that certain steps are taken or procedures are followed, in contrast to the power available to the Administrative Court on judicial review⁶. So, where a county court judge had allowed an appeal and ordered that a further review be conducted by a different reviewing officer, he had exceeded his powers⁷. In any event, there should be no need for any additional order or direction. The statutory scheme makes it tolerably clear what should occur after a decision is confirmed, varied or quashed.

¹ Except where the court is considering an appeal brought under H(W)A 2014, s 88, against a review decision by a local housing authority in Wales that reasonable steps had been taken to help to secure that suitable alternative accommodation would be available for the applicant’s occupation, see 19.275–19.276.

Powers on appeals against review decisions that reasonable steps had been taken to help to secure that suitable alternative accommodation would be available for the applicant's occupation

LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND

19.274 As previously noted, an applicant has the right to request a review of a local housing authority's decision as to what steps it is to take under the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief or HA 1996, s 195(2), prevention duties. It follows that an applicant has the right to appeal on a point of law against any review decision that he or she is dissatisfied with. The question arises as to what order the court can make if the appeal is successful. There are no additional powers provided under these amendments to HA 1996, Pt 7, made by HRA 2017. The judge has the usual powers available to him or her, to confirm, quash or vary the review decision. Essentially if the court considered that reasonable steps had not been, or were not being, taken, he or she could quash the review decision (so that a new review decision would have to be notified) or vary the review decision and set out what reasonable steps should be taken. Unlike the position of appeals brought against review decisions by local housing authorities in Wales, there is no specific provision providing that the 56-day period should start again.

LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN WALES

19.275 As already noted, an applicant to a local housing authority in Wales can request a review of whether reasonable steps were taken by the local housing authority in performance of its duty to help the applicant to secure accommodation if the local housing authority has decided that the duty has come to an end, either because the 56-day period has expired or earlier than 56 days if the local housing authority is satisfied that reasonable steps have been taken to secure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant.

H(W)A 2014, ss 74(3), see 17.97–17.103 and s 85(2).

19.276 If the applicant subsequently appeals against a review decision which decides that reasonable steps had been taken, and the court allows the appeal and decides that reasonable steps had not been taken, the duty in H(W)A 2014, s 73(1), has not come to an end, and a new 56-day period will commence. The court has the power to decide what date that period should start from.\(^1\)

\(^1\) H(W)A 2014, s 87(2).

Accommodation pending appeal

19.277 The local housing authority has a power, but not a duty, to provide accommodation pending the making or determination of a county court appeal. The scope and exercise of the power is detailed in Chapter 16 and Chapter 17.

1 See 16.258–16.277 (England) and 17.135–17.137 (Wales).

19.278 The power is triggered as soon as the period for an appeal starts to run, so the applicant need not actually have lodged an appeal before inviting the local housing authority to provide accommodation (or to continue accommodation). The local housing authority can only exercise its discretion to provide accommodation\(^1\), if it previously owed the appellant one of the following duties to provide accommodation:

- the interim accommodation duty at HA 1996, s 188\(^2\), or H(W)A 2014, s 68;
- the short-term accommodation duty at HA 1996, s 190\(^3\), or H(W)A 2014, ss 68(1) and 69(8);
- (for local housing authorities in England), the interim accommodation duty at HA 1996, s 198\(^4\);
- the interim accommodation duty at HA 1996, s 200\(^5\), or H(W)A 2014, s 82; or
- (for local housing authorities in Wales), H(W)A 2014, s 75 main housing duty.\(^6\)

sonal circumstances, any new information, the consequences for the applicant if accommodation is not secured, the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children, the public sector equality duty and any other relevant considerations.

1 R v Camden London Borough Council ex p Mohammed (1998) 30 HLR 315, QBD.
3 See 16.240–16.246. This power to provide accommodation pending appeal to the county court is not available for local housing authorities in England for use in respect of certain applicants from other EEA states, persons with refugee status from other EEA states, failed asylum-seekers, or people unlawfully present in the UK, unless the local housing authority considers it necessary in order to prevent a breach of rights under the European Convention on Human Rights or European Community law: Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3, para 1, in force from 8 January 2003. For an example of an unsuccessful attempt to challenge a refusal to secure accommodation pending appeal for such a person (with complicated procedural points involved) see R (Kondoyba) v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2011] EWHC 2653 (Admin), (2011) December Legal Action, p 30, Admin Ct.

Appeals against refusal to provide accommodation

19.280 If the local housing authority refuses to provide accommodation pending the determination of the appeal, or decides to provide accommodation only for a limited period, the appellant may appeal to the county court against that decision on a point of law. This is a separate appeal from the main homelessness appeal and, for ease of reference, is referred to by the section number which contains the right to appeal: ‘section 204A’ (or, for local housing authorities in Wales, H(W)A 2014, s 89 appeals).

1 HA 1996, s 204A; H(W)A 2014, s 89.

19.281 The principles to be applied in a HA 1996, s 204A appeal are the same as those applied in HA 1996, s 204 appeals and in judicial review. The HA 1996, s 204A appeal procedure does not apply where the applicant’s HA 1996, s 204 appeal is brought against an original decision under HA 1996, s 204(1)(b) rather than against a review decision.

1 Or H(W)A 2014, s 89.
2 As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6) and 5(11), for applications for homelessness assistance to local housing authorities in England made on or after 3 April 2018.
3 H(W)A 2014, s 88.
4 HA 1996 s 204A(4); H(W)A 2014, s 89(5).
5 See Davis v Watford Borough Council [2018] EWCA Civ 529 and 19.291–19.292. The case was decided under HA 1996, s 204A, as it applies to local housing authorities in England. It would be a matter for the courts whether the same principles apply to H(W)A 2014, 2014, s 89 appeals, for local housing authorities in Wales.

19.282 Prior to 30 September 2002, any challenge to a refusal to provide accommodation pending appeal could only be brought by judicial review and the case law from that period is still instructive. The Court of Appeal in R v Brighton & Hove Council ex p Nacion held that where the local housing authority had followed the guidance in Mohammed, any challenges arguing that the refusal to provide accommodation was wrong in law were likely to be futile, and applications should be strongly discouraged. The appropriate remedy for an appellant would normally be to apply to expedite the county court homelessness appeal, rather than bring judicial review proceedings.

2. (1999) 31 HLR 1095, CA.

19.283 After the HA 1996, s 204A appeal procedure was introduced¹, the Court of Appeal considered the scope of those appeals in *Francis v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council*². In that case, the Court of Appeal applied its previous decision in *Nacion*³ to appeals against the refusal of accommodation pending a homelessness appeal. It held that, unless the court considers that the local housing authority has failed to direct itself in accordance with *Mohammed*⁴, it should not intervene. Where the local housing authority has not properly directed itself, the decision should be quashed and the court should consider whether to exercise its power to order the local housing authority to provide accommodation pending the determination of the appeal⁵. The court should not embark on a review of the merits of the main appeal. The local housing authority is required to consider the applicant’s grounds of appeal, as part of its consideration of the merits of the case, but would not normally be expected to refer to any of the grounds of appeal in its decision letter unless there is some important and striking ground which requires specific comment⁶.

1. By Homelessness Act 2002, s 11, with effect from 30 September 2002. For applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales on or after 27 April 2015, the procedure is at H(W)A 2014, s 89.

19.284 In the light of the pronouncements made in these judicial review and Court of Appeal cases, if the local housing authority has considered the relevant factors and applied them to the appellant’s circumstances, an appeal against the refusal to accommodate pending appeal is unlikely to be successful. That is not to suggest that on a HA 1996, s 204A, or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal in an appropriate case a court would not quash a decision to refuse to accommodate¹. There must be proper consideration of the *Mohammed*² factors and, if appropriate, of the local housing authority’s duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of any children³. Simply referring to them was described in one case as paying only ‘lip-service’, and a refusal to accommodate pending review was quashed⁴.

19.284 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

4 R (Paul-Coker) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2006] EWHC 497 (Admin), [2006] HLR 32. See 16.240–16.246 for detailed discussion of the relevant factors when a local housing authority is considering whether or not to exercise its power to secure accommodation pending determination of any review decision and pending determination of any appeal.

19.285 The HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal is only available in respect of a ‘decision’ not to accommodate pending an appeal. Where a local housing authority has failed altogether to make a decision on a request for accommodation pending appeal, the appropriate procedure is to seek a judicial review of the failure to make a decision. This has been described as a ‘serious weakness’ in the drafting of the section¹.

Procedure

19.286 There is no time limit prescribed in HA 1996, Pt 7¹, or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, for the filing of an Appellant’s Notice in a HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal against a refusal to accommodate pending appeal. The limit is therefore the 21-day period generally applied by the procedure rules to appeals². If possible, the appellant should file one Appellant’s Notice (form N161) containing both the main homelessness appeal and the HA 1996 s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal³. Otherwise, the HA 1996 s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal can be brought on a separate form N161⁴. The appellant should comply with CPR Pt 52 and PDs 52A, 52B and 52D. See 19.256–19.263 for the documents required to be filed and served.

¹ As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
² CPR 52.12(2)(b).
³ PD52D, para 28.1(1).
⁴ PD52D, para 28.2.

19.287 If a HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal is brought, the need for a speedy judicial decision is obvious. The whole point is to provide accommodation urgently. An application can therefore be made for an interim injunction requiring that the local housing authority provide accommodation until the HA 1996, s 204A, or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal is determined. The matters to be considered on the application for an interim injunction would include:

1. the merits of the HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal itself and whether the applicant has a strong prima facie case¹;
2. whether or not the appellant’s ability to pursue the main homelessness appeal would be substantially prejudiced if no interim order was made²; and
3. consideration of the likely consequences to each party of the granting or withholding of interim relief³.

² HA 1996, s 204A(6)(a); H(W)A 2014, s 89(7)(a).

19.288 An application can be made in the Appellant’s Notice for an urgent injunction requiring the local housing authority to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation. If, exceptionally, the court were to make an order to that effect without giving the parties notice of any hearing, the appellant must serve his or her Appellant’s Notice and a copy of the order on the respondent. The court would normally fix a hearing date when it will reconsider whether the order should continue\(^1\).

\(^1\) PD52D, paras 28.3 and 28.4.

19.289 Appeals under HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, can only be heard by a circuit judge\(^1\). The appeal may not be brought after the determination of the main homelessness appeal\(^2\).

\(^1\) CPR Pt 2 and PD2B, para 9.
\(^2\) HA 1996, s 204A(3); H(W)A 2014, s 89(3).

19.290 At the final hearing of the HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal, the court may either confirm or quash the decision made by the local housing authority (refusing accommodation pending the main appeal)\(^1\). Variation is not a possibility. If the court quashes the decision, it may order that the local housing authority provides that accommodation is available for the appellant until the main appeal has been determined, or any earlier specified time. It can only order the local housing authority to provide accommodation if it is satisfied that the appellant’s ability to pursue the main appeal would otherwise be substantially prejudiced\(^2\).

\(^2\) HA 1996, s 204A(5) and (6); H(W)A 2014, s 89(6) and (7). 19.292 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

19.292 The Court of Appeal has held that the interim accommodation appeal process under HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, is not available in these circumstances. Accordingly, any challenge must be brought by judicial review.

Appeal to the Court of Appeal

The test for bringing a second appeal

19.293 Any appeals against orders of the county court determining a main homelessness appeal or a HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal are second appeals and can only be made to the Court of Appeal. Such appeals require permission to appeal. Permission can be given only by the Court of Appeal itself and will only be given if the appeal raises 'an important point of principle or practice', or there is 'some other compelling reason' for the Court of Appeal to hear it. In Uphill v BRB (Residuary) Ltd, the Court of Appeal considered the general principles to be applied when deciding whether to give permission to bring a second appeal.

1 Azimi v Newham London Borough Council (2001) 33 HLR 51, CA. See 19.303–19.305 for the circumstances where an appeal against an order made in HA 1996, s 204 appeal proceedings is to be made to the High Court.
2 CPR 52.7(2).

19.294 It held that permission should only be granted in exceptional cases. When permission was sought under the first limb ('an important point of principle or practice'), it could be granted where such an important point had not yet been determined by a higher court, but would not be granted where the contention was merely that an established point of principle or practice had not been correctly applied. As far as the second limb was concerned ('some other compelling reason'), the starting point was that the prospects of success had to be very high. Even if they were very high, the decision against which the appellant sought permission to appeal had to be inconsistent with the authority of a higher court or tainted with some procedural irregularity leading to unfairness before permission would be given.

1 For an example where permission was refused as there was no important point of principle or practice arising on the appeal, see Selvarajah v Croydon London Borough Council [2014] EWCA Civ 498, (2014) June Legal Action, p 38, CA.
2 Another instance of the Court of Appeal considering whether or not to grant permission to bring a second appeal, outside of the homelessness context, is Esure Insurance Ltd v Direct Line Insurance Ltd plc [2008] EWCA Civ 842, [2009] Bus LR 438, CA, where the complexity of the case and the real prospect of showing that the first-instance judge had incorrectly exercised his appellate function were held to constitute 'compelling reasons' for permitting a second appeal. The fact that an applicant is facing the prospect of street homeless is not an 'other compelling reason' justifying the grant of permission: Selvarajah v Croydon London Borough Council [2014] EWCA Civ 498, (2014) June Legal Action, p 38, CA.

19.295 The Court of Appeal considered the second limb of the test ('some other compelling reason') in Cramp v Hastings Borough Council. It held that there was a good prospect of success on a second appeal because the first-instance judge had appeared to substitute his own view for that of the local housing authority. There was evidence before the Court of Appeal that the extent of inquiries needed to be undertaken by the local housing authority was a matter of great concern to it and had implications for its resources. Those two points together were ‘compelling reasons’ sufficient to justify a second appeal.\(^2\)

1 The permission hearing is at [2005] EWCA Civ 439, CA.

19.296 In Camden London Borough Council v Phillips\(^1\), the Court of Appeal granted the local housing authority permission to appeal (having heard the full appeal in Cramp v Hastings Borough Council, which had been listed for hearing on the same day). It noted that the guidance in Uphill v BRB Residuary Board Ltd\(^2\) was not exhaustive and should not require the Court of Appeal to feel that there is a:

‘fetter on its power to put things right if it has occasion to believe that things are going wrong in an important way in the practical operation of the statutory scheme in Pt 7 of the 1996 Act.’\(^3\)

1 Heard with the full appeal of Cramp v Hastings Borough Council [2005] EWCA Civ 1005, [2005] HLR 48, CA.
3 Brooke LJ at [66].

19.297 The issues in both Camden London Borough Council v Phillips and Cramp v Hastings Borough Council raised an important point of practice. The Court of Appeal noted:

‘a worrying tendency in judges at that level to overlook the fact that it will never be easy for a judge to say that an experienced senior housing officer on a homelessness review, who has considered all the reports readily available, and all the representations made by the applicant’s solicitors, has made an error of law when she considered that it was unnecessary to put in train further detailed inquiries, not suggested by the applicant’s solicitors, before she could properly make a decision on the review. The need to correct that tendency raises an important point of practice.’\(^1\)

1 Brooke LJ at [68].

19.298 In William v Wandsworth London Borough Council\(^1\), the Court of Appeal was concerned with a second appeal which had been brought by the local housing authority. Noting that the local housing authority had made a new review decision between the date of the county court appeal and the date on which permission to bring a second appeal was given, the Court of Appeal criticised the local housing authority’s failure to inform the court that it had carried out a further review as ‘verging on abuse’ and doubted that permission would have been given, had the Court of Appeal been informed that a new review decision had been made. The new review decision had been made because both the applicant’s lawyers and the local housing authority’s lawyers believed that HA 1996, s 202(4) and the regulations required it to be made, once the previous review decision had been quashed by the county court judge. Chadwick LJ described this as an unsatisfactory position and said that:
19.298 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

‘the parties should . . . take the sensible and obvious course of agreeing that performance of the duty imposed on the authority by section 202(4) of the Act should await the outcome of the application [for permission], or the appeal (as the case may be).’

Procedure on a second appeal

19.299 An application for permission to bring a second appeal should be made within the Appellant’s Notice, and must be filed at the Court of Appeal within 21 days of the judgment or order appealed from. The county court does not have the power to grant or refuse permission to appeal, but does have the power to order that the time within which an Appellant’s Notice is to be filed is extended. Applications for permission do not need to be supported by witness statements, but if a witness statement is filed in support of the application for permission, or any other application, ‘fairness requires it to be sent to the intended respondent’ and, if it is the local housing authority which is seeking permission to appeal, it should bear in mind that the other party is likely to be without legal representation at the time and so those preparing a witness statement have a particular responsibility to ensure that it is relevant to the specific question whether permission to appeal should be granted, and that it is not argumentative and so far as practicable not contentious. The respondent is permitted, and indeed encouraged, to file and serve a brief statement of any reasons why permission should be refused. That statement should be filed and served within 14 days of service on the respondent of the appellant’s notice or skeleton argument, whichever is the later document.

1 CPR 52.4. PD52C, paras 14–20 contain the procedure for a second appeal to the Court of Appeal.

2 CPR 52.12(2)(a).

4 PD52C, para 19.1.

19.300 Once permission has been granted, the focus for the Court of Appeal on hearing the appeal will be on errors of law in the local housing authority’s decision that was the original subject of the appeal, rather than confining itself to considering possible errors of law made by the county court judge on hearing the appeal.

Accommodation pending appeal to the Court of Appeal

19.301 The Court of Appeal has no power to order that the local housing authority secure, or continue to secure, accommodation for the applicant.
pending determination of any appeal to the Court of Appeal\(^1\).

\(^1\) Johnson v City of Westminster Council [2013] EWCA Civ 773, [2013] HLR 45, CA

19.302 The local housing authority’s power to provide accommodation for the appellant continues until any second appeal is finally determined, and so it may agree to provide accommodation until the determination of an appeal to the Court of Appeal\(^1\). When making its decision, it should again take into account the factors in R v Camden London Borough Council ex parte Mohammed\(^2\). If the local housing authority refuses to provide accommodation pending an appeal to the Court of Appeal, there is no power under HA 1996, s 204A or H(W)A 2014, s 89, for the county court to entertain an appeal against that refusal. In the absence of such a power, the more straightforward course is for the applicant to challenge by way of judicial review the decision not to provide accommodation pending the second appeal to the Court of Appeal\(^3\). If the Court of Appeal (or Supreme Court in the case of an appeal to the Supreme Court) has granted permission, that will be an additional relevant factor for the local housing authority to consider in deciding whether to exercise its discretion to accommodate pending appeal\(^4\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 204(4)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 88(5)(b).

Appeals from the county court to the High Court

19.303 A decision made on appeal by the county court is a second appeal and appeal will lie to the Court of Appeal\(^1\). However, during the course of a HA 1996, s 204\(^2\) or H(W)A 2014, s 89, appeal, the judge might make decisions which are not, themselves, decisions on appeal. Any appeal against any of those decisions would not be a second appeal and appeal lies to the High Court, not to the Court of Appeal\(^1\).

\(^1\) Access to Justice Act 1999 (Destination of Appeals) Order 2016, SI 2016/917, art 6, see 19.293–19.298.
\(^2\) As amended by HRA 2017, s 4(6), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.304 The procedure for the bringing of an appeal to the High Court is at CPR 52 and PDs 52A – 52B. An appellant’s notice must be filed at the High Court within 21 days of the decision being appealed against, or such longer time as the County Court may have ordered\(^1\). The County Court must normally have been asked for permission to appeal. If the County Court refuses permission, then application can be made to the High Court for permission\(^2\). Permission for appeal may be given only where the Court considers that the appeal would have a real prospect of success or there is some other compelling reason for the appeal to be heard\(^3\). Once permission has been given, the procedural requirements set out at PD 52B apply.

1. CPR 52.12(2).
2. CPR 52.3(a).
3. CPR 52.6(1).

19.305 Decisions made during the course of a HA 1996, s 204\(^1\), or H(W)A 2014, s 89 appeal which are not themselves decisions made on appeal would include:

- a decision made on an application to extend the time for filing the appeal under HA 1996, s 204(2A), or H(W)A 2014, s 88(3)\(^2\); and
- a decision as to the costs of the appeal, whether made without a hearing and on the judge, having received written submissions, or at the end of a hearing\(^3\).

Any appeal against any of these decisions must be made to the High Court.

1. As amended by HRA 2017, ss 4(6) and 5(11), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authority in England on or after 3 April 2018.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

Introduction

19.306 Local housing authority decisions made under HA 1996, Pt 7\(^1\) or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, that do not carry with them a right to request a review can only be challenged (in the courts) in judicial review proceedings.

1. As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.307 Complaints that the applicant has been treated unsatisfactorily, but where no error of law in the actual decision reached is alleged, should be raised within the local housing authority’s internal complaints procedure\(^1\). If the treatment amounts to maladministration, the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman or Public Services Ombudsman for Wales can investigate, once the internal complaints procedure has been exhausted\(^2\).

Procedure

19.308 The procedure for judicial review is set out in the Civil Procedure Rules at CPR 54 and PDs 54A and 54D. Only a short summary of that procedure can be given here. Before the procedure is adopted, it will be expected that any applicant has complied with the Pre-Action Protocol for Judicial review 19.313

19.309 In order to bring a claim by way of judicial review, the applicant must obtain permission from the Administrative Court. The application for permission is first considered on the papers. The local housing authority has an opportunity to put its brief case to the judge on paper in an Acknowledgment of Service. If permission is refused on the papers, the applicant has the right to renew his or her application for permission at an oral hearing, unless the application has been marked as 'totally without merit'.

1 CPR 54.4.
2 Made on claim form N461.
3 Form N462.
4 CPR 54.12(3) and (7).

19.310 Claims should be brought promptly, and in any event within three months of the decision being challenged (although the court does have the discretion to extend time where there is a good reason for the delay). Delay can be a reason in itself for refusing permission. Judicial review is not available, and permission will be refused, if there is an alternative avenue for redress available to the applicant.

1 CPR 54.5(1) and CPR 3.1(2)(a). The parties themselves cannot extend time by agreement: CPR 54.5(2).

19.311 If permission is granted, the local housing authority has the opportunity to put in its own evidence and submissions, and a full hearing will take place.

19.312 If the court finds that the decision was made in breach of the usual administrative law principles, it can:

1. quash the decision and remit the matter back to the local housing authority for reconsideration;
2. make a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to act in a certain way;
3. make a prohibitory order setting out how the local housing authority may not act; or
4. make an injunction.

1 CPR r 54.2.

19.313 Judicial review is a discretionary remedy and, even if the court finds that an error of law was made, it may still decide, in all the circumstances, not to make any order. Situations where the court might decide not to make any order could include:

• where there had been undue delay;
• where it would be pointless to quash a decision because the decision had been completely overtaken by events; or
• where granting a remedy would cause substantial hardship to any person or would be detrimental to good administration.
19.313 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

In addition, the court must refuse to grant relief if it appears to the court to be highly likely that the outcome for the applicant would not have been substantially different if the conduct complained of had not occurred.\(^1\)

19.314 Since 2 October 2000, when the Human Rights Act 1998 came into force, it has also been possible to claim damages for breach of human rights within judicial review proceedings. Judicial review proceedings cannot, however, be brought solely to claim damages.\(^2\)

Obtaining interim remedies

19.315 In many judicial review claims relating to a local housing authority’s decisions under HA 1996, Pt 7, or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, the applicant will have an immediate need for accommodation. The judicial review claim is likely to wait months before a full hearing. Even the application for permission to bring the claim may not be considered for several weeks.\(^1\)

---

\(^1\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

---

19.316 At all times during the progress of the judicial review claim, the Administrative Court has a discretion to grant an interim injunction requiring the local housing authority whose decision is under challenge to accommodate the applicant, and his or her household, until the judicial review claim has been heard or determined.\(^1\) Indeed, in cases of extreme urgency, it is possible to obtain an interim injunction out-of-hours from the duty judge, upon the applicant and his or her legal advisers undertaking to issue the judicial review claim within a specified period (usually less than 24 hours).\(^1\)

---

\(^1\) The power to make an injunction is in CPR 54.2. The Administrative Court’s interim powers are in CPR 25.1(1) and include the power to make an interim injunction (CPR 25.1(1)(a)).

---

19.317 The test that the Administrative Court will apply in considering whether or not to make an interim injunction is three-fold:

1. whether the applicant has a strong prima facie case;\(^1\)
2. the likely consequences to each party of the granting or withholding of interim relief; and
3. the wider public interest.\(^2\)

\(^2\) R v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council ex parte Hammell [1989] 1 QB 518, CA. And see further R (Medical Justice) v Secretary of State for the Home Department.
19.318 Where the application for an interim injunction is made in an emergency, and without notice to the local housing authority, the following principles should be borne in mind:

1. that the granting of an injunction without notice is ‘an exceptional remedy’; and normally appropriate only if the case is genuinely one of emergency or other great urgency;
2. even then, it should normally be possible to give some informal notice to the other party;
3. the claimant applying for an injunction, and his or her legal representatives, are under a heavy duty to make full and frank disclosure of all matters relevant to the claim, whether matters of fact or of law;
4. the duty to make full and frank disclosure includes a duty to make proper inquiries before making the application, so that the claimant, and his or her legal representatives, disclose all the material facts; and
5. proper disclosure means identifying all relevant documents for the judge, taking the judge to the particular passages in those documents, and taking appropriate steps to ensure that the judge appreciates the significance of what he or she is being asked to read, or is being told.

19.319 Legal representatives are also reminded of the importance of complying with the Pre-Action Protocol for Judicial Review, which requires that the claimant’s representatives give notice of the intention to bring judicial review proceedings to the local housing authority’s legal department. Even if the matter is too urgent to comply with the time limits required in the protocol, some warning to the legal department should be given. Legal advisers should also be aware of the guidance given in the immigration case of R (Hamid) v SSHD, stressing the exceptional nature of applications for injunctions made without notice to the other side, and the need for strict compliance with the rules requiring completion of Court forms.

19.320 An interim injunction obtained without notice to the local housing authority will usually contain a provision permitting the local housing authority to apply to vary or discharge the injunction upon a short period of notice to the claimant or his or her legal representatives. Such applications should be considered relatively urgently by the Administrative Court.1

Judicial review as a substitute for a county court appeal

19.321 Where an appeal to the county court is available, it is only in really exceptional circumstances that the Administrative Court will give permission for a judicial review claim to be brought.2 Missing the 21-day deadline for the county court appeal is not generally an exceptional circumstance,3 and particularly so now that the county court has power to extend that deadline.4

19.322 In one case, permission to bring a claim in judicial review was given where there was an arguable error of law and the applicant had unsuccessfully tried to issue a notice of appeal in the county court (but had wrongly made an application within possession proceedings instead). In another case, permission was given, and the judicial review claim succeeded, where the local housing authority had refused to consider fresh information, produced after the review decision, concerning the applicant’s mental health, which was relevant to the decision that he had become homeless intentionally.5

19.323 However, permission was refused to an applicant who had been found to have become homeless intentionally, had then withdrawn his request for a review, made a fresh application and then claimed that the local housing authority had failed to provide him with interim accommodation in accordance with the interim pre-decision duty.6 Likewise, permission will be refused in cases where the applicant seeks to dispute the suitability of accommodation and where a right to a review of suitability is available under the review category at HA 1996, s 202(1)(f), (g), or (h) or H(W)A 2014, s 85(3). An applicant also failed in a judicial review claim where she sought to challenge an original decision which contained inadequate reasons. The Administrative Court held that the proper route to challenge such deficiencies was by requesting a review and subsequently appealing to the county court.7

2 As amended and inserted by HRA 2017, s 9, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018, see 19.59–19.69.

Judicial review where there can be no county court appeal

19.324 There may be several reasons why a county court appeal is not available and the applicant may need to bring a claim for judicial review. They include:

1. where he or she wishes to challenge a decision which does not carry the right to request a statutory review;
2. if the local housing authority fails to comply with its acknowledged statutory duty, a judicial review claim can be brought for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to comply; or
3. if the local housing authority simply fails to take a decision on a request or application made to it, a judicial review claim can be brought for a mandatory order requiring the local housing authority to make the decision.

19.325 Subjects for judicial review can therefore include:

1. a local housing authority refusing to accept an application under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2;
2. a local housing authority’s failure to make the necessary inquiries or to notify the applicant of the decision on those inquiries;
3. a local housing authority’s refusal to secure interim accommodation pending an initial decision;
4. a local housing authority’s decision not to secure accommodation pending a decision on review;
5. a local housing authority’s decision not to secure interim accommodation pending an appeal under HA 1996, 204(1)(b) or H(W)A 2014, s 89(1)(b);
6. for applicants to local housing authorities in England, any dispute as to whether or not accommodation provided under an interim duty is suitable;
7. any failure to provide suitable accommodation in discharge of any of its statutory duties (where the local housing authority either fails to provide accommodation at all or provides accommodation that it is agreed is unsuitable for the needs of the applicant and his or her household);
8. any dispute as to the length of the period that would provide an applicant who has a priority need and who had become homeless intentionally with ‘a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation’;
9. for applicants to local housing authorities in England, any challenge to the contents of the assessment of the applicant’s case;
10. for applicants to local housing authorities in England, any challenge to the steps recorded in the personal housing plan as required to be taken by the applicant;
19.325 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

(11) for applicants to local housing authorities in England, any decision to warn the applicant of its opinion that he or she has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take any step required or agreed;

(12) any refusal to consider whether or not the conditions are met for the referral of the applicant’s case to another local housing authority;

(13) any decision not to allow the applicant to request a review outside the 21-day period; and

(14) any failure to complete a statutory review or to notify the applicant of the decision on review.

Judicial review 19.328

19.326 The last of these provides a good example of the usefulness of judicial review in the operation of HA 1996, Pt 7 and of H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Where an applicant has requested a review, but the local housing authority has failed to complete the review or to notify him or her of the review decision, the applicant can appeal to the county court if there was an error of law in the original decision. However, if there is no error of law in the original decision, but the applicant wants his or her case reconsidered, or has provided new information, then an appeal to the county court will not be the appropriate course. The applicant’s remedy in those circumstances is to apply for a mandatory order in judicial review proceedings requiring the local housing authority to complete the review and notify him or her of the review decision.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 204(1)(b); H(W)A 2014, s 88(1)(b), see 19.196–19.197.

19.327 Judicial review may also be available where the applicant is challenging the local housing authority’s policy on some aspect of HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. Although the court retains a discretion to consider disputes on policy matters that have become academic for the individual applicant (because matters have moved on, or the local housing authority has conceded the applicant’s claim), it should only do so if that would be in the public interest and the appropriate procedural steps have been taken.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 For example, R (Khatun) v Newham London Borough Council [2004] EWCA Civ 55, [2004] HLR 4, CA, where the applicants challenged the local housing authority’s policy that offers of accommodation made under HA 1996, s 193 had to be accepted or rejected before they were viewed; R (Calgin) v Enfield London Borough Council [2005] EWHC 1716 (Admin), [2006] HLR 4, CA, where the challenge was to the local housing authority’s policy of securing accommodation outside its district; and Ali & others v Birmingham City Council [2009] UKHL 36, [2009] 1 WLR 1506, HL, where the challenge was to the local housing authority’s policy of securing accommodation for the applicants under the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty in accommodation which was not reasonable to continue to occupy.

3 R (Tshikangwa) v Newham London Borough Council (2001) The Times, April 27, QBD. See R (Morris) v Westminster City Council [2004] EWHC 1199 (Admin) for an example of permission to continue a claim for judicial review which had become academic. The substantive point was subsequently decided by the Court of Appeal in R (Morris) v Westminster City Council [2005] EWCA Civ 1184, [2006] HLR 8, CA.

Claims for damages

19.328 If an applicant for accommodation under HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is not dealt with properly by a local housing authority, he or she may suffer considerable personal loss and hardship. Ordinarily, the law would provide a right to recompense through an award of financial compensation or damages at the suit of the individual who had suffered loss. That is not the case for applicants seeking assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7 or under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2.
19.328 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.329 The House of Lords decision in O’Rourke v Camden London Borough Council1 established that damages were not available at common law for a local housing authority’s breach of its statutory duty owed to a homeless person. The local housing authority, when dealing with an application for homelessness assistance, is implementing a scheme of social welfare that is intended to confer benefits at public expense on the grounds of public policy. To implement the scheme involves the local housing authority making discretionary decisions as to whether to provide accommodation and the type of accommodation to be provided. The House of Lords decided that it was unlikely that Parliament had intended that any errors of judgment made by the local housing authority in those circumstances would give rise to an obligation to make financial reparation.

1 O’Rourke v Camden London Borough Council [1998] AC 188, HL.

19.330 Since 2 October 2000, it has been possible for damages to be claimed for breach of an applicant’s human rights where the court is satisfied that the award is necessary to afford ‘just satisfaction’ to the applicant1. This has been used to explore possible compensation claims in recent years. A failure to provide suitable accommodation does not breach the applicant’s right to respect for his or her home2. It might, in particular circumstances, breach the applicant’s right to respect for his or her family or private life under Art 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights3. Damages should be assessed on the basis that they should not be a lesser amount than damages that would be awarded for a claim in tort, and using the amount of compensation awarded by the Local Government Ombudsmen as a reference point4.

19.331 The Court of Appeal in Anufrijeva v Southwark London Borough Council5 considered the circumstances in which damages should be awarded for breach of an applicant’s rights under Art 8. In considering the extent to which Art 8(1) imposed a positive obligation on states to provide public assistance, it concluded that generally a failure to provide welfare support was unlikely to infringe a single applicant’s rights under Art 8 if it did not also infringe his or her rights under Art 3 (not to be subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment). However, where families were involved, the applicant’s right to respect for his or her family life might be more easily infringed.
Before a local housing authority could be held to have failed to respect an applicant’s private or family life, there had to be an element of culpability, involving at the very least knowledge by the local housing authority that the applicant’s private or family life was at risk. For maladministration to infringe an applicant’s Art 8 rights, the consequences (that the maladministration would lead to lack of respect for the applicant’s private or family life) must be serious and foreseeable.1 Damages would be awarded, taking into account Judicial Studies Board Guidelines, Criminal Injuries Compensation awards, and awards by the Parliamentary and Local Government Ombudsmen for maladministration.

2 See also R (McDonagh) v Enfield London Borough Council [2018] EWHC 1287 (Admin), where an Administrative Court judge decided that Art 8 had not been infringed when a mother and her disabled child were living in a property where the child could not access the bathroom or toilet.

19.332 In a case relating to prisoners’ rights, the House of Lords considered generally the principles under which damages for breach of Convention rights should be awarded. It held that in many cases, the finding that there had been a violation should be ‘just satisfaction’ for the applicant. Where the finding in itself was not sufficient for there to be ‘just satisfaction’, damages should be assessed in accordance with the amounts awarded by the European Court of Human Rights1.

COMPLAINTS

Local complaints procedures

19.333 Every local housing authority will have a procedure for entertaining complaints made by those using its services, including the homeless. A procedure leaflet and complaint form should be readily available on request. This process will enable the HA 1996, Pt 71 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, applicant to log concerns which do not attack the merits of local housing authority decisions, but rather raise matters such as staff (mis)conduct, unfair treatment, delay, incompetence and the like.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.334 Every local housing authority will have designated one of its most senior officials as the statutory monitoring officer1. That person is responsible for ensuring that the local housing authority’s services are administered lawfully and without maladministration. Advisers assisting those who have been poorly dealt with under HA 1996, Pt 72, or H(W)A 2014, Part 2, should direct their complaints to the monitoring officer. For example, in one case a local housing authority reached an incorrect decision and resisted an appeal which had overwhelming merit. On receipt of a complaint from the trial judge, the local monitoring officer engaged an independent firm of solicitors to scrutinise what had gone wrong. As a result of their report, procedures were changed and the complainant received compensation\(^3\).
19.334 Reviewing and Appealing Homelessness Decisions

\(^1\) Local Government and Housing Act 1989, ss 5 and 5A.
\(^2\) As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

19.335 Every local housing authority has a specific power to pay compensation, or provide some other suitable remedy, to any complainant who has been adversely affected by council action or inaction which may amount to maladministration\(^1\).

\(^1\) See Local Government Act 2000, s 92.

Complaints to the Ombudsmen

19.336 Complaints can be made to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman (or Public Services Ombudsman for Wales), where it is alleged that the applicant has been subject to maladministration\(^1\). The complaint can be made informally, but the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman’s website publishes useful information as to how to complain.

19.337 A complaint to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman must be made within 12 months of the maladministration complained of, and the applicant should first complain through the local housing authority’s internal complaints procedure. If the applicant has not made an internal complaint before complaining to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman, the Ombudsman will refer the complaint to the local housing authority’s internal complaints procedure before investigating it.

\(^1\) See 19.333–19.336.

19.338 The Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman has the power to make recommendations, if he or she concludes that maladministration has occurred, and can recommend that the local housing authority compensate the applicant. The current rate for the ‘distress’ element alone in homelessness cases is in the general range of £500–£2000\(^1\).

19.339 Reports of individual investigations by the Ombudsmen can be found at the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman’s website and many are noted in the monthly article Recent Developments in Housing Law in Legal Action. Since April 2013, the Ombudsmen have published on their website the text of all complaints made to them in homelessness cases.

19.340 For complaints involving local housing authorities in Wales, applicants should, having exhausted the local housing authority’s internal complaints procedure, seek an investigation by the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales. In 2006, the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales produced a comprehensive report on the practices of local housing authorities in Wales relating to homelessness\footnote{Housing Allocations and Homelessness, a special report by the Local Government Ombudsman for Wales (Public Services Ombudsman for Wales, 2006), Sec 7.26.} and the Ombudsman has since published many investigation reports on homelessness complaints.

INTRODUCTION

20.1 The homelessness provisions in Housing Act 1996 (HA 1996), Pt 7¹ and Housing (Wales) Act 2014, (H(W)A 2014), are intended to ensure that local housing authorities provide short-term accommodation for those in the most urgent housing need. The allocation provisions in HA 1996, Pt 6 are intended to facilitate the sensible distribution of longer-term homes in social housing by local housing authorities. Taken together, the objective of HA 1996, Pts 6 and 7², and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, is to ensure that local housing authorities can help most people in housing need by providing them with temporary accommodation and/or by helping them find alternative homes.

² As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

20.2 Although HA 1996, Pts 6 and 7¹, and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, are the primary statutory means by which local authorities meet housing need, they are not the only statutory provisions that allow local authorities to help with accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

20.3 This chapter focuses on help that local authorities (both local housing authorities and other authorities) can, and in some cases must, give to those needing accommodation, either by the local authorities providing accommodation themselves, or by helping applicants to find it. Initially, the chapter outlines the general power to help (available in almost all cases) before turning separately to consider the special powers and duties that apply, in turn, to adults, young people and children, first in England and then in Wales. These powers and duties have been subject to considerable change in recent years. In England, the relevant provisions of the National Assistance Act 1948 have been replaced by the Care Act 2014 which came into force on 1 April 2015. While in Wales, the relevant provisions of both the National Assistance Act 1948 and the Children Act 1989 have been replaced by the Social Services and Well-being (Wales) Act 2014 which came into force on 6 April 2016. Consequently, this chapter will consider in turn the law in England and then in Wales, under these statutes. The chapter concludes with a brief review of the duties to provide accommodation (in both England and Wales) under the Mental Health Act 1983 and the duties to accommodate those displaced from their homes in emergencies, in other circumstances of involuntary displacement, and under the Human Rights Act 1998.

20.4 This chapter cannot, however, cover all the help available to meet housing need. Apart from the powers and duties reviewed here, both central and local government departments have developed other arrangements to assist people in housing need. Central government’s housing policy in England is the responsibility of the Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government (MHCLG). In Wales, the Welsh Government has responsibility for housing policy. Those in need of accommodation can also apply directly to other social sector providers such as private registered providers in England or registered social landlords in Wales, charitable trusts and co-operatives, and to private landlords. For those on low incomes wishing to become tenants, housing benefit or, latterly, universal credit is available to help with the cost of renting. On a more limited basis, the cost of mortgage interest can be claimed through the income support scheme, so that the poorest owner-occupiers can remain in their homes, and there are several schemes to assist those on low incomes with house purchase. There is also a wholly separate statutory scheme that provides accommodation for individuals seeking asylum in the UK. It is not possible to set out here the details of all these different arrangements. Rather, this chapter concentrates on the powers and duties of local authorities to provide accommodation directly, or secure the provision of accommodation.

2 There have been considerable changes to the availability and amount of housing benefit in recent years and prospective tenants should always obtain a pre-tenancy determination which will inform them how much housing benefit they will be entitled to.

3 Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, Pt 6, which set up the scheme formerly known as the National Asylum Support Service (NASS), now operated by the Home Office. The extent of that scheme is outside the scope of this book, except in so far as there is an interplay with statutory powers and duties exercised by local housing authorities. A detailed guide can be found in Walker, Lawrence and Gellner's Benefits for Migrants Handbook (CPAG, 9th edn, 2017). Note that there are outstanding amendments to this scheme contained in the Immigration Act 2016. It is not clear if or when the Home Office intends to bring these amendments into force.

GENERAL POWER FOR LOCAL AUTHORITIES TO HELP WITH ACCOMMODATION

20.5 Because they are statutory bodies, local authorities can only undertake functions conferred on them by legislation. The legislative provision concerned with accommodation has developed incrementally for over a century. This has produced a veritable hotchpotch of powers and duties enabling local authorities to give help with housing and other social needs, including the provisions of what are now HA 1996, Pts 6 and 71 and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2. However, for cases falling outside the major provisions of those Parts, a local authority would have to scrabble about to identify some other discrete source of statutory power before it could know whether, when and how it could help to provide accommodation.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

20.6 Parliament adopted a wholly new approach when it enacted the Local Government Act 2000 (LGA 2000). This gave local authorities in both England and Wales wide-ranging statutory powers to meet local social needs, expressed as a power to promote economic, social and environmental ‘well-being’. The UK government’s guidance suggested that this general power in LGA 2000, s 2, should be seen as a ‘power of first resort’ which could be ‘wide ranging’ and would lead to the abandonment of the ‘traditionally cautious approach’.

1 Local Government Act 2000, s 2.

2 Power to promote or improve economic, social or environmental well-being (ODPM Guidance, 2000), Chapter 1, paras 6–7 and 10.

20.7 Since 4 April 2012, as a result of amendment by the Localism Act 2011, this power has only been available to local authorities in Wales1. In England, it has been replaced by the more limited (though still general) power under the Localism Act 2011, s 1, which endows local authorities in England with the power to do anything which individuals generally may do.

2 Localism Act 2011, s 1(1).

Wales

20.8 An individual who needs accommodation (or aid with obtaining accommodation), and is unable or unwilling to obtain help through HA 1996, Pt 7 or H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, can ask any local authority in Wales (including a local housing authority) to provide assistance under the general power in LGA 2000, s 2. There is no prescribed application process governing the request for help (no statutory form and not even a requirement that an application be made in writing). However, it makes good sense for any request for help to include a reference to the statutory provision.

1 As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

20.9 Under LGA 2000, s 2, local authorities in Wales have the power to do ‘anything’ that they consider is likely to achieve the improvement or promotion of the ‘social well-being’ of their area1. That includes ‘anything’ for the benefit of, or in relation to, any person resident in, or simply present in, the local authority’s area2.

1 LGA 2000, s 2(1)(b).
2 LGA 2000, s 2(2)(b).

20.10 To put the scope for assistance with housing beyond doubt, LGA 2000, specifically provides that the power includes a power to give ‘financial assistance to any person’1 (so as to enable that person to find his or her own accommodation) and a power to provide ‘accommodation to any person’2.

1 LGA 2000, s 2(4)(b).
2 LGA 2000, s 2(4)(f).

20.11 Local authorities in Wales can therefore be asked to exercise this power in order to provide accommodation either directly or indirectly, or to assist with financial help in obtaining accommodation, eg with the costs of rental deposits or rent in advance, etc. In R (J) v Enfield London Borough Council3, the court found that the power under LGA 2000, s 2 permitted the local authority to help with payments so that a family could obtain accommodation. The power has also been used to offer financial assistance for travel arrangements to an applicant who could not afford to fund those travel arrangements4. The power is by no means restricted to local housing authorities – others (eg county councils and local councils) have equal access to the power5.

2 R (Grant) v Lambeth LBC [2004] EWCA Civ 1171, [2005] HLR 27, CA.
3 LGA 2000, s 1, as amended by Local Government and Public Involvement in Health Act 2002, s 77, defines ‘local authority’.

20.12 It must be emphasised that LGA 2000, s 2 contains only a power and not a duty. A local authority in Wales cannot be compelled to provide help under this section, save where the exercise of the power is necessary in order to avoid a breach of a person’s human rights contrary to Human Rights Act 1998 (HRA 1998), s 6. The LGA 2000 contains no mechanism for statutory review or appeal against decisions about whether to exercise the power or how to exercise it. Nor does it provide any quality criteria, such as a requirement that any accommodation provided must be reasonable or suitable.
General power for local authorities to help with accommodation 20.15

1 See 20.110–20.123.

20.13 Anyone disappointed by the refusal to exercise the power, or a decision to exercise it in a particular way, can invoke the local authority’s own complaints procedure and, if still dissatisfied, complain to the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales.

Alternatively, if the local authority is behaving irrationally, or in some other way unlawfully, a challenge could be brought in judicial review proceedings.

20.14 However, there is an important qualification. Local authorities cannot use LGA 2000, s 2 to do anything that they are prevented from doing by a prohibition, restriction or limitation contained in some other enactment. So, for example, a local housing authority in Wales cannot use the power to allocate an individual a secure tenancy if such an allocation would be outside the terms of the local housing authority’s own allocation scheme, because to do so would breach a statutory prohibition. Likewise, the power cannot be used by a local authority in Wales to assist with housing (or with the costs of housing) for an adult or child who is barred from help with accommodation under the Social Services and Well-being (Wales) Act 2014.

1 LGA 2000, s 3(1).
2 The prohibition in HA 1996, s 167(8).

England

20.15 On 4 April 2012, the power under LGA 2000, s 2 was replaced in England by the more limited (though still general) power under the Localism Act 2011, s 1, which endows local authorities in England with the power to do anything which individuals generally may do. Building on the approach in LGA 2000, s 2, local authorities cannot use Localism Act 2011, s 1 to do anything:

• which the local authority is unable to do by virtue of a prohibition, restriction or other limitation contained in an enactment pre-dating the Localism Act 2011;
20.15 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

- which the local authority is unable to do by virtue of a prohibition, restriction or other limitation contained in an enactment post-dating the Localism Act 2011 which excludes the use of the general power, excludes the use of all of the local authority’s powers, or excludes the use of all of the local authority’s powers with named exceptions that do not include the general power.\(^1\)

1 Localism Act 2011, s 1(1).
2 Localism Act 2011, s 2(2).

20.16 By way of illustration, the High Court held in R(MK) v Barking and Dagenham London Borough Council,\(^1\) that a local authority had no power under Localism Act 2011, s 1, to accommodate a young adult, who had overstayed in the UK illegally, with her aunt and cousins. Accommodation could not have been provided to the entire extended family under the Asylum Act 1999 or the Children Act 1989. So to have provided her with accommodation with her family in these circumstances would have been to circumvent those statutory schemes.

20.17 In contrast, in R (GS) v Camden London Borough Council,\(^1\) the High Court held that the provision of accommodation was necessary under the Localism Act, s 1 in order to avoid a breach of European Convention on Human Rights, Art 3\(^2\) in respect of a homeless Swiss national who suffered from physical and mental health problems (and was unable to work as a result) who was ineligible for support under the Care Act 2014\(^3\).

2 See 20.113–20.118.

20.18 The different outcome in these two cases turned on the differing application of the the limitation contained in Localism Act 2011, s 2(2) to the Children Act 1989 and the Care Act 2014 respectively\(^1\). In broad terms where an enactment pre-dating the Localism Act 2011 does not allow a local authority to act in a certain way, then the general power may not be used to circumvent that restriction. But, for enactments that post-date the Localism Act, unless the enactment specifically rules out the use of the general power, then it remains available.

Adults

Powers and duties under the Care Act 2014

20.19 Implementing the recommendations of the Law Commission report on Adult Social Care, the powers and duties to provide accommodation under the National Assistance Act 1948, s 21 (together with a host of other statutory provisions governing adult social care) have been consolidated and modernised to produce the Care Act 2014 (CA 2014). The CA 2014 came into force on 1 April 2015. The CA 2014 is a comprehensive and detailed piece of legislation enacting wide-ranging reforms across the field of adult social care. What follows is no more than a basic overview of those functions within the CA 2014 under which vulnerable adults can access accommodation, and how they can go about doing so. The statutory provisions referred to below should be read in conjunction with the relevant passages of the Care and Support Statutory Guidance (the Guidance).

1 Law Com 326, HC 941, May 2011.
4 For further reading see T Spencer-Lane Care Act Manual (1st edn, Sweet and Maxwell 2014).

The power/duty to provide accommodation

20.20 The duty to provide accommodation, along with a range of other services, is contained in CA 2014, s 18. Under CA 2014, s 18(1) and (5) a local authority is required to provide ‘care and support’ to an adult, which may include accommodation, if:

- he or she is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area, or is present in its area but of no settled residence; and
- he or she has a need for care and support which meets the eligibility criteria; and
- he or she meets the detailed financial criteria set out in CA 2014, Pt 1.

1 CA 2014, s 8.
2 CA 2014, s 18.

Ordinary residence

20.21 Whether a person is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area is to be determined in accordance with CA 2014, s 39. This section does not seek to define the term ‘ordinary residence’ but provides that a person will be deemed to be ordinarily resident in certain circumstances, such as where he or she is provided with accommodation under the Mental Health Act 1983,
20.21 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

s 117¹. The prior case law on ordinary residence under National Assistance Act 1948, Pt 3 will remain applicable outside of the particular scenarios dealt with in CA 2014, s 39².

² See R (Cornwall Council) v Secretary of State for Health [2015] UKSC 46, [2016] AC 137, SC on how to determine ordinary residence. Although that was a case concerning ordinary residence under NAA 1948, Lord Carnwath at [38] indicated that the same approach would apply under the Care Act 2014.

A need for care and support

20.22 Whether a person has a need for care and support which meets the eligibility criteria is to be determined in accordance with CA 2014, s 13. Needs are deemed to meet the eligibility criteria if they are of a description specified in regulations made under CA 2014, s 13(7) and (8), or form part of a combination of needs described in the regulations¹. The relevant regulations are the Care and Support (Eligibility Criteria) Regulations 2015². The regulations provide that an adult’s needs will meet the eligibility criteria if:

• the adult’s needs arise from or are related to a physical or mental impairment or illness; and
• as a result of the adult’s needs the adult is unable to achieve two or more specified outcomes; and
• as a consequence there is, or is likely to be, a significant impact on the adult’s well-being³.

As to the meaning of ‘need’, Morris J, in the case of R (Luke Davey) v Oxfordshire County Council⁴ explained that the term:

‘... denotes something more than merely “want” but falls far short of “cannot survive without”. The words “are in need of”, refers to present needs and not the future. The duty should not be extended to a person who does not currently satisfy a requirement simply because he will or may do so in the future.’⁵

² Care and Support (Eligibility Criteria) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/315.
³ SI 2015/315, reg 2(1).

20.23 The specified outcomes are:

• managing and maintaining nutrition;
• maintaining personal hygiene;
• managing toilet needs;
• being appropriately clothed;
• being able to make use of the adult’s home safely;
• maintaining a habitable home environment;
• developing and maintaining family or other personal relationships;
• accessing and engaging in work, training, education or volunteering;
• making use of necessary facilities or services in the local community including public transport, and recreational facilities or services; and
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: England 20.26

20.24 In this context an adult is to be regarded as being ‘unable to achieve an outcome’ if he or she:

- is unable to achieve it without assistance;
- is able to achieve it without assistance but doing so causes the adult significant pain, distress or anxiety;
- is able to achieve it without assistance but doing so endangers or is likely to endanger the health or safety of the adult, or of others; or
- is able to achieve it without assistance but takes significantly longer to do so than would normally be expected.

As to the meaning of the word ‘significant’, the Guidance explains that:

The term ‘significant’ is not defined by the regulations, and must therefore be understood to have its everyday meaning. Local authorities will have to consider whether the adult’s needs and their consequent inability to achieve the relevant outcomes will have an important, consequential effect on their daily lives, their independence and their wellbeing.

Financial eligibility

20.25 Whether a person meets the financial criteria for care and support under either CA 2014, s 18(1) or (5) is calculated in accordance with CA 2014, ss 14–18 and the Care and Support (Charging and Assessment of Resources) Regulations 2014. The detail of the financial eligibility criteria is beyond the scope of this book.

The duty to meet eligible needs

20.26 Where a person who is ordinarily resident has a need for care and support for which he or she is financially eligible, a local authority will be required to meet those of his or her needs for care and support which satisfy the eligibility criteria. But the question of how to meet those needs is a matter for the local authority. It follows that if a person requires accommodation in order to meet a need for care and support which satisfies the eligibility criteria, the local authority must secure accommodation for him or her, either by providing accommodation itself, by arranging for another to provide it or by making direct payments to the person in order for him or her to pay for it. In R (SG) v Haringey London Borough Council (the first case relying on the accommodation provisions under CA 2014), the judge took the view that a local authority would be compelled to provide accommodation, where the care and support needed were of a type normally provided in the home, and would be ‘effectively useless’ without the provision of accommodation. On the other hand, if a person has a need for care and support which does not meet the...
20.26 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities eligibility criteria, or if the local authority can meet his or her needs otherwise than by the provision of accommodation, the local authority will not be required to secure accommodation. In R (GS) v Camden LBC\(^6\), Peter Marquand QC, sitting as a deputy High Court judge, held that a need for accommodation by itself does not constitute a need for care and support.

1 CA 2014, s 18(1) or (5).
2 CA 2014, s 8.
3 CA 2014, s 8(2).
5 Following the approach taken in respect of National Assistance Act 1948, s 21, by the Supreme Court in R (SL) v Westminster City Council [2013] UKSC 27, [2013] 1 WLR 1445, SC.

20.27 Where the person has a need for care and support which the local authority is not required to meet under CA 2014, s 18, the local authority retains a power to meet that need, so long as the person in question is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area, or is present in its area but of no settled residence\(^1\). A vulnerable\(^2\) homeless person without accommodation who does not meet the CA 2014 eligibility criteria might consider requesting that the local authority exercise its discretion to accommodate him or her in any event.

1 CA 2014, s 19(1).
2 Used here in the non-technical sense, in contrast to\(^3\) Chapter 12.

20.28 The powers and duties under CA 2014, ss 18–19 are residual. That is, a local authority is not permitted to do anything under these sections which it is required to do under the Housing Act 1996 or the National Health Service Act 2006 save, in the latter case, where the provision of care and support under CA 2014, ss 18–19 is merely incidental to the provision of health services by the NHS\(^4\).

1 CA 2014, ss 22 and 23.

ASSESSMENT AND CARE PLANNING

20.29 The duty to assess a person’s needs for care and support under CA 2014, Pt 1 is contained in CA 2014, s 9. The duty will arise where ‘it appears’ to the local authority that the person ‘may have needs for care and support’\(^1\). That is a low threshold. In urgent cases, the local authority has a discretion to provide services while the assessment is being carried out, irrespective of whether the person is ordinarily resident in its area\(^2\).

2 CA 2014, s 19(3).

20.30 The assessment should be carried out in accordance with the requirements set out in CA 2014, s 9 and regulations made by the Secretary of State under CA 2014, s 12. The relevant regulations are the Care and Support (Assessment) Regulations 2014\(^4\). The assessment of children who are likely to have a need for care and support after becoming 18 is governed by CA 2014,
There is no fixed time period in which the assessment must be completed. Rather it should be undertaken over a reasonable and appropriate timescale.\(^3\)

3 Guidance, para 6.29.

20.31 There are certain general requirements set out in the Care and Support (Assessment) Regulations 2014\(^4\) with which a lawful assessment must comply. For example, an assessment must be carried out in a way that is ‘appropriate and proportionate to the needs and circumstances of the person to whom it relates’ and in carrying out the assessment, a local authority must have regard to the wishes and preferences of that person. A lawful assessment should also expressly address the well-being principle.\(^4\) A failure to carry out an assessment, if the threshold is made out, is a breach of the local authority’s statutory duty. It can be enforced by bringing a claim by way of judicial review seeking a mandatory order requiring the local authority to carry out an assessment.\(^5\)

1 Care and Support (Assessment) Regulations 2014, SI 2014/2827.
3 Care and Support (Assessment) Regulations 2014, SI 2014/2827, reg 3(1) and (2).

20.32 The duty to assess is not confined to the local authority in whose area the person is ordinarily resident. Whenever a person presents to a local authority and it appears that the person may have a need for care and support, the duty to assess will arise. However, since the duty to provide care and support under CA 2014, s 18 will only be owed by the local authority in whose area the person is ordinarily resident he or she would be well advised to direct his or her application to that local authority. Any dispute as to which local authority owes the duty to assess should be decided by the Secretary of State for Health.\(^1\)

1 CA 2014, s 9(1).
2 Save in those cases where the person has no settled residence (CA 2014, s 18(1)).
3 CA 2014, s 40.

20.33 Upon completion of the assessment, if the local authority concludes that it is required to provide care and support pursuant to CA 2014, s 18, it must prepare a care and support plan. The plan must meet the requirements set out in CA 2014, s 25. It should be completed within a reasonable period and kept under review.\(^1\)

The well-being principle

20.34 The powers and duties outlined at 20.19–20.33 are all subject to the general duty under CA 2014, s 1 to promote the person’s well-being. ‘Well-being’ is defined in CA 2014, s 1(2) and includes such matters as ‘well-being so far as relating to . . . the suitability of living accommodation.’ The well-being principle has been described as ‘the most important section of the Act’ and the Guidance makes clear that ‘housing has a vital role to play’ in securing a person’s well-being.

1 See further Guidance, para 4.91.
3 Guidance, para 15.58.

Persons from abroad

20.35 A person subject to immigration control who is excluded from benefits, and whose need for care and support has arisen solely because of destitution or because of the physical effects or the anticipated physical effects of destitution cannot be provided with care and support under CA 2014, Pt 1. Accommodation for those who are seeking asylum is the responsibility of the Home Office.

1 By Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, s 115.
2 CA 2014, s 21(1).

20.36 There is an additional prohibition on providing support (including accommodation) under CA 2014, Pt 1 to persons who fall within one of the following five classes of persons from abroad:

- refugees granted refugee status by another state of the European Economic Area (EEA);
- nationals of another state of the EEA;
- asylum-seekers whose claims for asylum have failed and who have failed to cooperate with removal directions;
- persons who are not asylum-seekers and are unlawfully present in the UK; and
- failed asylum-seekers with dependent children, where those families have been certified by the Secretary of State as not having taken reasonable steps to leave the UK.

1 Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3 as amended by the Care Act 2014 and Children and Families Act 2014 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2015, SI 2015/914.

3 Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3; Withholding and Withdrawal of Support (Travel Assistance and Temporary Accommodation) Regulations 2002, SI 2002/3078.

20.37 There are two exceptions to that general prohibition:

(1) where the support is necessary to prevent an interference with a person’s human rights under the European Convention; or
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: England 20.40

(2) for the first two classes of people, provision of support can be made in the form of assistance with travel arrangements to their home countries. Adults with dependent children may receive limited temporary accommodation while they await implementation of the travel arrangements.

1 Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, Sch 3, para 3. See R (Limbuela) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 66, [2006] 1 AC 396, HL, as to the operation of this threshold. For cases raising issues as to breach of Art 8 rights (which generally involve adults with dependent children), see 20.35–20.56. The Court of Appeal held in R (Clue) v Birmingham City Council [2010] EWCA Civ 460, [2011] 1 WLR 99, CA, that where an applicant had made an application for leave to remain in the UK, that claim was not hopeless or abusive and that claim would be forfeited if he or she had to leave the UK before it was decided, it would be a breach of human rights to refuse support.

2 SI 2002/3078, reg 3; there is no obligation to provide assistance with travel arrangements to the third and fourth classes, who are expected to comply with removal arrangements.

3 See 20.51–20.54.

20.38 If a request is made for support by anyone falling within one of the third, fourth or fifth classes, the local authority is obliged to inform the Home Office.

Children and young people

Powers and duties under the Children Act 1989

20.39 Local children’s services authorities have a duty, under the Children Act 1989 (CA 1989),1 s 17(1) to safeguard and promote the welfare of children within their area who are in need. So far as is consistent with that duty, they must promote the upbringing of such children by their families by providing a range and level of services appropriate to those children’s needs. This duty is a target duty, meaning that it is owed generally to children within the children’s services authority’s area. The children’s services authority has a substantial discretion as to how it performs that duty.

1 At the time of writing, there are significant outstanding amendments to the Children Act 1989, Pt 3, contained in the Immigration Act 2016, which will change and curtail the support available to certain young migrants and their families. See C Johnston ‘Housing difficulties for destitute migrant families unresolved’ (2016) November Legal Action. The Home Office has not given any indication of when (if at all) these amendments will come into force. For a fuller treatment of the powers and duties under the Children Act 1989, Pt 3 see Wise et al Children in need: local authority support for children and families (LAG, 2nd edn, 2013).

2 Children Act 1989, s 105 defines a child as ‘a person under the age of 18’.

Assessment

20.40 Children’s services authorities must first assess whether or not a child is ‘in need’. The children’s services authority is under a duty to take reasonable steps to assess the needs of any child within its area who appears to be in need.
20.40 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

If it fails to do so, a mandatory order can be sought in judicial review compelling it to do so. Where there is a material change in the circumstances upon which the conclusions of the assessment are based, then the local authority may need to carry out a reassessment.

1 R (AB and SB) v Nottinghamshire County Council (2001) 4 CCLR 295, QBD. See also R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council [2003] UKHL 57, [2004] 2 AC 208, HL per Lord Nicholls at [32].

20.41 The concept of being ‘in need’ is defined at CA 1989, s 17(10). A child is in need if he or she is disabled or if, without the provision of local authority services, the child is unlikely to achieve or maintain a reasonable standard of health or development, or his or her health or development is likely to be significantly impaired. Guidance to children’s services’ authorities in England is provided in Working together to safeguard children. It is well established that a child without accommodation is ‘child in need’ and that the provision of accommodation can be a service to meet that need.

20.42 The duty imposed on a children’s services authority by CA 1989, s 17(1) is to provide services appropriate to the needs of children within its area. ‘Within their area’ means that the child must be actually physically present. So the duty will be owed by the children’s services authority for the area where the child lives or where he or she attends school though the services provided pursuant to the assessment may be provided outside of the area of the local authority responsible for providing those services.

20.43 Where a homeless family with children is found not to be eligible for assistance under HA 1996, Pt 7, or the adults are found to have become homeless intentionally so that there is no main housing duty on the local housing authority to provide accommodation, the local housing authority must ask the applicant to consent to the family being referred to the local children’s services authority or department. Even if the applicant refuses, the local housing authority must still make the referral if it considers that the child is, or may be, at risk of significant harm. When a referral is received, the children’s services authority is entitled to request advice and assistance from the local housing authority. A local housing authority that has placed a homeless family outside its own district should refer the family (if it is found to be ineligible or the adult members are found to have become homeless intentionally) to its own children’s services department or authority. It may, of course, also seek the assistance of the children’s services authority for the district in which the family has been placed, under the general provisions for co-operation in HA 1996, s 213.

1 As amended by Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017), for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

2 HA 1996, s 213A as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018. See 15.229–15.230.

3 HA 1996, s 213A(4). See also English Code, Chapter 13.

4 HA 1996, s 213A(5) as amended by HRA 2017, s 4(7) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

5 R (Ambrose) v Westminster City Council (2011) July Legal Action, p 21, Admin Ct.

6 See 15.230.

20.44 Once the children’s services department is aware that the child may be in need, the child’s needs must be assessed. If the child appears to be ‘in need’, there is a duty to assess, which should not be deferred. The content of a lawful assessment has been considered in a number of cases including R (AB and SB) v Nottingham City Council.

20.45 Findings of fact within the assessment are for the local authority to make. Further, a local authority may be entitled to draw adverse inferences where a parent has failed to provide information during the assessment process, providing that he or she has been given a fair opportunity to respond to any concerns.

1 See for example R (O) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 1796 (Admin), Admin Ct and R (AC) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 1796 (Admin), Admin Ct (where there was no impropriety in the assessment process) and R (S and J) v Haringey London Borough Council [2016] EWHC 2692 (Admin), Admin Ct, R (OK) v Barking and Dagenham London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 2092 (Admin), Admin Ct and R (CO) v Lewisham London Borough Council [2017] EWHC 1676 (Admin), Admin Ct (where a lack of procedural fairness led to the quashing of the decisions).

Services

20.46 After the assessment has been carried out, services to meet the child’s identified needs may be provided. Services for the child’s family or any member of his or her family may also be provided, with a view to safeguarding or promoting the child’s welfare. Those services can include drawing up and implementing plans to remedy inadequate accommodation, or the provision of a roof over the child’s head if he or she is facing literal homelessness. Cash can, in exceptional circumstances, be provided. Therefore, in practice, a child’s need for accommodation with his or her family could result in the children’s services authority assisting the family financially with a deposit or rent guarantee so that they can find accommodation in the private sector.
20.46 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

Other forms of assistance could include moving a child and his or her family from inadequate to adequate accommodation. It is sometimes (although not often) the case that children’s services’ authorities will offer accommodation to the child, or children, alone under CA 1989, s 20 rather than offering assistance to the whole of the family. This practice was first considered by the House of Lords in R (A) v Lambeth London Borough Council, R (W) v Lambeth London Borough Council and R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council and found, in principle, to be lawful.

1 CA 1989, s 17(3).
3 Where accommodation is provided under CA 1989, s 17, there is no express requirement that such accommodation should be suitable. However local authorities, as public bodies, should only exercise their powers to promote the purpose of the statute and must act reasonably in doing so ‘which may to a large extent come to, in effect, a requirement of suitability.’ See R (Yekini) v Southwark London Borough Council [2014] EWHC 2096 (Admin) at [47] per Michael Fordham QC sitting as a deputy High Court judge.
4 CA 1989, s 17(6). There are a number of cases where the courts have been called upon to adjudicate on the adequacy of support provided under CA 1989, s 17(6). See for example R (PO) v Newham LBC [2014] EWHC 2561 (Admin), (2014) 17 CCLR 345, Admin Ct and R (C, T, M, U) v Southwark LBC [2016] EWCA Civ 707, [2016] HLR 36, CA. The thrust of the case law is that the setting of levels of support with reference to benefits provided under other statutory regimes without any individualized assessment of need is likely to be unlawful.
6 See 20.58–20.64.
7 R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council, R (W) v Lambeth London Borough Council, R (A) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2003] UKHL 57, [2004] 2 AC 208, HL.
8 R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council, R (W) v Lambeth London Borough Council and R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council illustrate the types of assistance with housing need that can be sought under CA 1989, s 17. In A, two severely disabled children, whose mother was a secure tenant, needed to move to larger and safer accommodation. In W, the child’s mother had been found to have become homeless intentionally. She argued that her child was in need of emergency accommodation (and that it was in the child’s best interests for the two of them to be accommodated together). In G, the child’s mother was homeless and not eligible for homelessness assistance, as she was not habitually resident in the UK. The assessment of the child’s needs had resulted in the local authority offering to pay for travel to the family’s home country, which the mother had refused. The children in W and G, therefore, both had immediate needs for accommodation with (it was argued) their parents, and the children in A had a need for suitable long-term accommodation. In both W and G, the local authorities were offering accommodation to the children alone, without their mothers, pursuant to their duty under CA 1989, s 20.

1 R (G) v Barnet London Borough Council, R (W) v Lambeth London Borough Council, R (A) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2003] UKHL 57, [2004] 2 AC 208, HL.
20.48 The House of Lords confirmed that accommodation could be provided under CA 1989, s 17 powers, a position also legislated for by Parliament, which had amended s 17(6) to include specific reference to ‘accommodation’. It held, however, that the duty under CA 1989, s 17 was a ‘target duty’ and therefore there was no means by which an individual child could require that the local authority provide him or her with particular services under that section. In A’s case, there was no power for the court to order that the local authority obtain suitable accommodation for the children. The House of Lords also emphasised that the decisions, as to whether a child was in need and what services should be provided to meet those needs, were decisions for the local authority. In particular, local authorities are entitled to operate certain policies such as (in the case of G) offering to return the family to their home country and providing accommodation only for the child if the offer is refused. In W, the local authority had not been acting unreasonably when it decided that the child was not in need of accommodation (as her mother had relatives with whom they could stay) and that, if the mother failed to make her own arrangements for accommodation, it would provide accommodation for the child but not the family.

1 Adoption and Children Act 2002, s 116(1), in force from 7 November 2002 and enacted after the Court of Appeal decision in R (A) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2002] EWCA Civ 540, [2002] 34 HLR 13, CA, which had held that there was no such power and was subsequently overturned by the House of Lords.

20.49 However, this is not to say that a decision to accommodate a homeless child separately from his or her parents under CA 1989, s 20, rather than accommodating the family together under CA 1989, s 17(6) will be lawful in every case. Indeed, in many cases it will not be. Local authorities remain under an obligation to consider the individual needs of each child, and an assessment of those needs should form the basis of the local authority’s decision making. Any refusal to provide services to meet those needs identified in the assessment will be subject to review on conventional grounds of reasonableness and proportionality; and will be subject to ‘strict and, it may be, sceptical scrutiny’. This level of scrutiny may be characterised as a consequence of the enactment of Children Act 2004, s 11, which requires local authorities to put in place arrangements to safeguard and promote the welfare of children, reflecting the requirement under Art 3 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration. Children Act 2004, s 11, requires decision makers, in addition, to demonstrate how the local authority has had regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children both individually and collectively, and that any adverse impact on their welfare is proportionate. In R (HC) v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, Baroness Hale observed that ‘Safeguarding is not enough: their welfare has to be actively promoted’.

CHILDREN OF PERSONS FROM ABROAD

20.50 There used to be no general prohibition on providing services under CA 1989, s 17 to children who were persons from abroad, or whose parents were persons from abroad. Prior to 6 December 1999, asylum-seekers whose families included dependent children were provided with accommodation and services by local authorities under CA 1989, s 17. As from 6 December 1999, the statutory basis for providing accommodation and services fell under the Asylum Support (Interim Provisions) Regulations 19991 and, from 3 April 2000, local authorities have been prevented from providing CA 1989, s 17 assistance to the children of asylum-seekers2. Even if the children have needs that would normally bring them within the scope of CA 1989, s 17(1) (eg disability), the provision of adequate accommodation and support for the family remains the responsibility of the Home Office3. The situation is different in cases involving the children of failed asylum seekers. In those cases, the family may be entitled to support from the Home Office under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, s 4, but this does not exonerate the children’s services authority from performing its powers and duties under CA 1989, s 174.

2 Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, s 122(5), to be substituted by s 122(3), but not yet in force (Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 47).
4 R (VC) v Newcastle City Council & SSHD [2011] EWHC 2673 (Admin), [2012] PTSR 546. Note however, a member of this cohort is likely to be affected by the restrictions set out at 20.51–20.53.

20.51 On 8 January 2003, s 54 and Sch 3 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 came into force, along with the Withholding and Withdrawal of Support (Travel Assistance and Temporary Accommodation) Regulations 2002. These provisions apply to five classes of people:

(1) refugees given refugee status by another state of the EEA;
(2) nationals of another state of the EEA;
(3) asylum-seekers whose claims for asylum have failed and who have failed to co-operate with removal directions;
(4) persons who are not asylum-seekers and are unlawfully present in the UK; and
(5) failed asylum-seekers with dependent children where those families have been certified by the Secretary of State as not having taken reasonable steps to leave the UK.

2 Nationality Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3; and SI 2002/3078. For a list of EEA states, see 11.29, Box 2.

20.52 People in the first, second and fourth categories who have dependent children are entitled to limited support under CA 1989, s 17. Children’s services authorities can provide assistance with travel arrangements for families in the first two categories to return to their home countries and can provide support and accommodation until they travel. They may also provide support and accommodation for families in the fourth category until those people make their own arrangements to travel. If the families do not leave the UK, accommodation and support will cease. The children will be entitled to accommodation and support under CA 1989, s 20, but their parents will not be entitled to any services. If a request is made for support by anyone falling within one of the third, fourth or fifth classes, the local children’s services authority is obliged to inform the Home Office.
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: England 20.55

1 SI 2002/3078, reg 3(2) and (3). See Practice Guidance for Local Authorities assessing and supporting children and families and former looked-after children who have No Recourse to Public Funds for Support from Local Authorities under Children Act 1989 (No Recourse to Public Funds Network, December 2011).
2 SI 2002/3078, reg 3(1).

20.53 When these restrictions were first enacted, guidance issued by the Secretary of State (to which children’s services authorities must have regard) stated that it was preferable that accommodation was only provided for a limited period, with maximum periods suggested of five days for families falling within the first two categories and ten days for families falling into the fourth category from the date when they first presented to the children’s services authority for support. In the case of R (M) v Islington London Borough Council, the majority of the Court of Appeal held that the periods 5 and ten days suggested in the Secretary of State’s guidance did not preclude a local authority from providing accommodation for a longer period.

1 SI 2002/3078, reg 4(4).

20.54 Children’s services authorities are not prevented from providing accommodation and support to anyone falling within one of these five categories if it is necessary to do so in order to prevent a breach of that individual’s European Convention rights or European Union Treaty rights. They should also take into account Home Office policy where the claimant might potentially be entitled to remain in the UK.

1 Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, Sch 3, para 3.

20.55 The possibility of a breach of an individual’s European Convention rights usually relates to his or her rights under Art 6 (right to a fair trial) and/or Art 8 (right to respect for private and family life). In R (Clue) v Birmingham City Council, the Court of Appeal held that children’s services authorities should adopt the following approach:

- the first enquiry is to ascertain the applicant’s immigration status;
- if the applicant is a person in the UK in breach of immigration laws and is not an asylum-seeker, the next question is to decide whether the family is destitute; if so
- the next consideration is whether there is any impediment to the family returning to its country of origin (and if the only impediment is financial, the children’s services authority can assist with funds);
20.55 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

- if it is said that there would be a breach of European Convention rights if the family were to return, and if the applicant has not applied to the Home Office for leave to remain in the UK, the children’s services authority must consider whether the applicant enjoys a private or family life in the UK within the meaning of Art 8(1) and, if so, whether a return to the country of origin would constitute an interference with that right. Relevant to that question is the length of time the family has spent in the UK and the degree to which the children may have spent their formative years in the UK;

- where a person has made an application for leave to remain in the UK, children’s services authorities should not undertake their own assessment of how the Secretary of State will determine the application for leave, unless the application is hopeless or abusive; and

- it follows that where a return to the country of origin would involve having to abandon the application for leave to remain, there is a legal impediment preventing the applicant from returning.

20.56 Earlier cases considered the potential for a breach of the right to respect for family life. In R (M) v Islington London Borough Council, the children’s services authority’s decision to provide support by returning the mother and child to the mother’s home country of Guyana was held to be wrong in law because the children’s services authority had failed to consider the child’s right to respect for her family life, in that she might lose contact with her father, who was to remain in the UK and thus it might be necessary to provide support in order to prevent a breach of the child’s European Convention rights.

2 In R (K) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2003] EWCA Civ 1150, [2004] HLR 15, CA, the Court of Appeal held that neither Art 3 nor Art 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights imposed a duty on the UK to provide support to foreign nationals who are permitted to enter the country but are in a position freely to return home. See also R (Blackburn-Smith) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2007] EWHC 767 (Admin), (2007) October Legal Action, p 27, Admin Ct.

20.57 In R (Conde) v Lambeth London Borough Council, the court considered the position of an EEA national who was seeking work, and held that children’s services authorities considering applications from EEA nationals should always ensure that those applicants are not exercising any rights under European Union Treaties, although it was unlikely that work-seekers applying for housing or Children Act accommodation would be exercising European Union Treaty rights.

Individual children

20.58 By CA 1989, s 20(1), children’s services authorities are required to provide accommodation for any children in need within their area who appear to them to require accommodation as a result of:
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: England

(1) there being no one who has parental responsibility for them; or
(2) their having been lost or abandoned; or
(3) the person who had been caring for them being prevented from providing suitable accommodation or care.

1 This is the most commonly used and cited accommodation duty under CA 1989, s 20. However, CA 1989, s 20(3) also requires a local authority to accommodate any child in need within its area who has reached the age of 16 and whose welfare is likely to be ‘seriously prejudiced’ if the local authority do not provide him or her with accommodation.

20.59 In R (M) v Gateshead Metropolitan Borough Council, Dyson LJ described the duty as:

’an absolute duty to provide accommodation for any child in need where one of the specified circumstances exists. It is a precise and specific duty. There is no scope of discretion as to whether or not to provide accommodation at all. Thus where it appears to the local authority that there is a child in need, for example, as a result of there being no person who has parental responsibility, the local authority has an absolute obligation to provide some accommodation for that child. Section 20, says nothing about the type of accommodation that must be provided: that is left to the discretion of the local authority.’

2 R (M) v Gateshead Metropolitan Borough Council [2006] EWCA Civ 221, [2006] 1 QB 650, CA at [33] per Dyson LJ.

20.60 CA 1989, s 20 poses a series of questions for the children’s services authority to ask and answer:

(1) Is the applicant a child?
(2) If so, is the applicant a child in need, which might mean that he or she lacks accommodation?
(3) If so, is the child within the children’s services authority’s area?
(4) If so, does he or she appear to the children’s services authority to require accommodation?
(5) If so, is that because of one of the three statutory reasons (which can include the circumstance where a child is excluded from the parental home by his or her parent)?
(6) If so, what are the child’s wishes and feelings regarding the provision of accommodation for him or her? and
(7) What consideration should be given to the child’s wishes and feelings?

1 See R (Liverpool City Council) v Hillingdon London Borough Council and AK [2008] EWCA Civ 43, [2009] LGR 289, CA; and R (A) v Leicester City Council and Hillingdon London Borough Council [2009] EWHC 2351 (Admin), (2009) November Legal Action, p 26, Admin Ct, for examples of disputes between local authorities about the area a child is in.

20.61 If the answers to those questions indicate that the child falls within CA 1989, s 20(1), accommodation must be provided by the children’s services authority. The children’s services authority should not be ‘side-stepping’ its responsibilities, for example by simply advising a child to make an application.
20.61 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities for homelessness assistance to a local housing authority.

A homeless child who has a priority need (see ЧАРТ 12) will almost certainly be a ‘child in need’ for the purposes of CA 1989 and local housing authorities should refer children who approach them for assistance with homelessness to children’s services as well as complying with their duties under HA 1996, Pt 7 (as amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018) but the primary responsibility is likely to fall on children’s services authorities. See R (M) v Hammersmith & Fulham London Borough Council [2008] UKHL 14, 1 WLR 535, HL; R (G) v Southwark London Borough Council [2009] UKHL 26, [2009] 1 WLR 2399, HL; and R(TG) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2010] EWHC 907 (Admin), [2011] HLR 33, Admin Ct. See 12.150–12.159 for a fuller commentary on joint working between housing and children’s services.

20.62 The duty is owed to the individual child, and for these purposes a child is defined as a person who is not yet 18 years old. The children’s services authority will initially assess whether or not a person claiming to be a child without parental support is in fact aged less than 18. Useful guidance on the assessment of the child’s age is provided by R (B) v Merton London Borough Council. However, if the child disagrees with the children’s services authority’s assessment of his or her age, he or she can bring judicial review proceedings and, unlike most claims in judicial review, ask the court to review the evidence available and make its own decision as to what age he or she is.

1 CA 1989, s 105.
3 R (A) v Croydon London Borough Council, R (M) v Lambeth London Borough Council [2009] UKSC 8, [2009] 1 WLR 2557, SC. Since this important decision of the Supreme Court, there are various decisions of the Court of Appeal, Administrative Court and Upper Tribunal containing the court’s own assessment of a claimant’s age and guidance on how the courts should be carrying out that assessment. A detailed survey of those cases is beyond the scope of this book.

20.63 There are no restrictions on the grounds of immigration status to providing CA 1989, s 20 accommodation to children. Asylum-seeking children who are unaccompanied are entitled to the same care and after-care duties as any other children.

20.64 Children who are provided with accommodation under CA 1989, s 20 are entitled to certain assistance beyond their eighteenth birthday. This is not the case for children provided with help with accommodation under CA 1989, s 17. In R (H) v Wandsworth London Borough Council, the court held that where a local authority actually provided accommodation to a child whom it had identified as a ‘child in need’, that accommodation was provided under CA 1989, s 20 and it was not for the children’s services authority, or even the child, to characterise that accommodation as provided under CA 1989, s 17. A child may have been provided with accommodation under CA 1989, s 20, even when he or she is assisted to live with relatives, placed in respite care or in a residential specialist placement.

4 See R (Cunningham) v Hertfordshire City Council [2016] EWCA Civ 1108, [2017] 1 WLR 2153, CA for the most recent guidance on this type of case.

Young people

20.65 Children owed CA 1989, s 20 duties are entitled to accommodation until the age of 18 and thereafter (subject to certain conditions) to the benefits of the amendments to CA 1989 made by the Children (Leaving Care) Act 2000, the Children and Social Work Act 2017 and the regulations and guidance made under CA 1989. The children’s services authority must prepare a pathway plan assessing the child’s need for advice, assistance and support both before and after the authority ceases to look after the child. That pathway plan should include consideration of the young person’s needs for accommodation and how accommodation is to be provided. The children’s services authority will itself need to secure accommodation for the young person where his or her welfare requires it, or arrange for accommodation to be provided. The children’s services authority must also provide a personal adviser and pay for certain education-related expenses. These obligations continue to be owed until young person reaches the age of 21 and certain of the obligations may continue until the young person reaches the age of 25.

5 Children Act 1989, ss 23C(6)–(7) and 23CZB (as inserted by Children and Social Work Act 2017, s 3).

20.66 There are no restrictions on the grounds of immigration status to these services provided to young people.

20.67 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

Performing obligations under the Children Act 1989

20.67 Once a children's services authority has identified a child's need for accommodation and has either acknowledged a duty to provide it (under CA 1989, s 20) or decided to exercise a power to provide it (under CA 1989, s 17) the crucial next step is to find that accommodation. The children's services authority is most unlikely to have units of residential accommodation simply standing ready to meet demand.

20.68 Where what is needed is ordinary housing, the children's services authority (or department) needs to be able to call upon others. Co-operation can be expected from the local housing authority (or department) as a result of the statutory requirement upon local housing authorities to assist, on request. Similar expectations as to co-operation are imposed on local private registered providers or registered social landlords, not least by the requirements of their regulatory bodies. Beyond assistance from local housing authorities and private registered providers or registered social landlords, a children's services authority will either need to pay for housing itself (by purchasing or renting from the private sector) or help to finance the acquisition by the child, or his or her family, of suitable accommodation, usually by assisting with a deposit and rent guarantee.

1 CA 1989, s 27. Note that this statutory duty to co-operate does not apply when the local housing authority and the children's services authority fall under the auspices of the same unitary authority, R (C1 and C2) v Hackney London Borough Council [2014] EWHC 3670 (Admin), Admin Ct. However, the guidance issued by the Secretary of State in Working Together to Safeguard Children (HM Government, March 2015), requires a similar degree of co-operation between departments in the same authority. See R (M) v Islington London Borough Council [2016] EWHC 332 (Admin), [2016] HLR 19, Admin Ct at [14]-[15] per Collins J.

SPECIFIC POWERS FOR LOCAL AUTHORITIES TO HELP WITH ACCOMMODATION: WALES

20.69 On 6 April 2016 the Social Services and Well-being (Wales) Act 2014 (SSWBA 2014) came into force replacing CA 1989 and the National Assistance Act 1948, Pt 3 as the single principal piece of legislation governing support for children and young people, and adult social care, in Wales. In this section, adults and then children will be dealt with in turn.

1 Social Services and Well-being (Wales) Act 2014 (Commencement No 3, Savings and Transitional Provisions) Order 2016, SI 2016/412 (W 130), art 2, subject to the transitional and saving provisions contained in art 3 and art 4.

20.70 SSWBA 2014 is a comprehensive and detailed piece of legislation and what follows is no more than a basic overview of those functions within it by which people might access accommodation, and how they can go about doing so. SSWBA 2014 should be read together with the various codes of practice and statutory guidance issued under SSWBA 2014, s 145 which are available on the Welsh Government website.
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: Wales 20.74

20.71 One of the more innovative features of SSWBA 2014 is the inclusion of a number of ‘overarching duties’ to which officials exercising functions under SSWBA 2014 will be subject. These include (but are not limited to):

- the need to promote the well-being of people who need care and support;
- the need to have regard to the importance of promoting and respecting the dignity of a person who needs care and support;
- the need to have regard, in an appropriate case, to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

A local authority exercising any the functions under the SSWBA 2014 set out at 20.72–20.98 will be subject to these duties.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 5(1).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 6(1) and (2).
3 SSWBA 2014, s 7(2).

Adults

Powers and duties to provide accommodation

20.72 By SSWBA 2014, s 3(2) an adult is defined as a person who is aged 18 or over. The duty to provide accommodation to certain adults, along with a range of other services, is contained in SSWBA 2014, s 35. A local authority is required to provide ‘care and support’ to an adult under SSWBA 2014, s 35(1), which may include accommodation, if:

- he or she is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area, or is within its area but of no settled residence;
- he or she has a need for care and support which meets the eligibility criteria or the local authority considers it necessary to meet his or her needs in order to protect him or her from abuse or neglect, or a risk of abuse or neglect; and
- he or she meets the financial eligibility criteria.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 34(2).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 35.

20.73 Whether a person is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area is to be determined in accordance with SSWBA 2014, s 194. This section does not seek to define the term ‘ordinary residence’ but provides that a person will be deemed to be ordinarily resident in certain circumstances, such as where he or she is provided with accommodation under Mental Health Act 1983, s 117. The prior case law on ordinary residence under NAA 1948, Pt 3 will presumably remain applicable outside of the particular scenarios dealt with in SSWBA 2014, s 194.

2 See 20.21.

20.74 Whether a person has a need for care and support which meets the eligibility criteria is to be determined in accordance with SSWBA 2014, s 32. Needs are deemed to meet the eligibility criteria if they are of a description specified in regulations made under SSWBA 2014, s 32(3), or form part of a combination of needs described in the regulations. In cases where a person has a need for care and support which does not meet the eligibility criteria, the local authority is required to go on to determine whether the provision of care and support is necessary in any event in order to protect the person from abuse or neglect or a risk of abuse or neglect.
20.74 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

1 SSWBA 2014, s 32(4). The relevant regulations are the Care and Support (Eligibility) (Wales) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/1578 (W 187).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 32(1)(b).

20.75 Whether a person is financially eligible for care and support is to be calculated in accordance with SSWBA 2014, s 35(4) and Pt 5 and the Care and Support (Financial Assessment) (Wales) Regulations 2015.

1 SI 2015/1844 (W 272).

20.76 Where a person satisfies these three conditions then a local authority will be required to meet those of his or her needs for care and support which satisfy the eligibility criteria or which need to be met in order to protect the person from abuse or neglect or a risk of abuse or neglect. But the question of how to meet those needs is a matter for the local authority.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 35(1) and (3).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 34.

20.77 It follows that where a person requires accommodation in order to meet his or her eligible needs, or to protect him or her from abuse or neglect, or a risk of abuse or neglect, then the local authority must secure accommodation for him or her, either by providing accommodation itself or by arranging for another to provide it. On the other hand if a person has a need for care and support which does not meet the eligibility criteria, if there is no risk of abuse or neglect, or if the local authority can meet his or her needs otherwise than by the provision of accommodation, the local authority will not be required to secure accommodation.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 34(1).

20.78 Where the person has a need for care and support which the local authority is not required to meet under SSWBA 2014, s 35, the local authority retains a discretion whether to meet that need, so long as the person in question is ordinarily resident in the local authority’s area, or is present in its area but of no settled residence. Hence, a vulnerable homeless person without accommodation who does not meet the eligibility criteria in SSWBA 2014 and who is not at risk of abuse or neglect might consider asking the local authority to exercise its discretion to accommodate him or her in any event.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 36(1).
2 Used here in the non-technical sense, in contrast to Chapter 12.

20.79 A person subject to immigration control who is excluded from benefits, whose need for care and support has arisen solely because of destitution or because of the physical effects or the anticipated physical effects of destitution, cannot be provided with care and support under SSWBA 2014, ss 35 or 36.
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: Wales 20.84

Accommodation for those who are seeking asylum is the responsibility of the Home Office. As with the CA 1989, s 17, and CA 2014, Pt 1 there is an additional prohibition on providing residential accommodation to persons who fall within one of five specified classes of persons from abroad.\(^\text{3}\)

2. SSWBA 2014, s 46.

20.80 The powers and duties under SSWBA 2014, ss 35–36 are residual. That is, a local authority is not permitted to do anything under these sections which it is required to do under H(W)A 2014, under any enactment specified in regulations or under a health enactment, save, in the case of a health enactment, where the provision is merely incidental to care and support provided under SSWBA 2014, ss 35–36.\(^\text{1}\)

1. SSWBA 2014, ss 47–48. ‘Health enactment’ is defined in SSWBA 2014, s 47(10).

The duty to assess

20.81 The duty to assess a person’s needs for care and support under SSWBA 2014, s 35 and 36 is contained in SSWBA 2014, s 19. The duty will arise where ‘it appears’ to the local authority that the person ‘may have needs for care and support’; a low threshold. The local authority has a discretion to provide services while the assessment is being carried out providing that the person is either within the area or is outside of the area but ordinarily resides in the area. This discretion is not confined to urgent cases.

1. SSWBA 2014, s 19(1).
2. SSWBA 2014, s 36(1) and (3).

20.82 The assessment should be carried out in accordance with the requirements set out in SSWBA 2014, s 19 and the Care and Support (Assessment) (Wales) Regulations 2015.\(^\text{1}\)

20.83 A failure to carry out an assessment, if the threshold is satisfied, is a breach of the local authority’s statutory duty. It can be enforced by bringing a claim by way of judicial review seeking a mandatory order requiring the local authority to carry out an assessment.\(^\text{1}\)

20.84 The duty to assess is not confined to the local authority in whose area the person is ordinarily resident. However, since the duty to provide care and support under SSWBA 2014, s 35 will only be owed by the local authority in whose area the person is ordinarily resident he or she would be well advised to direct his or her application to that local authority. Any dispute as to which local authority owes the duty to assess should be decided by the Welsh Ministers.\(^\text{1}\)

Children and young people

The duties to provide accommodation

20.85 By SSWBA 2014, s 3(3) a child is defined as a person who is aged under-18. There are two principal provisions within SSWBA 2014 under which a child may be accommodated. The first is SSWBA 2014, s 76(1) which requires a local authority to provide accommodation for any child within its area who appears to require accommodation as a result of:

• there being no person who has parental responsibility for the child;
• the child being lost or having been abandoned; or
• the person who has been caring for the child being prevented (whether or not permanently, and for whatever reason) from providing the child with suitable accommodation or care.

20.86 This is supplemented by SSWBA 2014, s 76(3) which requires a local authority to provide accommodation for any child within its area who has reached the age of 16 and whose well-being the authority considers is likely to be seriously prejudiced if it does not provide the child with accommodation.

20.87 The duties under SSWBA 2014, s 76 mirror the duties under CA 1989, s 20 and it may be assumed that the same approach to decision making under that section should be applied. A child who is looked-after under SSWBA 2014, s 76 will be owed additional duties under SSWBA 2014, ss 78–86 and may be owed further duties as a care-leaver following his or her 18th birthday.

1 See 20.58–20.64 and Welsh Code, para 16.41.
2 Within the meaning of SSWBA 2014, s 74.
3 See 20.98.

20.88 There are no restrictions on the grounds of immigration status to providing SSWBA 2014, s 76 accommodation to children.

20.89 The second of the principal duties owed to children is in SSWBA 2014, s 37. This is a duty to provide ‘care and support’ to a child, which may include accommodation, if:

• he or she is within the local authority’s area; and
• he or she has a need for care and support which meets the eligibility criteria; or
• the local authority considers it necessary to meet his or her needs in order to protect him or her from abuse or neglect or any other harm, or a risk of abuse, neglect or other harm.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 34(2).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 37.

20.90 This duty is secondary to the duty under SSWBA 2014, s 76. By virtue of SSWBA 2014, s 37(6), the duty does not apply to a child who is looked-after by a local authority. This is an indicator that where the conditions in SSWBA
Powers for local authorities to help with accommodation: Wales

20.94

2014, s 76 are met in respect of an individual child, the local authority should accommodate that child under SSWBA 2014, s 76 and not under SSWBA 2014, s 37(6). In view of the additional services which must be provided to a looked-after child under SSWBA 2014, ss 78–86, which effectively place the local authority in the shoes of the absent parent, it seems likely that SSWBA 2014, s 76 was intended to take precedence over SSWBA 2014, s 37 in those cases where an individual child seeks accommodation.\(^1\)

1 See, by analogy, 20.60–20.64 in respect of the position under CA 1989, Pt 3.

20.91 The wording of SSWBA 2014, s 37, which obliges a local authority to provide such care and support as is necessary to ‘meet a child’s needs’ is wide enough to permit a local authority to accommodate a child with his or her family under this provision, where that is necessary to meet the child’s needs. In contrast with CA 1989, s 17\(^1\), the duty under SSWBA 2014, s 37 is a specific duty rather than a target duty. If the child is assessed as having eligible needs for care and support or as requiring care and support to protect him or her from abuse, neglect or any other harm, or a risk of abuse, neglect or other harm, then the duty will be owed.

1 See 20.39–20.57.

20.92 In view of the position adopted by the House of Lords and Supreme Court to the effect that a child without accommodation is a ‘child in need’ for the purposes of CA 1989, s 17\(^2\), it seems reasonable to assume that a child without accommodation may be taken to be at risk of ‘harm’ for the purposes of SSWBA 2014, s 37(3).

2 By CA 1989, s 17(10) a child shall be taken to be in need if ‘his health or development is likely to be significantly impaired, or further impaired, without the provision for him of . . . services’. This might be equated with the concept of ‘harm’ in SSWBA 2014, s 37(3).

20.93 The duty to provide care and support under SSWBA 2014, s 37 is subject to the five exclusions set out in Nationality, Asylum and Immigration Act 2002, Sch 3, affecting the ability of certain persons from abroad to access certain community care services.\(^1\)

1 Nationality, Asylum and Immigration Act 2002, s 54 and Sch 3, para 1(o).

20.94 Where a local housing authority has reason to believe that a family with children are homeless or threatened with homelessness but are ineligible for help under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 or, for any other reason, are not likely to be owed a duty under H(W)A 2014, ss 66, 68, 73 or 75\(^1\), then local housing authority must ask the applicant to consent to the family being referred to the local children’s services department\(^2\), who may then consider whether an accommodation duty under SSWBA 2014 has arisen. Even if the applicant refuses, the local housing authority must still make the referral if it considers that the child is, or may be, at risk of significant harm\(^3\). When a referral is received, the children’s services authority is entitled to request advice and assistance from the local housing authority\(^4\). A local housing authority that has placed a homeless family outside its own district should refer the family (if it is found to be ineligible or the adult members are found to have become homeless intentionally to its own children's services department or authority. It may, of course, also seek the assistance of the children's services authority for the district in which the family has been placed, under the general provisions for co-operation in H(W)A 2014, s 95.

20.95 The duty to assess

20.95 The duty to assess a child's needs for care and support is contained in SSWBA 2014, s 21. The duty will arise where 'it appears' to the local authority that the person 'may need care and support in addition to, or instead of, the care and support provided by the child's family'. This is a low threshold. The local authority has a discretion to provide services while the assessment is being carried out providing that the child is either within the area or is outside of the area but ordinarily resides in the area. This discretion is not confined to urgent cases.

1 SSWBA 2014, s 21(1).
2 SSWBA 2014, s 38(1) and (3).

20.96 The assessment should be carried out in accordance with the requirements set out in SSWBA 2014, s 21 and the Care and Support (Assessment) (Wales) Regulations 2015.

1 SI 2015/1305 (W 111). See SSWBA, s 30.

20.97 A failure to carry out an assessment, if the threshold is made out, is a breach of the local authority's statutory duty. It can be enforced by bringing a claim by way of judicial review seeking a mandatory order requiring the local authority to carry out an assessment.

1 See 19.306–19.327 on practice and procedure for judicial review claims.

20.98 Various categories of young person up to the age of 21, who have previously been looked after by a local authority, are set out in SSWBA 2014, s 104. The responsible local authority will owe a range of additional duties to young people falling within these categories. These duties are set out in SSWBA 2014, ss 105–115, and include the provision of a personal adviser, a pathway plan, and, where required, accommodation or a contribution toward the cost of accommodation.

1 Or 25 if the young person in question has informed the responsible local authority that he or she is or intends to pursue a course of education or training.
2 Defined in accordance with SSWBA 2014, 104(5).
POWERS AND DUTIES UNDER THE MENTAL HEALTH ACT 1983

20.99 Special statutory provision is made to meet the accommodation needs of adults in England and Wales who are, or who have recently been, mentally ill. The Mental Health Act 1983, s 117 (MHA 1983) imposes a duty on local authorities in England and in Wales to provide after-care services for any person who has left hospital, having been detained, or who has been subject to certain hospital orders made in criminal proceedings. This duty rests jointly on the relevant clinical commissioning group or local health board and on the local authority, and they are expected to co-operate in ensuring that services are provided. The local authority which owes the duty is the local authority for the area, in England or Wales, in which the person concerned was ordinarily resident prior to his or her detention. Where a person was ordinarily resident somewhere other than England or Wales prior to his or her detention, or where he or she had no place of ordinary residence, then the duty will be owed by the local authority for the area in which the person concerned is resident or to which he or she is sent on discharge from the hospital in which he or she was detained. The term ‘resident’ is used in contradistinction to the term ‘ordinarily resident’ and the two terms do not, therefore, have the same meaning. A patient is not ‘resident’ for these purposes in the hospital or other facility in which he or she was compulsorily detained. Where a person has been made subject to a hospital order with restrictions, conditionally discharged, recalled to a hospital, and then conditionally discharged for a second time, for the purposes of MHA 1983, s 117(3)(c) he or she should be treated as ‘resident in the area’ of the local authority in which he or she lived before the original hospital order was made.

1 As amended by Health and Social Care Act 2012, s 40.
2 A description of the much broader provision in the Mental Health Act 1983, as amended by the Mental Capacity Act 2005 and Mental Health Act 2007, consolidating the health services to which mentally ill patients are entitled, is beyond the scope of this book.
3 MHA 1983, s 117(3)(a) and (b). See R (Cornwall Council) v Secretary of State for Health [2015] UKSC 46, [2016] AC 137, SC for the most authoritative guidance on how to determine ordinary residence. Local authorities in England will also need to have regard to CA 2014, s 39, while local authorities in Wales will need to consider SSWBA 2014, s 194.
4 MHA 1983, s 117(3)(c).

20.100 Guidance on this duty for local authorities in England is provided in After-Care Under the Mental Health Act 1983: section 117 after-care services.

1 LAC (2000) 3, Department of Health and Chapter 33 of the Code of Practice: Mental Health Act 1983 (Department of Heath, 2015). There is also LAC(96)8 Guidance on supervised discharge (after-care under supervision) and related provisions (Department of Heath 1996). In Wales, guidance is given in Chapter 33 of the Mental Health Act 1983: Code of Practice for Wales (Welsh Government, 2016).

20.101 It is unlawful for a clinical commissioning group, health authority or local authority to fail to take steps to prepare a package of after-care services so as to enable discharge to take place from residential accommodation provided under the MHA 1983. However, the duty at MHA 1983, s 117 is not absolute; all that local authorities are required to do is to use their best endeavours to provide after-care services. In those circumstances, if no package is set up despite the local authority using its best endeavours, and the consequence is that the patient remains detained rather than being released into the community, there is no illegality or breach of the patient’s human rights. Similarly, where there is a genuine inability to provide accommodation, because of the particular needs of the applicant and the absence of suitable accommodation, no unlawfulness or illegal detention will arise.

1 R v Ealing London Borough Council ex p Fox [1993] 3 All ER 170, QBD.

20.102 The duty to provide after-care services is a duty to provide services that are necessary to meet any needs arising from the person’s mental disorder. Those services can include the provision of ordinary accommodation if accommodation is necessary to meet the person’s needs. Importantly, local authorities are not permitted to charge for after-care services provided under MHA 1983, s 117 and are not permitted to refuse to provide accommodation on the grounds of lack of resources. A corollary of this is that where a person has been awarded tortious damages toward his or her future care needs, a local authority is not entitled to insist that he or she should exhaust those sums before after-care services are funded under MHA 1983, s 117.

20.103 If the person has left hospital subject to supervised community treatment, the duty continues for the whole of the supervision period. If he or she is not subject to supervision, the duty continues until the local authority is satisfied that he or she is no longer in need of MHA 1983, s 117.

20.104 Voluntary patients and those patients detained for assessment under MHA 1983, s 2 are not entitled to the benefit of the MHA 1983, s 117 duty. If, on leaving hospital, they are in need of community care services and accommodation, they can require that the local authority assesses their needs under SSWBA 2014 (Wales) or CA 2014 (England) and that the local authority then provides community care services to meet those needs, which may include assistance with finding accommodation.

POWERS AND DUTIES UNDER THE HOUSING ACT 1985 AND THE LAND COMPENSATION ACT 1973

Displaced occupiers

20.105 Quite apart from the requirements of HA 1996, Pts 6 and 7\footnote{As amended by HRA 2017, for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.} and H(W)A 2014, Pt 2, local housing authorities can be required, in certain circumstances, to provide accommodation to existing tenants, or owner-occupiers who are faced with loss of their homes.

20.106 If the local housing authority is the landlord of a secure tenant, and is bringing possession proceedings against that tenant under statutory grounds 9–16 inclusive\footnote{Housing Act 1985, Sch 2.}, it must make suitable alternative accommodation available for the tenant and his or her family in order to obtain an order for possession from the court. The accommodation need not be provided by that, or any, local housing authority landlord; it may be provided by a private registered provider or registered social landlord or even by a private landlord on an assured tenancy. What is ‘suitable’ accommodation for these purposes is determined by Sch 2, Pt 4 of the Housing Act 1985. If no suitable accommodation is available from another provider, the local housing authority itself will have to provide the accommodation if it wishes to obtain possession.

20.107 More generally, where any person is ‘displaced from residential accommodation’ as a result of a local housing authority compulsorily purchasing land, making a housing order or making improvements to or redeveloping land, the local housing authority will be under a duty to provide suitable alternative residential accommodation on reasonable terms, if no such accommodation is otherwise available to the person displaced\footnote{Land Compensation Act 1973, s 39(1).}. That duty does not require the local housing authority to put the displaced person to the top of its allocation scheme, thereby achieving priority over those who may have been waiting some considerable time. The provision of temporary accommodation until more permanent housing becomes available is sufficient to comply with the duty\footnote{R v Bristol Corporation ex p Hendy [1974] 1 All ER 1047, CA; R v East Hertfordshire District Council ex p Smith (1990) 23 HLR 26, CA.}. In order to give local housing authorities maximum flexibility, the provision of suitable alternative accommodation under this duty does not constitute an ‘allocation’ for the purposes of HA 1996, Pt 6, and the local housing authority does not have to comply with the requirements of HA 1996, Pt 6 or its own allocation scheme before making it available\footnote{Allocation of Housing (England) Regulations 2002, SI 2002/3264, reg 3(2); and Allocation of Housing (Wales) Regulations 2003, SI 2003/239 (W 36), reg 3(a), both made under HA 1996, s 160(4). DEFECTIVE DWELLING-HOUSES

20.108 Special statutory provision is made for the re-housing of those who currently occupy, but need to leave, defective homes which were purchased from local housing authorities under right-to-buy arrangements. Local housing authorities have to take responsibility for those defective dwelling-houses in their areas\(^1\), including the re-purchase of a defective dwelling-house where an individual is entitled to that assistance\(^2\). Where such a property is occupied, the local housing authority will then become subject to housing obligations towards that occupier. If the property is occupied by its owner or by a statutory Rent Act 1977 tenant, the local housing authority is required to grant the occupier a secure tenancy of that property or, if the dwelling-house is not safe for occupation or the local housing authority intends to demolish or reconstruct it within a reasonable time, a different property\(^3\). If the property is occupied by a contractual tenant, who is either protected under the Rent Act 1977 or an assured tenant protected by the Housing Act 1988, the local housing authority acquires the landlord’s interest under the tenancy and the status of the tenancy changes to that of a secure tenancy\(^4\). Again, if there is to be reconstruction or the house is unsafe, the tenant must be re-housed.

3. These provisions only apply if the occupier makes a written request for the grant of a tenancy: Housing Act 1985, ss 554–557.
4. Housing Act 1985, s 553.

20.109 The grant of a secure tenancy to a former owner-occupier or statutory tenant in these circumstances does not constitute an ‘allocation’ for the purposes of HA 1996, Pt 6, and so the local housing authority does not have to comply with the normal requirements of HA 1996, Pt 6 or its allocation scheme, before granting such a tenancy\(^5\).

POWERS AND DUTIES UNDER THE HUMAN RIGHTS ACT 1998

20.110 Since 2 October 2000, all local housing authorities, along with all other public authorities, have had to refrain from acting in a way which is incompatible with the main provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights\(^1\). Private registered providers and registered social landlords may constitute public authorities for the purposes of allocating and terminating tenancies of social housing\(^2\).

---

20.111 Two Articles of the European Convention are particularly relevant to the subject of this book: an individual’s absolute right not to be subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment (Art 3) and the qualified right to respect for his or her home, family life, private life and correspondence (Art 8)\(^1\).

---

Powers and duties under the Human Rights Act 1998

20.112 Each of these Articles may give an individual the right to insist on a local housing authority or other public authority providing adequate accommodation where he or she has none. In practice this accommodation is likely to be provided pursuant to the Local Government Act 2000 (Wales) or the Localism Act 2011 (England)\(^1\), because if the individual were entitled to accommodation under another statute then it is unlikely that he or she would be in such dire circumstances as to require accommodation in order to avoid a breach of his or her human rights. Human rights considerations may however still arise in other statutory contexts, for example when a local authority is considering whether to exercise a power under CA 1989, CA 2014 (England) or SSWBA 2014 (Wales)\(^2\).

\(^1\) See 20.5–20.18.

Article 3

20.113 For a breach of the Human Rights Act 1998 (HRA 1998), Sch 1, Art 3 to be made out, there must be either:

‘... ill-treatment that attains a minimum level of severity and involves actual bodily injury or intense physical or mental suffering’, or treatment that:

‘... humiliates or debases an individual showing lack of respect for, or diminishing, his or her human dignity or arouses feelings of fear, anguish or inferiority capable of breaking an individual’s moral and physical resistance.’\(^1\)

\(^1\) Pretty v UK (2002) 35 EHRR 1, ECtHR.

20.114 If the failure to provide accommodation would reduce an individual to this condition, then public authorities may have to take measures to avoid that situation arising.

\(^1\) But see 20.118.

20.115 Prior to the implementation of the HRA 1998, the European Court of Human Rights considered the application of Art 3 in the case of a homeless person who was entitled to work and to claim benefits. He had been evicted from a night shelter due to his behaviour and had thereafter spent 14 months on the streets (essentially by his own choice). It was held that he had not demonstrated a minimum level of suffering sufficient to breach Art 3\(^1\).

\(^1\) O’Rourke v UK (Application No 39022/97) (2001), ECtHR.

20.116 An attempt, in R (Bernard) v Enfield London Borough Council\(^1\), to establish that the provision of grossly unsuitable temporary accommodation, which failed to meet the assessed needs of a disabled woman, was in breach of 20.116 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

Art 3 was not successful.

20.117 The courts in England and Wales have considered the extent to which the failure of public authorities to provide shelter and subsistence can infringe Art 3. It is not enough for there to be a risk, or even a real risk, of Art 3 suffering occurring; it must actually be occurring or be about to occur. Physical ill health or psychological disturbance arising from a lack of a roof over the individual’s head can constitute a condition that amounts to inhuman or degrading treatment. The courts will seek to establish whether the entire package of deprivation is so severe that it can properly be described as inhuman or degrading treatment. The threshold of severity would, in the ordinary way, be crossed where a person deprived of subsistence and restricted from work is obliged to sleep in the street, or is seriously hungry, or is unable to sustain the most basic level of hygiene. A recent example of a case where this threshold was found to be met is R (GS) v Camden London Borough Council. In that case the High Court held that the provision of accommodation was necessary under the Localism Act 2011, s 1 in order to avoid a breach of Art 3 in respect of a homeless Swiss national who suffered from physical and mental health problems (and was unable to work as a result) who was ineligible for support CA 2014.

1 R (Limbuela) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 66, [2006] 1 AC 396, HL (in the context of destitute asylum seekers) and R (de Almeida) v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2012] EWHC 1082 (Admin), (2012) 15 CCLR 318, Admin Ct (in the context of a terminally ill EEA national seeking accommodation under NAA 1948, s 21(1)).

4 R (Limbuela) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 66, [2006] 1 AC 396, HL.

20.118 Since local authorities, as public authorities, are subject to the obligation not to submit an individual to inhuman or degrading treatment, arguably they have a responsibility to provide accommodation to anyone in their area whose suffering is verging on being inhuman or degrading treatment. It is important to note, however, that the threshold is a strict one. A person must have no access to any form of support (including welfare benefits) and not be able to work, whether through physical or legal incapacity. The human rights obligation to support destitute asylum-seekers is undertaken by the Secretary of State; a local authority’s obligation, therefore, would only extend to a destitute person in its area who was not entitled to asylum support or any other statutory scheme providing support, was prohibited from claiming welfare benefits, who had no access to employment, and was without any form of shelter or private means of subsistence.

1 In R (Limbuela) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 66, [2006] 1 AC 396, HL, the Secretary of State was held to be under a statutory duty to provide support to an
Powers and duties under the Human Rights Act 1998

2 It would be surprising if this level of destitution were to be experienced by a British national, or a person with leave to remain in the UK and whose leave permitted him or her to claim welfare benefits. The scenario might be more likely to arise in the case of a person who does not have leave to remain in the UK, or whose leave is dependent upon him or her having no recourse to public funds. In those circumstances, local authorities might in any event have statutory duties to assist an adult applicant and certainly have powers and duties to assist and accommodate children (Children Act 1989, ss 17 and 20). See 20.19–20.38 and 20.72–20.84 for adult care and 20.39–20.68 and 20.85–20.98 for children’s services. If an adult applicant is seeking help from a local authority in order to avoid destitution, it is a matter for the local authority how it provides that help. In the case of a person without leave to remain in the UK, that help might consist of assisting him or her to return to his or her country of origin or making those arrangements with the Home Office.

Article 8

20.119 Claims centering on a public authority’s obligation not to interfere with an individual’s right to respect for his or her home, family, private life and correspondence under HRA 1998, Sch 1, Art 8 have had rather more success since the introduction of the HRA 1998. Article 8:

‘... concerns rights of central importance to the individual’s identity, self-determination, physical and moral integrity, maintenance of relationships with others and a settled and secure place in the community.”

1 Connors v UK [2004] HLR 52, ECHR, at 82.

20.120 It is well established in European human rights law that Art 8 does not contain a positive general obligation on central or local government to provide every individual with a home, though there will be exceptional cases where accommodation will need to be provided to avoid a breach of Art 8. R (de Almeida) v Kensington and Chelsea Royal London Borough Council was one such case. In that case, the High Court found that a local authority’s refusal to provide accommodation under NAA 1948, s 21(1) to a terminally ill Portuguese national with advanced and untreatable HIV/AIDS, combined with hepatitis C and cancer, was incompatible with his rights under both Arts 3 and 8.

1 See, among others, Marzari v Italy [1999] 28 EHRR CD 175, ECHR; O’Rourke v UK [Application No 00039022/97], ECHR.

20.121 Where accommodation is provided by public authorities it must not be of such standard or condition as to amount to a lack of respect within Art 8. Nor must it be allowed to fall to such a standard once occupied. Furthermore, if an individual is left without any accommodation, with the result that his or her family is fractured or private life is adversely affected, Art 8 may be engaged. This possibility has already been explored by the European Court of Human Rights in relation to a severely disabled individual.

2 Marzari v Italy [1999] 28 EHRR CD 175, ECtHR.
20.122 Other Help with Accommodation from Local Authorities

20.122 The conditions of the accommodation provided by the local authority in *R (Bernard) v Enfield London Borough Council*¹ were sufficiently demeaning to breach the applicant’s right to respect for her private and family life under Art 8. However, in *R (Anufrijeva) v Southwark London Borough Council*², a local authority was found not to have interfered with an elderly woman’s right to respect for her home, her family life or her private life, by virtue of the nature of temporary accommodation it had provided³. The court held that before a public authority could be held to have failed to respect an applicant’s private or family life, there had to be an element of culpability, involving (at the very least) knowledge by the public authority that the applicant’s private or family life was at risk.

³ See further R (McDonagh) v Enfield London Borough Council [2018] EWHC 1287 (Admin), Admin Ct where a failure to provide suitable accommodation for a family with a severely disabled young child, in breach of HA 1996, s 188(1), for a period in excess of two years, was found not to have resulted in a breach of Art 8.

20.123 The right to respect for an applicant’s home, protected by Art 8(1), can be relevant in a separate context. Where an occupier faces possession proceedings in respect of his or her home, the court has a duty to consider whether the making of a possession order is proportionate if that point is taken by the occupier⁴.

INTRODUCTION

21.1 The major duties and powers discussed in this book are those which are the responsibility of local housing authorities under the provisions of the Housing Act 1996 (HA 1996), Parts 6 (‘Allocation of Housing Accommodation’) and 7 (‘Homelessness’) in England. For local housing authorities in Wales, the relevant provisions are HA 1996, Part 6 and Housing (Wales) Act 2014 (HWA 2014), Part 2, (‘Homelessness’). Those local housing authorities must ensure that:

(1) they comply with the law;
(2) they perform the duties required by HA 1996 or H(W)A 2014, Part 2; and
(3) they lawfully exercise the powers given to them by HA 1996 or H(W)A 2014, Part 2.

1 As amended by Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (HRA 2017) for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
2 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

21.2 If the performance of a duty or exercise of a power has been contracted out, it will be the local housing authority itself that is answerable to the courts or the Ombudsmen. The local housing authority cannot escape that responsibility by reference to, or reliance upon, some other body.

1 In England, the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman. In Wales, the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales.

THE MOVE TOWARDS CONTRACTING OUT

21.3 A local housing authority is free to decide for itself how it wishes to organise the performance of its duties and the exercise of its powers. Traditionally, staff directly employed by the local housing authority would carry out those functions on behalf of the local housing authority.

21.4 In recent years, however, more and more local housing authorities have chosen to employ private contractors, frequently local private registered providers in England or registered social landlords in Wales, to carry out those functions for them. Even when they engage contractors, local housing authorities remain responsible for those contractors’ actions and also remain responsible to applicants for homelessness assistance, and to applicants for social housing, for any lapses made either by their own staff or by the contractors’ staff. Therefore, in order to protect their position, local housing authorities are sensibly advised to build into the contracts between themselves and the private contractors robust penalty and escape clauses, in case of poor performance by the contractors. So assured, more and more local housing authorities have been contracting out their homelessness and allocation functions.

THE RELEVANCE OF STOCK TRANSFER

21.5 Over 150 local housing authorities chose (with the consent of their tenants and the approval of the Secretary of State) to transfer all of their own housing stock to private registered providers or registered social landlords1. The law and guidance governing stock transfer itself is complex and outside the scope of this book. However, three particular points arise concerning homelessness and allocation of social housing following such a stock transfer.

1 H Pawson et al The impacts of housing stock transfers in urban Britain (Joseph Rowntree Press, 2009). The frequency of large-scale voluntary transfer has declined since 2009 and there have been none at all in England since July 2012.

21.6 First, even though a local housing authority no longer has any housing stock, and therefore cannot grant secure or introductory tenancies, it is still responsible for receiving and determining applications for homelessness assistance and for deciding (in response to an application for an allocation) who is to be nominated to private registered providers or registered social landlords for the grant of any assured tenancies (including nominations to any landlords who have acquired the local housing authority’s own stock). It must, therefore, still have an allocation scheme and make those nominations in accordance with that scheme.
The relevance of stock transfer 21.10

21.7 Second, some local housing authorities, having transferred the whole of their housing stock, have also contracted out their homelessness and/or allocation functions, usually to the transferee private registered provider or registered social landlord. Applicants may find that, for all intents and purposes, they appear to be dealing exclusively with staff working for a private registered provider or registered social landlord, from the moment that they apply (for homelessness assistance or under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme), up to receiving an offer of accommodation from that same private registered provider or registered social landlord. Despite that appearance, decisions that are made under one of the local housing authority’s statutory functions remain the responsibility of the local housing authority.

21.8 Third, the statutory obligations on a private registered provider or registered social landlord to co-operate with a local housing authority from which it has acquired housing stock do not mean that the purchasing private registered provider or registered social landlord is itself obliged to operate an allocation scheme in the same terms as that which would have been operated by the local housing authority. A private registered provider or registered social landlord will normally be required by the terms of the stock transfer contract to ensure that a certain proportion of its housing stock is available for the local housing authority to nominate applicants to. However, the private registered provider or registered social landlord may also operate its own policies governing which applicants it will accept in relation to the rest of its stock.

1 For example, HA 1996, s 213, see 14.252–14.257; H(W)A 2014, s 95, see 17.208–17.211.

21.9 Homes England, which regulates private registered providers in England, previously expected private registered providers to ‘co-operate with local authorities’ strategic housing functions, and their duties to meet identified local housing needs. This includes assistance with local authorities’ homelessness duties, and meeting obligations in nominations agreements. The extent of co-operation now required by Homes England is that ‘registered providers shall co-operate with relevant partners to help promote social, environmental and economic wellbeing in the areas where they own properties’ and that they should ‘co-operate with local partnership arrangements and strategic housing functions of local authorities where they are able to assist them in achieving their objectives’.

2 Neighbourhood and Community Standard, Homes and Communities Agency, April 2012, paras 1.2 and 2.2(b).

21.10 Where a local housing authority requests a private registered provider or registered social landlord to co-operate in offering accommodation to people with priority under the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, then the provider or landlord should co-operate to such extent as is reasonable. Similarly, if there is a request from a local housing authority in England to a private registered provider to co-operate in performing their homelessness functions, the provider or landlord should co-operate by rendering such assistance as is reasonable in the circumstances.

1 HA 1996, s 170.
21.10 Contracting out of Homelessness and Allocation Functions

2 HA 1996, s 213.

21.11 In Wales, there is an assumption that registered social landlords will co-operate with any request for assistance or request for information from a local housing authority in performing its homelessness functions. The registered social landlord must comply with the request, unless it considers that cooperating would be incompatible with its own duties or have an adverse effect on its own functions. If that is the case, it must reply in writing, giving reasons for the refusal.

1 H(W)A 2014, s 95(2) and (3). The Regulatory Framework for Housing Associations Registered in Wales (Welsh Government, December 2011) stated that registered social landlords should ‘work with other organisations to prevent and alleviate homelessness’ (Part B). There is no equivalent requirement governing co-operation in the current The Regulatory Framework for Housing Associations Registered in Wales (Welsh Government, May 2017).

2 H(W)A 2014, s 95(4) and (5), see 17.208–17.211. The Welsh Code advises that ‘it is important that the Local Authority has comprehensive agreements in place with each of its housing association partners covering the range of its expectations’, para 6.9.

THE DIFFERENT LEGAL STRUCTURES GOVERNING CONTRACTING OUT

21.12 When local housing authorities deliver their own homelessness and allocation services, they do so under HA 1996, Parts 6 and 7, or under H(W)A 2014, Part 2, and the Codes of Guidance issued by the Secretary of State and the Welsh Government pursuant to those statutory provisions. The legal basis for contracting out to any contractor is explained below under sub-headings that deal separately with allocation and homelessness functions. In practice, most of the contractors engaged by local housing authorities (for either or both of the functions) are private registered providers or registered social landlords.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

21.13 Private registered providers and registered social landlords do not have the same statutory powers and duties as local housing authorities. They are simply required by HA 1996 to ‘co-operate’ in the delivery of the local housing authority’s homelessness and allocation functions ‘to such extent as is reasonable in the circumstances’, if requested to do so by the local housing authority.

1 HA 1996, ss 170 (applicable to private registered providers and registered social landlords dealing with allocations by local housing authorities in both England and Wales) and 213(1) (applicable to private registered providers dealing with applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England). H(W)A 2014, s 95, creates an obligation on registered social landlords to co-operate over applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales, see 17.208–17.211.

21.14 Whether or not the local housing authority has disposed of its stock, if it has contracted out the HA 1996, Part 6 and/or the HA 1996, Part 7 or H(W)A 2014, Part 2, functions, the instrument regulating each private registered provider’s or registered social landlord’s (or other contractor’s) relationship with the local housing authority is the contract by which the private registered provider, registered social landlord or other contractor agrees to deliver the local housing authority’s homelessness or allocation service (or both) at a price. Again, guidance is provided by government on the contents of that contract, particularly where it forms part of an overall arrangement for stock transfer. Clearly, the terms of the contract will govern the standard of the service to be provided and, in cases of stock transfer, the extent to which the private registered provider or registered social landlord must make its vacancies available for nomination by the local housing authority.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

21.15 Where, exceptionally, the local housing authority contracts out its HA 1996, Part 6 or Part 7 functions or H(W)A 2014, Part 2, functions to another local authority, the legal basis for that process is given by the Local Government Act 1972, s 101 and the exact scope of the functions contracted out will be shown in the contract itself.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.

21.16 Any complaints by members of the public about the services provided by contractors acting on behalf of local housing authorities in respect of HA 19961 or H(W)A 2014, Part 2, functions are made against the local housing authorities themselves, not the contractors. Accordingly, any member of the public wishing to complain should use first the local housing authority’s complaints procedure2 and then complain to the Ombudsmen3.

1 As amended by HRA 2017 for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in England on or after 3 April 2018.
3 See 19.337-19.340. Note that a local housing authority was found guilty of serious maladministration by the Ombudsman when a housing association to which it had contracted out some of its homelessness responsibilities advised an applicant that complaints should be made to the Independent Housing Ombudsman and not to the Local Government Ombudsman (Complaint against East Dorset District Council, 05/B/08409, 22 June 2006).

HOMELNESS

The statutory basis governing contracting out of homelessness functions

Background to the present arrangements

21.17 As a matter of strict law, a local housing authority consists only of its elected councillors. In practice, no local housing authority, whatever its size, expects the majority of its functions (except general policy-making) to be carried out by its elected councillors. The Local Government Act 1972 permits the elected councillors to delegate the performance of the local housing authority’s functions to its own officers (staff employed directly by the local housing authority) and to other local authorities.\(^1\)

21.18 In the homelessness context, between 1985 and 1996, the statutory regime recognised a form of quasi-delegation.\(^1\) The legislation provided that where a local housing authority requested a registered housing association to assist it with the discharge of its homelessness functions, the association should co-operate in rendering such assistance as was reasonable in the circumstances.

\(^1\) Local Government Act 1972, s 101.

21.19 However, in recent years, many local housing authorities have actually employed private registered providers, registered social landlords or other private contractors to assist with the performance of their duties (and some have gone so far as to transfer the whole or part of their housing stock to the same or different contractors).\(^1\)

\(^1\) Governed by separate statutory powers: see 21.50–21.53.

21.20 In 1994 and 1995, the High Court considered the extent to which a local housing authority could contract out its homelessness functions. In R v West Dorset District Council and West Dorset Housing Association ex p Gerard\(^1\), the local housing authority had transferred all its stock to the housing association with which it also contracted for the provision of a homelessness advice and investigation service. On receipt of a summary report from the association, a local housing authority officer decided that the applicant in that case was not homeless. A deputy High Court judge held that the local housing authority remained responsible for taking ‘an active and dominant part in the investigative process’ even after contracting out. Since the local housing authority had not itself carried out any part of the inquiries into the applicant’s application for homelessness assistance (and, in addition, relevant representations made by the applicant’s solicitor had not been brought to the officer’s attention), the decision was quashed. Indeed, the whole administration of the local housing authority’s homelessness duties was held to be unlawful. A subsequent appeal against that judgment was dismissed by consent in the Court of Appeal.

\(^1\) (1995) 27 HLR 150, QBD.

21.21 Some 10 months later, another deputy High Court judge considered the same issue in R v Hertsmere Borough Council ex p Woolgar.\(^1\) That local housing authority had transferred its stock to two housing associations. A different decision (the suitability of accommodation offered) was under scrutiny, but the judge held that the same statutory framework applied. He went on to consider Housing Act 1985, s 72, the guidance offered in the Code, and government guidelines on transfer of housing stock, all of which clearly envisaged that:

- both the homelessness functions and a local housing authority’s housing stock could be transferred;
- that the local housing authority should retain responsibility for decisions made under its homelessness duties; and that the local housing authority should retain at least some nomination rights to its former housing.

1 (1995) 27 HLR 703, QBD.
2 See 21.18.
3 At that time Department of Environment’s Code of Guidance, para 11.7.
4 Large Scale Voluntary Transfers Guidelines (Department of the Environment, December 1993).

21.22 Having considered those materials, he held that the decision in Gerrard had been made without any scrutiny of the government’s guidelines and was therefore made per incuriam\(^1\). As a result, Hertsmere Borough Council’s scheme for delivering its homelessness duties, which amounted to its homelessness functions being carried out by a registered social landlord (now a private registered provider) and the accommodation offered being provided by that same landlord, was held to be lawful.

\(^1\) Without awareness of authority that might have made a difference to the court’s decision.

The modern framework

HA 1996, Pr 7

21.23 The judicial uncertainty created by these two conflicting decisions was soon resolved by Parliament\(^1\). The modern legislative framework permitting a local housing authority to contract out its homelessness functions is found in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, s 70. Under that Act, the Secretary of State has made the Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996\(^2\). Local housing authorities are now permitted to contract out the bulk of their homelessness functions\(^3\).

\(^1\) HA 1996, Pr 7, was the statutory framework for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in both England and Wales until 27 April 2015, when H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 (homelessness) came into effect for applications for homelessness assistance made to local housing authorities in Wales.
\(^2\) SI 1996/3205, as amended by the Housing (Wales) Act 2014 (Consequential Amendments) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/752 (W 59) reproduced at Appendix 2. See also English Code, chapter 21; Welsh Code, Annex 9, for guidance.
\(^3\) Except those listed at 21.26.

21.24 Particular conditions related to the carrying out of those functions can be (and should be) included in the contract itself, so that standards of performance are prescribed. The Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 provides that the contract cannot be for a period of more than 10 years, and may be for any shorter period\(^1\). The contract must also provide that it can be revoked at any time by the Minister or by the local housing authority\(^2\). The local housing authority remains responsible for any acts or omissions made by the contractor in the performance of the local housing authority’s homelessness functions, unless the contractor is in breach of the conditions specified in the contract or the contractor has committed a criminal offence.

\(^1\) Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, s 69(5)(a).
\(^2\) Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, s 69(5)(b).
21.25 Contracting out of Homelessness and Allocation Functions

In *Runa Begum v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council*¹, the House of Lords considered whether such a contractor could be considered ‘independent’ of the local housing authority for the purposes of the European Convention on Human Rights, Art 6(1)². If contractors were held to be ‘independent’ for those purposes, review decisions that were being taken by officers employed by the local housing authority (who were obviously not independent) could, instead, be taken by contracted individuals or organisations in order to obtain the necessary measure of independence. The House of Lords held that a contractor, whose services could be dispensed with, was probably no more independent than an officer employed directly by the local housing authority. However, Lord Bingham, in an obiter paragraph, added that he had very considerable doubt whether the resolution of applications for review fell within a local housing authority’s relevant functions and therefore could be contracted out at all³. Since then, the Court of Appeal has held that the making of review decisions is a function that can be contracted by a local housing authority: *De-Winter Heald v Brent London Borough Council*⁴. More recently the Court of Appeal held that the public sector equality duty on local housing authorities at Equality Act 2010, s 149⁵, was not a function that could be contracted out, but that the application of the public sector equality duty within the local housing authority’s homelessness functions did not amount to a delegation of the duty⁶.

² Which provides that civil rights are to be determined by a body independent of the parties. The Supreme Court has held that decision-making on applications for homelessness assistance does not involve a determination of an applicant’s ‘civil rights’ and so Art 6(1) does not apply: Ali v Birmingham City Council [2010] UKSC 8, [2010] 2 AC 39, SC; and Poshteh v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2017] UKSC 36, [2017] 624, SC; see also Fazia Ali v UK (App No 40378, 20 October 2015) ECtHR, where the European Court of Human Rights took a different view.

21.26 The local housing authority may not contract out four specified functions:

1. for local housing authorities in England, their power to provide finance to a person or organisation so that housing advice and information is provided on the local housing authority’s behalf⁷;
2. for local housing authorities in England, their power to assist such a person or organisation by providing premises, furniture, or its own housing staff⁸;
3. for local housing authorities in England, their power to finance, or provide premises, furniture or the services of its staff, to a voluntary organisation concerned with homelessness or matters relating to homelessness⁹; and
4. for local housing authorities in both England and Wales, their obligation to render assistance if asked by another local housing authority to assist it in the discharge of that local housing authority’s HA 1996, Pt 7⁰.

² Which provides that civil rights are to be determined by a body independent of the parties. The Supreme Court has held that decision-making on applications for homelessness assistance does not involve a determination of an applicant’s ‘civil rights’ and so Art 6(1) does not apply: Ali v Birmingham City Council [2010] UKSC 8, [2010] 2 AC 39, SC; and Poshteh v Kensington & Chelsea Royal London Borough Council [2017] UKSC 36, [2017] 624, SC; see also Fazia Ali v UK (App No 40378, 20 October 2015) ECtHR, where the European Court of Human Rights took a different view.
21.27 In addition, local housing authorities in England cannot contract out their obligations under Homelessness Act 2002, ss 1–4 to carry out homelessness reviews and strategies1.

21.28 Where a local housing authority has contracted out its function of making review decisions, the review decision is only lawful if the process of contracting out complied with the statutory obligations. In Shacklady v Flintshire County Council, the local housing authority could not produce any written authorisation in respect of the contract. The judge found that the absence of any written record containing a period of appointment was a serious departure from the statutory requirements and could not be waived. The authorisation to the contractor was therefore invalid and the review decision was a nullity. In England v Westminster City Council, the courts found that the review decision had not been actually contracted out. The private registered provider involved had provided information to the reviewing officer but had not made the decision1.

3 See also Hussain v Waltham Forest London Borough Council [2015] EWCA Civ 14, [2015] 1 WLR 2912, [2015] 16, CA, for a recent example of a review decision being taken by an agency contracted to manage the local housing authority’s functions under HA 1996, Pt 7.

21.29 As already noted1, the obligation on private registered providers, social services’ authorities, or other local housing authorities which receive requests for assistance from a local housing authority in England is to ‘co-operate in rendering such assistance in the discharge of the functions to which the request relates as is reasonable in the circumstances’2.

1 See 21.8–21.11.
2 HA 1996, s 213(1) and (2).

21.30 There are fewer restrictions limiting which functions in H(W)A 2014, Pt 2 can be contracted out by a local housing authority in Wales. Indeed,
21.30 Contracting out of Homelessness and Allocation Functions only function that cannot be contracted out is the obligation on a local housing authority to co-operate when it has received a request for co-operation, or for information, from a local housing authority in Wales¹.

¹ Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996, SI 1996/3205, art 3 and Sch 2 as amended by the Housing (Wales) Act (Consequential Amendments) Regulations 2015, SI 2015/752 (W 59). The request would be made under H(W)A 2014, s 95, see 22.11.

21.31 A local housing authority in Wales may make a request for co-operation so that it can receive help in order to achieve any or all of the following objectives:

• the prevention of homelessness;
• that suitable accommodation is or will be available for people who are or may become homeless;
• that satisfactory support is available for people who are or may become homeless; or • effective performance of any function under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2¹.

21.32 The request can be made to any other local housing authority, to a social services authority, to a registered social landlord, a new town corporation, a private registered provider of social housing or a housing action trust. The request can be directed to any of those bodies, whether in Wales or in England¹. A local housing authority in Wales can also request that any of those bodies provide it with information required for the exercise of its functions under H(W)A 2014, Pt 2².

² H(W)A 2014, s 95(3).

21.33 When the request for assistance or for information is received, the recipient must comply unless it considers that doing so would either be incompatible with the recipient’s own duties or would otherwise have an adverse effect on the exercise of the recipient’s functions¹. If that is the case, the recipient must put in writing to the local housing authority the reasons for its decision². Guidance is given in chapter 6 of the Welsh Code and the point is succinctly expressed: ‘the default position will be that the partner organisation will co-operate to meet a request for assistance’³.

¹ H(W)A 2014, s 95(2) and (3).
² H(W)A 2014, s 95(4).
³ Welsh Code, para 6.4.

21.34 Unlike local housing authorities in England¹, there is no prohibition on a local housing authority contracting out its duties to carry out a homelessness review and formulate a homelessness strategy².

Case law on contracting out of a review decision

21.35 As already noted\(^1\), at least one senior judge in 2003 thought that the decision-making involved in the review process might not be something that could be contracted out\(^2\). However, three different cases decided by the Court of Appeal and High Court have confirmed that there is nothing unlawful in a review decision being taken by an individual who was not employed by the local housing authority.

1 See 21.25.

21.36 In De-Winter Heald v Brent London Borough Council\(^1\), the local housing authority had delegated the decision-making on a request for a review to an external ‘reviews manager’ and his company. The Court of Appeal considered the Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996\(^2\). It noted the functions in art 3 and Sch 2 that could not be contracted out by a local housing authority. The decision-making required once a request for a review had been received was not amongst those functions excluded from being contracted out. It followed that the decision-making and notification of a decision made on review could be lawfully contracted out by a local housing authority. The local housing authority, of course, remains responsible for the consequences of that review decision.

2 SI 1996/3205.

21.37 In Tachie v Welwyn Hatfield Borough Council\(^1\), the local housing authority had contracted out all of its homelessness functions under HA 1996, Part 7, to an arms-length management organisation. The judge noted that the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, s 70, is ‘wide enough to cover the entirety of the . . . homelessness functions, whether or not the latter comprise “discretionary decision-making”’\(^2\). He then considered the Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996\(^3\) and noted that the specified homelessness functions that could not be contracted out did not include the making of review decisions and so there was no general prohibition on that function being contracted out. He noted that para 21.2 of the English Code suggested that ‘making strategic decisions’ should not be contracted out. He concluded that decisions made on review were ‘evaluative judgments which entail an assessment and interpretation of the available material, and the drawing of inferential conclusions from the facts’. They were evaluative, but not policy or strategic decision-making\(^4\). It followed that there was no prohibition on contracting out the function of decision-making on review.

21.38 Contracting out of Homelessness and Allocation Functions

21.38 In Smith v Haringey London Borough Council, the appellant argued that Equality Act 2010, s 149, did not permit a local housing authority to contract out decisions in which the public sector equality duty was engaged, because that duty was not delegable. The Court of Appeal accepted that the duty was not delegable, but held that the effect of contracting out is that the function in question shall be treated as having been exercised by the local housing authority. So the principle that the public sector equality duty could not be delegated had not been breached. The Court also heard, and dismissed arguments that the local housing authority had failed to adopt the correct method of contracting out decisions, in breach of its own constitutional requirements, and that in deciding to contract the homelessness decision-making functions, the local housing authority had not considered the public sector equality duty.

4 Lewison LJ at [81]–[88]. The court also suggested that such issues should not be raised in HA 1996, s 204 appeals [90]. See also Servis v Newham London Borough Council [2018] EWHC 1547 (QB), where the High Court upheld a refusal to order specific disclosure of documents relating to the contracting out process which had been sought in order to sustain a similar challenge. The documents sought were not relevant to any of the applications existing grounds of appeal and the circuit judge had not erred in refusing to order disclosure.

Using a contractor’s accommodation for the homeless

21.39 Different statutory provisions govern a local housing authority’s ability to use accommodation from other providers in order to perform its HA 1996, Part 7 or H(W)A 2014, Part 2, duties to applicants for homelessness assistance. As an alternative to providing the applicant with its own accommodation, HA 1996, s 206, and H(W)A 2014, s 68, permit a local housing authority to perform its duty to provide accommodation for an applicant and members of his or her household, by securing that the applicant obtains suitable accommodation ‘from some other person’ or, even, merely by ‘giving him such advice and assistance as will secure that suitable accommodation is available from some other person’. If the latter course is taken, then the local housing authority must ensure that the advice and assistance does actually secure that suitable accommodation is obtained. If not, the local housing authority’s duty to secure accommodation from its own stock or from some other person remains. These provisions have given local housing authorities considerable flexibility to arrange for accommodation for the homeless to be supplied, under contract, by private registered providers, registered social landlords and other private contractors.

3 See 19.8–19.10.

21.40 The ability to secure accommodation ‘from some other person’ allows a local housing authority to arrange for a private landlord, a private registered provider or registered social landlord to grant a tenancy directly to an applicant in performance of any duty to accommodate the applicant. HA 1996, s 193 and H(W)A 2014, s 76 also allow the local housing authority to bring the main housing duty to an end when an applicant accepts an offer of an assured tenancy from a private registered provider or registered social landlord. Local housing authorities in England can also bring their duties to an end when:

- they are satisfied that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for his or her occupation and there is a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation will be available for at least six months;
- they are satisfied that the applicant has refused an offer suitable accommodation which was available for his or her occupation and there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation will be available for at least six months;
- the applicant has refused a final accommodation offer in order to bring the HA 1996, s 189B(2), relief duty or the HA 1996, s 193C(4), accommodation duty to an end; or
- the applicant has accepted or refused a private rented sector offer made in order to bring the HA 1996, s 193(2), main housing duty to an end.

Ensuring that the private contractor maintains the appropriate level of service

21.41 Given that the local housing authority remains responsible for the calibre and correctness of its homelessness decisions, even when the inquiries and recommendations leading to those decisions have been made by a private contractor, it is vital for a local housing authority to be able to rely upon the quality of the service provided by the contractor. That safeguard should be contained in the contract between the local housing authority and the contractor. The Audit Commission noted (in the context of stock transfer):

‘ . . . few [authorities] have experience of contracting out these services, and there is rarely time during the hectic [stock] transfer process to review them, decide their best location and draw up a good contract. As a result, some contracts are poorly written or difficult to monitor. Attention can focus on “maintaining” minimum service rather than improvement.’

1 Housing after Transfer, the Local Authority Role (The Audit Commission, 2002), Chapter 3, para 64.

21.42 The Housing Transfer Manual: period to 31 March 2016 contains some guidance on drawing up the contract in para 6.11. There should be a plain English summary of its contents. Where either party is to provide services to the other, the terms should be set out in service level agreements.

ALLOCATION OF ACCOMMODATION

21.43 The same statutory framework applies to the contracting out of the functions involved in the allocation of social housing. The Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996,’ made by the Secretary of State under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, s 70, permits local housing authorities to contract out the bulk of their functions involved in the allocation of social housing under HA 1996, Part 6. Many local housing authorities have disposed of the whole of their housing stock to local private registered providers or registered social landlords, so that the local housing authority’s allocations are made by nomination to private registered providers or registered social landlords for assured tenancies, or to other local housing authorities.

1 SI 1996/3205, reproduced in Appendix 1.

21.44 The overall policy of the allocation scheme is for the local housing authority to determine, subject to complying with HA 1996, Part 6, the regulations and the Codes. The House of Lords has noted that ‘[h]ousing allocation policy is a difficult exercise which requires not only social and political sensitivity and judgment, but also local expertise and knowledge’

Policy decisions on the allocation scheme are political decisions.

21.45 It follows that the local housing authority is responsible for general policy decisions on:

(1) whether or not it will offer ‘choice’ in its allocation scheme, or provide applicants with the opportunity to express preferences;

(2) whether it will frame the scheme so as to give additional preferences within the reasonable preference categories and, if so, based on what criteria;
Allocation of accommodation 21.49

(3) on what principles it will prioritise different applicants within the reasonable preference categories; and

(4) whether it will provide for the allocation of accommodation to persons of a particular description and, if so, what accommodation, and to whom.

Functions

21.46 Having drawn up its allocation scheme, the local housing authority may contract out nearly all of its functions under HA 1996, Part 6 to a contractor. The contractor’s staff, therefore, could receive an application, ensure that the applicant is given the information to which he or she is entitled, provide advice and assistance with the making of an application, process the application, make any decisions required to be made in respect of the application and, in accordance with the policy, arrange for the selection of a secure or introductory tenant, or nominate the applicant to a private registered provider or registered social landlord for an assured tenancy. At each stage the contractor will be taking the practical steps, but the local housing authority remains liable for the decisions.

21.47 The local housing authority cannot contract out the duties:

(1) to determine the terms of its allocation scheme;

(2) to allocate in accordance with that scheme; and

(3) to make the scheme available for inspection.

1 HA 1996, s 166A(13) for local housing authorities in England; HA 1996, s 167(7) for local housing authorities in Wales. See 1.23–1.51. These sections refer to adopting or altering an allocation scheme and to consulting private registered providers and registered social landlords. See also HA 1996, s 168(2); SI 1996/3205, art 2 and Sch 1.

21.48 If the contractor’s staff fail to treat an applicant in accordance with the local housing authority’s scheme, it is the local housing authority that will be answerable for that failure.

21.49 In the unreported case of R (Uddin) v Tower Hamlets London Borough Council, Mr Uddin was a tenant of a private registered provider who needed a transfer to larger accommodation. The local housing authority and private registered provider operated a common housing register and it was the private registered provider which made the decisions on his application for a transfer. The applicant argued that the private registered provider was not authorised by the local housing authority to make the decision. It appears that the local housing authority did not have any contemporaneous documents authorising the private registered provider to make the decision. It sought to ratify previous decisions retrospectively and made a resolution authorising future contracting out of decision-making under its allocation scheme. The case was subsequently settled\(^1\).

\(^1\) CO/8098/2008.

Stock transfers and nominations to private registered providers or registered social landlords 21.50 Where a local housing authority is proposing a large scale voluntary transfer of its own stock, so that there will no longer be any council-owned accommodation in its district, any future allocation made under its allocation scheme will be by way of a nomination to a private registered provider or registered social landlord for an assured tenancy. In order to ensure that it can continue to comply with its statutory duty to maintain an allocation scheme, and to allocate accommodation, the local housing authority must ensure that the purchasing private registered provider(s) or registered social landlord(s) will accept its nominations\(^1\).

\(^1\) See Chapter 6.

21.51 There are statutory duties and contractual obligations requiring that private registered providers and registered social landlords co-operate with local housing authorities to ensure that a certain amount of their available accommodation is provided to people nominated by local housing authorities. If a local housing authority requests that a private registered provider or registered social landlord co-operates with it by offering accommodation to people on the local housing authority’s allocation scheme, the private registered provider or registered social landlord is under a statutory duty to co-operate ‘to such extent as is reasonable in the circumstances’\(^2\). In addition, when the local housing authority has transferred its own stock to the private registered provider or registered social landlord, after the process of government approval, consultation and balloting, it will have done so in a contract. The local housing authority should ensure that the terms of the contract provide that the private registered provider or registered social landlord will make a certain proportion of its empty properties available for people nominated by the local housing authority under its allocation scheme\(^2\). Any proposed transfer that does not include a contractual obligation on the private registered provider or registered social landlord to make a specified proportion of empty accommodation available for allocation is unlikely to receive government approval.

\(^1\) HA 1996, s 170.

21.52 Private registered providers and registered social landlords, including stock transfer associations, can therefore operate quotas under which a proportion (which can be up to 100%) of their vacancies will be allocated on the basis of the local housing authority’s nominations. The remaining part of their vacancies will be allocated by the private registered provider or registered social landlord itself, either to its own tenants seeking transfers or to people who have applied directly to the private registered provider or registered social landlord for accommodation.
Allocation of accommodation 21.53

21.53 Generally, if a private registered provider or registered social landlord supplies a proportion of its empty stock for local housing authority nominations, it should not impose its own conditions on the type of applicant nominated, and should be contractually obliged to accept anyone whom the local housing authority nominates. However, when it comes to the remainder of the vacancies, private registered providers and registered social landlords will make their own decisions as to who is to be offered each vacancy. Each private registered provider and registered social landlord, therefore, must have its own policy governing transfer applications (from its own tenants) and any applications made to it directly rather than through the local housing authority.

[Allocation schemes]

[166A Allocation in accordance with allocation scheme: England]

(1) Every local housing authority in England must have a scheme (their “allocation scheme”) for determining priorities, and as to the procedure to be followed, in allocating housing accommodation.

For this purpose “procedure” includes all aspects of the allocation process, including the persons or descriptions of persons by whom decisions are taken.

(2) The scheme must include a statement of the authority’s policy on offering people who are to be allocated housing accommodation—

(a) a choice of housing accommodation; or

(b) the opportunity to express preferences about the housing accommodation to be allocated to them.

(3) As regards priorities, the scheme shall, subject to subsection (4), be framed so as to secure that reasonable preference is given to—

(a) people who are homeless (within the meaning of Part 7);

(b) people who are owed a duty by any local housing authority under section 190(2), 193(2) or 195(2) (or under section 65(2) or 68(2) of the Housing Act 1985) or who are occupying accommodation secured by any such authority under section 192(3);

(c) people occupying insanitary or overcrowded housing or otherwise living in unsatisfactory housing conditions;

(d) people who need to move on medical or welfare grounds (including any grounds relating to a disability); and

(e) people who need to move to a particular locality in the district of the authority, where failure to meet that need would cause hardship (to themselves or to others).

The scheme may also be framed so as to give additional preference to particular descriptions of [people within one or more of paragraphs (a) to (e)] (being descriptions of people with urgent housing needs).

[The scheme must be framed so as to give additional preference to a person with urgent housing needs who falls within one or more of paragraphs (a) to (e) and who—

(i) is serving in the regular forces and is suffering from a serious injury, illness or disability which is attributable (wholly or partly) to the person’s service,
(ii) formerly served in the regular forces,

(iii) has recently ceased, or will cease to be entitled, to reside in accommodation provided by the Ministry of Defence following the death of that person’s spouse or civil partner who has served in the regular forces and whose death was attributable (wholly or partly) to that service, or

(iv) is serving or has served in the reserve forces and is suffering from a serious injury, illness or disability which is attributable (wholly or partly) to the person’s service.

For this purpose “the regular forces” and “the reserve forces” have the meanings given by section 374 of the Armed Forces Act 2006.

(4) People are to be disregarded for the purposes of subsection (3) if they would not have fallen within paragraph (a) or (b) of that subsection without the local housing authority having had regard to a restricted person (within the meaning of Part 7).

(5) The scheme may contain provision for determining priorities in allocating housing accommodation to people within subsection (3); and the factors which the scheme may allow to be taken into account include—

(a) the financial resources available to a person to meet his housing costs;

(b) any behaviour of a person (or of a member of his household) which affects his suitability to be a tenant;

(c) any local connection (within the meaning of section 199) which exists between a person and the authority’s district.

(6) Subject to subsection (3), the scheme may contain provision about the allocation of particular housing accommodation—

(a) to a person who makes a specific application for that accommodation;

(b) to persons of a particular description (whether or not they are within subsection (3)).

(7) The Secretary of State may by regulations—

(a) specify further descriptions of people to whom preference is to be given as mentioned in subsection (3), or

(b) amend or repeal any part of subsection (3).

(8) The Secretary of State may by regulations specify factors which a local housing authority in England must not take into account in allocating housing accommodation.

(9) The scheme must be framed so as to secure that an applicant for an allocation of housing accommodation—

(a) has the right to request such general information as will enable him to assess—

(i) how his application is likely to be treated under the scheme (including in particular whether he is likely to be regarded as a member of a group of people who are to be given preference by virtue of subsection (3)); and

(ii) whether housing accommodation appropriate to his needs is likely to be made available to him and, if so, how long it is likely to be before such accommodation becomes available for allocation to him;

(b) has the right to request the authority to inform him of any decision about the facts of his case which is likely to be, or has been, taken into account in considering whether to allocate housing accommodation to him; and

(c) has the right to request a review of a decision mentioned in paragraph (b), or in section 160ZA(9), and to be informed of the decision on the review and the grounds for it.

(10) As regards the procedure to be followed, the scheme must be framed in accordance with such principles as the Secretary of State may prescribe by regulations.
A1.1 England: Allocation

(11) Subject to the above provisions, and to any regulations made under them, the authority may decide on what principles the scheme is to be framed.

(12) A local housing authority in England must, in preparing or modifying their allocation scheme, have regard to—
   (a) their current homelessness strategy under section 1 of the Homelessness Act 2002,
   (b) their current tenancy strategy under section 150 of the Localism Act 2011, and
   (c) in the case of an authority that is a London borough council, the London housing strategy.

(13) Before adopting an allocation scheme, or making an alteration to their scheme reflecting a major change of policy, a local housing authority in England must—
   (a) send a copy of the draft scheme, or proposed alteration, to every private registered provider of social housing and registered social landlord with which they have nomination arrangements (see section 159(4)), and
   (b) afford those persons a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposals.

(14) A local housing authority in England shall not allocate housing accommodation except in accordance with their allocation scheme.

MINISTERIAL FOREWORD

A1.2

Social housing is of enormous importance - for the millions who live in it now, and the many more who look to it to provide the support they need in future - and the way it is allocated is key to creating communities where people choose to live and are able to prosper.

Under the previous Government housing waiting lists almost doubled, with many people left languishing on waiting lists for years. That is why we have taken decisive steps to tackle this problem, including an affordable homes programme set to exceed expectations and deliver up to 170,000 new homes and lever in £19.5 billion of new investment – in stark contrast to the net reduction of 421,000 affordable homes for rent from 1997 to 2010. Through the Localism Act 2011 we have introduced the most radical reform to social housing for a generation.

The new freedoms in the Localism Act which allow councils to better manage their waiting lists and promote mobility for existing social tenants came into force on 18 June. This guidance will assist councils to make full use of these new freedoms - and the existing flexibilities within the allocation legislation - to encourage work and mobility, and to tailor their allocation priorities to meet local needs and local circumstances.

The guidance makes clear that we expect social homes to go to people who genuinely need them, such as hard working families and those who are looking to adopt or foster a child in need of a stable family; and not to those who do not, such as people who already own a home that is suitable for them to use.

Through the Military Covenant, the Government has made clear its responsibility to support our Armed Forces in return for the important contribution they make to the country. This guidance will assist councils to ensure that Service families get the priority for social housing they deserve.

The guidance encourages councils to adopt a modern measure of overcrowding and encourages them to give appropriate priority to tenants who want to downsize, helping them move to smaller, more manageable properties and freeing up precious social housing for crowded families.

I know that an increasing number of councils are already starting to think creatively about how social housing can change people’s lives. This guidance will help others follow suit.

It is half the size of the previous guidance it replaces and is evidence of the Government’s commitment to ‘cutting red tape’. It is also an important part of the Government’s commitment to make the social housing system more flexible and responsive, to get the best out of our four million social homes, and to make the system fairer for all.

Rt Hon Grant Shapps, MP

CHAPTER 1

Scope of guidance and definition of an allocation

1.1 This guidance is issued to local housing authorities (‘housing authorities’) in England under s 169 of the Housing Act 1996 (‘the 1996 Act’). Housing authorities are required to have regard to it in exercising their functions under Part 6 of the 1996 Act (‘Part 6’). In so far as this guidance comments on the law, it can only reflect the Department’s understanding at the time of issue.

1.2 This guidance replaces all previous guidance on social housing allocations.

Definition of an ‘allocation’

1.3 For the purposes of Part 6, a housing authority allocates accommodation when it:

• selects a person to be a secure or introductory tenant of accommodation held by that authority
• nominates a person to be a secure or introductory tenant of accommodation held by another housing authority
• nominates a person to be an assured tenant of accommodation held by a Private Registered Provider (or Registered Social Landlord in Wales) (s 159(2))

1.4 The term ‘assured tenant’ includes a person with an assured shorthold tenancy, including of an Affordable Rent property.1 ‘Secure tenant’ includes a person with a flexible tenancy granted under s 107A of the Housing Act 1985.2

Allocations to existing tenants

1.5 Provisions in relation to existing tenants are contained in s 159(4A) and (4B). These provide that Part 6 does not apply to an allocation of accommodation by a housing authority to a tenant of a local authority or Private Registered Provider unless:

• the allocation involves a transfer made at the tenant’s request, and
• the authority is satisfied that the tenant has reasonable preference.

Accordingly, social tenants applying to the housing authority for a transfer who are considered to have reasonable preference for an allocation must be treated on the same basis as new applicants in accordance with the requirements of s 166A(3).

1.6 Transfers at the tenant’s request, where the authority is satisfied the tenant does not have reasonable preference, do not fall within Part 6 and housing authorities may set their own transfer policies in relation to these tenants. Authorities should consider how to make the best use of this flexibility. Providing tenants with greater opportunities to move within the social sector can help promote social and economic mobility and make the best use of social housing stock.

1.7 Authorities should consider the importance of giving social tenants who under-occupy their accommodation appropriate priority for a transfer. This will be important in light of the measure in the Welfare Reform Act 2012 which will reduce Housing Benefit entitlement for working age social sector tenants who under-occupy their property (measured in accordance with the Local Housing Allowance size criteria) from April 2013. Authorities should also consider whether there are other provisions that might make it more difficult for under-occupiers to move, such as a prohibition against tenants with minor rent arrears transferring, and the scope for removing or revising these in relation to under-occupiers.

1.8 Housing authorities may decide to operate a separate allocation system for transferring tenants who are not in the reasonable preference categories (with a separate waiting list and lettings policy) or to continue with a single allocation system which covers all applicants but which, for example, rewards transferring tenants with a good tenancy record, or gives a degree of priority to those who want to move for work.

1.9 Transfers that the housing authority initiates for management purposes do not fall within Part 6. These would include a temporary decant to allow repairs to a property to be carried out. The renewal of a flexible tenancy in the same property also does not fall within Part 6; neither do mutual exchanges between existing tenants, including exchanges between secure and assured tenants and those with flexible tenancies (under s 107A of the Housing Act 1985). Other specific exemptions from the provisions of Part 6 are set out in s 160 of the 1996 Act and the Allocation of Housing (England) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3264).

1 Affordable Rent is not subject to the national rent regime but is subject to other rent controls that require a rent (including service charges, where applicable) of no more than 80% of the local market rent.
2 Inserted by s 154 of the Localism Act 2011.
3 The LHA size criteria allow one bedroom for each: adult couple; any other adult (aged 16 or over); two children of the same sex aged 10 or over; two children under 10 regardless of sex; any other child.

CHAPTER 2

Overview of the amendments to Part 6 made by the Localism Act 2011

2.1 The Localism Act 2011 introduces significant amendments to Part 6. The main policy objectives behind these amendments are to:

- enable housing authorities to better manage their housing waiting list by giving them the power to determine which applicants do or do not qualify for an allocation of social housing. Authorities will be able to operate a more focused list which better reflects local circumstances and can be understood more readily by local people. It will also be easier for authorities to manage unrealistic expectations by excluding people who have little or no prospect of being allocated accommodation;
- make it easier for existing social tenants to move by removing the constraints of Part 6 from those social tenants who apply to the housing authority for a transfer, unless they have reasonable preference. Housing authorities will be able to strike a balance between meeting the needs of existing tenants and new applicants for social housing, while making best use of their stock. Part 6 continues to apply to transferring tenants with reasonable preference, ensuring they continue to receive priority under the authority’s allocation scheme;
- maintain the protection provided by the statutory reasonable preference criteria – ensuring that priority for social housing goes to those in the greatest need.
Allocation of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012 A1.2

2.2 The detailed changes to Part 6 contained in the Localism Act 2011 are set out in the following paragraphs.

2.3 By virtue of new s 159(4B) the term ‘allocation’ continues to apply to a transfer at the request of an existing secure, introductory or assured tenant where the authority is satisfied that he or she has ‘reasonable preference’ for an allocation. Existing secure, introductory and assured tenants seeking a transfer who are not considered to have reasonable preference are now outside the scope of Part 6 (s 159(4A).

2.4 New s 160ZA replaces s 160A in relation to allocations by housing authorities in England. Social housing may only be allocated to ‘qualifying persons’ and housing authorities are given the power to determine what classes of persons are or are not qualified to be allocated housing (s 160ZA(6) and (7)). These requirements are in addition to the provisions on eligibility in respect of persons from abroad (s 160ZA(2) and (4)) which continue to be set centrally. The power for a housing authority to decide that an applicant is to be treated as ineligible by reason of unacceptable behaviour serious enough to make him unsuitable to be a tenant is redundant and has therefore been repealed.

2.5 New s 166A requires housing authorities in England to allocate accommodation in accordance with a scheme which must be framed to ensure that certain categories of applicants are given reasonable preference. With certain exceptions, s 166A replicates the provisions in s 167 which continues to apply to allocations by housing authorities in Wales. Section 166A(9) includes a new requirement for an allocation scheme to give a right to review a decision on qualification in s 160AZ(9) and to be informed of the decision on the review and the grounds for it. This is in addition to the existing right to review a decision on eligibility. Section 166A(12) is new and provides that authorities must have regard to their homelessness and tenancy strategies when framing their allocation scheme.

2.6 The provisions in s 167 which allow for no preference to be given to a person guilty of serious unacceptable behaviour (s 167(2B) – (2D)) are not reproduced in s 166A. However, the power to take behaviour – whether good or poor - into account in determining priorities between people in the reasonable preference categories remains (new s 166A(5)(b)).

2.7 The requirement for an allocation scheme to contain a statement of the authority’s policy on offering a choice of accommodation or the opportunity to express preferences about their accommodation is retained (s 166A(2)). However, the requirement to provide a copy of this statement to people to whom they owe a homelessness duty (under s 193(3A) or s 195(3A) of the 1996 Act) is repealed.¹

Eligibility and qualification

3.1 Housing authorities must consider all applications made in accordance with the procedural requirements of the authority’s allocation scheme (s 166(3)). In considering applications, authorities must ascertain:

• if an applicant is eligible for an allocation of accommodation, and
• if he or she qualifies for an allocation of accommodation.

Eligibility

3.2 An applicant may be ineligible for an allocation of accommodation under s 160ZA(2) or (4). Authorities are advised to consider applicants’ eligibility at the time of the initial application and again when considering making an allocation to them, particularly where a substantial amount of time has elapsed since the original application.
A1.2 England: Allocation

Joint Tenancies

3.3 Under s 160ZA(1)(b), a housing authority must not grant a joint tenancy to two or more people if any one of them is a person from abroad who is ineligible. However, where two or more people apply and one of them is eligible, the authority may grant a tenancy to the person who is eligible. In addition, while ineligible family members must not be granted a tenancy, they may be taken into account in determining the size of accommodation which is to be allocated.

Existing Tenants

3.4 The eligibility provisions do not apply to applicants who are already secure or introductory tenants or assured tenants of a Private Registered Provider. Most transferring tenants fall outside the scope of the allocation legislation (s 159(4A)); while those who are considered to have reasonable preference for an allocation are specifically exempted from the eligibility provisions by virtue of s 160ZA(5).

Persons from abroad

3.5 A person may not be allocated accommodation under Part 6 if he or she is a person from abroad who is ineligible for an allocation under s 160ZA of the 1996 Act. There are two categories for the purposes of s 160ZA:

(i) a person subject to immigration control - such a person is not eligible for an allocation of accommodation unless he or she comes within a class prescribed in regulations made by the Secretary of State (s 160ZA(2)), and

(ii) a person from abroad other than a person subject to immigration control – regulations may provide for other descriptions of persons from abroad who, although not subject to immigration control, are to be treated as ineligible for an allocation of accommodation (s 160ZA(4)).

3.6 The regulations setting out which classes of persons from abroad are eligible or ineligible for an allocation are the Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006 No.1294) (‘the Eligibility Regulations’).

Persons subject to immigration control

3.7 The term ‘person subject to immigration control’ is defined in s 13(2) of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 as a person who under the Immigration Act 1971 requires leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom (whether or not such leave has been given).

3.8 The following categories of persons do not require leave to enter or remain in the UK:

(i) British citizens
(ii) certain Commonwealth citizens with a right of abode in the UK
(iii) Irish citizens, who are not subject to immigration control in the UK because the Republic of Ireland forms part of the Common Travel Area (see paragraph 3.11 (iii) below) with the UK which allows free movement
(iv) EEA nationals, and their family members, who have a right to reside in the UK that derives from EU law. Whether an EEA national (or family member) has a particular right to reside in the UK (or another Member State) will depend on the circumstances, particularly their economic status (e.g. whether he or she is a worker, self-employed, a student, or economically inactive)
(v) persons who are exempt from immigration control under the Immigration Acts, including diplomats and their family members based in the UK, and some military personnel.

3.9 Any person who does not fall within one of the four categories in paragraph 3.11 will be a person subject to immigration control and will be ineligible for an allocation of accommodation unless they fall within a class of persons prescribed by regulation 3 of the Eligibility Regulations (see further below).
3.10 If there is any uncertainty about an applicant’s immigration status, housing authorities are recommended to contact the UK Border Agency (UKBA). UKBA provides a service to housing authorities to confirm the immigration status of an applicant from abroad (non asylum seekers) by email at LA@UKBA.gsi.gov.uk. Where UKBA indicates the applicant may be an asylum seeker, enquiries of their status can be made to the Immigration Enquiry Bureau helpline on 0870 606 7766.

3.11 Regulation 3 of the Eligibility Regulations provides that the following classes of persons subject to immigration control are eligible for an allocation of accommodation:

(i) a person granted refugee status: granted 5 years’ limited leave to remain in the UK

(ii) a person granted exceptional leave to enter or remain in the UK without condition that they and any dependants should make no recourse to public funds: granted for a limited period where there are compelling humanitarian or compassionate circumstances for allowing them to stay. However, if leave is granted on condition that the applicant and any dependants are not a charge on public funds, the applicant will not be eligible for an allocation of accommodation. Exceptional leave to remain (granted at the Secretary of State’s discretion outside the Immigration Rules) now takes the form of ‘discretionary leave’.

(iii) a person with current leave to enter or remain in the UK with no condition or limitation, and who is habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland (the Common Travel Area): such a person will have indefinite leave to enter (ILE) or remain (ILR) and is regarded as having settled status. However, where ILE or ILR status is granted as a result of an undertaking that a sponsor will be responsible for the applicant’s maintenance and accommodation, the person must have been resident in the Common Travel Area for five years since the date of entry - or the date of the sponsorship undertaking, whichever is later - to be eligible. Where all sponsors have died within the first five years, the applicant will be eligible for an allocation of accommodation.

(iv) a person who has humanitarian protection granted under the Immigration Rules: a form of leave granted to persons who do not qualify for refugee status but would face a real risk of suffering serious harm if returned to their state of origin (see paragraphs 339C–344C of the Immigration Rules (HC 395)).

Other persons from abroad who may be ineligible for an allocation

3.12 By virtue of regulation 4 of the Eligibility Regulations, a person who is not subject to immigration control and who falls within one of the following descriptions is to be treated as a person from abroad who is ineligible for an allocation of accommodation:

(i) a person who is not habitually resident in the Common Travel Area (subject to certain exceptions - see paragraph 3.14 below)

(ii) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is derived from his status as a jobseeker (or his status as the family member of a jobseeker). ‘Jobseeker’ has the same meaning as in regulation 6(1) of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/1003) (‘the EEA Regulations’)

(iii) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is an initial right to reside for a period not exceeding three months under regulation 13 of the EEA Regulations

(iv) a person whose only right to reside in the Common Travel Area is a right equivalent to one of the rights mentioned in (ii) or (iii) above and which is derived from EU Treaty rights.

3.13 See annex 2 for guidance on rights to reside in the UK derived from EU law.

3.14 The following persons from abroad are eligible for an allocation of accommodation even if they are not habitually resident in the Common Travel Area:

(a) an EEA national who is in the UK as a worker (which has the same meaning as in regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations)

(b) an EEA national who is in the UK as a self-employed person (which has the same meaning as in regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations)
A1.2 England: Allocation

(c) a person who is treated as a worker for the purposes of regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations, pursuant to the Accession (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2006 (i.e., nationals of Bulgaria and Romania required to be authorised by the Home Office to work until they have accrued 12 months uninterrupted authorised work)

(d) a person who is a family member of a person referred to in (a) to (c) above

(e) a person with a right to reside permanently in the UK by virtue of regulation 15(c), (d) or (e) of the EEA Regulations

(f) a person who left Montserrat after 1 November 1995 because of the effect of volcanic activity there

(g) a person who is in the UK as a result of his deportation, expulsion or other removal by compulsion of law from another country to the UK. This could include EEA nationals, if the person was settled in the UK and exercising EU Treaty rights prior to deportation from the third country. Where deportation occurs, most countries will signal this in the person’s passport.

3.15 A person who is no longer working or no longer in self-employment will retain his or her status as a worker or self-employed person in certain circumstances. However, accession state workers requiring authorisation will generally only be treated as a worker when they are actually working as authorised and will not retain ‘worker’ status between jobs until they have accrued 12 months continuous authorised employment. ‘Family member’ does not include a person who is an extended family member who is treated as a family member by virtue of regulation 7(3) of the EEA Regulations (see annexes 2 and 3 for further guidance).

3.16 The term ‘habitual residence’ is intended to convey a degree of permanence in the person’s residence in the Common Travel Area; it implies an association between the individual and the place of residence and relies substantially on fact.

3.17 Applicants who have been resident in the Common Travel Area continuously during the two year period prior to their housing application are likely to be habitually resident (periods of temporary absence, e.g., visits abroad for holidays or to visit relatives may be disregarded). Where two years’ continuous residency has not been established, housing authorities will need to conduct further enquiries to determine whether the applicant is habitually resident (see annex 4 for further guidance).

Qualification

3.18 Housing authorities may only allocate accommodation to people who are defined as ‘qualifying persons’ (s 160ZA(6)(a)). Subject to the requirement not to allocate to persons from abroad who are ineligible and the exception for members of the Armed and Reserve Forces in paragraph 3.27 below, a housing authority may decide the classes of people who are, or are not, qualifying persons.

3.19 Housing authorities are encouraged to adopt a housing options approach as part of a move to a managed waiting list. A strong and pro-active housing options approach brings several benefits: people are offered support to access the housing solution which best meets their needs (which might be private rented housing, low cost home ownership or help to stay put); expectations about accessing social housing are properly managed; and social housing is focused on those who need it most. A lower waiting list can also be a by-product.

3.20 In framing their qualification criteria, authorities will need to have regard to their duties under the equalities legislation, as well as the requirement in s 166A(3) to give overall priority for an allocation to people in the reasonable preference categories.

3.21 Housing authorities should avoid setting criteria which disqualify groups of people whose members are likely to be accorded reasonable preference for social housing, for example on medical or welfare grounds. However, authorities may wish to adopt criteria which would disqualify individuals who satisfy the reasonable preference requirements. This could be the case, for example, if applicants are disqualified on a ground of anti-social behaviour.

3.22 When deciding what classes of people do not qualify for an allocation, authorities should consider the implications of excluding all members of such groups. For instance, when framing residency criteria, authorities may wish to consider the position of people who are moving into the district to take up work or to escape violence, or homeless applicants or children in care who are placed out of borough.
Allocations of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012 A1.2

3.23 The Government believes that authorities should avoid allocating social housing to people who already own their own homes. Where they do so, this should only be in exceptional circumstances; for example, for elderly owner occupiers who cannot stay in their own home and need to move into sheltered accommodation.

3.24 There may be sound policy reasons for applying different qualification criteria in relation to existing tenants from those which apply to new applicants. For example, where residency requirements are imposed, authorities may wish to ensure they do not restrict the ability of existing social tenants to move to take up work or to downsize to a smaller home. Authorities may decide to apply different qualification criteria in relation to particular types of stock, for example properties which might otherwise be hard to let.

3.25 Whatever general criteria housing authorities use to define the classes of persons who do not qualify for social housing, there may be exceptional circumstances where it is necessary to disapply these criteria in the case of individual applicants. An example might be an intimidated witness who needs to move quickly to another local authority district. Authorities are encouraged to make explicit provision for dealing with exceptional cases within their qualification rules.

3.26 As with eligibility, authorities are advised to consider whether an applicant qualifies for an allocation at the time of the initial application and when considering making an allocation, particularly where a long time has elapsed since the original application.

Members of the Armed Forces and the Reserve Forces

3.27 Subject to Parliamentary scrutiny, we will regulate to provide that authorities must not disqualify the following applicants on the grounds that they do not have a local connection with the authority’s district:

(a) members of the Armed Forces and former Service personnel, where the application is made within five years of discharge
(b) bereaved spouses and civil partners of members of the Armed Forces leaving Services Family Accommodation following the death of their spouse or partner
(c) serving or former members of the Reserve Forces who need to move because of a serious injury, medical condition or disability sustained as a result of their service.

3.28 These provisions recognise the special position of members of the Armed Forces (and their families) whose employment requires them to be mobile and who are likely therefore to be particularly disadvantaged by local connection requirements; as well as those injured reservists who may need to move to another local authority district to access treatment, care or support.

Joint tenants

3.29 In the case of an allocation to two or more persons jointly, at least one of the persons must be a qualifying person (s 160ZA(6)(b)) and all of them must be eligible.

Fresh applications

3.30 Applicants who have previously been deemed not to qualify may make a fresh application if they consider they should now be treated as qualifying, but it will be for the applicant to show that his or her circumstances have changed (s 160ZA(11)).

Reviews of decisions on eligibility and qualification

3.31 For guidance on decisions and reviews see Chapter 5.
A1.2  England: Allocation

European Economic Area nationals are nationals of any EU member state (except the UK), and nationals of Iceland, Norway, Liechtenstein and Switzerland.

As of 1 May 2011, nationals of the 8 Eastern European countries (A8 nationals) which acceded to the EU in 2004 are no longer required to register with the Workers Registration Scheme in order to work in the UK. Regulation 4(2)(c) of the Eligibility Regulations no longer applies to applications from A8 workers as of that date. Rather applications from A8 workers should be considered on the same basis as those from other EU workers under regulation 4(2)(a).

‘Intimidated witnesses include Protected Persons as specified in Section 82 and schedule 5 of the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005’.

As defined by s.199 of the 1996 Act.

5 years reflects guidelines issued by the local authorities associations which propose a working definition of normal residence for the purposes of establishing a local connection (see paragraph 4.1(i) to Annex 18 of the Homelessness Code of Guidance 2006).

CHAPTER 4

Framing an allocation scheme

4.1  Housing authorities are required by s 166A(1) to have an allocation scheme for determining priorities, and for defining the procedures to be followed in allocating housing accommodation; and they must allocate in accordance with that scheme (s 166A(14)). All aspects of the allocation process must be covered in the scheme, including the people by whom decisions are taken. In the Secretary of State’s view, qualification criteria form part of an allocation scheme.

4.2  All housing authorities must have an allocation scheme, regardless of whether they own housing stock and whether they contract out the delivery of any of their allocation functions (see further Chapter 6). When framing or modifying their scheme, authorities must have regard to their current tenancy and homelessness strategies (s 166A(12)).

Choice and preference options

4.3  An allocation scheme must include a statement as to the housing authority’s policy on offering people a choice of accommodation or the opportunity to express preferences about the accommodation to be allocated to them (s 166A). It is for housing authorities to determine their policy on providing choice or the ability to express preferences.

Reasonable preference

4.4  In framing their allocation scheme to determine allocation priorities, housing authorities must ensure that reasonable preference is given to the following categories of people (s 166A(3):

(a)  people who are homeless within the meaning of Part 7 of the 1996 Act (including those who are intentionally homeless and those not in priority need)
(b)  people who are owed a duty by any housing authority under section 190(2), 193(2) or 195(2) of the 1996 Act (or under section 65(2) or 68(2) of the Housing Act 1985) or who are occupying accommodation secured by any housing authority under s 192(3)
(c)  people occupying insanitary or overcrowded housing or otherwise living in unsatisfactory housing conditions
(d)  people who need to move on medical or welfare grounds, including grounds relating to a disability, and
Allocation of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012

(e) people who need to move to a particular locality in the district of the housing authority, where failure to meet that need would cause hardship (to themselves or others).

4.5 In framing their allocation scheme to give effect to s 166A(3), housing authorities should have regard to the following considerations:

• the scheme must be framed so as to give reasonable preference to applicants who fall within the categories set out in s 166A(3), over those who do not
• although there is no requirement to give equal weight to each of the reasonable preference categories, authorities will need to demonstrate that, overall, reasonable preference has been given to all of them
• there is no requirement for housing authorities to frame their scheme to afford greater priority to applicants who fall within more than one reasonable preference category (cumulative preference) over those who have reasonable preference on a single, non-urgent basis.

Otherwise, it is for housing authorities to decide how to give effect to the provisions of s 166A(3) in their allocation scheme.

Restricted persons

4.6 Applicants should not be given reasonable preference under paragraph (a) or (b) of s 166A(3) if they would only qualify for reasonable preference by taking into account a ‘restricted person’ within the meaning of Part 7 (s 166A(4)). A restricted person is a person subject to immigration control who is not eligible for homelessness assistance because he or she does not have leave to enter or remain in the UK or has leave which is subject to a ‘no recourse to public funds’ condition (s 184(7) of the 1996 Act).

Homeless or owed a homelessness duty

4.7 The requirement for housing authorities to frame their allocation scheme to give reasonable preference to people who are owed certain homelessness duties remains the case, notwithstanding the amendments to Part 7 made by the Localism Act which give authorities the power to end the main homelessness duty with an offer of private rented accommodation, without requiring the applicant’s consent.

Overcrowding

4.8 The Secretary of State takes the view that the bedroom standard is an appropriate measure of overcrowding for allocation purposes, and recommends that all housing authorities should adopt this as a minimum. The bedroom standard allocates a separate bedroom to each:

• married or cohabiting couple
• adult aged 21 years or more
• pair of adolescents aged 10–20 years of the same sex
• pair of children aged under 10 years regardless of sex.

Medical and welfare grounds

4.9 The medical and welfare reasonable preference category includes people who need to move because of their disability or access needs, and this includes people with a learning disability as well as those with a physical disability.

4.10 ‘Welfare grounds’ would encompass a wide range of needs, including, but not limited to, the need to:

• provide a secure base from which a care leaver, or a person who is moving on from a drug or alcohol recovery programme, can build a stable life
• provide accommodation, with appropriate care and support, for those who could not be expected to find their own accommodation, such as young adults with learning disabilities who wish to live independently in the community
A1.2 England: Allocation

- provide or receive care or support. This would include foster carers, those approved to adopt, or those being assessed for approval to foster or adopt, who need to move to a larger home in order to accommodate a looked after child or a child who was previously looked after by a local authority. It would also include special guardians, holders of a residence order and family and friends carers who are not foster carers but who have taken on the care of a child because the parents are unable to provide care.

Hardship grounds

4.11 This would include, for example, a person who needs to move to a different locality in order to give or receive care, to access specialised medical treatment, or to take up a particular employment, education or training opportunity.

4.12 Possible indicators of the criteria which apply to reasonable preference categories (c) and (d) are given in annex 1.

Additional preference

4.13 Section 166A(3) gives housing authorities the power to frame their allocation scheme to give additional preference to particular descriptions of people who fall within the statutory reasonable preference categories and have urgent housing needs. All housing authorities must consider, in the light of local circumstances, the need to give effect to this provision. Examples of people with urgent housing needs to whom housing authorities should consider giving additional preference within their allocation scheme include:

- those who need to move urgently because of a life threatening illness or sudden disability
- families in severe overcrowding which poses a serious health hazard
- those who are homeless and require urgent re-housing as a result of violence or threats of violence, including intimidated witnesses, and those escaping serious anti-social behaviour or domestic violence.

Members of the Armed and Reserve Forces

4.14 Subject to parliamentary approval, we will regulate to require authorities to frame their allocation scheme to give additional preference to the following categories of people who fall within one or more of the reasonable preference categories and who have urgent housing needs:

(a) former members of the Armed Forces
(b) serving members of the Armed Forces who need to move because of a serious injury, medical condition or disability sustained as a result of their service
(c) bereaved spouses and civil partners of members of the Armed Forces leaving Services Family Accommodation following the death of their spouse or partner
(d) serving or former members of the Reserve Forces who need to move because of a serious injury, medical condition or disability sustained as a result of their service.

Determining priorities between households with a similar level of need 4.15 Authorities may frame their allocation scheme to take into account factors in determining relative priorities between applicants in the reasonable (or additional) preference categories (§ 166A(5)). Examples of such factors are given in the legislation: financial resources, behaviour and local connection. However, these examples are not exclusive and authorities may take into account other factors instead or as well as these.

Financial resources available to a person to meet his housing costs

4.16 This would enable a housing authority, for example, to give less priority to owner occupiers (wherever the property is situated).
Behaviour

4.17 This would allow for greater priority to be given to applicants who have been model tenants or have benefited the community, for example.

Local connection

4.18 Local connection is defined by s 199 of the 1996 Act. A person has a local connection because of normal residence (current or previous) of their own choice, employment, family associations, or special circumstances. Residence is not of a person's choice if it is the consequence of being detained in prison or in hospital under the Mental Health Act. As a result of changes to s 199 introduced in 2008 a person serving in the Armed Forces can establish a local connection with a local authority district through residence or employment there, in the same way as a civilian.

Including local priorities alongside the statutory reasonable preference categories

4.19 As the House of Lords made clear in the case of R (on application of Ahmad) v Newham LBC, only requires that the people encompassed within that section are given 'reasonable preference'. It 'does not require that they should be given absolute priority over everyone else'. This means that an allocation scheme may provide for other factors than those set out in s 166A(3) to be taken into account in determining which applicants are to be given preference under a scheme, provided that:

- they do not dominate the scheme, and
- overall, the scheme operates to give reasonable preference to those in the statutory reasonable preference categories over those who are not.

The Secretary of State would encourage authorities to consider the scope to take advantage of this flexibility to meet local needs and local priorities.

4.20 The House of Lords also made clear that, where an allocation scheme complies with the reasonable preference requirements and any other statutory requirements, the courts should be very slow to interfere on the ground of alleged irrationality.

Local lettings policies

4.21 Section 166A(6)(b) of the 1996 Act enables housing authorities to allocate particular accommodation to people of a particular description, whether or not they fall within the reasonable preference categories, provided that overall the authority is able to demonstrate compliance with the requirements of s 166A(3). This is the statutory basis for so-called 'local lettings policies' which may be used to achieve a wide variety of housing management and policy objectives.

Households affected by the under-occupation measure

4.22 When framing the rules which determine the size of property to allocate to different households and in different circumstances, housing authorities are free to set their own criteria, provided they do not result in a household being statutorily overcrowded. However, in setting these criteria, authorities will want to take account of the provision in the Welfare Reform Act 2012 which will reduce Housing Benefit to under-occupiers.

4.23 Social tenants affected by the under-occupation measure may choose to move to more suitably sized accommodation in the private rented sector. One way to encourage tenants to consider this option might be to ensure they are given some degree of preference for an allocation if they apply for a new social tenancy at a later date.

Members of the Armed Forces

4.24 Authorities are also strongly encouraged to take into account the needs of all serving or former Service personnel when framing their allocation schemes, and to give sympathetic consideration to the housing needs of family members of serving or former Service personnel who may themselves have been disadvantaged by the requirements of military service and, in particular, the need to move from base to base. This would be in line with terms of the Government’s Armed Forces Covenant published in May 2011.
A1.2 England: Allocation

4.25 Examples of ways in which authorities can ensure that Service personnel and their families are given appropriate priority, include:

- using the flexibility within the allocation legislation to set local priorities alongside the statutory reasonable preference categories so as to give preference, for example, to those who have recently left, or are close to leaving, the Armed Forces (see paragraph 4.19 above)
- using the power to determine priorities between applicants in the reasonable preference categories, so that applicants in housing need who have served in the Armed Forces are given greater priority for social housing over those who have not (see paragraph 4.15 above)
- if taking into account an applicant’s financial resources in determining priorities between households with a similar level of need (see paragraph 4.16 above), disregarding any lump sum received by a member of the Armed Forces as compensation for an injury or disability sustained on active service
- setting aside a proportion of properties for former members of the Armed Forces under a local lettings policy (see paragraph 4.21 above).

4.26 A number of organisations provide specialist housing and support for veterans, such as the Royal British Legion, Stoll, Haig Homes, Alabare and Norcare, and housing authorities are encouraged to liaise with them to ensure that former Service personnel are able to access the housing option which best suits their needs.

Households in work or seeking work

4.27 Local authorities are urged to consider how they can use their allocation policies to support those households who want to work, as well as those who – while unable to engage in paid employment - are contributing to their community in other ways, for example, through voluntary work. The flexibilities which authorities are encouraged to make use of to meet the needs of Service personnel would apply equally here. This might involve, for example, framing an allocation scheme to give some preference to households who are in low paid work or employment-related training, even where they are not in the reasonable preference categories; or to give greater priority to those households in the reasonable preference categories who are also in work or who can demonstrate that they are actively seeking work. Alternatively, it might involve using local lettings policies to ensure that specific properties, or a specified proportion of properties, are allocated to households in particular types of employment where, for example, skills are in short supply.

4.28 Authorities should also consider how best they can make use of the new power to offer flexible tenancies to support households who are in low paid work, and incentivise others to take up employment opportunities.

Carers

4.29 In making accommodation offers to applicants who receive support from carers who do not reside with them but may need to stay overnight, housing authorities should, wherever possible, take account of the applicant's need for a spare bedroom.

Prospective adopters and foster carers

4.30 When considering housing applications from prospective foster carers or adopters who would require an extra bedroom to accommodate a foster or adoptive child, authorities will wish to weigh up the risk that the application to foster or adopt may be unsuccessful (leading to the property being under-occupied), against the wider benefits which would be realised if the placement was successful.

4.31 Children’s services have a duty under s.22G of the Children Act 1989 to ensure sufficient accommodation to meet the needs of the looked after children in their area. Authorities should work together with children’s services to best meet the needs of prospective and approved foster carers and adopters, so that children’s services can meet their s.22G duty. One way to strike an appropriate balance would be to set aside a quota of properties each year for people who need to move to larger accommodation in order to foster or adopt a child on the recommendation of children’s services.

4.32 The advice in paragraph 4.22 is particularly relevant in relation to prospective foster carers, as foster children are not taken into account in determining the household size for the purposes of the under-occupation measure in the Welfare Reform Act. However, current and prospective foster carers affected by the measure may be eligible to apply for a Discretionary Housing Payment.

General information about particular applications

4.33 Under s166A(9), allocation schemes must be framed so as to give applicants the right to request from housing authorities general information that will enable them to assess:

(a) how their application is likely to be treated under the scheme and, in particular, whether they are likely to have reasonable preference

(b) whether accommodation appropriate to their needs is likely to be made available and, if so, how long it is likely to be before such accommodation becomes available.

Notification about decisions and the right to a review of a decision

4.34 Akin to paragraph 4.22, an allocation scheme must be framed so as to give applicants the right to be informed of certain decisions and the right to review certain decisions (s 166A(9)). For further advice on decisions and reviews, see Chapter 5.

CHAPTER 5

Allocation scheme management

Publishing and consulting on allocation schemes

5.1 Housing authorities must publish a summary of their allocation scheme and, if requested, provide a free copy of it (s 168(1)). They must also make the full scheme available for inspection at their principal office and, if requested, provide a copy of it on payment of a reasonable fee (s 168(2)).

5.2 When an alteration is made to a scheme reflecting a major change of policy, an authority must ensure within a reasonable time that those likely to be affected by the changes have the effect brought to their attention, taking such steps as the housing authority considers reasonable (s 168(3)). A major policy change would include, for example, any amendment affecting the relative priority of a large number of applicants.
A1.2 England: Allocation

or a significant alteration to procedures. Housing authorities should be aware that they still have certain duties under s 106 of the Housing Act 1985.

5.3 Section 166A(13) requires authorities, before adopting an allocation scheme, or altering a scheme to reflect a major change of policy, to:

- send a copy of the draft scheme, or proposed alteration, to every Private Registered Provider\(^1\) with which they have nomination arrangements, and
- ensure they have a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposals.

Advice and information

5.4 Housing authorities must ensure that advice and information is available free of charge to everyone in their district about the right to apply for an allocation of accommodation (s 166(1)(a)). This would include general information about application procedures; as well as information about qualification and prioritisation criteria.

5.5 If a person is likely to have difficulty making an application without assistance, the authority must secure that any necessary assistance is available free of charge (s 166(1)(b)).

5.6 Housing authorities must inform applicants that they have the right to the following general information (s 166(1A)):

- information that will enable them to assess how their application is likely to be treated under the authority's allocation scheme, and, in particular, whether they are likely to fall within the reasonable preference categories, and
- information about whether accommodation appropriate to their needs is likely to be made available to them and, if so, how long it is likely to be before such accommodation becomes available. Maintaining a database of housing suitable for applicants with access needs would assist with this.

5.7 Section 166(4) prohibits housing authorities from divulging to other members of the public that a person is an applicant for social housing, unless they have the applicant's consent. Furthermore, authorities should process any personal data they hold about applicants consistently with the Data Protection Act 1998. If authorities are unclear about their obligations and responsibilities under the Data Protection Act they should contact the Information Commissioner.

Elected Members’ Involvement in Allocation Decisions

5.8 The Allocation of Housing (Procedure) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/483) prevent an elected Member from being part of a decision-making body at the time an allocation decision is made, when either:

- the accommodation concerned is situated in their division or electoral ward, or
- the person subject to the decision has their sole or main residence there

5.9 The regulations do not prevent an elected Member from representing their constituents in front of the decision making body, or from participating in the decision making body’s deliberations prior to its decision. The regulations also do not prevent elected Members’ involvement in policy decisions that affect the generality of housing accommodation in their division or electoral ward rather than individual allocations; for example, a decision that certain types of property should be prioritised for older people.

Offences related to information given or withheld by applicants

5.10 Section 171 makes it an offence for anyone, in connection with the exercise by a housing authority of its functions under Part 6, to:

- knowingly or recklessly give false information
- knowingly withhold information which the housing authority has reasonably required the applicant to give in connection with the exercise of those functions.
5.11 The circumstances in which an offence is committed could include providing false information:

- on an application form for social housing
- in response to a request for further information in support of the application
- during review proceedings.

5.12 Ground 5 in Schedule 2 to the Housing Act 1985 (as amended by s 146 of the 1996 Act) enables a housing authority to seek possession of a tenancy granted as a result of a false statement by the tenant or a person acting at the tenant’s instigation.

Fraudulent or incorrect allocations

5.13 Authorities may also wish to take action to minimise the risk of staff allocating incorrectly or even fraudulently, for example to applicants who do not have sufficient priority under the allocation scheme or do not meet the authority’s qualification criteria. Appropriate steps might include vetting staff who take allocation decisions or providing for decisions to be validated by employing senior staff to undertake random checks.

Decisions and reviews

Information about decisions and reviews

5.14 Housing authorities must inform applicants that they have the right to information about certain decisions which are taken in respect of their application and the right to review those decisions (s 166(1A)).

5.15 By virtue of s 160ZA (9) and (10) housing authorities must notify an applicant in writing of any decision that he or she:

- is ineligible for an allocation of accommodation under s 160ZA(2) or (4), or
- is not a qualifying person under s 160ZA(7).

5.16 The notification must give clear grounds for the decision based on the relevant facts of the case. Section 160ZA(10) provides that, where a notification is not received by an applicant, it can be treated as having been given to him or her, if it is made available at the housing authority’s office for a reasonable period. Where an authority considers that an applicant may have difficulty in understanding the implications of a decision on ineligibility or disqualification, it would be good practice to make arrangements for the information to be explained verbally in addition to providing a written notice.

5.17 Applicants also have the right, on request, to be informed of any decision about the facts of their case which has been, or is likely to be, taken into account in considering whether to make an allocation to them (s 166A(9)(b)).

5.18 Under s 166A(9)(c) applicants have the right to request a review of any of the decisions mentioned in paragraphs 5.15 and 5.17 above and to be informed of the decision on the review and the grounds for it.

Procedures on review

5.19 Review procedures should be clearly set out, including timescales for each stage of the process, and must accord with the principles of transparency and fairness. Failure to put in place a fair procedure for reviews, which allows for all relevant factors to be considered, could result in a judicial review of any decision reached. The following are general principles of good administrative practice:

(i) Applicants should be notified of the timescale within which they must request a review. 21 days from the date the applicant is notified of the decision is well-established as a reasonable timescale. A housing authority should retain the discretion to extend this time limit in exceptional circumstances.
A1.2 England: Allocation

(ii) Applicants should be notified that the request for review should be made in writing, and that it would also be acceptable for the request to be submitted by a representative on their behalf. Applicants should also be advised of the information which should accompany the request.

(iii) Authorities should consider whether to advise that provision can be made for verbal representations, as well as written submissions, to be made.

(iv) The review should be carried out by an officer who is senior to the person who made the original decision. Alternatively, authorities may wish to appoint a panel to consider the review. If so, it should not include any person involved in the original decision.

(v) The review should be considered on the basis of the authority’s allocation scheme, any legal requirements and all relevant information. This should include information provided by the applicant on any relevant developments since the original decision was made – for instance, the settlement of arrears or establishment of a repayment plan, or departure of a member of the household responsible for anti-social behavior.

(vi) Reviews should be completed wherever practicable within a set deadline. Eight weeks is suggested as a reasonable timescale. The applicant should be notified of any extension to this deadline and the reasons for this.

(vii) Applicants must be notified in writing of the outcome of the review. The notification must set out the reasons for the decision. This will assist the applicant and the authority if, for example, the applicant is not satisfied with the outcome and decides to seek a judicial review or to take their case to the Local Government Ombudsman.

CHAPTER 6

Private Registered Providers and contracting out

Working with Private Registered Providers

6.1 Private Registered Providers have a duty under s 170 to cooperate with housing authorities – where the authority requests it - to such extent as is reasonable in the circumstances in offering accommodation to people with priority under the authority's allocation scheme. Similarly, s.213 provides that, where a Private Registered Provider has been requested by a housing authority to assist them in the discharge of their homelessness functions under Part 7, it must cooperate to the same extent.

6.2 Housing authorities must comply with the requirements of Part 6 when they nominate an applicant to be the tenant of a Private Registered Provider. A housing authority nominates for these purposes when it does so 'in pursuance of any arrangements (whether legally enforceable or not) to require that housing accommodation, or a specified amount of housing accommodation, is made available to a person or one of a number of persons nominated by the authority' (s 159(4)).

6.3 Nomination agreements should set out the proportion of lettings that will be made available; any criteria which the Private Registered Provider has adopted for accepting or rejecting nominees; and how any disputes will be resolved. Housing authorities will want to put in place arrangements to monitor effective delivery of the nomination agreement so they can demonstrate they are meeting their obligations under Part 6.

6.4 The Secretary of State expects that Affordable Rent homes will be allocated in the same way as social rent properties and that existing lettings arrangements operated by housing authorities and Private Registered Providers will continue to apply. The statutory and regulatory framework for allocations provides scope for local flexibility, and authorities and Private Registered Providers may wish to exercise this discretion in relation to Affordable Rent in order to meet local needs and priorities effectively.
Allocation of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012

Contracting Out

6.5 The Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996 (SI 1996/3205) – made under s.70 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 (‘the 1994 Act’) – enables housing authorities to contract out certain functions under Part 6. In essence, it allows the contracting out of administrative functions, leaving the responsibility for strategic decisions with the housing authority.

6.6 Schedule 1 to the Order lists allocation functions which may not be contracted out:

- adopting or altering the allocation scheme, including the principles on which the scheme is framed, and consulting Private Registered Providers,
- making the allocation scheme available at the authority’s principal office.

6.7 The Order therefore provides that the majority of functions under Part 6 may be contracted out. These include:

(i) making enquiries about and deciding a person’s eligibility for an allocation
(ii) carrying out reviews of decisions
(iii) securing that advice and information is available free of charge on how to apply for housing
(iv) securing that assistance is available free of charge to people likely to have difficulty in making a housing application without such assistance, and
(v) making individual allocations in accordance with the allocation scheme.

6.8 The 1994 Act provides that a contract:

(i) may authorise a contractor to carry out only part of the function concerned
(ii) may specify that the contractor is authorised to carry out functions only in certain cases or areas specified in the contract
(iii) may include conditions relating to the carrying out of the functions, for example prescribing standards of performance
(iv) shall be for a period not exceeding 10 years and may be revoked at any time by the Minister or the housing authority. Any subsisting contract is to be treated as having been repudiated in these circumstances
(v) shall not prevent the authority from exercising the functions to which the contract relates.

6.9 The 1994 Act also provides that the authority is responsible for any act or omission of the contractor in exercising functions under the contract, except where:

- the contractor fails to fulfil conditions specified in the contract relating to the exercise of the function
- criminal proceedings are brought in respect of the contractor’s act or omission.

6.10 Where a housing authority has delegated or contracted out the operation of its allocation functions to an external contractor, the contractor must be made aware of the provisions of Part 6 and advised how the legislation and this guidance apply to them.

6.11 Where there is an arrangement in force under s 101 of the Local Government Act 1972 by virtue of which one authority exercises the functions of another, the 1994 Act provides that the authority exercising the function is not allowed to contract it out without the principal authority’s consent.

ANNEX 1

Indicators of criteria in reasonable preference categories (c) & (d)

Housing authorities may devise their own indicators of the criteria in the reasonable preference categories. The following list is included for illustrative purposes and to assist housing authorities in this task. It is by no means comprehensive or exhaustive, and housing authorities may have other, local factors to consider and include as indicators of the categories.
A1.2 England: Allocation

Insanitary, overcrowded and unsatisfactory housing conditions
Lacking bathroom or kitchen
Lacking inside WC
Lacking cold or hot water supplies, electricity, gas, or adequate heating
Lack of access to a garden for young children

Young children in flats above ground floor

People who need to move on medical or welfare grounds (criteria may apply to any member of the household)
A mental illness or disorder
A physical or learning disability
Chronic or progressive medical conditions (e.g. MS, HIV/AIDS)
Infirmity due to old age
The need to give or receive care
The need to recover from the effects of violence or threats of violence, or physical, emotional or sexual abuse
Ability to fend for self restricted for other reasons
Young people at risk
People with behavioural difficulties
Need for adapted housing and/or extra facilities, bedroom or bathroom
Need for improved heating (on medical grounds)
Need for sheltered housing (on medical grounds)
Need for ground floor accommodation (on medical grounds)
Need to be near friends/relatives or medical facility on medical grounds
Need to move following hospitalisation or long term care

ANNEX 2

Rights to reside in the UK derived from EU Law

1. EEA nationals and their family members who have a right to reside in the UK that derives from EU law are not persons subject to immigration control. This means that they will be eligible for an allocation of accommodation under Part 6 unless they fall within one of the categories of persons to be treated as a person from abroad who is ineligible for an allocation of accommodation by virtue of regulation 4 of the Eligibility Regulations.

General

Nationals of EU countries

2. Nationals of EU countries enjoy a number of different rights to reside in other Member States, including the UK. These rights derive from the EU Treaties, EU secondary legislation (in particular Directive 2004/38), and the case law of the European Court of Justice.

3. Whether an individual EU national has a right to reside in the UK will depend on his or her circumstances, particularly his or her economic status (e.g. whether employed, self-employed, seeking work, a student, or economically inactive etc).

Nationals of Bulgaria and Romania - the A2 accession states

4. A slightly different regime applies to EU nationals who are nationals of Bulgaria and Romania which acceded to the EU on 1 January 2007. Bulgaria and Romania are referred to in this guidance as the A2 accession states.

The Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2006

5. The Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2006 (‘the EEA Regulations’ – SI 2006/1003) implement into UK domestic law Directive 2004/38. Broadly, the EEA Regulations provide that EU nationals have the right to reside in the UK without the requirement for leave to remain under the Immigration Act 1971 for the first 3 months of their residence, and for longer, if they are a ‘qualified person’ or they have acquired a permanent right of residence.

Nationals of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, and Switzerland

6. The EEA Regulations extend the same rights to reside in the UK to nationals of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway as those afforded to EU nationals. (The EU countries plus Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway together comprise the EEA.) The EEA Regulations also extend the same rights to reside in the UK to nationals of Switzerland. For the purposes of this guidance, ‘EEA nationals’ means nationals of any of the EU member states (excluding the UK), and nationals of Iceland, Norway, Liechtenstein and Switzerland.

Initial 3 months residence

7. Regulation 13 of the EEA Regulations provides that EEA nationals have the right to reside in the UK for a period of up to 3 months without any conditions or formalities other than holding a valid identity card or passport. Therefore, during their first 3 months of residence in the UK, EEA nationals will not be subject to immigration control (unless the right to reside is lost following a decision by an immigration officer in accordance with regulation 13(3) of the EEA Regulations).

8. However, regulations 4(1)(b)(ii) and (c) of the Eligibility Regulations provide that a person who is not subject to immigration control is not eligible for an allocation of accommodation if:

   (i) his or her only right to reside in the UK is an initial right to reside for a period not exceeding 3 months under regulation 13 of the EEA Regulations, or

   (ii) his or her only right to reside in the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland (the Common Travel Area) is a right equivalent to the right mentioned in (i) above which is derived from the EU Treaty

Rights of residence for ‘qualified persons’

9. Regulation 14 of the EEA Regulations provides that ‘qualified persons’ have the right to reside in the UK so long as they remain a qualified person. Under regulation 6 of the EEA Regulations, ‘qualified person’ means:

   (a) a jobseeker
A1.2 England: Allocation

(b) a worker
(c) a self-employed person
(d) a self-sufficient person
(e) a student

Jobseekers

10. For the purposes of regulation 6(1)(a) of the EEA Regulations, ‘jobseeker’ means a person who enters the UK in order to seek employment and can provide evidence that he or she is seeking employment and has a genuine chance of being employed.

11. Nationals of Bulgaria and Romania who need to be authorised to work do not have a right to reside in the UK as a jobseeker. However, they may have a right to reside by virtue of another status, e.g. as a self-sufficient person.

12. Although a person who is a jobseeker is not subject to immigration control, regulation 4 of the Eligibility Regulations provides that a person is not eligible for an allocation of accommodation if:
   (i) his or her only right to reside in the UK is derived from his or her status as a jobseeker or the family member of a jobseeker, or
   (ii) his or her only right to reside in the Channel Islands, the Common Travel Area is a right equivalent to the right mentioned in (i) above which is derived from the Treaty establishing the European Community.

Workers

13. In order to be a worker for the purposes of the EEA Regulations, a person must be employed. That is to say, he or she is obliged to provide services for another person in return for monetary reward and is subject to the control of that other person as regards the way in which the work is to be done.

14. Activity as an employed person may include part time work, seasonal work and cross-border work (i.e. where a worker is established in another Member State and travels to work in the UK). However, case-law provides that the employment must be effective and genuine economic activity, and not on such a small scale as to be regarded as purely marginal and ancillary.

15. Provided the employment is effective and genuine economic activity, the fact that a person’s level of remuneration may be below the level of subsistence or below the national minimum wage, or the fact that a person may be receiving financial assistance from public benefits, would not exclude that person from being a ‘worker’.

16. A person who is a worker is not subject to immigration control, and is eligible for an allocation of accommodation whether or not he or she is habitually resident in the Common Travel Area.

Retention of worker status

17. A person who is no longer working does not cease to be treated as a ‘worker’ for the purpose of regulation 6(1)(b) of the EEA Regulations, if he or she:
   (a) is temporarily unable to work as the result of an illness or accident; or
   (b) is recorded as involuntarily unemployed after having being employed in the UK, provided that he or she has registered as a jobseeker with the relevant employment office, and:
       (i) was employed for one year or more before becoming unemployed, or
       (ii) has been unemployed for no more than 6 months, or
       (iii) can provide evidence that he or she is seeking employment in the UK and has a genuine chance of being engaged; or
(c) is involuntarily unemployed and has embarked on vocational training; or
(d) has voluntarily ceased working and embarked on vocational training that is related to his or her previous employment.

A2 state workers requiring authorisation who are treated as workers

18. By virtue of the Accession (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2006 (the Accession Regulations), nationals of the A2 states (with certain exceptions) must obtain authorisation to work in the UK until they have accrued a period of 12 months continuous employment.

19. An A2 national requiring authorisation is only treated as a worker if he or she is actually working and:
(i) holds an accession worker authorisation document, and
(ii) is working in accordance with the conditions set out in that document (regulation 9(1) of the Accession Regulations).

20. Authorities may need to contact the employer named in the authorisation document, to confirm that the applicant continues to be employed.

Self-employed persons

21. ‘Self-employed person’ means a person who establishes himself in the UK in order to pursue activity as a self-employed person in accordance with Article 49 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union.

22. A self-employed person should be able to confirm that he or she is pursuing activity as a self-employed person by providing documents relating to their business. A person who is no longer in self-employment does not cease to be treated as a self-employed person for the purposes of regulation 6(1)(c) of the EEA regulations, if he or she is temporarily unable to pursue his or her activity as a self-employed person as the result of an illness or accident.

23. A2 nationals are not required to be authorised in order to establish themselves in the UK as a self-employed person.

24. A person who is a self-employed is not subject to immigration control and is eligible for an allocation of accommodation whether or not he or she is habitually resident in the Common Travel Area.

Self-sufficient persons

25. Regulation 4(1)(c) of the EEA regulations defines ‘self-sufficient person’ as a person who has:
(i) sufficient resources not to become a burden on the social assistance system of the UK during his or her period of residence, and
(ii) comprehensive sickness insurance cover in the UK.

26. By regulation 4(4) of the EEA Regulations, the resources of a person who is a self-sufficient person (or a student – see below) and, where applicable, any family members, are to be regarded as sufficient if (a) they exceed the maximum level of resources which a UK national and his or her family members may possess if he or she is to become eligible for social assistance under the UK benefit system or, if (a) does not apply, (b) taking into account the personal situation of the person concerned and, where applicable, any family members, it appears to the decision maker that the resources of the person or persons concerned should be regarded as sufficient.

27. Where an EEA national applies for an allocation of accommodation as a self-sufficient person and does not appear to meet the conditions of regulation 4(1)(c) of the EEA regulations, the housing authority will need to consider whether he or she may have some other right to reside in the UK.
A1.2 England: Allocation

28. Where the applicant does not meet the conditions of regulation 4(1)(c) but has previously done so during his or her residence in the UK, the case should be referred to the Home Office for clarification of their status.

29. A person who is a self-sufficient person is not subject to immigration control, but must be habitually resident in the Common Travel Area to be eligible for an allocation of accommodation.

Students

30. Regulation 4(1)(d) of the EEA regulations defines ‘student’ as a person who:

(a) is enrolled at a private or public establishment included on the Register of Education and Training Providers, or is financed from public funds, for the principal purpose of following a course of study, including vocational training, and

(b) has comprehensive sickness insurance cover in the UK, and

(c) assures the Secretary of State, by means of a declaration or such equivalent means as the person may choose, that he or she (and if applicable his or her family members) has sufficient resources not to become a burden on the social assistance system of the UK during his or her period of residence.

31. A person who is a student is not subject to immigration control but must be habitually resident in the Common Travel Area to be eligible for an allocation of accommodation.

Permanent right of residence

32. Regulation 15 of the EEA Regulations provides that the following persons shall acquire the right to reside in the UK permanently:

(a) an EEA national who has resided in the UK in accordance with the EEA regulations for a continuous period of 5 years

(b) a non-EEA national who is a family member of an EEA national and who has resided in the UK with the EEA national in accordance with the EEA regulations for a continuous period of 5 years

(c) a worker or self-employed person who has ceased activity (see regulation 5 of the EEA Regulations for the definition of worker or self-employed person who has ceased activity)

(d) the family member of a worker or self-employed person who has ceased activity

(e) a person who was the family member of a worker or self-employed person who has died, where the family member resided with the worker or self-employed person immediately before the death and the worker or self-employed person had resided continuously in the UK for at least 2 years before the death (or the death was the result of an accident at work or an occupational disease)

(f) a person who has resided in the UK in accordance with the EEA regulations for a continuous period of 5 years, and at the end of that period was a family member who has retained the right of residence (see regulation 10 of the EEA Regulations for the definition of a family member who has retained the right of residence).

Once acquired, the right of permanent residence can be lost through absence from the UK for a period exceeding two consecutive years.

33. A person with a right to reside permanently in the UK arising from (c), (d) or (e) above is eligible for an allocation of accommodation whether or not he or she is habitually resident in the Common Travel Area. Persons with a permanent right to reside by virtue of (a), (b), or (f) must be habitually resident to be eligible.

Rights of residence for certain family members

The right to reside

34. Regulation 14 of the EEA Regulations provides that the following family members are entitled to reside in the UK:

(i) a family member of a qualified person residing in the UK
(ii) a family member of an EEA national with a permanent right of residence under regulation 15
(iii) a family member who has retained the right of residence (see regulation 10 of the EEA Regulations for the definition).

35. A person who has a right to reside in the UK as the family member of an EEA national under the EEA Regulations will not be subject to immigration control. The eligibility of such a person for an allocation of accommodation should therefore be considered in accordance with regulation 4 of the Eligibility Regulations.

36. When considering the eligibility of a family member, housing authorities should consider whether the person has acquired a right to reside in their own right, for example a permanent right to reside under regulation 15 of the EEA Regulations.

Who is a ‘family member’?

37. Regulation 7 of the EEA regulations provides that the following persons are treated as the family members of another person (with certain exceptions for students – see below):

(a) the spouse of the person
(b) the civil partner of the person
(c) a direct descendant of the person, or of the person’s spouse or civil partner, who is under the age of 21
(d) a direct descendant of the person, or of the person’s spouse or civil partner, who is over 21 and dependent on the person, or the spouse or civil partner
(e) an ascendant relative of the person, or of the person’s spouse or civil partner, who is dependent on the person or the spouse or civil partner
(f) a person who is an extended family member and is treated as a family member by virtue of regulation 7(3) of the EEA regulations (see below).

Family members of students

38. Regulation 7(2) of the EEA regulations provides that a person who falls within (c), (d) or (e) above shall not be treated as a family member of a student residing in the UK after the period of 3 months beginning on the date the student is admitted to the UK unless:

(i) in the case of paragraph 37(c) and (d) above, the person is the dependant child of the student, or of the spouse or civil partner, or
(ii) the student is also a qualified person (for the purposes of regulation 6(1) of the EEA regulations) other than as a student.

Extended family members

39. Broadly, extended family members will be persons who:

(a) do not fall within any of the categories (a) to (e) in paragraph 37 above, and
A1.2 England: Allocation

(b) are either a relative of an EEA national (or of the EEA national’s spouse or civil partner) or the partner of an EEA national, and
(c) have been issued with an EEA family permit, a registration certificate or a residence card which is valid and has not been revoked.

Family members’ eligibility for an allocation of accommodation

Relationship with other rights to reside

40. This section concerns the eligibility of an applicant for an allocation of accommodation whose right to reside is derived from his or her status as the family member of an EEA national with a right to reside. In some cases, a family member will have acquired a right to reside in his or her own right. In particular, a person who arrived in the UK as the family member of an EEA national may have subsequently acquired a permanent right of residence under regulation 15 of the EEA Regulations, as outlined in paragraph 32 (a) – (f) above. The eligibility for an allocation of accommodation of those with a permanent right of residence is discussed at paragraphs 32 and 33.

Family members who must be habitually resident

41. For family members with a right to reside under regulation 14 of the EEA Regulations, the following categories of persons must be habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland in order to be eligible for an allocation of accommodation:

(a) a person whose right to reside derives from their status as a family member of an EEA national who is a self-sufficient person for the purposes of regulation 6(1)(d) of the EEA regulations
(b) a person whose right to reside derives from their status as a family member of an EEA national who is a student for the purposes of regulation 6(1)(e) of the EEA regulations
(c) a person whose right to reside is dependent on their status as a family member of an EEA national with a permanent right to reside
(d) a person whose right to reside is dependent on their status as a family member who has retained the right of residence.

Family members who are exempt from the habitual residence requirement

42. A person with a right to reside under regulation 14 as a family member of an EEA national who is a worker or a self-employed person for the purposes of regulation 6(1) of the EEA regulations is exempted from the requirement to be habitually resident by regulation 4(2)(d) of the Eligibility Regulations. However, authorities should note that an extended family member (see above) is not counted as a family member for the purposes of regulation 4(2)(d) of the Eligibility Regulations (see regulation 2(3) of the Eligibility Regulations).

Family members of UK nationals exercising rights under the EU Treaty

43. There are some limited cases in which the non-EEA family member of a UK national may have a right to reside under EU law. Under regulation 9 of the EEA Regulations, the family member of a UK national should be treated as an EEA family member where the following conditions are met:

(i) the UK national is residing in an EEA State as a worker or self-employed person, or was so residing before returning to the UK, and
Allocation of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012 A1.2

(ii) if the family member of the UK national is his spouse or civil partner, the parties are living together in the EEA State, or had entered into a marriage or civil partnership and were living together in that State before the UK national returned to the UK.

44. Where the family member of a UK national is to be treated as an EEA family member by virtue of regulation 9 of the EEA Regulations, that person is not subject to immigration control, and his or her eligibility for an allocation of accommodation should therefore be determined in accordance with regulation 4 of the Eligibility Regulations.

ANNEX 3

Worker authorisation scheme

1. Bulgaria and Romania (‘the A2’) acceded to the European Union on 1 January 2007. A2 nationals have the right to move freely among all EU Member States. However, under the EU Accession Treaty for Bulgaria and Romania existing Member States can impose limitations on the rights of A2 nationals to access their labour markets (and the associated rights of residence) for a transitional period.

The Accession (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2006

2. Under the Accession (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/3317) (‘the Accession Regulations’), nationals of the A2 States (with certain exceptions set out in paragraph 9 below) are required to be authorised to work by the Home Office if they work in the UK during the transitional period. While looking for work (or between jobs) their right to reside will be conditional on them being self-sufficient and not imposing an unreasonable burden on the UK social assistance system. These conditions cease to apply once they have worked in the UK continuously and legally for 12 months.

3. The Accession Regulations also give workers from the A2 states the right to reside in the UK. This means that workers from the A2 states have the same right to equal treatment as other EEA workers while they are working in accordance with work authorisation requirements or are exempt from those requirements.

The worker authorisation scheme

4. Nationals of A2 states who wish to work in the UK (except those who are exempt from the requirement) must have an accession worker authorisation document and must be working in accordance with the conditions set out in that document.

5. Nationals of the A2 states who are self-employed are not required to be authorised if they are working that capacity.

6. The following constitute worker authorisation documents:

(i) a passport or other travel document endorsed to show that the person was given leave to enter or remain in the UK before 1 January 2007, subject to a condition restricting his or her employment in the UK to a particular employer or category of employment

(ii) If the leave to enter or remain expires before the person qualifies to be exempt from the work authorisation requirements, or they wish to engage in employment other than the job for which the leave was granted, they will need to obtain an accession worker card.
A seasonal agricultural work card issued by the Home Office under the Seasonal Agricultural Workers Scheme. The card is valid for 6 months from the date the person starts work for the agricultural employer specified in the card.

(iv) an accession worker card issued by the Home Office.

7. The accession worker card is valid for as long as the person continues to work for the employer specified in the card. If the person changes employer, he or she must apply for a new accession worker card.

8. The worker authorisation scheme is a transitional measure. The Accession Regulations provide for the scheme to operate for up to five years from 1 January 2007 (i.e. until 31 December 2011). However, there is provision for the scheme to be extended for a further two years in the event of a serious disturbance to the labour market. The decision was taken on 23 November 2011 to maintain transitional controls on Romanian and Bulgarian workers until the end of 2013.

A2 nationals exempt from worker authorisation

9. The following are the categories of A2 nationals who are not required to obtain authorisation to work:

- those who are classified as highly skilled persons and hold a registration certificate allowing them unconditional access to the UK labour market
- those working legally, and without interruption, in the UK for a period of 12 months or more ending on 31 December 2006 (for example, they may have been already present in the UK as a work permit holder before accession)
- those who had leave to enter the UK under the Immigration Act 1971 on 31 December 2006 and that leave does not place any restrictions on taking employment in the United Kingdom (for example, a person may have been given leave to remain as the spouse of a British citizen or as the dependant of a work permit holder)
- those who are providing services in the UK on behalf of an employer established elsewhere in the EEA
- those who are also a national of the UK or another EEA state (other than an A2 state)
- those who are a spouse or civil partner of a national of the UK or a person settled in the UK
- those who are the spouse, civil partner or child under 18 of a person who has limited leave to enter or remain in the UK and that leave allows that person to work in the UK
- those who are a family member (spouse, civil partner or dependant child) of an EEA national who has a right to reside in the UK under the EEA Regulations, including those who are the family member (spouse, civil partner or descendant (under 21 or dependant)) of an A2 national who is working in accordance with worker authorisation requirements
- those who have a permanent right to reside in the UK under regulation 15 of the EEA Regulations
- those who are in the UK as a student and are permitted to work for 20 hours a week, provided they are in possession of a registration certificate confirming that they are exercising a Treaty right as a student.

10. In addition, where a person has worked legally in the UK without interruption for a 12 month period falling wholly or partly after 31 December 2006, they will be free from the requirement to seek authorisation. At that stage, they will be able to apply to the Home Office for an EEA residence permit to confirm their right to equal treatment on the same basis as other EEA nationals.
Allocation of Accommodation: Guidance for Housing Authorities 2012

12 months’ uninterrupted work

11. In order to establish ‘12 months’ uninterrupted work’ an A2 worker must have been working legally in the UK at the beginning and end of the 12 month period. The 12 month period does not have to run continuously. However, any intervening period in which an A2 national is not legally working must not exceed 30 days in total. If more than 30 days between periods of employment occur before a 12-month period of uninterrupted employment is established, a fresh period of 12 months’ uninterrupted employment would need to commence from that point.

12. There is no restriction on the number of different authorised jobs (or employers) that a worker can have during a 12-month period of continuous employment.

Highly skilled workers

13. A national of an A2 state is not required to be authorised under the worker authorisation scheme, if he is a highly skilled worker who has been given a registration certificate by the Home Office which includes a statement that he or she has unconditional access to the UK labour market.

ANNEX 4

Habitual residence

1. In practice, when considering housing applications from persons subject to the habitual residence test, it is only necessary to investigate habitual residence if the applicant has arrived or returned to live in the UK during the two year period prior to making the application.

Definition of habitual residence

2. The term ‘habitual residence’ is not defined in legislation. Housing authorities should always consider the overall circumstances of a case to determine whether someone is habitually resident in the Common Travel Area.

General principles

3. When deciding whether a person is habitually resident, consideration must be given to all the facts of each case in a common sense way. It should be remembered that:

- the test focuses on the fact and nature of residence
- a person who is not resident somewhere cannot be habitually resident there
- residence is a more settled state than mere physical presence in a country. To be resident a person must be seen to be making a home. It need not be the only home or a permanent home but it must be a genuine home for the time being. For example, a short stay visitor or person receiving short term medical treatment is not resident
- the most important factors for habitual residence are length, continuity and general nature of actual residence rather than intention
- the practicality of a person’s arrangements for residence is a necessary part of determining whether it can be described as settled and habitual
- established habitual residents who have periods of temporary or occasional absence of long or short duration may still be habitually resident during such absences.
A1.2 England: Allocation

Action on receipt of an application

Applicant came to live in the UK during the previous two years

4. If it appears that the applicant came to live in the UK during the previous two years, authorities should make further enquiries to decide if the applicant is habitually resident, or can be treated as such.

Factors to consider

5. The applicant's stated reasons and intentions for coming to the UK will be relevant to the question of whether he or she is habitually resident. If the applicant's stated intention is to live in the UK, and not return to the country from which they came, that intention must be consistent with their actions.

6. To decide whether an applicant is habitually resident in the UK, authorities should consider the factors set out below. However, these do not provide an exhaustive check list of the questions or factors that need to be considered. Further enquiries may be needed. The circumstances of each case will dictate what information is needed, and all relevant factors should be taken into account.

Why has the applicant come to the UK?

7. If the applicant is returning to the UK after a period spent abroad, and it can be established that the applicant was previously habitually resident in the UK and is returning to resume his or her former period of habitual residence, he or she will be immediately habitually resident.

8. In determining whether an applicant is returning to resume a former period of habitual residence authorities should consider:

• when the applicant left the UK
• how long the applicant lived in the UK before leaving
• why the applicant left the UK
• how long the applicant intended to remain abroad
• why the applicant returned
• whether the applicant’s partner and children, if any, also left the UK
• whether the applicant kept accommodation in the UK
• if the applicant owned property, whether it was let, and whether the lease was timed to coincide with the applicant's return to the UK
• what links the applicant kept with the UK
• whether there have been other brief absences
• why the applicant has come back to the UK.

9. If the applicant has arrived in the UK within the previous two years and is not resuming a period of habitual residence, consideration should be given to his or her reasons for coming to the UK, and in particular to the factors set out below.

Applicant is joining family or friends

10. If the applicant has come to the UK to join or rejoin family or friends, authorities should consider:

• whether the applicant has sold or given up any property abroad
• whether the applicant has bought or rented accommodation or is staying with friends
• whether the move to the UK is intended to be permanent.
Applicant’s plans

11. Authorities should consider the applicant’s plans, e.g:
   • if the applicant plans to remain in the UK, whether their stated plan is consistent with their actions
   • whether any arrangements were made for employment and accommodation (even if unsuccessful) before the applicant arrived in the UK
   • whether the applicant bought a one-way ticket
   • whether the applicant brought all their belongings
   • whether there is evidence of links with the UK, e.g. membership of clubs.

12. The fact that a person may intend to live in the UK for the foreseeable future does not, of itself, mean that habitual residence has been established. However, the applicant’s intentions along with other factors, for example the disposal of property abroad, may indicate that the applicant is habitually resident in the UK.

13. An applicant who intends to reside in the UK for only a short period, for example for a holiday or to visit friends is unlikely to be habitually resident in the UK.

Length of residence in another country

14. Authorities should consider the length and continuity of an applicant’s residence in another country:
   • whether the applicant has any remaining ties with his or her former country of residence
   • whether the applicant stayed in different countries outside the UK.

15. It is possible that a person may own a property abroad but still be habitually resident in the UK. A person who has a home or close family in another country would normally retain habitual residence in that country. A person who has previously lived in several different countries but has now moved permanently to the UK may be habitually resident here.

Centre of interest

16. An applicant is likely to be habitually resident in the Common Travel Area despite spending time abroad, if his or her centre of interest is located in one of these places.

17. People who maintain their centre of interest in the Common Travel Area for example a home, a job, friends, membership of clubs, are likely to be habitually resident there. People who have retained their centre of interest in another country and have no particular ties with the Common Travel Area are unlikely to be habitually resident.

18. Authorities should take the following into account when deciding the centre of interest:
   • home
   • family ties
   • club memberships
   • finance accounts

19. If the centre of interest appears to be in the Common Travel Area but the applicant has a home somewhere else, authorities should consider the applicant’s intentions regarding the property.
A1.2 England: Allocation

20. It is not uncommon for a person to live in one country but have property abroad that they do not intend to sell. Where such a person has lived in the Common Travel Area for many years, the fact that they have property elsewhere does not necessarily mean that they intend to leave, or that the applicant’s centre of interest is elsewhere.
PROVIDING SOCIAL HOUSING FOR LOCAL PEOPLE: STATUTORY GUIDANCE ON SOCIAL HOUSING ALLOCATIONS FOR LOCAL AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND (2013)

A1.3

December 2013 Department for Communities and Local Government

INTRODUCTION

(1) This is guidance by the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government under section 169 of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act). Local housing authorities (housing authorities) are required to have regard to it in exercising their functions under Part 6 of the 1996 Act.

(2) It is in addition to the Guidance for Local Housing Authorities in England on the Allocation of Accommodation issued in June 2012 (the 2012 guidance).

(3) References to sections in this guidance are references to sections in the 1996 Act.

(4) Housing authorities are encouraged to review their existing allocation policies and revise them, where appropriate, in the light of this guidance as soon as possible.

PURPOSE OF THE GUIDANCE

(5) Social housing – stable and affordable – is of enormous importance for the millions who live in it now and for those who look to it to provide the support they need in future. The way it is allocated is key to creating communities where people choose to live and are able to prosper.

(6) The Government has made clear that we expect social homes to go to people who genuinely need and deserve them. That is why the Localism Act has maintained the protection provided by the statutory reasonable preference criteria which ensure that priority for social housing continues to be given to those in the greatest housing need.

(7) The Localism Act has also given back to local authorities the freedom to better manage their social housing waiting list, as well as providing authorities with greater flexibility to enable them to tackle homelessness by providing homeless households with suitable private sector accommodation. Local authorities can now decide who qualifies for social housing in their area, and can develop solutions which make best use of the social housing stock. This guidance is intended to assist housing authorities to make full use of the flexibilities within the allocation legislation to better meet the needs of their local residents and their local communities.

(8) The Government has also taken decisive steps to increase the supply of affordable housing, with £19.5 billion of public and private investment in the current Spending Review, and up to £23.3 billion more money invested from 2015 to 2018 alongside receipts from Right to Buy sales.

(9) This investment in new affordable housing will help to meet housing need. We now want to see local authorities take an approach to social housing allocations which gives greater priority to those in need who have invested in and demonstrated a commitment to their local community.

(10) The Prime Minister has made clear the Government's determination to tackle the widespread perception that the way social housing is allocated is unfair, and to address concerns that the system favours households who have little connection to the local area over local people and members of the Armed Forces.
A1.3 England: Allocation

Forces. Another important aim of this guidance, therefore, is to encourage authorities to be open and transparent about who is applying for and being allocated social housing in their area.

QUALIFICATION FOR SOCIAL HOUSING

(11) Section 160ZA(6) provides that housing authorities may only allocate accommodation to people who are defined as 'qualifying persons' and section 160ZA(7) gives them the power to decide the classes of people who are, or are not, qualifying persons.

(12) The Government is of the view that, in deciding who qualifies or does not qualify for social housing, local authorities should ensure that they prioritise applicants who can demonstrate a close association with their local area. Social housing is a scarce resource, and the Government believes that it is appropriate, proportionate and in the public interest to restrict access in this way, to ensure that, as far as possible, sufficient affordable housing is available for those amongst the local population who are on low incomes or otherwise disadvantaged and who would find it particularly difficult to find a home on the open market.

(13) Some housing authorities have decided to include a residency requirement as part of their qualification criteria, requiring the applicant (or member of the applicant's household) to have lived within the authority's district for a specified period of time in order to qualify for an allocation of social housing. The Secretary of State believes that including a residency requirement is appropriate and strongly encourages all housing authorities to adopt such an approach. The Secretary of State believes that a reasonable period of residency would be at least two years.

(14) We are aware that in some parts of the country, housing authorities share a common allocation policy with their neighbours and may wish to adopt a broader residency test which would be met if an applicant lives in any of the partners’ districts. Such an approach might be particularly appropriate where an established housing market area spans a number of local authority districts, and could help promote labour mobility within a wider geographical area.

(15) Housing authorities may wish to consider whether there is a need to adopt other qualification criteria alongside a residency requirement to enable and ensure that applicants who are not currently resident in the district who can still demonstrate a strong association to the local area are able to qualify. Examples of such criteria might include:

- family association – for example, where the applicant has close family who live in the district and who have done so for a minimum period of time
- employment in the district – for example, where the applicant or member of their household is currently employed in the district and has worked there for a certain number of years

(16) Whatever qualification criteria for social housing authorities adopt, they will need to have regard to their duties under the Equality Act 2010, as well as their duties under other relevant legislation such as s.225 of the Housing Act 2004.

(17) Housing authorities are reminded of the desirability of operating a housing options approach (see paragraph 3.19 of the 2012 guidance) as part of a move to a managed waiting list. In this way, people who have not lived in the area long enough to qualify for social housing can be provided with advice and any necessary support to help them find appropriate alternative solutions.

PROVIDING FOR EXCEPTIONS

(18) Housing authorities should consider the need to provide for exceptions from their residency requirement; and must make an exception for certain members of the regular and reserve Armed Forces – see further at paragraph 23 below.
Providing for appropriate exceptions when framing residency requirements would be in line with paragraphs 3.22 and 3.24 of the 2012 guidance.

(19) It is important that housing authorities retain the flexibility to take proper account of special circumstances. This can include providing protection to people who need to move away from another area, to escape violence or harm; as well as enabling those who need to return, such as homeless families and care leavers whom the authority have housed outside their district, and those who need support to rehabilitate and integrate back into the community.

(20) There may also be sound policy reasons not to apply a residency test to existing social tenants seeking to move between local authorities. Housing authorities should assist in tackling under-occupation, for example allowing tenants to move if they wish to downsize to a smaller social home. There may also be sound housing management reasons to disapply a residency test for hard to let stock.

(21) These examples are not intended to be exhaustive and housing authorities may wish to consider providing for other appropriate exceptions in the light of local circumstances. In addition, authorities retain a discretion to deal with individual cases where there are exceptional circumstances.

(22) The Government wants to increase opportunities for hardworking households. That is why we have announced an intention to introduce a Right to Move for social tenants seeking to move to take up a job or be closer to their work, whether within the local authority district or across local authority boundaries. We will consult on options for implementing this policy in Spring 2014. In the meantime, we expect housing authorities to make appropriate exceptions to their residency test for social tenants so as not to impede labour market mobility.

MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

(23) The Government is committed to ensuring that Service personnel and their families have access to appropriate accommodation when they leave the Armed Forces. The Allocation of Housing (Qualification Criteria for Armed Forces) (England) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/1869) ensure that, where housing authorities decide to use a local connection criterion as a qualification requirement, they must not apply that criterion to the following persons so as to disqualify them from an allocation of social housing:

(a) those who are currently serving in the regular forces or who were serving in the regular forces at any time in the five years preceding their application for an allocation of social housing
(b) bereaved spouses or civil partners of those serving in the regular forces where (i) the bereaved spouse or civil partner has recently ceased, or will cease to be entitled, to reside in Ministry of Defence accommodation following the death of their service spouse or civil partner, and (ii) the death was wholly or partly attributable to their service
(c) existing or former members of the reserve forces who are suffering from a serious injury, illness, or disability which is wholly or partly attributable to their service

(24) The Regulations give effect to the Government’s commitment that those who serve in the regular and reserve Armed Forces are not disadvantaged in their access to social housing by the requirements of their service.

(25) When adopting a residency test, we expect housing authorities to also consider the wider needs of the Armed Forces community, and to be sympathetic to changing family circumstances, recognising, for example, that the spouses and partners of Service personnel can also be disadvantaged by the need to move from base to base.

---

1 As defined by s.199 of the 1996 Act. A person has a local connection with the district of a housing authority if he has a connection because of normal residence there (either current or of his own choice, employment there, family connections or special circumstances.
A1.3 England: Allocation

PRIORITISING LOCAL CONNECTION

Housing authorities have the ability to take account of any local connection between the applicant and their district when determining relative priorities between households who are on the waiting list (s 166A(5)). For these purposes, local connection is defined by reference to s 199 of the 1996 Act.

Housing authorities should consider whether, in the light of local circumstances, there is a need to take advantage of this flexibility, in addition to applying a residency requirement as part of their qualification criteria. Examples of circumstances in which the power might be useful would include:

- dealing sensitively with lettings in rural villages by giving priority to those with a local connection to the parish, as part of a local lettings policy (section 166A(6)(b) – see paragraph 4.21 of the 2012 guidance)
- where a group of housing authorities apply a wider residency qualification test, to give greater priority to people who live or work (or have close family) in any of the partner authorities’ own district

INFORMATION ABOUT_ALLOCATIONS

It is important that applicants and the wider community understand how social housing is allocated in their area, and that they know who is getting that social housing, so that they can see that the allocation system is fair and the authority is complying with its allocation scheme. We would encourage housing authorities to consider how accurate and anonymised information on waiting list applicants and lettings outcomes could be routinely published, to strengthen public confidence in the fairness of their allocation scheme.
RIGHT TO MOVE: STATUTORY GUIDANCE ON SOCIAL HOUSING ALLOCATIONS FOR LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND (2015)

A1.4

March 2015 Department for Communities and Local Government

INTRODUCTION

(1) This is guidance by the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government under section 169 of the Housing Act 1996 ('the 1996 Act'). Local housing authorities (housing authorities) are required to have regard to it in exercising their functions under Part 6 of the 1996 Act.

(2) It is in addition to the Guidance for Local Housing Authorities in England on the Allocation of Accommodation issued in June 2012 ('the 2012 guidance').

(3) References to sections in this guidance are references to sections in the 1996 Act.

(4) Housing authorities are encouraged to review their existing allocation policies and revise them, where appropriate, in the light of this guidance as soon as possible.

PURPOSE OF THE GUIDANCE

(5) The Government is committed to increasing mobility for social tenants to enable tenants to meet their aspirations, and to support them into work. We want to ensure that tenants are not prevented from taking up an employment opportunity because they cannot find a suitable place to live, recognising that long term unemployment is damaging for individuals and communities. That is why in the Autumn Statement 2013 we set out our intention to introduce a Right to Move for social tenants who need to move to take up a job or live closer to employment or training.

(6) We’ve already taken some important steps in the right direction. HomeSwap Direct is helping social tenants search for a new home across the country. Through the Localism Act, we have given local authorities the freedom to make better use of the social housing stock by taking transferring tenants who are not in housing need out of the allocation legislation, allowing authorities to develop appropriate policies for transferring tenants, without the risk of challenge from those in greater need on the waiting list.

(7) The Government has also taken decisive steps to increase the supply of affordable housing. The current Affordable Homes Programme is on track to deliver 170,000 homes between 2011 and 2015 with £19.5 billion of public and private investment. A further £38 billion of public and private investment will help deliver another 275,000 new affordable homes between 2015 and 2020.

(8) To give effect to the Right to Move we have introduced regulations to prevent local authorities applying a local connection test that could disadvantage tenants who need to move across local authority boundaries for work related reasons. This guidance is intended to assist local authorities to implement these regulations.

(9) The Government has made clear that we expect social homes to go to people who genuinely need and deserve them. That is why the Localism Act has maintained the protection provided by the statutory reasonable preference criteria which ensure that priority for social housing continues to be given to those in the greatest housing need.

(10) Another important aim of this guidance, therefore, is to assist local authorities to apply the allocation legislation to ensure that tenants who need to move within or across local authority boundaries are given appropriate priority under local authorities’ allocation schemes.

QUALIFICATION

(11) Section 160ZA(7) provides that local authorities may decide who does or does not qualify for an allocation of social housing, subject to any regulations made under subsection 8 which provides that the Secretary of State may prescribe that certain classes of persons are or are not qualifying persons, or that certain criteria cannot be taken into account in deciding who qualifies.

(12) Subject to parliamentary scrutiny, the Allocation of Housing (Qualification Criteria for Right to Move) (England) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/967) (‘the qualification regulations 2015’) will come into force on 20 April. These provide that local authorities must not disqualify certain persons on the grounds that they do not have a local connection with the authority’s district. Specifically, a local connection may not be applied to existing social tenants seeking to transfer from another local authority district in England who:

• have reasonable preference under s 166(3)(e) because of a need to move to the local authority’s district to avoid hardship, and
• need to move because the tenant works in the district, or
• need to move to take up an offer of work

(13) This will ensure that existing tenants who are seeking to move between local authority areas in England in order to be closer to their work, or to take up an offer of work (hereafter referred to together as ‘work related reasons’), will not be disadvantaged.

(14) We have made a similar provision for certain members of the Armed Forces community, by regulating to prevent local authorities from applying a local connection requirement to disqualify them,1 in order to give effect to the Government’s commitment that those who serve in the Armed Forces are not disadvantaged in their access to social housing by the need to move from base to base. Aside from members of the Armed Forces and transferring tenants who will benefit from the Right to Move, the Government has made clear that we expect local authorities to ensure that only long standing local residents, or those with a well established local association should qualify for social housing, and has issued statutory guidance to ensure that local authorities apply a residency test to social housing of at least two years.2

2 Providing Social Housing for Local People: Statutory guidance on social housing allocations for local authorities in England.

Local connection

(15) Local connection is defined by s 199. A person has a local connection because of normal residence (current or previous) of their own choice, employment, family associations, or special circumstances.

Need to move

(16) The qualification regulations 2015 apply to transferring tenants who have reasonable preference under s 166A(3)(e), that is to say the local authority is satisfied that they need to move to a particular locality in the district of the housing authority, where failure to meet that need would cause hardship (to themselves or others).

(17) The local authority must ensure, therefore, not simply that the tenant needs to move for work, but that, if they were unable to do so, it would cause them hardship.

(18) Local authorities must be satisfied that the tenant needs, rather than wishes, to move for work related reasons. In the Secretary of State’s view the factors that local authorities should take into account in determining whether a tenant needs to move to be closer to work or to take up a job offer include:

- the distance and/or time taken to travel between work and home
- the availability and affordability of transport, taking into account level of earnings
- the nature of the work and whether similar opportunities are available closer to home
- other personal factors, such as medical conditions and child care, which would be affected if the tenant could not move
- the length of the work contract
- whether failure to move would result in the loss of an opportunity to improve their employment circumstances or prospects, for example, by taking up a better job, a promotion, or an apprenticeship

(19) This is not an exhaustive list and local authorities may wish to consider providing for other appropriate factors to take into account in the light of local circumstances.

Work

(20) The qualification regulations 2015 only apply if work is not short-term or marginal in nature, nor ancillary to work in another district. Voluntary work is also excluded.

Short-term

(21) In determining whether work is short-term, the Secretary of State considers that the following are relevant considerations:

- whether work is regular or intermittent

This is likely to be particularly relevant in the case of the self-employed.

- the period of employment and whether or not work was intended to be short-term or long-term at the outset

In the Secretary of State’s view a contract of employment that was intended to last for less than 12 months could be considered to be short-term.

Marginal

(22) The following considerations would be relevant in determining whether work is marginal:

- the number of hours worked

In the Secretary of State’s view employment of less than 16 hours a week could be considered to be marginal in nature. This is the threshold below which a person may be able to claim Income Support and the threshold for a single person’s entitlement to Working Tax Credit.

- the level of earnings

(23) Local authorities should take into account all the relevant factors when reaching a decision. The fact that a tenant only works 15 hours a week, for example, may not be determinative if they are able to demonstrate that the work is regular and the remuneration is substantial.
A1.4 England: Allocation

Ancillary

(24) Work must not be ancillary to work in another local authority’s district. This means that, if the person works occasionally in the local authority’s district, even if the pattern of work is regular, but their main place of work is in a different local authority’s district, the work is excluded from the ambit of these regulations.

(25) A further relevant consideration would be whether the tenant is expected eventually to return to work in the original local authority district. If a local authority has reason to believe this is the case, they should seek verification from the tenant’s employer.

(26) A person who seeks to move into a local authority to be closer to work in a neighbouring authority – for example, where the transport links are better in the first local authority’s area – is also excluded from these regulations. However, there is nothing to prevent local authorities looking sympathetically on tenants seeking to move into their authority’s district for this reason, if they choose to do so.

Voluntary work

(27) The regulations exclude voluntary work. Voluntary work means work where no payment is received or the only payment is in respect of any expenses reasonably incurred.

Apprenticeship

(28) The term ‘work’ includes an apprenticeship. This is because an apprenticeship normally takes place under an apprenticeship agreement which is an employment contract (specifically a contract of service).

Genuine intention to take up an offer of work

(29) Where the tenant has been offered a job and needs to move to take it up, they must be able to demonstrate to the local authority’s satisfaction that they have a genuine intention to take up the offer.

(30) Local authorities may wish to ask to see a letter of acceptance and may wish to contact the employer to verify the position. Authorities may also wish to seek clarification from the tenant by interviewing them over the telephone or in person.

Verification and evidence

(31) Local authorities will want to satisfy themselves that the work or job-offer is genuine and should seek appropriate documentary evidence.

(32) Appropriate evidence could include:
   • a contract of employment
   • wage/salary slips covering a certain period of time, or bank statements (this is likely to be particularly relevant in the case of zero-hours contracts)
   • tax and benefits information – eg proof that the applicant is in receipt of working tax credit (if eligible)
   • a formal offer letter

(33) Additionally, local authorities may wish to contact the employer to verify the position.
Authorities are strongly advised to consider whether an applicant qualifies for an allocation under the qualification regulations 2015 both at the time of the initial application and when considering making an allocation.

PRIORITISATION

The qualification regulations will ensure that tenants who need to move between local authority districts for work related reasons are not disadvantaged by a local connection test. However, to deliver the Right to Move, it is also important that tenants who need to move for work, within or across local authority boundaries, are given appropriate priority under local authorities’ allocation schemes.

Hardship reasonable preference

Section 166A(3) provides that housing authorities must frame their allocation scheme to ensure that reasonable preference is given to people who need to move to a particular locality in the authority’s district, where failure to meet that need would cause hardship (to themselves or others).

Paragraph 4.11 of the 2012 guidance sets out the Secretary of State’s view that ‘hardship’ would include, for example, a person who needs to move to a different locality to take up a particular employment, education or training opportunity.

This guidance goes further and strongly encourages all local authorities to apply the hardship reasonable preference category to tenants who are seeking to transfer and who need to move within the local authority district or from another local authority district to be closer to work, or to take up an offer of work.

In considering whether a transferring tenant needs to move for work related reasons to avoid hardship to themselves (or others), they may wish to take account of the guidance set out in paragraphs 16 to 34 above.

Where a tenant is seeking to move within the same local authority district, local authorities are encouraged to take a more flexible approach. This is because the tenant is already accommodated in the district and any move to another social home will therefore be broadly stock neutral (that is to say the transfer creates another void which can be used to meet other housing needs). In particular, local authorities should consider whether or not the issue of whether work is short-term, marginal, ancillary or voluntary carries the same weight in relation to a within district move.

Setting aside a proportion of lets for cross-boundary moves

In framing their allocation scheme to determine their allocation priorities, local authorities will wish to strike a balance between the interests of transferring tenants who need to move into their district for work related reasons and the demand from other applicants in identified housing need.

The Secretary of State considers that an appropriate way to do so would be for a local authority to set a quota for the proportion of properties that it expects to allocate each year to transferring tenants who need to move into their district for work related reasons (‘the Right to Move quota’). The Secretary of State strongly encourages all local authorities to adopt such an approach and considers that an appropriate quota would be at least 1%.

Local authorities should publish the quota as part of their allocation scheme, together with their rationale for adopting the specific percentage. They should review and revise the proportion as appropriate, in the light of changing circumstances.
A1.4 England: Allocation

(44) Local authorities may wish to set aside a higher proportion than 1%. Authorities that decide to set a quota that is lower than 1%, should be ready to explain publicly why they have chosen to do so.

(45) It is important that local authorities are open and accountable, to their own tenants and the wider community as well as to tenants seeking to move into the area for work related reasons. Accordingly, local authorities are encouraged to report locally on demand for and lettings outcomes in relation to the Right to Move quota.

Area based choice based lettings schemes

We are aware that in some parts of the country, local authorities participate in area-based choice based lettings schemes that bring together a number of authorities and Private Registered Providers of social housing, often with a common allocation policy that applies to all the partner local authorities. We consider that such schemes provide an excellent basis for cross-boundary mobility, particularly as housing and employment markets are likely to be similar across the partner authorities. Accordingly, we strongly encourage all local authorities that participate in area-based choice based lettings schemes to consider how they can provide for tenants to move between partner authorities for work related reasons, for example, by providing for a quota of lettings to be made available for this group.

Homelessness and threatened homelessness

A2.1

175 Homelessness and threatened homelessness

(a) is entitled to occupy by virtue of an interest in it or by virtue of an order of a court,

(b) has an express or implied licence to occupy, or

(c) occupies as a residence by virtue of any enactment or rule of law giving him the right to remain in occupation or restricting the right of another person to recover possession.

(2) A person is also homeless if he has accommodation but—

(a) he cannot secure entry to it, or

(b) it consists of a moveable structure, vehicle or vessel designed or adapted for human habitation and there is no place where he is entitled or permitted both to place it and to reside in it.

(3) A person shall not be treated as having accommodation unless it is accommodation which it would be reasonable for him to continue to occupy.

(4) A person is threatened with homelessness if it is likely that he will become homeless within 56 days.

(5) A person is also threatened with homelessness if—

(a) a valid notice has been given to the person under section 21 of the Housing Act 1988 (orders for possession on expiry or termination of assured shorthold tenancy) in respect of the only accommodation the person has that is available for the person’s occupation, and

(b) that notice will expire within 56 days.

176 Meaning of accommodation available for occupation

Accommodation shall be regarded as available for a person’s occupation only if it is available for occupation by him together with—

(a) any other person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or

(b) any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him.
A2.1 England: Homelessness

References in this Part to securing that accommodation is available for a person’s occupation shall be construed accordingly.

177 Whether it is reasonable to continue to occupy accommodation

(1) It is not reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation if it is probable that this will lead to domestic violence [or other violence] against him, or against—
   (a) a person who normally resides with him as a member of his family, or
   (b) any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him.

   [(1A) For this purpose “violence” means—
   (a) violence from another person; or
   (b) threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out;
   and violence is “domestic violence” if it is from a person who is associated with the victim.]

(2) In determining whether it would be, or would have been, reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation, regard may be had to the general circumstances prevailing in relation to housing in the district of the local housing authority to whom he has applied for accommodation or for assistance in obtaining accommodation.

(3) The Secretary of State may by order specify—
   (a) other circumstances in which it is to be regarded as reasonable or not reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation, and
   (b) other matters to be taken into account or disregarded in determining whether it would be, or would have been, reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation.

NOTES

Amendment

Sub-s (1): words “or other violence” in square brackets inserted by the Homelessness Act 2002, s 10(1)(a).

Sub-s (1A) substituted, for sub-s (1) proviso as originally enacted, by the Homelessness Act 2002, s 10(1)(b).

   (i) who has become a parent of the child by virtue of an adoption order or who has applied for an adoption order, or

Interim duty to accommodate

188 Interim duty to accommodate in case of apparent priority need

[1] If the local housing authority have reason to believe that an applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance and have a priority need, they must secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation.

(1ZA) In a case in which the local housing authority conclude their inquiries under section 184 and decide that the applicant does not have a priority need—

(a) where the authority decide that they do not owe the applicant a duty under section 189B(2), the duty under subsection (1) comes to an end when the authority notify the applicant of that decision, or

(b) otherwise, the duty under subsection (1) comes to an end upon the authority notifying the applicant of their decision that, upon the duty under section 189B(2) coming to an end, they do not owe the applicant any duty under section 190 or 193.

(1ZB) In any other case, the duty under subsection (1) comes to an end upon the later of—

(a) the duty owed to the applicant under section 189B(2) coming to an end or the authority notifying the applicant that they have decided that they do not owe the applicant a duty under that section, and

(b) the authority notifying the applicant of their decision as to what other duty (if any) they owe to the applicant under the following provisions of this Part upon the duty under section 189B(2) coming to an end.

[1A] But if the local housing authority have reason to believe that the duty under section 193(2) may apply in relation to an applicant in the circumstances referred to in section 195A(1), they shall secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation [until the later of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1ZB)] regardless of whether the applicant has a priority need.

(2) The duty under this section arises irrespective of any possibility of the referral of the applicant’s case to another local housing authority (see sections 198 to 200).

[2A] For the purposes of this section, where the applicant requests a review under section 202(1)(b) of the authority’s decision as to the suitability of accommodation offered to the applicant by way of a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer (within the meaning of section 193A), the authority’s duty to the applicant under section 189B(2) is not to be taken to have come to an end under section 193A(2) until the decision on the review has been notified to the applicant.

(3) Otherwise, the duty under this section comes to an end in accordance with subsections (1ZA) to (1A), regardless of any review requested by the applicant under section 202.
But the authority may secure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation pending a decision on review.]

Referral to another local housing authority

198 Referral of case to another local housing authority

[(A1) If the local housing authority would be subject to the duty under section 189B (initial duty owed to all eligible persons who are homeless) but consider that the conditions are met for referral of the case to another local housing authority in England, they may notify that other authority of their opinion.]

(1) If the local housing authority would be subject to the duty under section 193 (accommodation for those with priority need who are not homeless intentionally) but consider that the conditions are met for referral of the case to another local housing authority, they may notify that other authority of their opinion.

(2) The conditions for referral of the case to another authority are met if—

(a) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him has a local connection with the district of the authority to whom his application was made,

(b) the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him has a local connection with the district of that other authority, and

(c) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him will run the risk of domestic violence in that other district.

[(2ZA) The conditions for referral of the case to another authority are also met if—

(a) the application is made within the period of two years beginning with the date on which the applicant accepted an offer from the other authority under section 193(7AA) (private rented sector offer), and

(b) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant will run the risk of domestic violence in the district of the other authority.]

[(2A) But the conditions for referral mentioned in subsection (2) [or (2ZA)] are not met if—

(a) the applicant or any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him has suffered violence (other than domestic violence) in the district of the other authority; and

(b) it is probable that the return to that district of the victim will lead to further violence of a similar kind against him.

(3) For the purposes of subsections (2)[, (2ZA)] and (2A) “violence” means—

(a) violence from another person; or

(b) threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out; and violence is “domestic violence” if it is from a person who is associated with the victim.]

(4) The conditions for referral of the case to another authority are also met if—

(a) the applicant was on a previous application made to that other authority placed (in pursuance of their functions under this Part) in accommodation in the district of the authority to whom his application is now made, and

1330
(b) the previous application was within such period as may be prescribed of the present application.

[(4A)] Subsection (4) is to be construed, in a case where the other authority is an authority in Wales, as if the reference to “this Part” were a reference to Part 2 of the Housing (Wales) Act 2014.

(5) The question whether the conditions for referral of a case [which does not involve a referral to a local housing authority in Wales] are satisfied shall be decided by agreement between the notifying authority and the notified authority or, in default of agreement, in accordance with such arrangements as the Secretary of State may direct by order.

[(5A)] The question whether the conditions for referral of a case involving a referral to a local housing authority in Wales shall be decided by agreement between the notifying authority and the notified authority or, in default of agreement, in accordance with such arrangements as the Secretary of State and the Welsh Ministers may jointly direct by order.

(6) An order may direct that the arrangements shall be—

(a) those agreed by any relevant authorities or associations of relevant authorities, or

(b) in default of such agreement, such arrangements as appear to the Secretary of State [or, in the case of an order under subsection (5A), to the Secretary of State and the Welsh Ministers] to be suitable, after consultation with such associations representing relevant authorities, and such other persons, as he thinks appropriate.

199 Local connection
(1) A person has a local connection with the district of a local housing authority if he has a connection with it—
   (a) because he is, or in the past was, normally resident there, and that residence is or was of his own choice,
   (b) because he is employed there,
   (c) because of family associations, or
   (d) because of special circumstances.

(2) A person is not employed in a district if he is serving in the regular armed forces of the Crown.

(3) Residence in a district is not of a person’s own choice if—
   (a) he becomes resident there because he, or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him, is serving in the regular armed forces of the Crown, or
   (b) he, or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with him, becomes resident there because he is detained under the authority of an Act of Parliament.

(4) In subsections (2) and (3) “regular armed forces of the Crown” means the Royal Navy, the regular forces as defined by section 225 of the Army Act 1955 [or the regular air force as defined by section 223 of the Air Force Act 1955].

(5) The Secretary of State may by order specify other circumstances in which—
   (a) a person is not to be treated as employed in a district, or
   (b) residence in a district is not to be treated as of a person’s own choice.

[6] A person has a local connection with the district of a local housing authority if he was (at any time) provided with accommodation in that district under section 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (support for asylum seekers).

(7) But subsection (6) does not apply—
   (a) to the provision of accommodation for a person in a district of a local housing authority if he was subsequently provided with accommodation in the district of another local housing authority under section 95 of that Act, or
   (b) to the provision of accommodation in an accommodation centre by virtue of section 22 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 (c 41) (use of accommodation centres for section 95 support).

[8] While a local authority in England have a duty towards a person under section 23C of the Children Act 1989 (continuing functions in respect of former relevant children)—
   (a) if the local authority is a local housing authority, the person has a local connection with their district, and
   (b) otherwise, the person has a local connection with every district of a local housing authority that falls within the area of the local authority.
In subsection (8), “local authority” has the same meaning as in the Children Act 1989 (see section 105 of that Act).

Where, by virtue of being provided with accommodation under section 22A of the Children Act 1989 (provision of accommodation for children in care), a person is normally resident in the district of a local housing authority in England for a continuous period of at least two years, some or all of which falls before the person attains the age of 16, the person has a local connection with that district.

A person ceases to have a local connection with a district under subsection (10) upon attaining the age of 21 (but this does not affect whether the person has a local connection with that district under any other provision of this section).

OVERVIEW OF THE HOMELESSNESS LEGISLATION

1 This overview provides a summary of the homelessness legislation and the duties, powers and obligations on housing authorities and others towards people who are homeless or at risk of homelessness. It does not form part of the statutory code of guidance.

2 The primary homelessness legislation – that is, Part 7 of the Housing Act 1996 – provides the statutory underpinning for action to prevent homelessness and provide assistance to people threatened with or actually homeless.

3 In 2002, the Government amended the homelessness legislation through the Homelessness Act 2002 and the Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002 to:
(a) ensure a more strategic approach to tackling and preventing homelessness, in particular by requiring a homelessness strategy for every housing authority district; and,
(b) strengthen the assistance available to people who are homeless or threatened with homelessness by extending the priority need categories to homeless 16 and 17 year olds; care leavers aged 18, 19 and 20; people who are vulnerable as a result of time spent in care, the armed forces, prison or custody, and people who are vulnerable because they have fled their home because of violence.

4 The Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 significantly reformed England’s homelessness legislation by placing duties on local authorities to intervene at earlier stages to prevent homelessness in their areas. It also requires housing authorities to provide homelessness services to all those affected, not just those who have ‘priority need.’ These include:
(a) an enhanced prevention duty extending the period a household is threatened with homelessness from 28 days to 56 days, meaning that housing authorities are required to work with people to prevent homelessness at an earlier stage; and,
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(b) a new duty for those who are already homeless so that housing authorities will support households for 56 days to relieve their homelessness by helping them to secure accommodation.

Homelessness review and strategy

5 Under the Homelessness Act 2002, all housing authorities must have in place a homelessness strategy based on a review of all forms of homelessness in their district. The strategy must be renewed at least every 5 years. The social services authority must provide reasonable assistance.

6 The strategy must set out the authority’s plans for the prevention of homelessness and for securing that sufficient accommodation and support are or will be available for people who become homeless or who are at risk of becoming so.

Duty to refer

7 The Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 introduced a duty on certain public authorities to refer service users who they think may be homeless or threatened with homelessness to a housing authority. The service user must give consent, and can choose which authority to be referred to. The housing authority should incorporate the duty to refer into their homelessness strategy and establish effective partnerships and working arrangements with agencies to facilitate appropriate referrals.

Duty to provide advisory services

8 The housing authority has a duty to provide advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness and the rights of homeless people or those at risk of homelessness, as well as the help that is available from the housing authority or others and how to access that help. The service should be designed with certain listed vulnerable groups in mind and authorities can provide it themselves or arrange for other agencies to do it on their behalf.

Applications and inquiries

9 Housing authorities must give proper consideration to all applications for housing assistance, and if they have reason to believe that an applicant may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, they must make inquiries to see whether they owe them any duty under Part 7 of the 1996 Act. This assessment process is important in enabling housing authorities to identify the assistance which an applicant may need, either to prevent them from becoming homeless, or to help them to find another home. In each case, the authority will need to first decide whether the applicant is eligible for assistance and threatened with or actually homeless. Certain applicants who are ‘persons from abroad’ are not eligible for any assistance under Part 7 except free advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness.

10 Broadly speaking, a person is threatened with homelessness if they are likely to become homeless within 56 days. An applicant who has been served with valid notice under section 21 of the Housing Act 1988 to end their assured shorthold tenancy is also threatened with homelessness, if the notice has expired or will expire within 56 days and is served in respect of the only accommodation that is available for them to occupy.

11 An applicant is to be considered homeless if they do not have accommodation that they have a legal right to occupy, which is accessible and physically available to them (and their household) and which it would be reasonable for them to continue to live in.

Assessments and personalised housing plans

12 Housing authorities have a duty to carry out an assessment in all cases where an eligible applicant is homeless or threatened with homelessness. This will identify what has caused the homelessness or threat of homelessness, the housing needs of the applicant and any support they need in order to be able to secure and retain accommodation. Following this assessment, the housing authority must work with the person to develop a personalised housing plan which will include actions (or ‘reasonable steps’) to be taken by the authority and the applicant to try and prevent or relieve homelessness.

Prevention duty

13 Housing authorities have a duty to take reasonable steps to help prevent any eligible person (regardless of priority need status, intentionality and whether they have a local connection) who is threatened with homelessness from becoming homeless. This means either helping them to stay in their current accommodation or helping them to find a new place to live before they become actually homeless. The prevention duty continues for 56 days unless it is brought to an end by an event such as accommodation being secured for the person, or by their becoming homeless.

Relief duty

14 If the applicant is already homeless, or becomes homeless despite activity during the prevention stage, the reasonable steps will be focused on helping the applicant to secure accommodation. This relief duty lasts for 56 days unless ended in another way. If the housing authority has reason to believe a homeless applicant may be eligible for assistance and have a priority need they must be provided with interim accommodation.

Main housing duty

15 If homelessness is not successfully prevented or relieved, a housing authority will owe the main housing duty to applicants who are eligible, have a priority need for accommodation and are not homeless intentionally. Certain categories of household, such as pregnant women, families with children, and households that are homeless due to an emergency such as a fire or flood, have priority need if homeless. Other groups may be assessed as having priority need because they are vulnerable as a result of old age, mental ill health, physical disability, having been in prison or care or as a result of becoming homeless due to domestic abuse.

16 Under the main housing duty, housing authorities must ensure that suitable accommodation is available for the applicant and their household until the duty is brought to an end, usually through the offer of a settled home. The duty can also be brought to an end for other reasons, such as the applicant turning down a suitable offer of temporary accommodation or because they are no longer eligible for assistance. A suitable offer of a settled home (whether accepted or refused by the applicant) which would bring the main housing duty to an end includes an offer of a suitable secure or introductory tenancy with a local authority, an offer of accommodation through a private registered provider (also known as a housing association) or the offer of a suitable tenancy for at least 12 months from a private landlord made by arrangement with the local authority.

Suitable accommodation

17 Housing authorities have various powers and duties to secure accommodation for homeless applicants, either on an interim basis, to prevent or relieve homelessness, to meet the main housing duty or as a settled home. Accommodation must always be 'suitable' and there are particular standards set when private rented accommodation is secured for households which have priority need.

18 Under the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2003, Bed & Breakfast accommodation is not considered suitable for families with children and households that include a pregnant woman, except where there is no other accommodation available, and then only for a maximum of six weeks. The Secretary of State considers that Bed & Breakfast accommodation is unsuitable for 16 and 17 year olds.
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

Intentional homelessness

19 A person would be homeless intentionally where homelessness was the consequence of a deliberate action or omission by that person. A deliberate act might be a decision to leave the previous accommodation even though it would have been reasonable for the person (and everyone in the person’s household) to continue to live there. A deliberate omission might be non-payment of rent that led to rent arrears and eviction despite the rent being affordable.

20 Where people have a priority need but are intentionally homeless the housing authority must provide advice and assistance to help them find accommodation for themselves and secure suitable accommodation for them for a period that will give them a reasonable chance of doing so.

21 If, despite this assistance, homelessness persists, any children in the household could be in need under the Children Act 1989, and the family should be referred (with consent) to the children’s social services authority.

Local connection and referrals to another authority

22 Broadly speaking, for the purpose of the homelessness legislation, people may have a local connection with a district because of residence, employment or family associations in the district, or because of special circumstances. (There are exceptions, for example, residence in a district while serving a prison sentence there does not establish a local connection.) Where applicants meet the criteria for the relief duty or for the main housing duty, and the authority considers that the applicant does not have a local connection with the district but does have one somewhere else, the housing authority dealing with the application can ask the housing authority in that other district to take responsibility for the case. However, applicants cannot be referred to another housing authority if they, or any member of their household, would be at risk of violence in the district of the other authority.

23 The definition of a ‘local connection’ for young people leaving care was amended by the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 so that a young homeless care leaver has a local connection to the area of the local authority that looked after them. Additional provision is made for care leavers who have been placed in accommodation, under section 22A of the Children Act 1989, in a different district to that of the children’s services authority that owes them leaving care duties. If they have lived in the other district for at least 2 years, including some time before they turned 16, they will also have a local connection with that district until they are 21.

Reviews and appeals

24 Housing authorities must provide written notifications to applicants when they reach certain decisions about their case, and the reasons behind any decisions that are against the applicant’s interests. Applicants can ask the housing authority to review most aspects of their decisions, and, if still dissatisfied, can appeal to the county court on a point of law.

25 Housing authorities have the power to accommodate applicants pending a review or appeal to the county court. When an applicant who is being provided with interim accommodation requests a review of the suitability of accommodation offered to end the relief duty, the authority has a duty to continue to accommodate them pending a review.

CHAPTER 1: INTRODUCTION

Purpose of the code

1.1 The Secretary of State for Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government is issuing this code of guidance to local housing authorities (referred to as housing authorities) in England under section 182 of the Housing Act 1996 (‘the 1996 Act’). In accordance with section 182(1) of the 1996 Act, housing authorities are required to have due regard to this statutory guidance in exercising their functions relating to homelessness and prevention of homelessness, including their functions under Part 7 of the 1996 Act (as amended) and under the Homelessness Act 2002 (‘the 2002 Act’). This code replaces and consolidates the previous version published in 2006 and the supplementary guidance issued in August 2009, November 2012 and November 2014.

1.2 Under section 182(1), social services authorities in England are also required to have regard to guidance given by the Secretary of State (such as this code) when exercising their functions relating to homelessness and the prevention of homelessness. Further guidance applicable to social services authorities is also issued jointly with the Secretary of State for Health and Social Care and the Secretary of State for Education.

1.3 The code provides guidance on how housing authorities should exercise their functions relating to homelessness and threatened homelessness and apply the statutory duties in practice. This is not a substitute for legislation and therefore any policy context on the law documented in the code should be considered only as the Department’s understanding at the time of issue. While it is intended that the code will be updated periodically, housing authorities are expected to keep up to date with developments in legislation and case law.

1.4 The Secretary of State has the power to issue statutory codes of practice, providing further guidance on how housing authorities should deliver and monitor their homelessness and homelessness prevention functions. Any codes of practice will focus on specific functions of housing authorities in order to drive up standards.

Who is the code for?

1.5 The code is issued specifically for local authority members and staff. It is also of direct relevance to private registered providers of social housing. Private registered providers have a duty under the 1996 Act to co-operate with housing authorities in exercising their homelessness functions. Private registered providers are subject to the Regulator of Social Housing’s Regulatory Standards, in particular the expectation that they will co-operate with local authority strategic housing functions, as set out in the Tenancy and Home and Community Standards.

1.6 Many of the activities discussed in the code require joint planning and operational co-operation between housing authorities and social services authorities, health authorities, criminal justice agencies, voluntary sector organisations and the diverse range of bodies working in the private rented sectors – so the code is also relevant to these agencies.

Homelessness legislation

1.7 Part 7 of the 1996 Act sets out the powers and duties of housing authorities where people apply to them for accommodation or assistance in obtaining accommodation in cases of homelessness or threatened homelessness.

1.8 The Homelessness Act 2002 (‘the 2002 Act’) places a requirement on housing authorities in England to formulate and publish a homelessness strategy based on the results of a review of homelessness in their district. The 2002 Act also amended a number of provisions in Part 7 of the 1996 Act to strengthen the safety net for vulnerable people.

1.9 The Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 (‘the 2017 Act’) places a set of duties on housing authorities to intervene at earlier stages to prevent homelessness in their areas.
and to take reasonable steps to prevent and relieve homelessness for all eligible applicants, not just those that have priority need under the Act.

Equality

1.10 Housing authorities need to ensure that policies and decisions relating to homelessness and threatened homelessness do not amount to unlawful conduct under the Equality Act 2010 and also comply with the public sector equality duty.

1.11 The Equality Act 2010 provides protection from unlawful discrimination in the provision of goods, services and public functions, housing, transport and education in relation to the protected characteristics set out in the legislation, which are:

(a) age;
(b) disability;
(c) gender reassignment;
(d) pregnancy and maternity (which includes breastfeeding);
(e) marriage and civil partnership;
(f) race;
(g) religion or belief;
(h) sex; and,
(i) sexual orientation.

1.12 The public sector equality duty in section 149(1) of the Equality Act 2010 requires public authorities, including housing authorities, to integrate equality considerations into the decision-making process from the outset, including in the development, implementation and review of their policies and services. This includes policies and services relating to homelessness and threatened homelessness. Other agencies and bodies who carry out public functions on behalf of local authorities also have a duty to comply with the public sector equality duty in the delivery of those public functions.

1.13 Specifically, under section 149(1) Equality Act 2010, public authorities in exercising their functions (or a person exercising public functions that is not a public authority (section 149(2)) must have due regard to the need to:

(a) eliminate discrimination, harassment, victimisation and any other conduct that is prohibited by or under the Equality Act 2010;
(b) advance equality of opportunity between persons who share a relevant protected characteristic and persons who do not share it; and,
(c) foster good relations between persons who share a relevant protected characteristic and persons who do not share it.

1.14 The three limbs of the duty, listed above, apply to all protected characteristics apart from marriage and civil partnership, which is only relevant to the first limb (eliminating discrimination and so on).

1.15 In order to comply with the public sector equality duty housing authorities need to do the following:

(a) plan how to factor in equality considerations;
(b) collect sufficient information to develop a reasonable understanding of what the equality impacts might be;
(c) identify any equality impact the policy or service might have;
(d) justify any decision that it takes;
(e) re-evaluation to consider whether any alternative approaches might be possible;
(f) record how many equality impacts are taken;
(g) inform decision-makers; and,
(h) continue to review equality impacts as the policy or service is implemented or developed.

1.16 The duty to have due regard to these equality issues will also apply when decisions are taken in respect of individual applications for homelessness assistance. Applicants should receive fully considered decisions which, in accordance with the public sector equality duty, show due regard to any equality impacts of the decision.

1.17 Housing authorities are also subject to The Equality Act 2010 (Specific Duties...
A2.3 England: Homelessness

and Public Authorities) Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/353) if they are covered under Schedule 2 to those regulations, which would include most housing authorities. These regulations require public authorities to publish information to demonstrate their compliance with the public sector equality duty and set and publish equality objectives.

1.18 Further information about the Equality Act 2010 and the public sector equality duty is available from the Equality and Human Rights Commission website and the Government Equalities Office on gov.uk.

Human Rights Act 1998

1.19 In addition, when someone is receiving services from (or is on the receiving end of public functions carried out by) a public sector organisation or others who deliver services or carry out public functions on their behalf, they will also have rights under the Human Rights Act 1998.

1.20 Section 3 of the Human Rights Act 1998 specifies that when interpreting the law, so far as it is possible to do so, primary and secondary legislation must be read and given effect in a way which is compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights (‘the Convention’). Section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 provides that it is unlawful for a public authority to act in a way which is incompatible with a Convention right. Therefore, housing authorities and other agencies that carry out public functions on behalf of housing authorities must do so in a way that is compatible with Convention rights.

1.21 Housing authorities should pay particular attention to the promotion and protection of rights of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups such as people with disabilities, ethnic minorities, victims of sexual discrimination, children and elderly people.

1.22 Schedule 1 to the Human Rights Act 1998 gives further effect to a number of Convention rights and freedoms in domestic UK law. There are three Articles which are particularly important for the purposes of this code, as follows:

(a) Article 3 - is the prohibition of torture whereby every person has the absolute right not to be tortured or subjected to treatment or punishment that is inhuman or degrading;
(b) Article 4 - is the prohibition of slavery and forced labour whereby every person has the right not to be held in slavery or required to perform forced labour; and,
(c) Article 8 - is the right to respect for private and family life whereby every person has the right to respect for their private and family life, their home and their correspondence. This right can be interfered with only in specified circumstances: where it is necessary in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

1.23 Under Article 3, housing authorities have an obligation to prevent a person being subjected to treatment or punishment that is inhuman or degrading, to investigate any allegations of such treatment, and to protect vulnerable individuals who they know or should know are at risk of such treatment.

1.24 Under Article 4, housing authorities should try to ensure that their policies or decisions take measures to protect victims of modern slavery or trafficking and to protect individuals who they are aware are at risk of such treatment.

1.25 Under Article 8, housing authorities should try to ensure that their policies or decisions do not interfere with a person’s right to respect for private and family life, their home and their correspondence.

1.26 If a housing authority does decide that it will be difficult to avoid interfering with someone’s Article 8 rights, it will need to make sure that the policy or action is necessary, pursues one of the recognised legitimate aims and is proportionate to that aim. A housing authority may be asked to produce reasons for its decisions.

1.27 Housing authorities may also need to consider whether there are situations putting them under obligation to take active steps to promote and protect individuals’ Article 8 rights from systematic interference by third parties, for example, private businesses.

1.28 Housing authorities are expected to consider the human rights implications of their actions in the exercise of their powers, or risk having their decisions overturned as a result and the planning and delivery of their services affected.

Safeguarding

1.30 Housing authorities have a duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children and to co-operate to promote the well-being of all children, including 16-17 year olds, in the area as set out in the Children Act 2004.

1.31 Housing authorities also have a duty to co-operate with children’s services in relation to children in need when requested to do so, as long as this is compatible with their own statutory or other duties and obligations and does not unduly prejudice the discharge of any of their functions.

1.32 Children’s needs are paramount, and the welfare, needs and wishes of each child should be put first, so that every child receives the support they need.

1.33 All professionals who come into contact with children and their families must be alert to their needs and any risks of harm that individual abusers or potential abusers may pose, and respond proactively to them when dealing with their housing situation.

1.34 All professionals must share appropriate information in a timely way and can discuss any concerns about an individual child with colleagues, and with children’s services. This will include identifying where current or changing housing arrangements might affect risk to children.

1.35 All professionals contribute to whatever actions are needed to safeguard and promote a child’s welfare and take part in regularly reviewing the outcomes for the child against specific plans and outcomes.

1.36 The duties placed on housing authorities are set out in the Government’s inter-agency statutory guidance: ‘Working together to safeguard children: A guide to inter-agency working to safeguard and promote the welfare of children.’ The specific duties towards 16 and 17 year olds who are at risk of homelessness or who are homeless, and the legal duties children’s services authorities and housing authorities have towards them are set out in the Government’s statutory guidance: ‘Provision of accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation.’

CHAPTER 2: HOMELESSNESS STRATEGIES AND REVIEWS

2.1 This chapter provides guidance on housing authorities’ duties to carry out a homelessness review and to formulate and publish a strategy based on the results of that review.

Duty to formulate a homelessness strategy

2.2 Section 1(1) of the 2002 Act gives housing authorities the power to carry out a homelessness review for their district and formulate and publish a homelessness strategy based on the results of the review. Section 1(4) requires housing authorities to publish a new homelessness strategy, based on the results of a further homelessness review, within the period of five years beginning with the day on which their last homelessness strategy was published. However, housing authorities can conduct homelessness reviews and publish homelessness strategies more frequently if circumstances in the district change.

2.3 There was an exemption from this requirement for ‘excellent authorities’ as classified by the Secretary of State by virtue of the Local Authorities’ Plans and Strategies (Disapplication) (England) Order 2005. This regulation was revoked by the Local Audit and Accountability Act 2014 and all housing authorities are required to publish homelessness strategies as of 01 April 2017.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

2.4 In conducting a review of homelessness and to formulate a new strategy, housing authorities will need to take into account the additional duties introduced through the 2017 Act. Authorities are encouraged to take the opportunity to involve all relevant partners in developing a strategy that involves them in earlier identification and intervention to prevent homelessness.

2.5 For a homelessness strategy to be effective, housing authorities should ensure that it is consistent with other local plans and is developed with, and has the support of, all relevant local authority departments and partners. Corporate and partnership involvement in identifying strategic objectives will help to ensure all relevant departments and agencies are committed to supporting their delivery.

2.6 The homelessness strategy should link with other strategies and programmes that aim to address the wide range of factors that could contribute to homelessness in the local area. It will be important to consider how these strategies and programmes, which could encompass aspects of local health, justice or economic policy for example, can help achieve the objectives of the homelessness strategy and vice-versa.

2.7 Housing authorities should consider the benefits of cross-boundary co-operation. A county-wide approach will be particularly important in non-unitary authorities, where housing and homelessness services are provided by the district authority whilst other key services, such as social services, are delivered at the county level. Housing authorities should ensure that the homelessness strategy for their district forms part of a coherent approach to tackling homelessness with neighbouring authorities. Housing authorities may wish to collaborate to produce a joint homelessness strategy covering a sub-regional area. London boroughs should have regard to the London Housing Strategy when formulating their homelessness strategies.

2.8 Each local authority has a legal duty under the Health & Social Care Act 2012 to take such steps as it considers appropriate for improving the health of the people in its area. This includes people experiencing homelessness or at risk of homelessness. Housing authorities should ensure that their homelessness strategy is co-ordinated with the Health and Wellbeing Strategy, and that their review of homelessness informs and is informed by the Joint Strategic Needs Assessment.

2.9 To be effective the homelessness strategy will need to be based on realistic assumptions and be developed and owned jointly with partners who will be responsible for its delivery. Sections 1(5) and (6) of the 2002 Act require housing and social services authorities to take the homelessness strategy into account when exercising their functions. Authorities can combine housing and homelessness strategies in a single document where it is coherent to do so.

2.10 Housing authorities must consult public or local authorities, voluntary organisations or other persons as they consider appropriate before adopting or modifying a homelessness strategy. Housing authorities will also wish to consult with service users and specialist agencies that provide support to homeless people in the district. Section 3(4) provides that a housing authority cannot include in a homelessness strategy any specific action expected to be taken by another body or organisation without their approval.

2.11 As part of the homelessness strategy housing authorities should develop effective action plans, to help ensure that the objectives set out in the homelessness strategy are achieved. Action plans could include, for example, targets, milestones and arrangements for monitoring and evaluation.

2.12 Housing authorities must make copies of their homelessness review and the homelessness strategy available for inspection at their principal office at all reasonable hours and without charge, and the strategy must be available to any member of the public, on request (for which a reasonable charge can be made). Housing authorities are advised to publish the strategy and review documents on their website.
2.13 Housing authorities must keep their homelessness strategy under review and may modify it accordingly. Before modifying the strategy, they must consult on the same basis as required before adopting a strategy. Circumstances that might prompt modification of a homelessness strategy include but not be limited to: anything that may affect the composition of homelessness and/or the risk of homelessness in the district; anything that may change the delivery of the strategy; changes to the relationships between the partners involved in the strategy; or changes to the organisational structure of the housing authority.

2.14 Under section 2(1) of the 2002 Act, a homelessness review means a review by a housing authority of:

(a) the levels, and likely future levels, of homelessness in their district;
(b) the activities which are carried out for any of the following purposes (or which contribute to achieving any of them):
   (i) preventing homelessness in the housing authority’s district;
   (ii) securing that accommodation is or will be available for people in the district who are or may become homeless; and
   (iii) providing support for people in the district who are homeless or who may become at risk of homelessness; or who have been homeless and need support to prevent them becoming homeless again; and,
(c) the resources available to the housing authority, the social services authority for the district, other public authorities, voluntary organisations and other persons for the activities outlined in (b) above.

2.15 The purpose of the review is to determine the extent to which the population in the district is homeless or at risk of becoming homeless, assess the likely extent in the future, identify what is currently being done and by whom, and identify what resources are available, to prevent and tackle homelessness.

2.16 Housing authorities are reminded that when drawing up their homelessness strategies for preventing and reducing homelessness, they must consider the needs of all groups of people in their district who are homeless or likely to become homeless, including Gypsies and Travellers. The periodical review of housing needs under section 8 of the Housing Act 1985 is a statutory requirement on housing authorities. This requires housing authorities to assess and understand the accommodation needs of people residing or resorting to their district. Under section 124 of the Housing and Planning Act 2016, which amends section 8 of the Housing Act 1985, housing authorities have a statutory duty to consider the needs of people residing in or resorting to their district with respect to sites for caravans and the mooring of houseboats.

Identifying current and future levels of homelessness

2.17 Homelessness is defined by sections 175 to 178 of the 1996 Act. For further guidance on homelessness and threatened with homelessness see Chapter 6. The review must take account of all forms of homelessness within the meaning of the 1996 Act and should therefore consider a wide population of households who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless. This will include people sleeping rough, and those whose accommodation and circumstances make them more likely than others to become homeless including sleeping rough.

2.18 When carrying out the review housing authorities should consider including the following as a basis for assessing current and future levels of homelessness in their district:

(a) homelessness casework records and other local sources of data;
(b) trends in homelessness approaches and in underlying causes;
(c) which cohorts may be more likely to become homeless or be threatened with homelessness;
(d) the profile of households who have experienced homelessness in their district;
(e) equality monitoring data, including that relating to homelessness applications and outcomes;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(f) the range of factors that may affect future levels of homelessness;
(g) the personal and structural factors that may contribute to people becoming homeless; and,
(h) any planned legislation or local policy changes that are likely to impact on levels of homelessness for particular groups in the district.

Reviewing activities carried out and resources required

2.19 The public, private and voluntary sectors can all contribute, directly or indirectly, to the prevention of homelessness and the provision of accommodation and support for homeless people. The housing authority should therefore consider the activities of all relevant agencies and organisations, as well as the resources available to them, which may contribute to the delivery of services.

2.20 Having mapped all the current activities, the housing authority should consider whether these are appropriate and adequate to meet the aims of the strategy, and whether any realignment of resources or additional provision is needed.

Assistance from social services

2.21 In non-unitary districts, where the social services authority and the housing authority are different authorities, section 1(2) of the 2002 Act requires the social services authority to give the housing authority such assistance as may be reasonably required in carrying out a homelessness review and formulating and publishing a homelessness strategy. Since a large proportion of people who are homeless or at risk of homelessness will be vulnerable adults or have children in their care, it will always be necessary to seek assistance from the social services authority to formulate an effective homelessness strategy. In unitary authorities, the authority must ensure that the social services department assists the housing department in carrying out a homelessness review and formulating and publishing a homelessness strategy.

2.22 The social services authority must comply with all reasonable requests for assistance from housing authorities within their district. For the purposes of formulating a strategy, this might include providing information about the current and projected numbers of vulnerable adults within the district that might be at higher risk of homelessness, and the care, support and accommodation available to them. Children's social care services could provide, for example, future projections of young people leaving care who are likely to require accommodation and support, families provided with accommodation who are ineligible for assistance (some of which might become eligible) and the numbers of safeguarding alerts involving domestic abuse, poor housing conditions or other factors that might indicate a need for homelessness assistance.

Formulating the strategy

2.23 Having carried out a homelessness review the housing authority will be in a position to formulate its homelessness strategy based on the results of that review as required by section 1(1)(b) of the 2002 Act. In formulating its strategy, a housing authority will need to consider the necessary levels of activity required to achieve the aims set out in the paragraph below and the sufficiency of the resources available to them as revealed by the review.

2.24 Under section 3(1) of the 2002 Act a homelessness strategy means a strategy for:

(a) preventing homelessness in the district (see paragraphs 2.25-2.29 below);
(b) securing that sufficient accommodation is and will be available for people in the district who are or may become homeless (see paragraphs 2.30-2.56 below); and,
(c) securing the satisfactory provision of support for people in the district who are or may become homeless or who have been homeless and need support to prevent them becoming homeless again (see paragraphs 2.57-2.75 below).
Preventing homelessness

2.25 Under section 3(1)(a) of the 2002 Act, a homelessness strategy must include a strategy for preventing homelessness in the district. Furthermore, the 2017 Act strengthens statutory duties to prevent homelessness for all eligible applicants, including those who do not have priority need or may be considered intentionally homeless and regardless of local connection. The 2017 Act also creates a new duty on certain public authorities to refer users of their services who are threatened with homelessness to a housing authority of their choice, which enables earlier identification of people at risk of becoming homeless through their interactions with other services.

2.26 When developing their homelessness strategy, local authorities will wish to look beyond the statutory requirements to consider the economic and social reasons for investing in activities that prevent homelessness, and may wish to learn from other local authorities and service providers who have adopted a more preventative approach.

Reviewing homelessness prevention activities and resources

2.27 Housing authorities will need to gain a good understanding of the causes of homelessness in their district, both to inform the development of successful interventions, and to assist in securing the commitment of stakeholders who can contribute toward preventing homelessness.

2.28 Housing authorities should establish good links with service providers who have early contact with people who are at risk of becoming homeless, review and learn from their activities and consider how they might be improved. Housing authorities should also consider how they might identify and interact with those households that are not receiving services, in order to prevent homelessness.

2.29 As part of their homelessness review, housing authorities should identify resources that are allocated to activities that prevent homelessness as well as those that respond to households becoming homeless, and consider how these might be realigned. This will be particularly important for delivering the duties contained in the 2017 Act. Upstream prevention activities are likely to produce direct savings in temporary accommodation and other costs for the authority, and will also help to reduce pressures on wider services, such as health, housing and employment, in the longer term.

Formulating a strategy to prevent homelessness

2.30 Elements of a prevention strategy should include:

(a) advice and information: available to residents in the district, or who may return to the district, which assists them in having appropriate information or access to services that will help to prevent them becoming homeless. Maintaining a high level of awareness about housing options and homelessness amongst partner agencies will also contribute to preventing homelessness. For further guidance on advice and information on homelessness and threatened with homelessness see Chapter 3;

(b) advice and information: early identification: authorities should consider how they might identify people at risk of homelessness at an earlier stage, and the interventions that could be put in place to prevent them from becoming threatened with or becoming homeless. The ‘duty to refer’ (section 213B of the 1996 Act) should engage public bodies to assist with earlier identification, and housing authorities should develop local protocols or referral arrangements with appropriate agencies, whether or not they are included within that duty. For further advice on duty to refer see Chapter 4;

(c) pre-crisis intervention: authorities should consider whether sufficient activity is in place to intervene proactively where a household may be at risk of homelessness in the future. This might include, for example, having joint working arrangements with environmental health services to ensure tenants are not displaced through enforcement action other than in a planned way, involving children’s early help services to support families at risk of losing their social housing tenancy, or funding a court duty advice service that identifies households at risk of mortgage repossession or loss of private rented accommodation;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(d) preventing recurring homelessness: an analysis of local data should identify applicants most at risk of repeat homelessness which will inform decisions about allocation of resources, particularly for housing related support to help sustain settled accommodation; and,

(e) partnership arrangements: the homelessness strategy should set out how partners will be involved in all of the above activities, and what practical arrangements are needed (for example, joint protocols and procedures) to ensure the continued commitment to joint working to prevent homelessness and improve outcomes.

Ensuring a sufficient supply of accommodation

2.31 Section 3(1)(b) of the 2002 Act provides that one of the purposes of the homelessness strategy is to secure that sufficient accommodation is and will be available for people who are or may become homeless.

2.32 A shortage of affordable housing can lead to increasing numbers of people being accommodated in temporary accommodation whilst waiting for settled housing to bring the main homelessness duty to an end. ‘Settled housing’ in this context will primarily be social housing and good quality private sector accommodation. For further guidance on securing accommodation see Chapter 16.

2.33 Through the homelessness review, housing authorities should estimate the likely demand for assistance to prevent or relieve homelessness, and to meet the needs of those who are owed the main housing duty. They should include within the strategy what actions are required to ensure sufficient supply of accommodation to meet the estimated need.

Reviewing accommodation needs and resources

2.34 Housing authorities need to consider the range of accommodation that is available and is likely to be required for people who are, or may become, homeless. Landlords, accommodation providers and housing developers across all sectors may contribute to the review, and to the development of a strategy for provision of accommodation in the district.

2.35 Housing authorities should review the existing supply of accommodation available to people who are homeless at risk of homelessness and identify where there are gaps, or where existing resources do not match the most pressing needs.

2.36 This might include reviewing supply and demand for:

(a) social and affordable housing held by the housing authority and private registered providers;
(b) temporary accommodation provided on an interim basis, or under the section 193(2) main housing duty;
(c) private rented accommodation, including shared housing options for young single people;
(d) supported accommodation available for particular cohorts of people in need of accommodation with support; and,
(e) low cost home ownership schemes.

Increasing the supply of new housing

2.37 National guidance on planning and affordable housing is contained in the National Planning Policy Framework and supporting planning guidance. The Framework acts as guidance for local planning authorities both in drawing up Local Plans and making decisions about planning applications.

2.38 The Framework sets out that local planning authorities should have a clear understanding of housing needs in their area. They should prepare a Strategic Housing Market Assessment to assess their full housing needs, working with neighbouring authorities where housing market areas cross administrative boundaries.
2.39 The Framework asks local authorities to use their evidence base to ensure that their Local Plan meets the full, objectively assessed needs for market and affordable housing in the housing market area, as far as is consistent with the policies set out in the Framework.

2.40 To deliver a wide choice of high quality homes, widen opportunities for home ownership and create sustainable, inclusive and mixed communities, the Framework asks local planning authorities to:

(a) plan for a mix of housing based on current and future demographic trends, market trends and the needs of different groups in the community (such as, but not limited to, families with children, young single people, older people, people with disabilities, service families and people wishing to build their own homes);

(b) identify the size, type, tenure and range of housing that is required in particular locations, reflecting local demand;

(c) where they have identified that affordable housing is needed, set policies that meet this need within development sites, unless off-site provision or a financial contribution of broadly equivalent value can be robustly justified and the agreed approach contributes to the objective of creating mixed and balanced communities. Such policies should be sufficiently flexible to take account of changing market conditions over time.

2.41 Local planning authorities are expected to review their Plans regularly and ensure that they are kept up-to-date.

2.42 Another important means of providing affordable housing is through planning obligations, which might be sought in the context of granting planning permission for new housing development. Section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 enables a local planning authority to seek agreement from developers to enter into planning obligations to mitigate the impact of otherwise unacceptable development. More detailed guidance on the use of planning obligations is contained within Planning Practice Guidance.

Accessing the private rented sector

2.43 Housing authorities are encouraged to work in close partnership with local landlords and to develop opportunities to expand the provision of private rented accommodation that is available to people threatened with or actually homeless. Housing authorities should engage private landlords in developing the homelessness strategy, and in identifying how they might support its delivery. There may be opportunities to provide grant funding to landlords to improve poor quality accommodation or to bring empty properties back into use for homeless households. Housing authorities should also review their private rented access schemes to ensure they meet a broad range of needs, including for single people at risk of homelessness.

Access to social housing

2.44 In developing their homelessness strategy, housing authorities should review how allocation arrangements for their own stock, and nominations, to private registered providers contribute to preventing or relieving homelessness.

2.45 Allocations schemes will be designed to reflect local priorities and needs, but must also provide reasonable preference to people who are homeless or are owed specific homelessness duties as set out in section 166A(3) of the 1996 Act. This will include providing reasonable preference to people who are owed the prevention (section 195(2)) or relief (section 189B) duty. Housing authorities may need to review their allocations schemes in response to the 2017 Act, to ensure that they deliver the requirements of the legislation and are sufficiently geared towards preventing homelessness.

2.46 Housing authorities are encouraged to develop an annual lettings plan to match anticipated supply against applicant demand, taking into account the need to prevent homelessness and to provide settled accommodation to people owed the main housing duty. As well as considering the proportion of lettings that should be made available to applicants who are owed the main housing duty (section 193(2)), housing authorities will want to consider whether the lettings plan facilitates or reduces access to housing for groups they know to be at risk of becoming homeless in their area. Housing authorities may also wish to review what part social housing allocations should play in facilitating move-on from any supported accommodation that forms part of the authority’s wider homelessness response.

2.47 The Localism Act 2011 amended Part 6 of the 1996 Act to enable housing authorities to set their own qualification criteria for applicants wishing to join their housing register, to address local priorities and needs. Authorities can also provide reduced preference to applicants because of their previous conduct, which might include anti-social behaviour or rent arrears. However, housing authorities should not apply qualification criteria which would exclude from their allocation schemes homeless households who would be entitled to reasonable preference in the allocation of housing.

2.48 Housing authorities are encouraged to keep under review the impact of their allocations policies upon people at risk of homelessness, including single people who may be less able to establish their residency or may have a history of offending or other behaviour that impacts on their ability to access social housing. It is for the authority to decide its allocation scheme based on local priorities, but in doing so it should be aware of and take into consideration the impact of policies and procedures (which may be unintentional and/or indirect) on applicants who may be at risk of homelessness in the district.

2.49 It is important that housing authorities work effectively with private registered providers to help them prevent and tackle homelessness in the district. Private registered providers have a key role to play in sustaining tenancies, reducing evictions and abandonment, and preventing homelessness through their housing management functions. All parties will wish to ensure that there are effective procedures to identify early those tenants at risk of becoming homeless and that referral processes are in place.

2.50 The Secretary of State considers that, where local authority or private registered providers stock is provided as temporary accommodation (under section 193(2)); the housing authority should give consideration to the scope for allocating the accommodation as a secure or assured tenancy, as appropriate. This is especially the case where a household has been living in a particular property for anything other than a short-term emergency stay.

Temporary accommodation

2.51 Housing authorities should review their need for and use of temporary accommodation and, where necessary, identify what improvements will be made to procurement plans within their homelessness strategy. The aim will be to maximise the supply of good quality accommodation to meet the needs of homeless households, and reduce the financial burden of temporary accommodation on the applicant, authority and public purse. Housing authorities who use bed and breakfast to accommodate families in emergencies should consider including a plan to reduce or eliminate its use. For further guidance on securing accommodation see Chapter 16.

Supported housing and refuges

2.52 Housing authorities will need to work with partners to assess the need, and plan strategically, for supported housing provision to help prevent and resolve homelessness for people with support needs, and to consider whether existing local needs are met or to commission provision (either new units or additional support) to address these needs. Supported housing should be of good quality and suitable for the needs of the client group it is intended for. For example, supported accommodation with shared facilities will not normally be suitable for longer-term placements for families with pregnant women and/or children.

2.53 Refuge provision is very important for victims of domestic abuse at high risk who need to flee from highly dangerous perpetrators, and victims will very often need to be placed in a refuge in another area in order to be safe from the perpetrator.
Housing authorities will need to work together to assess and meet the need for refuge provision across local authority boundaries, for example, across a region or sub-region, to help ensure provision for people fleeing both from and to individual housing authority areas.

Empty homes

2.54 Local authorities are encouraged to make use of their powers and the incentives available to tackle empty homes. Through the new homes bonus, local authorities can earn the same financial reward for bringing an empty home back into use as building a new one. They can also charge up to 150% council tax for a home left empty for over two years. Housing authorities may wish to consider introducing local schemes that incentivise landlords to bring empty properties back into use, for example by providing grant funding subject to the refurbished accommodation being made available for homeless households.

Disabled facilities grant

2.55 Uptake of the disabled facilities grant – a mandatory entitlement administered by housing authorities for eligible disabled people in all housing tenures – can enable homeowners to remain living an independent life at home. Authorities are required to give a decision within six months of receiving an application. The grant is subject to a maximum limit and is means tested to ensure that funding goes to those most in need.

2.56 For guidance on securing accommodation for homeless applicants see Chapter 16.

Securing the provision of support

2.57 Section 3(1)(c) of the 2002 Act provides that the homelessness strategy should secure the satisfactory provision of support for people in the district who are or may be homeless, or who have been homeless and need support to prevent them becoming homeless again.

Reviewing resources and activities to provide support

2.58 Housing authorities should consider all the current activities which contribute to the provision of support for people who are, or may be at risk of becoming, homeless and those who have been homeless and need support to prevent them becoming homeless again. The range of providers whose activities will be making a contribution to this area are likely to embrace the public, private, voluntary and charitable sectors.

2.59 The 2017 Act introduced duties for housing authorities to assess the support needs of all applicants who are homeless or threatened with homelessness, and agree a personalised housing plan which should include reasonable steps required to meet any support needs identified. This more systematic assessment arrangement for all applicants will enable the generation of much improved data on the support needs of homeless people, which can be used as part of the homelessness review and to inform the homelessness strategy as well as commissioning plans. For further guidance on assessments and personalised housing plans see Chapter 11.

2.60 Housing authorities should consider mapping support services and activities in the district to assist in developing the homelessness strategy and to identify areas, both geographic and thematic, in which services are duplicated and/or where gaps in service provision can be identified.

2.61 Housing authorities should explore how budgets and resources from a wide range of sources can be used to provide support for people in their district. Due to the cross-cutting nature of homelessness there will be opportunities, for example, for the housing authority to work with organisations specialising in primary care, substance dependency, mental health or employment and training.

2.62 In two-tier authority areas it will be necessary to engage the upper tier authority, which holds responsibility for commissioning housing related support, in identifying resources available to meet support needs across all cohorts that are at high risk of homelessness.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Formulating a strategy to provide support

2.63 In formulating their homelessness strategies, housing authorities need to recognise that for some households homelessness cannot be tackled, or prevented, solely through the provision of accommodation. Some households will require a range of support services, which may include housing related support to help them sustain their accommodation, as well as personal support relating to factors such as relationship breakdown, domestic abuse, mental health problems, drug and alcohol addiction, poverty, debt and unemployment.

2.64 Housing-related support services have a key role in preventing homelessness occurring or recurring. The types of housing-related support that households who have experienced homelessness may need include:

(a) support in establishing a suitable home – help, advice and support in finding and maintaining suitable accommodation for independent living in the community;
(b) support with daily living skills – help, advice and training in the day-to-day skills needed for living independently, such as budgeting and cooking;
(c) support in accessing benefits, health and community care services – information, advice and help in claiming benefits or accessing community care or health services;
(d) help in establishing and maintaining social support – help in rebuilding or establishing social networks that can help counter isolation and help support independent living.

Support for single people

2.65 Housing authorities will be aware that some individuals may be at particular risk of homelessness, for example young people leaving care, ex-offenders, veterans, people with mental health problems or individuals leaving hospital, and may require a broader package of resettlement support. When developing their homelessness strategies, housing authorities should consider carefully how to work effectively to prevent homelessness amongst these groups and ensure that appropriate support is available.

2.66 Housing authorities should work with key partners to assess and meet the support needs of people at risk of homelessness. Where appropriate, accommodation and support services might be jointly commissioned, with children’s social care, health, criminal justice agencies and other partners, in order to share and maximise resources and ensure a more holistic service response.

2.67 Many young people who have experienced homelessness will be in particular need of support to develop skills to manage their affairs and prepare to take on and sustain a tenancy and operate a household budget. Those estranged from their family, particularly care leavers, may lack the advice and support normally available to young people.

Support for rough sleepers

2.68 In districts where there is evidence that people are sleeping rough, the homelessness strategy should include objectives to work toward eliminating rough sleeping. This would include reviewing existing support arrangements, identifying which do or do not work, and where appropriate looking for alternative ways to provide accommodation and support that might improve outcomes for people who have slept rough. Accommodation and support solutions will vary according to the profile and particular needs of rough sleepers in the district, but authorities will wish to consider whether existing arrangements are working, or whether ‘Housing First’ or other service models might be more effective.

2.69 Housing authorities should consider what actions will assist in preventing rough sleeping, particularly for those groups that are over represented amongst those identified as sleeping rough, which includes people who have been in care or in prison, people who have mental health problems and those with a history of drug or alcohol misuse. Housing authorities cannot tackle rough sleeping alone and should involve partners in health, social care and criminal justice, as well as third sector and charitable service providers to develop and deliver the strategy.

2.70 Housing authorities should also consider joint working with agencies to tackle issues such as street drinking, begging, drug misuse and anti-social behaviour. Such collaborative working can help reduce the numbers of people sleeping rough and provide effective services targeted at those who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless.

Support for families

2.71 Housing authorities should consider what support is available, or could be made available to support families who are at risk of homelessness, including preventing them from becoming homeless. Early Help services commissioned or delivered by children's social care authorities can contribute to the identification of families that are struggling to maintain accommodation, and require help and support before problems escalate and they are placed at imminent risk of homelessness. Involving providers of services to children and families in developing the strategy will contribute to improving early intervention, as well as drawing in resources available to support families who become homeless or require support to access and sustain settled accommodation.

2.72 Housing authorities will also wish to involve teams responsible for delivering the 'troubled families' programme in developing and delivering a strategy that helps to prevent the most vulnerable families from becoming homeless.

Support for victims of domestic abuse

2.73 In formulating their homelessness strategies, housing authorities should consider the particular needs that victims of domestic abuse have for safe accommodation, which will include having accommodation placements available outside the district. Housing authorities should also work cooperatively with other local authorities and commissioners to provide services to tackle domestic abuse; and should involve any local Violence Against Women and Girls Forum and service provider(s) in developing the homelessness strategy.

2.74 Housing authorities should also work closely with local refuge providers to develop fair and efficient move on arrangements, and should be mindful that policies and practices do not disadvantage people who have lost settled accommodation because of domestic abuse.

Households in temporary accommodation

2.75 The provision of support to households placed in temporary accommodation is essential to ensure that they are able to continue to enjoy a reasonable quality of life and access the range of services they need. In formulating their homelessness strategies, housing authorities should consider what arrangements need to be in place to ensure that households placed in temporary accommodation, within their district or outside, are able to access relevant support services. In particular households will need to be able to access:

(a) primary care services such as health visitors and GPs;
(b) appropriate education services;
(c) relevant social services; and,
(d) employment and training services.

CHAPTER 3: ADVICE AND INFORMATION ABOUT HOMELESSNESS AND THE PREVENTION OF HOMELESSNESS

3.1 Housing authorities have a duty to provide or secure the provision of advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness, free of charge.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

These services will form part of the offer to applicants who are also owed other duties under Part 7, for example the prevention and relief duties. They must also be available to any other person in their district, including people who are not eligible for further homelessness services as a result of their immigration status. The provision of up to date, comprehensive, tailored advice and information will play an important part in delivering the housing authority’s strategy for preventing homelessness.

3.2 Housing authorities may wish to consider providing information for those who are ineligible for further homelessness services on how to access any other assistance available in the area, for example through charitable or faith groups.

3.3 Under section 179(1) of the 1996 Act, authorities must provide information and advice on:

(a) preventing homelessness;
(b) securing accommodation when homeless;
(c) the rights of people who are homeless or threatened with homelessness, and the duties of the authority;
(d) any help that is available from the authority or anyone else for people in the authority’s district who are homeless or may become homeless (whether or not they are threatened with homelessness); and,
(e) how to access that help.

3.4 Early applications for homelessness assistance maximise the time and opportunities available to prevent homelessness. Information provided through authorities’ websites and other channels should therefore:

(a) help enable people to take action themselves where possible; and,
(b) actively encourage them to seek assistance from the authority in good time if they need it.

3.5 Section 179(2) states that housing authorities must design advice and information services to meet the needs of people within their district including, in particular, the needs of the following groups:

(a) people released from prison or youth detention accommodation;
(b) care leavers;
(c) former members of the regular armed forces;
(d) victims of domestic abuse;
(e) people leaving hospital;
(f) people suffering from a mental illness or impairment; and,
(g) any other group that the authority identify as being at particular risk of homelessness in their district.

3.6 Housing authorities will need to work with other relevant statutory and non-statutory service providers to identify groups who are at particular risk and to develop appropriate provision that is accessible to those who are likely to need it. In some circumstances tailored advice and information will be best delivered in a targeted and planned way when it is most likely to be needed – for example, in preparation for leaving care, being discharged from hospital or being released from custody, but it should also be widely accessible as a universal service. Appropriate provision will need to be made to ensure accessibility for people with particular needs, including those with mobility difficulties, sight or hearing loss and learning difficulties, as well as those for whom English is not their first language.

3.7 Many people concerned about a risk of homelessness will be seeking practical advice and assistance to help them remain in their accommodation or secure alternative accommodation. Advice on the following issues may help to prevent people from becoming threatened with homelessness:

(a) tenants’ rights and rights of occupation;
(b) what to do about harassment and threats of illegal eviction;
(c) rights to benefits including assistance with making claims as required;
(d) how to protect and retrieve rent deposits;
(e) rent and mortgage arrears;
(f) how to manage debt;
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(g) help available to people at risk of violence and abuse;
(h) grants available for housing repair and/or adaptation;
(i) how to obtain accommodation in the private rented sector – e.g. details of landlords and letting agents within the district, any accreditation schemes, and information on rent guarantee and deposit schemes;
(j) how to apply for social housing; and,
(k) how to access shared-ownership or other low cost home ownership schemes.

3.8 The legislation does not specify how housing authorities should ensure that advice and information on homelessness and the prevention of homelessness are made available. They could do this in a number of ways, for example:
(a) provide the service themselves;
(b) ensure that it is provided by another organisation; or,
(c) ensure that it is provided in partnership with another organisation.

For further guidance on contracting out homelessness functions see Chapter 5.

3.9 Under section 179(3), housing authorities may give grants or loans to other persons who are providing advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness on behalf of the housing authority. Under section 179(4), housing authorities may also assist such persons (e.g. voluntary organisations) by:
(a) allowing them to use premises belonging to the housing authority;
(b) making available furniture or other goods, by way of gift, loan or some other arrangement; and,
(c) making available the services of staff employed by the housing authority.

3.10 Housing authorities should monitor the provision of advisory services to ensure they continue to meet the needs of all sections of the community and help deliver the aims of their homelessness strategy.

CHAPTER 4: THE DUTY TO REFER CASES IN ENGLAND TO HOUSING AUTHORITIES

4.1 Under section 213B the public authorities specified in regulations are required to notify a housing authority of service users they consider may be homeless or threatened with homelessness (i.e. it is likely they will become homeless within 56 days). Before making a referral a public authority must:
(a) have consent to the referral from the individual;
(b) allow the individual to identify the housing authority in England which they would like the notification to be made to; and,
(c) have consent from the individual that their contact details can be supplied so the housing authority can contact them regarding the referral.

4.2 The duty to refer only applies to public authorities in England and individuals can only be referred to housing authorities in England.

4.3 The public authorities which are subject to the duty to refer are specified in The Homelessness (Review Procedure etc.) Regulations 2018. The public services included in the duty are as follows:
(a) prisons;
(b) youth offender institutions;
(c) secure training centres;
(d) secure colleges;
(e) youth offending teams;
(f) probation services (including community rehabilitation companies);
(g) Jobcentre Plus;
(h) social service authorities;
(i) emergency departments;
(j) urgent treatment centres; and,
(k) hospitals in their function of providing inpatient care.

The Secretary of State for Defence is also subject to the duty to refer in relation to members of the regular forces. The regular forces are the Royal Navy, the Royal
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Marines, the regular army and the Royal Air Force.

4.4 The most appropriate approach to discharging the duty will vary between public authorities and it is their responsibility to decide how to do so. The expected response following a disclosure from a service user that they are homeless or at risk of homelessness is for the public authority to refer the case (with consent) to a housing authority identified by the service user. Public authorities are not expected to conduct housing needs assessments as part of the section 213B duty to refer.

The procedure for referrals

4.5 The procedure for referrals should be decided by service partners in each local area. The housing authority should incorporate the duty to refer into their wider homelessness strategy and joint working arrangements and establish local arrangements with agencies in regard to referrals. These arrangements should focus on identifying people at risk of homelessness as early as possible to maximise the opportunities to prevent homelessness.

4.6 Housing authorities are responsible for setting up local procedures for managing referrals, and should ensure that all referral information is stored securely so that it can be linked to case files for use in data returns and be included in an applicant’s assessment and/or personalised housing plan as appropriate.

4.7 It is recommended that housing authorities set up a single point of contact which public authorities can use for submitting referrals. This should be shared with all relevant local agencies and be clearly accessible on the housing authority website for referrals made by public authorities in different districts.

4.8 Local procedures should be tailored to each public authority. For example, arrangements with prisons should ensure that the referral is made well in advance of the release date and that, with the individual’s consent, appropriate information is supplied with the referral. When designing procedures, it may be helpful to include consideration of information to be given to people being referred to help inform their decision on which housing authority they wish to be referred to. This might include information on how local connection arrangements might affect a person who is homeless and wishes to be referred to a district where they have no local connection.

4.9 Housing authorities should include information about how they will respond where the referral indicates that an individual is at risk of sleeping rough, or is already sleeping rough in their procedures for responding to referrals.

4.10 Some public authorities that are subject to the duty to refer will be required to provide accommodation for certain individuals as part of their own legal duties, for example as an element of care or supervision. Examples include social services authorities with a duty to accommodate a lone 16 or 17 year old under the Children Act 1989 or a vulnerable adult under the Care Act 2014. Housing authorities will wish to agree arrangements with relevant authorities to ensure that when they receive referrals from these authorities appropriate alternative joint working approaches are in place and the primary responsibility to provide accommodation which would prevent or address homelessness lies with the other service.

4.11 Authorities are encouraged to establish arrangements with partners that go beyond referral procedures, aiming to maximize the impact of shared efforts on positive outcomes for service users who may have multiple needs. Such arrangements can advance the objectives of partner agencies and deliver efficiencies for the public purse.

4.12 Referring authorities should be mindful that for certain individuals, rather than making a referral, it may be more appropriate to assist them to approach a housing authority directly for assistance. This might apply, for example for clients with particular support needs.

What constitutes a referral

4.13 Under section 213B the referral to a housing authority must include the individual’s name and contact details and the agreed reason for referral (e.g. that the individual is homeless or at risk of homelessness).

4.14 Housing authorities may want to develop standard referral mechanisms or forms. For example, it may be helpful for public authorities to expand on the minimum legal requirement in section 213B(3) for information to be captured in a referral (that is, of the public authority's opinion that the service user is or may be homeless or threatened with homelessness and their contact details), although housing authorities should be mindful of the service context of each referring agency when considering this.

4.15 Further referral information may include:
(a) whether an individual is already homeless, and if not when they are likely to become homeless;
(b) whether the individual is at risk of rough sleeping on the date the referral is made and if so whether this is imminent;
(c) risk assessment information, considering risks to the individual and to others; and,
(d) key medical information where relevant.

Consent

4.16 Housing authorities are advised to request that referring agencies confirm that the referee has given their consent to the referral as part of referral procedures.

Multiple / repeat referrals

4.17 When establishing local arrangements, housing authorities should consider the issues of multiple and repeat referrals and agree protocols with service partners to mitigate these.

4.18 There may be circumstances in which an individual's application has been closed by the housing authority and a new referral is received shortly after. The housing authority should respond to the referral and make contact with the individual to evaluate if there has been any change in relevant facts since the last application, which would warrant inquiries being made into any new application for assistance under Part 7.

Action upon the receipt of a referral

4.19 A referral made by a public authority to the housing authority under section 213B will not in itself constitute an application for assistance under Part 7, but housing authorities should always respond to any referral received. The housing authority may wish to contact the individual via a phone-call, email or letter using the contact details provided in the referral. If a response is not received from the direct contact with the individual, the authority should provide information on accessing advice and assistance including the housing authority's website, opening hours, address and 24-hour contact details via a phone-call, email or letter.

4.20 If the housing authority's subsequent contact with the individual following receipt of the referral reveals details that provide the housing authority with reason to believe that they might be homeless or threatened with homelessness and the individual indicates they would like assistance it will trigger an application for assistance under Part 7.

CHAPTER 5: CONTRACTING OUT HOMELESSNESS FUNCTIONS

5.1 This chapter provides guidance on contracting out homelessness functions and housing authorities’ statutory obligations with regard to the discharge of those functions.

5.2 The Local Authorities (Contracting Out of Allocation of Housing and Homelessness Functions) Order 1996 (SI 1996 No. 3205) ('1996 Order') enables housing authorities to contract out certain functions under Parts 6 and 7 of the 1996 Act. The
A2.3 England: Homelessness

1996 Order is made under section 70 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 (‘1994 Act’). In essence, the 1996 Order allows the contracting out of executive functions while leaving the responsibility for making strategic decisions with the housing authority.

5.3 The 1996 Order provides that the majority of functions under Part 7 of the 1996 Act can be contracted out. These include:

(a) making arrangements to secure that advice and information about homelessness, and the prevention of homelessness, is available free of charge within the housing authority’s district;
(b) making inquiries about and deciding a person’s eligibility for assistance;
(c) making inquiries about and deciding whether any duty and, if so, what duty is owed to a person under Part 7;
(d) assessing eligible applicants’ cases and agreeing a personalised housing plan;
(e) undertaking prevention and relief duties owed to an applicant;
(f) making referrals to another housing authority;
(g) carrying out reviews of decisions; and,
(h) securing and helping to secure accommodation to discharge homelessness duties.

5.4 Where decision-making in homelessness cases is contracted out, housing authorities may wish to consider retaining the review function under section 202 of the 1996 Act. This may provide an additional degree of independence between the initial decision and the decision on review.

5.5 The 1994 Act provides that a contract made:

(a) may authorise a contractor to carry out only part of the function concerned;
(b) may specify that the contractor is authorised to carry out functions only in certain cases or areas specified in the contract;
(c) may include conditions relating to the carrying out of the functions, e.g. prescribing standards of performance;
(d) shall be for a period not exceeding 10 years and may be revoked at any time by the Minister or the housing authority. Any subsisting contract is to be treated as having been repudiated in these circumstances; and,
(e) shall not prevent the housing authority from exercising themselves the functions to which the contract relates.

5.6 Schedule 2 to the 1996 Order lists the homelessness functions in Part 7 of the 1996 Act that may not be contracted out, for example the provision of assistance by way of grant or loan to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness or related matters under section 180 of the 1996 Act.

5.7 Housing authorities also cannot contract out their functions under the Homelessness Act 2002 which relate to homelessness reviews and strategies. These include:

(a) section 1(1): carry out a homelessness review for the district, and formulate and publish a homelessness strategy based on the results of that review;
(b) section 1(4): publish a new homelessness strategy within 5 years from the day on which their last homelessness strategy was published; and,
(c) section 3(6): keep their homelessness strategy under review and modify it from time to time.

For further advice on homelessness reviews and strategies see Chapter 2.

5.8 Homelessness reviews and the formulation of strategies can, however, be informed by research commissioned from external organisations.

5.9 The 1994 Act also provides that the housing authority is responsible for any act or omission of the contractor in exercising functions under the contract, except:

(a) where the contractor fails to fulfil conditions specified in the contract relating to the exercise of the function or,
(b) where criminal proceedings are brought in respect of the contractor’s act or omission.

5.10 Where there is an arrangement in force under section 101 of the Local...
Government Act 1972 whereby one housing authority exercises the functions of another, the 1994 Act provides that the authority exercising the function is not allowed to contract it out without the principal authority’s consent.

5.11 Where a housing authority has contracted out the operation of any homelessness functions, the housing authority remains statutorily responsible and accountable for the discharge of those functions. This includes any public sector equality duty obligations under section 149 of the Equality Act 2010. The housing authority will therefore need to ensure that the contract provides for delivery of the homelessness functions in accordance with both the statutory obligations and the authority’s own policies on tackling and preventing homelessness.

5.12 Housing authorities should ensure they have adequate contractual, monitoring and quality assurance mechanisms in place to ensure their statutory duties are being fully discharged.

CHAPTER 6: HOMELESS OR THREATENED WITH HOMELESSNESS

6.1 This chapter provides guidance on how to determine whether a person is ‘homeless’ or ‘threatened with homelessness’ for the purposes of the 1996 Act.

6.2 Under section 184, if a housing authority has reason to believe that a person applying to the housing authority for accommodation, or assistance in obtaining accommodation, may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, it must make inquiries to satisfy itself whether the applicant is eligible for assistance and if so, what duties – if any – are owed to that person. For further guidance on applications for assistance see Chapter 18.

Threatened with homelessness

6.3 Under section 175(4), a person is ‘threatened with homelessness’ if they are likely to become homeless within 56 days. Under section 175(5), a person is also threatened with homelessness if a valid notice under section 21 of the Housing Act 1988 has been issued in respect of the only accommodation available for their occupation, and the notice will expire within 56 days. Section 195 provides that where applicants are threatened with homelessness and eligible for assistance, housing authorities must take reasonable steps to help prevent their homelessness. For further guidance on the duty to help prevent homelessness see Chapter 12.

Homeless

6.4 There are a number of different factors that determine whether a person is homeless. Under section 175, a person is homeless if they have no accommodation in the UK or elsewhere which is available for their occupation and which that person has a legal right to occupy. A person is also homeless if they have accommodation but cannot secure entry to it, or the accommodation is a moveable structure, vehicle or vessel designed or adapted for human habitation and there is nowhere it can lawfully be placed in order to provide accommodation. A person who has accommodation is to be treated as homeless where it would not be reasonable for them to continue to occupy that accommodation. Housing authorities should ask themselves whether the person is homeless at the date of making the decision on their application.

Available for occupation

6.5 Section 176 provides that accommodation shall be treated as available for a person’s occupation only if it is available for occupation by them together with:

(a) any other person who normally resides with them as a member of the family; or,
(b) any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with them.

6.6 Both of these groups of people constitute members of the applicant’s household, and accommodation will only be considered to be available if it is available for occupation by both the applicant and all members of their household.
6.7 The first group covers those members of the family who normally reside with the applicant. It is a question of fact as to who is living with the applicant, and housing authorities are not required to satisfy themselves that it is reasonable for this member of the family to normally reside with them. The phrase ‘as a member of the family’, although not defined for these purposes in legislation, will include those with close blood or marital relationships and cohabiting partners, and, where such a person is an established member of the household, the accommodation must provide for them as well.

6.8 The second group relates to any other person, and includes those who may not have been living as part of the household at the time of the application but whom it would be reasonable to expect to live with the applicant as part of their household. People in this group might include a companion for an elderly or disabled person, or children who are being fostered by the applicant or a member of their family. This group will also include those members of the family who were not living as part of the household at the time of the application but who nonetheless might reasonably be expected to form part of it.

6.9 In relation to the second group, it is for the housing authority to assess whether any other person might reasonably be expected to live with the applicant and there will be a range of situations that the authority will need to consider. Persons who would normally live with the applicant but who are unable to do so because there is no accommodation in which they can all live together should be included in the assessment. When dealing with a family which has split up, housing authorities will need to take a decision as to which members of the family normally reside, or might be expected to reside, with the applicant. A court may have made a residence order indicating with whom the children are to live, but in many cases it will be a matter of agreement between the parents and a court will not have been involved.

Legal right to occupy accommodation

6.10 Under section 175(1), a person is homeless if they have no accommodation available for occupation in the UK or somewhere else which they have a legal right to occupy by virtue of:

(a) an interest in it (e.g. as an owner, lessee or tenant) or by virtue of a court order;

(b) an express or implied licence to occupy it (e.g. as a lodger, as an employee with a service occupancy, or when living with a relative); or,

(c) any enactment or rule of law giving them the right to remain in occupation or restricting the right of another person to recover possession (e.g. a person with a right to remain occupation as a statutory tenant under the Rent Act 1977 where that person’s contractual rights to occupy have expired or been terminated).

6.11 A person who has been occupying accommodation as a licensee whose licence has been terminated (and who does not have any other accommodation available for their occupation) is homeless because they no longer have a legal right to continue to occupy, despite the fact that the person may continue to occupy but as an unauthorised occupier. This may include, for example:

(a) those required to leave hostels or hospitals; or,

(b) former employees occupying premises under a service occupancy which is dependent upon contracts of employment which have ended.

People asked to leave accommodation by family or friends

6.12 Some applicants may have been asked to leave their current accommodation by family or friends with whom they have been living. In such cases, the housing authority will need to consider carefully whether the applicant’s licence to occupy the accommodation has in fact been revoked, rendering the applicant homeless. Authorities are encouraged to be sensitive to situations where parents or carers have been providing a home for a family member with care or support needs (for example, a person with learning difficulties) for a number of years and who are genuinely finding it difficult to continue with that arrangement, but are reluctant to revoke their licence to occupy formally until alternative accommodation can be secured.
6.13 In some cases the applicant may be unable to stay in their accommodation and in others there may be scope for preventing or postponing homelessness, and providing them with an opportunity to plan their future accommodation with assistance from the housing authority. However, housing authorities will need to be sensitive to the possibility that for some applicants it may not be safe for them to remain in, or return to, their home because of a risk of violence or abuse.

6.14 People living with family and friends may have genuine difficulties in finding alternative accommodation that can lead to friction and disputes within their current home, culminating in a threat of homelessness. In some cases external support, or the offer of assistance with securing alternative housing, may help to reduce tension and prevent homelessness. The use of mediation services may assist here.

6.15 In cases involving 16 and 17 year olds threatened with exclusion from the family home children’s services authorities will be the lead agency, but should work closely with housing authorities to prevent homelessness and support young people to remain within the family network, wherever it is safe and appropriate for them to do so.

6.16 Housing authorities will also need to be alert to the possibility of collusion where family or friends agree to revoke a licence to occupy accommodation that would have been reasonable for the person to continue to occupy, as part of an arrangement whose purpose is to enable the applicant to be entitled to assistance under Part 7. For further guidance on intentional homelessness see Chapter 9.

Tenant given notice

6.17 With certain exceptions, a person who has been occupying accommodation as a tenant and who has received a valid notice to quit, or notice that the landlord requires possession of the accommodation, would have the right to remain in occupation until a warrant for possession was executed (following the granting of an order for possession by the court). The exceptions are tenants with resident landlords and certain other tenants who do not benefit from the Protection from Eviction Act 1977.

6.18 Housing authorities should note that the fact that a tenant has a right to remain in occupation does not necessarily mean that they are not homeless. In assessing whether an applicant is homeless in cases where they are a tenant who has a right to remain in occupation pending execution of a warrant for possession, the housing authority will also need to consider whether it would be reasonable for them to continue to occupy the accommodation in the circumstances (section 175(3), 1996 Act). For guidance on cases involving service of a section 21 notice see paragraph 6.35-6.38.

6.19 Some tenants may face having to leave their accommodation because their landlord has defaulted on the mortgage of the property they rent. Where a mortgage lender starts possession proceedings, the lender is obliged to give written notice of the proceedings to the occupiers of the property before an order for possession is granted. The notice must be given after issue of the possession summons and at least 14 days before the court hearing. Housing authorities will need to consider whether it would be reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy the accommodation after receiving notice of possession proceedings from the lender. Housing authorities should not consider it reasonable for an applicant to remain in occupation until eviction by a bailiff.

Inability to secure entry to accommodation

6.20 Under section 175(2)(a), a person is also homeless if they have a legal entitlement to accommodation, but is unable to secure entry to it, for example:

(a) those who have been evicted illegally; or,

(b) those whose accommodation is being occupied illegally by squatters.

6.21 Housing authorities will want to support applicants to pursue the legal remedies available to them to regain possession of their accommodation. However, an authority cannot refuse to assist an applicant who is homeless and eligible for assistance under
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Part 7 simply because such remedies are available.

Accommodation consisting of a moveable structure

6.22 Section 175(2)(b) provides that a person is homeless if they have accommodation available for their occupation which is a moveable structure, vehicle or vessel designed or adapted for human habitation (e.g. a caravan or houseboat), and there is nowhere that they are entitled or permitted to place it and reside in it. The site or mooring for the moveable structure need not be permanent in order to avoid homelessness.

Reasonable to continue to occupy

6.23 Section 175(3) provides that a person shall not be treated as having accommodation unless it is accommodation which it would be reasonable for them to continue to occupy. There are a number of provisions relating to whether or not it is reasonable for someone to continue to occupy accommodation and these are discussed below. There is no simple test of reasonableness. It is for the housing authority to make a judgement on the facts of each case, taking into account the circumstances of the applicant.

Domestic abuse or other violence

6.24 Section 177(1) provides that it is not reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation if it is probable that this will lead to domestic abuse or other violence against:

(a) the applicant;
(b) a person who normally resides with the applicant as a member of the applicant’s family; or,
(c) any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

For further guidance on domestic abuse or other violence in determining whether a person is homeless see Chapter 21.

General housing circumstances in the district

6.25 Section 177(2) provides that, in determining whether it is reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation, housing authorities may have regard to the general housing circumstances prevailing in the housing authority’s district.

6.26 This comparison might be appropriate, for example, where it was suggested that an applicant was homeless because of poor physical conditions in their current home. In such cases it would be open to the authority to consider whether the condition of the property was so bad in comparison with other accommodation in the district that it would not be reasonable to expect someone to continue to live there.

6.27 Consideration of the general circumstances prevailing in the housing authority’s district might also be appropriate in cases of homelessness due to overcrowding.

Affordability

6.28 Affordability must be considered in all cases. The Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) Order 1996 (SI 1996 No.3204) requires the housing authority, to consider the affordability of the accommodation for the applicant. The Order specifies, among other things, that in determining both whether it would be (or would have been) reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation and whether the accommodation is suitable, a housing authority must take into account whether the accommodation is affordable for them and must, in particular, take account of:

(a) the financial resources available to them;
(b) the costs of the accommodation;
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(c) maintenance payments (to a spouse, former spouse or in respect of a child); and,
(d) their reasonable living expenses

For further guidance on affordability and suitability of accommodation see Chapter 17.

Tenant given notice of intention to recover possession

6.29 In cases where the applicant has been occupying accommodation as a tenant and has received a valid notice to quit, or a notice that the landlord intends to recover possession, housing authorities should make contact with the landlord at an early stage. This will be necessary both to understand the circumstances in which the applicant has become threatened with homelessness, and to establish what reasonable steps may be taken by the housing authority and by the applicant to prevent their homelessness.

6.30 A housing authority can give notice to end the section 195(2) prevention duty where 56 days has passed since the prevention duty was accepted, whether or not the applicant is still threatened with homelessness (section 195(8)(b)). However, section 195(6) of the 1996 Act prevents an authority from doing this if the applicant has been given a valid section 21 notice which will expire within 56 days, or has already expired, in respect of the only accommodation available for the applicant’s occupation. This means an applicant in these circumstances cannot be ‘timed out’ of the prevention duty if they remain threatened with homelessness, and the authority must continue to help the applicant to retain or secure accommodation until the prevention duty ends in another way.

6.31 However, an authority should give notice to end the section 195 prevention duty when an applicant has become homeless, triggering a section 189B relief duty. It follows that housing authorities will be required to assess at what point a tenant who has been served a valid section 21 becomes homeless and is owed a relief duty; and that expiry of a valid section 21 notice does not automatically render the person homeless for the purposes of the 1996 Act. Under section 175 of the 1996 Act, an applicant must be considered homeless if they have no accommodation to which they have a legal right to occupy that is available to them and reasonable for them to continue to occupy.

6.32 In determining whether it would be reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy accommodation following expiry of a valid section 21 notice the authority will need to consider all the factors relevant to the case and decide the weight that each should attract. If the landlord contends a willingness to consider delaying or halting action to recover possession if certain steps are taken, it will usually be reasonable for the tenant to remain in occupation to allow time for action to be taken which may prevent homelessness. This might include, for example, resolving problems with a benefit claim or establishing a manageable repayment schedule for rent arrears.

6.33 Authorities should not adopt a blanket policy or practice on the point at which it will no longer be reasonable for an applicant to occupy following the expiry of a section 21 notice. As well as the factors set out elsewhere in this chapter, factors which may be relevant include the preference of the applicant (who may, for example, want to remain in the property until they can move into alternative settled accommodation if there is the prospect of a timely move, or alternatively to leave the property to avoid incurring court costs); the position of the landlord; the financial impact of court action and any build up of rent arrears on both landlord and tenant; the burden on the courts of unnecessary proceedings where there is no defence to a possession claim; and the general cost to the housing authority. Housing authorities will be mindful of the need to maintain good relations with landlords providing accommodation in the district.

6.34 Throughout any period that an applicant remains in occupation whilst the landlord pursues possession action, the housing authority should keep the reasonable steps in the applicant’s personalised housing plan under regular review, and maintain contact with the tenant and landlord to ascertain if there is any change in circumstances which affects whether or not it continues to be reasonable for the applicant to occupy.

6.35 The Secretary of State considers that where an applicant is:

(a) an assured shorthold tenant who has received a valid notice in accordance with section 21 of the Housing Act 1988;
A2.3  England: Homelessness

(b) the housing authority is satisfied that the landlord intends to seek possession and further efforts from the housing authority to resolve the situation and persuade the landlord to allow the tenant to remain in the property are unlikely to be successful; and,
(c) there would be no defence to an application for a possession order;

then it is unlikely to be reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy beyond the expiry of a valid section 21 notice, unless the housing authority is taking steps to persuade the landlord to allow the tenant to continue to occupy the accommodation for a reasonable period to provide an opportunity for alternative accommodation to be found.

6.36  The Secretary of State considers that it is highly unlikely to be reasonable for the applicant to continue to occupy beyond the date on which the court has ordered them to leave the property and give possession to the landlord.

6.37  Housing authorities should not consider it reasonable for an applicant to remain in occupation up until the point at which a court issues a warrant or writ to enforce an order for possession.

6.38  Housing authorities should ensure that homeless families and vulnerable individuals who are owed a section 188 interim accommodation duty or section 193(2) main housing duty are not evicted through the enforcement of an order for possession as a result of a failure by the authority to make suitable accommodation available to them.

Other relevant factors

6.39  Other factors which may be relevant in determining whether it would be reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy accommodation include:

(a) physical characteristics: it would not be reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy accommodation if the physical characteristics of the accommodation were unsuitable for the applicant because, for example, they are a wheelchair user and access was limited;
(b) type of accommodation: some types of accommodation, for example women’s refuges, direct access hostels and night shelters are intended to provide very short-term, temporary accommodation in a crisis and should not be regarded as being reasonable to continue to occupy in the medium and longer-term;
(c) people fleeing harassment: in some cases severe harassment may fall short of actual violence or threats of violence likely to be carried out. Housing authorities should consider carefully whether it would be, or would have been, reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy accommodation in circumstances where they have fled, or are seeking to leave, their home because of non-violent forms of harassment, for example verbal abuse or damage to property. Careful consideration should be given to applicants who may be at risk of witness intimidation. In some criminal cases the police may provide alternative accommodation for witnesses, but usually this will apply for the duration of the trial only. Witnesses may have had to give up their home or may feel unable to return to it when the trial has finished.

6.40  This is not an exhaustive list and authorities will need to take account of all relevant factors when considering whether it is reasonable for an applicant to continue to occupy accommodation.

CHAPTER 7: ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE

7.1  This chapter provides guidance on the provisions relating to an applicant’s eligibility for homelessness services.

7.2  Housing authorities have a duty to provide or secure the provision of advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness, free of charge which must be available to any person in their district. All applicants, including those who are ineligible as a result of their immigration status, will be able to access this form of assistance from the housing authority. Housing authorities should refer applicants to appropriate support which they may be entitled to where relevant. For further guidance on the provision of advice and information on homelessness and the prevention of homelessness see Chapter 3.

7.3 Part 7 of the 1996 Act includes provisions that make certain people from abroad ineligible for housing assistance. Housing authorities will therefore need to satisfy themselves that applicants are eligible before providing housing assistance. The provisions on eligibility are complex and housing authorities will need to ensure that they have procedures in place to carry out appropriate checks on housing applicants.

7.4 Housing authorities should ensure that staff who are required to screen applicants about eligibility for assistance are given training in the complexities of the housing provisions, the housing authority’s duties and responsibilities under the Equality Act 2010 and are able to deal with applicants in a sensitive manner.

7.5 Local authorities are reminded that Schedule 3 to the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 provides that certain persons shall not be eligible for support or assistance provided through the exercise of housing authorities’ powers to secure accommodation pending a review (section 188(3)) or pending an appeal to the county court (section 204(4)). For further guidance see 7.21-7.22.

Persons from abroad

7.6 A person will not be eligible for assistance under Part 7 if they are a person from abroad who is ineligible for housing assistance under section 185 of the 1996 Act. In particular:

(a) a ‘person subject to immigration control’ is not eligible for housing assistance unless they come within a class prescribed in regulations made by the Secretary of State; and,

(b) the Secretary of State can make regulations to provide for other descriptions of person from abroad who, although they are not subject to immigration control, are to be treated as ineligible for housing assistance.

7.7 The regulations that set out which classes of persons from abroad are eligible or ineligible for housing assistance are the Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/1294) (‘the Eligibility Regulations’). Persons subject to immigration control are not eligible for housing assistance unless they fall within a class of persons prescribed in regulation 5 of the Eligibility Regulations. Persons who are not subject to immigration control will be eligible for housing assistance unless they fall within a description of persons who are to be treated as persons from abroad who are ineligible for assistance by virtue of regulation 6 of the Eligibility Regulations.

Persons subject to immigration control

7.8 The term ‘person subject to immigration control’ is defined in section 13(2) of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 as a person who requires leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom (whether or not such leave has been given).

7.9 Only the following categories of person do not require leave to enter or remain in the UK:

(a) British citizens;

(b) certain Commonwealth citizens with a right of abode in the UK;

(c) citizens of an EEA country (‘EEA nationals’) and their family members, who have a right to reside in the UK that is derived from European Union law or any provision made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. The question of whether an EEA national (or family member) has a right to reside in the UK (or in another Member State e.g. the Republic of Ireland) will depend on their circumstances at that particular time, e.g. whether the EEA national is, for the purposes of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2016, a jobseeker, a worker, a self-employed person, and so on;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(d) persons who are exempt from immigration control under the Immigration Acts, including diplomats and their family members based in the United Kingdom, and some military personnel.

For the purposes of this guidance, ‘EEA nationals’ means nationals of any of the EU member states (excluding the UK), and nationals of Iceland, Norway, Liechtenstein and Switzerland.

7.10 Any person who does not fall within one of the 4 categories in paragraph 7.9 above will be a person subject to immigration control and will be ineligible for housing assistance unless they fall within a class of persons prescribed by regulation 5 of the Eligibility Regulations (see paragraph 7.12 below).

7.11 If there is any uncertainty about an applicant’s immigration status, it is recommended that authorities contact the Home Office. In some circumstances, local authorities may be under a duty to contact the Home Office (see paragraph 7.23).

Persons subject to immigration control who are eligible for housing assistance

7.12 Generally, persons subject to immigration control are not eligible for housing assistance. However, by virtue of regulation 5 of the Eligibility Regulations, the following classes of person subject to immigration control are eligible for housing assistance:

(a) a person whose refugee status has been recognised by the Secretary of State and who has leave to enter and remain in the UK. Persons granted refugee status are usually granted 5 years’ limited leave to remain in the UK. (Prior to 30 August 2005, it was the policy to provide immediate settlement (indefinite leave to remain) for persons granted refugee status);

(b) a person who has discretionary leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom granted outside the provisions of the Immigration Rules; and whose leave to enter or remain is not subject to a condition requiring them to maintain and accommodate themselves, and any person who is dependent on them, without recourse to public funds;

(c) a person with current leave to enter or remain in the UK with no condition or limitation, and who is habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland; such a person will have indefinite leave to enter or indefinite leave to remain and will be regarded as having settled status.

However, where indefinite leave to enter or indefinite leave to remain status was granted as a result of an undertaking that a sponsor would be responsible for the applicant’s maintenance and accommodation, the person must have been resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland for five years since the date of entry – or the date of the sponsorship undertaking, whichever is later – for the applicant to be eligible. Where a sponsor has (or, if there was more than one sponsor, all of the sponsors have) died within the first five years, the applicant will be eligible for housing assistance;

(d) a person who has humanitarian protection granted under the Immigration Rules;

(e) a person who is habitually resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland and who has limited leave to enter the United Kingdom as a relevant Afghan citizen under paragraph 276BA1 of the Immigration Rules;

(f) a person who has limited leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom on family or private life grounds under Article 8 of the Human Rights Act, such leave granted under paragraph 276BE (1), paragraph 276DG or Appendix FM of the Immigration Rules, and who is not subject to a condition requiring that person to maintain and accommodate themselves, and any person dependent upon them, without recourse to public funds.

(g) a person who is habitually resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland and who has been transferred to the United Kingdom under section 67 of the Immigration Act 2016 and has limited leave to remain under paragraph 352ZH of the Immigration Rules. (Effective from 9th July 2018).
7.13 Under section 186 of the 1996 Act, an asylum seeker who would otherwise be eligible for housing assistance will be ineligible if they have any accommodation available in the UK for their occupation, however temporary. This exclusion is only relevant to pre-April 2000 asylum seekers who are eligible for homelessness assistance.

Other persons from abroad who are ineligible for assistance

7.14 By virtue of regulation 6 of the Eligibility Regulations, a person who is not subject to immigration control and who falls within one of the following descriptions of persons is to be treated as a person from abroad who is ineligible for housing assistance:

(a) a person who is not habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland (subject to certain exceptions – see paragraph 7.15 below);
(b) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is derived from their status as a jobseeker (or their status as the family member of a jobseeker). For this purpose, ‘jobseeker’ has the same meaning as for the purpose of regulation 6(1)(a) of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2016 (SI 2016 No. 1052) (‘the EEA Regulations’);
(c) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is an initial right to reside for a period not exceeding three months under regulation 13 of the EEA Regulations;
(d) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is a derivative right to reside to which they are entitled under regulation 16(1) of the EEA Regulations, but only in a case where the right exists under that regulation because the applicant satisfies the criteria in regulation 16(5) of those Regulations;
(e) a person whose only right to reside in the UK is derived from Article 20 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union in a case where the right to reside arises because a British citizen would otherwise be deprived of the genuine enjoyment of the substance of the rights attaching to the status of European Union citizen (also known as ‘Zambrano carers’);
(f) a person whose only right to reside in the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland--
   (i) is a right equivalent to one of those mentioned in sub-paragraph (b-d) above which is derived from the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union; or
   (ii) is derived from Article 20 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, in a case where the right to reside in the Republic of Ireland arises because an Irish citizen, or in the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man arises because a British citizen also entitled to reside there and would otherwise be deprived of the genuine enjoyment of the substance of their rights as a European Union citizen.

Persons exempted from the requirement to be habitually resident

7.15 Certain persons from abroad are not subject to the requirement to be habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland. Such a person will be eligible for assistance even if not habitually resident, if they are:

(a) an EEA national who is in the UK as a worker (which has the same meaning as it does for the purposes of regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations);
(b) an EEA national who is in the UK as a self-employed person (which has the same meaning as it does for the purposes of regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations);
(c) a person who is treated as a worker for the purpose of the definition of ‘qualified person’ in regulation 6(1) of the EEA Regulations pursuant to regulation 5 of the Accession of Croatia (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2013 (as amended), SI 2013/1460 (right of residence of an accession State national subject to worker authorisation);
(d) a person who is a family member of a person referred to in (a) to (c) above;
(e) a person with a right to reside permanently in the UK by virtue of regulation 15(c), (d) or (e) of the EEA Regulations;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(f) a person who is in the UK as a result of their deportation, expulsion or other removal by compulsion of law from another country to the UK.

7.16 On (a) and (b), authorities should note that a person who is not currently working or self-employed will retain their status as a worker or self-employed person in certain circumstances. On (c), authorities should note that an accession state worker will generally only be treated as a worker if they hold an accession worker authorisation document and are working in accordance with the conditions set out in that document. On (d), authorities should note that ‘family member’ does not include a person who is an extended family member who is treated as a family member by virtue of regulation 7(3) of the EEA Regulations.

7.17 For further guidance on EEA right to reside see pages 6-8 of Home Office guidance on administrative removal of EEA nationals.

The habitual residence test

7.18 The term ‘habitual residence’ is intended to convey a degree of permanence in the person’s residence in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland; it implies an association between the individual and the place of residence and relies substantially on fact.

7.19 The Secretary of State considers that it is likely that applicants who have been resident in the UK, Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland continuously during the 2-year period prior to their housing application will be habitually resident. In such cases, therefore, housing authorities may consider it unnecessary to make further enquiries to determine whether the person is habitually resident, unless there are other circumstances that need to be taken into account. A period of continuous residence in the UK, Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland might include periods of temporary absence. Where two years’ continuous residency has not been established, housing authorities will need to conduct further enquiries to determine whether the applicant is habitually resident.

7.20 A person will not generally be habitually resident anywhere unless they have taken up residence and lived there for a period. There will be cases where the person concerned is not coming to the UK for the first time, and is resuming a previous period of habitual residence. For further guidance on habitual residence see Annex 1.

Persons ineligible under certain provisions by virtue of Schedule 3 to the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002

7.21 Section 54 of, and Schedule 3 to, the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 have the effect of making certain applicants for housing assistance ineligible for accommodation under section 188(3) (power to accommodate pending a review) or section 204(4) (power to accommodate pending an appeal to the county court) of the 1996 Act. The following classes of person will be ineligible for assistance under those powers:

(a) a person who has refugee status abroad, i.e. a person:
   (i) who does not have the nationality of an EEA State, and
   (ii) who the government of an EEA State other than the UK has determined is entitled to protection as a refugee under the Refugee Convention;
(b) a person who has the nationality of an EEA State other than the UK (but see paragraph 7.22 below);
(c) a person who was (but is no longer) an asylum seeker and who fails to co-operate with removal directions issued in respect of them;
(d) a person who is in the UK in breach of the immigration laws (within the meaning of section 50A of the British Nationality Act 1981) and is not an asylum seeker;
(e) certain persons who are failed asylum seekers with dependent children, where the Secretary of State has certified that, in their opinion, such a person has failed without reasonable excuse to take reasonable steps to leave the UK voluntarily or place themselves in a position where they are able to leave the UK voluntarily, and that person has received the Secretary of State’s certificate more than 14 days previously;
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(f) a person who is the dependant of a person who falls within class (a), (b) or (c) above.

7.22 However, section 54 and Schedule 3 do not prevent the exercise of an authority’s powers under section 188(3) and section 204(4) of the 1996 Act to the extent that such exercise is necessary for the purpose of avoiding a breach of a person’s rights under the European Convention of Human Rights or rights under EU Treaties. Among other things, this means that a local authority can exercise these powers to accommodate an EEA national who has a right to reside in the UK under EU law.

7.23 Paragraph 14 of Schedule 3 provides, among other things, that authorities must inform the Secretary of State where the powers under section 188(3) or section 204(4) apply, or may apply, to a person who is, or may come, within classes (c) or (d) in paragraph 7.21 by contacting the Home Office.

7.24 For further guidance, local authorities should refer to Guidance to Local Authorities and Housing Authorities about the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act, Section 54 and Schedule 3, and the Withholding and Withdrawal of Support (Travel Assistance and Temporary Accommodation) Regulations 2002, issued by the Home Office.

Restricted cases

7.25 A restricted case is a case where the housing authority would not be satisfied that the applicant had a priority need for accommodation without having had regard to a ‘restricted person’ within the household. This would be the case, for example, where an applicant who is an eligible British citizen who would not have priority need if they applied alone, does have priority need because of their dependent children who are ‘restricted persons’.

7.26 A restricted person means a person who is not eligible for assistance under Part 7 of the 1996 Act and is subject to immigration control and either:

(a) does not have leave to enter or remain in the UK; or,
(b) does have leave but it is subject to a condition of no recourse to public funds.

7.27 In a restricted case, the housing authority must, so far as reasonably practical, bring the section 193(2) duty to an end by arranging for an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy to be made to the applicant by a private landlord (a private rented sector offer of at least 12 months in length).

7.28 Where a housing authority considers a household member of an applicant may be a restricted person who does not have leave to enter or remain in the UK, or if there is uncertainty about the immigration status of any household member, it is recommended that the authority contact the Home Office.

CHAPTER 8: PRIORITY NEED

8.1 This chapter provides guidance on the categories of applicant who have a priority need for accommodation under the homelessness legislation.

8.2 Housing authorities have duties to try and prevent or relieve homelessness for all applicants who are eligible for assistance and are homeless or threatened with homelessness, irrespective of whether or not they may have a priority need for accommodation. If a housing authority is unable to prevent an applicant from becoming homeless, or to help them to secure accommodation within the ‘relief’ stage, they are required to reach a decision as to whether the applicant has a priority need for accommodation.

8.3 Section 188(1) of the 1996 Act requires housing authorities to secure that accommodation is available for an applicant if they have reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance and have a priority need. The housing authority may bring this ‘interim’ accommodation duty to an end during the relief stage if they subsequently find that the applicant does not have priority need (or are not eligible or not homeless) and issues a decision that the applicant will not be owed further duties at the end of the relief duty. For further guidance on accommodation duties see chapter 15. Section 193(2) of the 1996 Act requires housing authorities to secure accommodation for applicants who have a priority need for accommodation section 189(1) and the Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002 (the ‘2002 Order’) provide that the following categories of applicant have a priority need for accommodation:

(a) a pregnant woman or a person with whom she resides or might reasonably be expected to reside (see paragraph 8.5);
(b) a person with whom dependent children reside or might reasonably be expected to reside (see paragraphs 8.6-8.12);
(c) a person who is vulnerable as a result of old age, mental illness, learning disability or physical disability or other special reason, or with whom such a person resides or might reasonably be expected to reside (see paragraphs 8.13-8.18);
(d) a person aged 16 or 17 who is not a ‘relevant child’ or a child in need to whom a local authority owes a duty under section 20 of the Children Act 1989 (see paragraphs 8.19-8.23);
(e) a person under 21 who was (but is no longer) looked after, accommodated or fostered between the ages of 16 and 18 (except a person who is a ‘relevant student’);
(f) a person aged 21 or more who is vulnerable as a result of having been looked after, accommodated or fostered (except a person who is a ‘relevant student’) (see paragraphs 8.28-8.31);
(g) a person who is vulnerable as a result of having been a member of Her Majesty’s regular naval, military or air forces (see paragraphs 8.32-8.33);
(h) a person who is vulnerable as a result of:
   (i) having served a custodial sentence;
   (ii) having been committed for contempt of court or any other kindred offence; or,
   (iii) having been remanded in custody (see paragraphs 8.34-8.35);
(i) a person who is vulnerable as a result of ceasing to occupy accommodation because of violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out (see paragraphs 8.36-8.37);
(j) a person who is homeless, or threatened with homelessness, as a result of an emergency such as flood, fire or other disaster.

8.4 Once a housing authority has notified an applicant that they have a priority need and have been accepted as owed the section 193(2) duty it cannot subsequently change that decision if the applicant subsequently ceases to have a priority need (e.g. because a dependent child leaves home), except where a review has been requested and the change takes place before the review decision. Any change of circumstance prior to the decision on the homelessness application should be taken into account. However, once all the relevant inquiries are completed, the housing authority should not defer their decision on the case in anticipation of a possible change of circumstance.

Pregnant women

8.5 A pregnant woman, and anyone with whom she lives or might reasonably be expected to live, has a priority need for accommodation. This is regardless of the length of time that the woman has been pregnant. Normal confirmation of pregnancy, e.g. a letter from a medical professional, such as a midwife, should be adequate evidence of pregnancy. If a pregnant woman suffers a miscarriage or terminates her pregnancy before a decision is reached as to whether she is owed section 193(2) main housing duty the housing authority should consider whether she continues to have a priority need as a result of some other factor (e.g. she may be vulnerable as a result of another special reason – see paragraph 8.38).

Dependent children

8.6 Applicants have a priority need if one or more dependent children is living with them or might reasonably be expected to live with them. There must be actual dependence on the applicant, although the child need not be wholly and exclusively dependent on them. There must also be actual residence (or a reasonable expectation of residence) with some degree of permanence or regularity, rather than a temporary arrangement whereby the children are merely staying with the applicant for a limited period (see paragraphs 8.10 and 8.11). Similarly, the child need not be wholly and exclusively resident (or expected to reside wholly and exclusively) with the applicant.

8.7 The 1996 Act does not define dependent children, but housing authorities may wish to treat as dependent all children under 16, and all children aged 16-18 who are in, or are about to begin, full-time education or training or who for other reasons are unable to support themselves and who live at home. The meaning of dependency is not however, limited to financial dependency. Thus, while children aged 16 and over who are in full-time employment and are financially independent of their parents would not normally be considered to be dependents, housing authorities should remember that such children may not be sufficiently mature to live independently of their parents, and there may be sound reasons for considering them to be dependent. The Secretary of State considers that it will be very rare that a 16 or 17 year old child who is living at home will not be considered to be dependent.

8.8 Dependent children need not necessarily be the applicant’s own children, but could, for example, be related to the applicant or their partner, or be adopted or fostered by the applicant. There must, however, be some form of parent/child relationship.

8.9 Housing authorities may receive applications from a parent who is separated from their former spouse or partner. In some cases where parents separate, the court may make a residence order indicating with which parent the child normally resides. In such cases the child may be considered to reside with the parent named in the order, and would not normally be expected to reside with the other parent. However, in many cases the parents come to an agreement themselves as to how the child is cared for, and a court order will not be required.

8.10 Residence does not have to be full-time and a child can be considered to reside with either parent or with both parents. However, there must be some regularity to the arrangement for it to establish residence. Housing authorities should be mindful that where parents separate, there will generally be a presumption towards shared residence though this will not always be on the basis of an equal amount of time being spent living with both parents.

8.11 If the child is not currently residing with the applicant, the housing authority will need to decide whether, in the circumstances in which the applicant is homeless it would be reasonable for the child to do so. An agreement for joint residency between a child’s parents, or a joint residence order by a court, will not automatically lead to a conclusion that it would be reasonable for the child to reside with the parent making the application, and housing authorities will need to consider each case individually. In doing so, housing authorities should take into account the specific needs and circumstances of the child, including whether suitable accommodation is available to them with their other parent.

8.12 Where the applicant’s children are being looked after by a children’s social services authority, whether subject to a care order or being accommodated under a voluntary agreement, and they are not currently living with the applicant, liaison with the social services authority will be essential. Joint consideration with social services will ensure that the best interests of the applicant and the children are served. This may, for example, enable a family to be reunited subject to suitable accommodation being available.

Vulnerability

8.13 A person has a priority need for accommodation if they are vulnerable as a result of:

(a) old age;
(b) mental illness or learning disability or physical disability;
(c) having been looked after, accommodated or fostered and is aged 21 or more;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(d) having been a member of Her Majesty’s regular naval, military or air forces;
(e) having been in custody;
(f) ceasing to occupy accommodation because of violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out; or,
(g) any other special reason.

8.14 In the case of (a), (b) and (g) only, a person with whom a vulnerable person lives or might reasonably be expected to live also has a priority need for accommodation and can therefore make an application on behalf of themselves and that vulnerable person.

8.15 It is a matter of evaluative judgement whether the applicant’s circumstances make them vulnerable. When determining whether an applicant in any of the categories set out in paragraph 8.13 is vulnerable, the housing authority should determine whether, if homeless, the applicant would be significantly more vulnerable than an ordinary person would be if they became homeless. The assessment must be a qualitative composite one taking into account all of the relevant facts and circumstances, and involves a consideration of the impact of homelessness on the applicant when compared to an ordinary person if made homeless. The housing authority should consider whether the applicant would suffer or be at risk of suffering harm or detriment which the ordinary person would not suffer or be at risk of suffering, such that the harm or detriment would make a noticeable difference to their ability to deal with the consequences of homelessness.

8.16 When assessing an applicant’s vulnerability, a housing authority may take into account the services and support available to them from a third party, including their family. This would involve considering the needs of the applicant, the level of support being provided to them, and whether with such support they would or would not be significantly more vulnerable than an ordinary person if made homeless. In order to reach a decision that a person is not vulnerable because of the support they receive the housing authority must be satisfied that the third party will provide the support on a consistent and predictable basis. In each case a housing authority should consider whether the applicant, even with support, would be vulnerable.

8.17 Housing authorities must be mindful of the Equality Act 2010 and their public sector equality duties towards people who have a protected characteristic. For further guidance on the Equality Act 2010 see Chapter 1. If the applicant has a disability (or another relevant protected characteristic) the authority should assess the extent of such disability and the likely effect of the disability, when taken together with any other features, on the applicant if and when homeless. They will then need to decide whether the impact of this makes the applicant significantly more vulnerable as a result.

8.18 Some of the factors which may be relevant to determining whether an applicant is vulnerable are set out below.

16 and 17 year olds

8.19 The specific duties towards 16 and 17 year olds who are at risk of homelessness or who are homeless, and the legal duties children’s services authorities and housing authorities have towards them are set out in the Government’s statutory guidance: ‘Provision of accommodation for 16 and 17 year old young people who may be homeless and/or require accommodation.’

8.20 16 and 17 year old homeless applicants have a priority need for accommodation except those who are:
(a) a relevant child; or,
(b) a child in need who is owed a duty under section 20 of the Children Act 1989.

8.21 A relevant child is a child aged 16 or 17 who has been looked after by a local authority for at least 13 weeks since the age of 14 and has been looked after at some time while 16 or 17 and who is not currently being looked after (i.e. an ‘eligible child’ for the purposes of paragraph 19B of Schedule 2 to the Children Act 1989). In addition, a child is also a relevant child if they would have been looked after by the local authority as an eligible child but for the fact that on their 16th birthday they were detained through the criminal justice system, or in hospital, or if they returned home on family placement and that has broken down (see section 23A of the Children Act 1989, section 23A and regulation 3 of the Care Leavers (England) Regulations 2010).

8.22 The primary responsibility for a child in need who requires accommodation, including a 16 and 17 year old who is homeless lies with the relevant children’s services authority. The Children Act 1989 (section 20) places a duty on children’s services authorities to accommodate a child in need, and in almost all circumstances a homeless 16-17 year old would be a child in need.

8.23 However, there remain circumstances when the housing authority will have duties towards a homeless 16 and 17 year olds, including when the young person, having been fully informed of the implications, and being judged to have capacity to make that decision, declines to become looked after under the Children Act and instead applies for assistance under homelessness legislation. By definition these young people are nearing adulthood where a smooth and supported transition will be necessary to protect against the risk of homelessness re-occurring. As both children’s services and housing authorities have duties towards this group it is essential that services are underpinned by written joint protocols which set out clear, practical arrangements for providing services that are centered on young people and their families and prevent young people from being passed over and back between housing and children’s services authorities.

Old age

8.24 Old age alone is not sufficient for the applicant to be considered vulnerable.
However, it may be that as a result of old age the applicant would be significantly more vulnerable than an ordinary person would be if homeless. Housing authorities should not use a fixed age beyond which vulnerability occurs automatically (or below which it can be ruled out); each case will need to be considered in the light of the individual circumstances.

Mental illness or learning disability or physical disability

8.25 Housing authorities should have regard to any advice from medical professionals, social services or current providers of care and support. In cases where there is doubt as to the extent of any vulnerability authorities may also consider seeking a clinical opinion. However, the final decision on the question of vulnerability will rest with the housing authority. In considering whether such applicants are vulnerable, authorities will need to take account of all relevant factors including:
(a) the nature and extent of the illness and/or disability;
(b) the relationship between the illness and/or disability and the individual’s housing difficulties; and,
(c) the relationship between the illness and/or disability and other factors such as drug/alcohol misuse, offending behaviour, challenging behaviour, age and personality disorder.

8.26 Assessment of vulnerability due to mental health problems will require cooperation between housing authorities, social services authorities and mental health agencies. Housing authorities should consider carrying out joint assessments or using a trained mental health practitioner as part of an assessment team. NHS mental health services provide help under the Care Programme Approach (CPA) for eligible patients, including people with severe mental illness (including personality disorder), who also have problems with housing. People who are homeless on discharge from hospital following a period of treatment for mental illness are likely to be vulnerable. Effective arrangements for liaison between housing, social services and mental health services will be essential in such cases but authorities will also need to be sensitive to direct approaches from former patients who have been discharged and may be homeless.

8.27 Learning or physical disabilities or long-term or acute illnesses which give rise to vulnerability may be readily discernible, but advice from health or social services should be sought wherever necessary.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Having been looked after, accommodated or fostered and aged 21 or over 8.28 A person aged 21 or over who is vulnerable as a result of having been looked after, accommodated or fostered has a priority need (other than a person who is a 'relevant student'). The terms 'looked after, accommodated or fostered' are set out in Section 24(2) of the Children Act 1989 and this includes any person who has been:

(a) looked after by a local authority (i.e. has been subject to a care order or accommodated under a voluntary agreement);
(b) accommodated by or on behalf of a voluntary organisation;
(c) accommodated in a private children’s home;
(d) accommodated for a consecutive period of at least three months:
   (i) by any Local Health Board, Special Health Authority or by a local authority in the exercise of education functions; or,
   (ii) in any care home or independent hospital or in any accommodation provided pursuant to arrangements made by the Secretary of State, the National Health Service Commissioning Board or a clinical commissioning group under the National Health Service Act 2006 or by a National Health Service trust or an NHS foundation trust, or by a local authority in Wales in the exercise of education functions; or,
   (e) privately fostered.

8.29 A ‘relevant student’ means a care leaver under 25 to whom section 24B (3) of the Children Act 1989 applies, and who is in full-time further or higher education and whose term-time accommodation is not available during a vacation. Under section 24B(5), where a social services authority is satisfied that a person is someone to whom section 24B(3) applies and needs accommodation during a vacation they must provide accommodation or the means to enable it to be secured.

8.30 Housing authorities will need to make inquiries into an applicant’s childhood history to establish whether they have been looked after, accommodated or fostered in any of these ways. If so, they will need to consider whether they are vulnerable as a result.

8.31 For further guidance on assessing vulnerability, and on providing assistance to applicants who are care leavers see Chapter 22.

Having been a member of the armed forces

8.32 A person who is vulnerable as a result of having been a member of Her Majesty’s regular armed forces has a priority need for accommodation. Former members of the armed forces will include a person who was previously a member of the regular naval, military or air forces.

8.33 For further guidance on assessing vulnerability, and on providing assistance to applicants who are veterans see Chapter 24.

Having been in custody

8.34 A person who is vulnerable as a result of having served a custodial sentence, been committed for contempt of court or remanded in custody has a priority need for accommodation.

8.35 For further guidance on assessing vulnerability, and on providing assistance to applicants who have been in custody or detention see Chapter 23.

Having left accommodation because of violence

8.36 A person has a priority need if they are vulnerable as a result of having to leave accommodation because of violence from another person, or threats of violence from another person that are likely to be carried out. It will usually be apparent from the assessment of the reason for homelessness whether the applicant has had to leave accommodation because of violence or threats of violence. In cases involving violence, the safety of the applicant and ensuring confidentiality must be of paramount concern.
For further guidance on dealing with cases involving domestic violence see Chapter 21.

Other special reason

Section 189(1)(c) provides that a person has a priority need for accommodation if they are vulnerable for any 'other special reason.' The legislation envisages that vulnerability can arise because of factors that are not expressly provided for in statute. Each application must be considered in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case. Moreover, other special reasons giving rise to vulnerability are not restricted to the physical or mental characteristics of a person. Where applicants have a need for support but have no family or friends on whom they can depend they may be vulnerable as a result of another special reason.

Housing authorities must keep an open mind and should avoid blanket policies that assume that particular groups of applicants will, or will not, be vulnerable for any other special reason. Where a housing authority considers that an applicant may be vulnerable, it will be important to make an in-depth assessment of the circumstances of the case. Guidance on certain categories of applicants who may be vulnerable as a result of any other special reason is given below. The list below is not exhaustive and housing authorities must ensure that they give proper consideration to every application on the basis of the individual circumstances. In addition, housing authorities will need to be aware that an applicant may be considered vulnerable for any other special reason because of a combination of factors which taken alone may not necessarily lead to a decision that they are vulnerable (e.g. drug and alcohol problems, common mental health problems, a history of sleeping rough, no previous experience of managing a tenancy).

Young people: the 2002 Order makes specific provision for certain categories of young homeless people. However, there are many other young people who fall outside these categories who could be vulnerable if homeless. Most young people can expect a degree of support from families, friends or an institution (e.g. a college or university) with the practicalities and costs of finding, establishing, and managing a home for the first time. But some young people, particularly those who are forced to leave the parental home or who cannot remain there because they are being subjected to violence or sexual abuse, may lack this back-up network and be less able than others to establish and maintain a home for themselves. Moreover, a young person who is homeless without adequate financial resources to live independently may be at risk of abuse or exploitation.

People fleeing harassment: housing authorities should consider whether harassment falls under the general definition of domestic abuse. For further guidance see Chapter 21 and paragraphs 8.36-8.37 above. In some cases, however, severe harassment may fall short of actual violence or threats of violence likely to be carried out. Housing authorities should consider carefully whether applicants who have fled their home because of non-violent forms of harassment, for example, psychological or emotional or damage to property, are vulnerable as a result.

Victims of trafficking and of modern slavery: housing authorities should ensure that staff have an awareness of the possibility that applicants may be victims of trafficking or of modern slavery, and are able to assess whether or not they are vulnerable as a result. For guidance on assessing vulnerability, and on providing assistance to applicants who are victims of trafficking or modern slavery see Chapter 25.

CHAPTER 9: INTENTIONAL HOMELESSNESS

This chapter provides guidance on determining whether an applicant became homeless intentionally under section 191 of the 1996 Act.

The prevention and relief duties owed to applicants who are eligible for assistance and homeless, or threatened with homelessness, apply irrespective of whether or not they may be considered to be homeless intentionally.

Applicants who have a priority need, and whose homelessness has not been successfully relieved, are owed a lesser duty if they have become homeless intentionally than would be owed to them if they were homeless unintentionally. This reflects the general expectation that, wherever possible, people should take responsibility for their own accommodation needs and not behave in a way which might lead to the loss of their accommodation.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

9.4 Where a housing authority finds an eligible applicant has a priority need but is homeless intentionally and the relief duty has come to an end, they have a duty to secure accommodation which is available to the applicant to provide reasonable opportunity for them to find their own accommodation. The authority must also provide advice and assistance in any attempts the applicant might make to secure accommodation. For further guidance on the accommodation duty owed to intentionally homeless applicants see Chapter 15.

9.5 It is for housing authorities to satisfy themselves in each individual case whether an applicant is homeless intentionally. Generally, it is not for applicants to 'prove their case.' The exception is where an applicant seeks to establish that, as a member of a household where another member has been found or is likely to be found to have caused intentional homelessness of the household, they did not acquiesce in the behaviour that led to homelessness. In such cases, acquiescence may be assumed by the housing authority in the absence of material which indicates to the contrary.

9.6 Housing authorities must not adopt general policies which seek to pre-define circumstances that do or do not amount to intentional homelessness. In each case, housing authorities must form a view in the light of all their inquiries about that particular case. Where the original loss of settled accommodation occurred some years earlier and the facts are unclear, it may not be possible for the housing authority to satisfy themselves that the applicant became homeless intentionally.

Definition of intentional homelessness

9.7 Section 191(1) provides that a person becomes homeless intentionally if ALL of the following apply:

(a) they deliberately do or fail to do anything in consequence of which they cease to occupy accommodation; and,
(b) the accommodation is available for their occupation; and,
(c) it would have been reasonable for them to continue to occupy the accommodation.

However, for this purpose, an act or omission made in good faith by someone who was unaware of any relevant fact must not be treated as deliberate (see paragraph 9.23).

9.8 Section 191(3) provides that a person must be treated as homeless intentionally if:

(a) the person enters into an arrangement under which they are required to cease to occupy accommodation which it would have been reasonable for the person to continue to occupy; and,
(b) the purpose of the arrangement is to enable the person to become entitled to assistance under Part 7; and,
(c) there is no other good reason why the person is homeless.

Whose conduct results in intentional homelessness?

9.9 Every applicant is entitled to individual consideration of their application. This includes applicants where another member of their family or household has made, or is making, a separate application. It is the applicant who must deliberately have done or failed to do something which resulted in homelessness.

9.10 Where a housing authority has found an applicant to be homeless intentionally, nothing in the 1996 Act prevents another member of their household from making a separate application. Situations may arise where one or more members of a household found to be intentionally homeless were not responsible for the actions or omissions that led to the homelessness. For example, a person may have deliberately failed to pay
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities

A2.3

the rent or defaulted on the mortgage payments, which resulted in homelessness against the wishes or without the knowledge of their partner.

9.11 However, where applicants were not directly responsible for the act or omission which led to their family or household becoming homeless, but they acquiesced in that behaviour, then they may be treated as having become homeless intentionally themselves. In considering whether an applicant has acquiesced in certain behaviour, the housing authority should take into account whether the applicant could reasonably be expected to have taken that position through a fear of actual or probable violence.

Cessation of occupation

9.12 For intentional homelessness to be established there must have been actual occupation of accommodation which has ceased. However, occupation need not necessarily involve continuous occupation at all times, provided the accommodation was at the disposal of the applicant and available for their occupation. The accommodation which has been lost can be outside the UK. Housing authorities are reminded that applicants cannot be considered to have become homeless intentionally because of failing to take up an offer of accommodation. However, an applicant whose refusal of a suitable offer of accommodation brought to an end the section 193(2) duty under which they were at the time accommodated, resulting in the loss of that accommodation, may be considered to be intentionally homeless.

Consequence of a deliberate act or omission

9.13 For homelessness to be intentional, the ending of occupation of the accommodation must be a consequence of a deliberate act or omission by the applicant. Having established that there was a deliberate act or omission, the housing authority will need to decide whether the loss of the applicant’s home is the reasonably likely result of that act or omission. This is a matter of cause and effect. An example would be where a person voluntarily gave up settled accommodation that it would have been reasonable for them to continue to occupy, moved into alternative accommodation of a temporary or unsettled nature and subsequently became homeless when required to leave the alternative accommodation. Housing authorities will, therefore, need to look back to the last period of settled accommodation and the reasons why the applicant left that accommodation, to determine whether the current incidence of homelessness is the reasonably likely result of a deliberate act or omission.

Ceasing to be intentionally homeless

9.14 Where a person becomes homeless intentionally, that condition may continue until the link between the causal act or omission and the intentional homelessness has been broken. It could be broken by an intervening event which, irrespective of any act or omission on the part of the applicant, would have itself led to their being homeless at the point at which the housing authority was carrying out inquiries into their application for assistance. This might be the case where, for example, an applicant gave up accommodation without sufficient good reason but at the later point at which they applied for assistance due to homelessness this accommodation would no longer have been available to them, or reasonable for them to occupy.

9.15 The causal link between a deliberate act or omission and intentional homelessness is more typically broken by a period in settled accommodation which follows the intentional homelessness. Whether accommodation is settled will depend on the circumstances of the case, with factors such as security of tenure and length of residence being relevant. Occupation of accommodation that was merely temporary rather than settled, for example, staying with friends on an insecure basis, may not be sufficient to break the link with the earlier intentional homelessness. However, a period in settled accommodation is not the only way in which a link with the earlier intentional homelessness may be broken: some other event, such as the break-up of a marriage resulting in homelessness, may be sufficient.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Deliberate act or omission

9.16 For homelessness to be intentional, the act or omission that led to the loss of accommodation must have been deliberate, and applicants must always be given the opportunity to explain such behaviour. An act or omission should not generally be treated as deliberate, even where deliberately carried out, if it is forced upon the applicant through no fault of their own. Moreover, an act or omission made in good faith where someone is genuinely ignorant of a relevant fact must not be treated as deliberate (see paragraph 9.23).

9.17 Generally, an act or omission should not be considered deliberate where, for example:

(a) the act or omission was non-payment of rent or mortgage costs which arose from financial difficulties which were beyond the applicant’s control, or were the result of Housing Benefit or Universal Credit delays;
(b) the housing authority has reason to believe the applicant is incapable of managing their affairs, for example, by reason of age, mental illness or disability;
(c) the act or omission was the result of limited mental capacity; or a temporary aberration or aberrations caused by mental illness, frailty, or an assessed substance misuse problem;
(d) the act or omission was made when the applicant was under duress;
(e) imprudence or lack of foresight on the part of an applicant led to homelessness but the act or omission was in good faith.

9.18 An applicant’s actions would not amount to intentional homelessness where they have lost their home, or were obliged to sell it, because of rent or mortgage arrears resulting from significant financial difficulties, and the applicant was genuinely unable to keep up the rent or mortgage payments even after claiming benefits, and no further financial help was available.

9.19 Where an applicant has lost a former home due to rent arrears, the reasons why the arrears accrued should be fully explored, including examining the applicant’s ability to pay the housing costs at the time the commitment was taken on. Similarly, in cases which involve mortgagors, housing authorities will need to look at the reasons for mortgage arrears together with the applicant’s ability to pay the mortgage commitment when it was taken on, given the applicant’s financial circumstances at the time.

9.20 Examples of acts or omissions which may be regarded as deliberate (unless any of the circumstances set out in paragraph 9.17 apply) include the following, where someone:

(a) chooses to sell their home in circumstances where they are under no risk of losing it;
(b) has lost their home because of willful and persistent refusal to pay rent or mortgage payments;
(c) could be said to have significantly neglected their affairs having disregarded sound advice from qualified people;
(d) voluntarily surrenders adequate accommodation in this country or abroad which it would have been reasonable for them to continue to occupy;
(e) is evicted because of their anti-social behaviour, nuisance to neighbours or harassment;
(f) is evicted because of violence or threats of violence or abuse by them towards another person;
(g) leaves a job with tied accommodation and the circumstances indicate that it would have been reasonable for them to continue in the employment and reasonable to continue to occupy the accommodation.

Available for occupation

9.21 For homelessness to be intentional the accommodation must have been available for the applicant, their household and any other person reasonably expected to live with them. For further guidance on availability for occupation see Chapter 6.
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities  A2.3

Reasonable to continue to occupy the accommodation

9.22 An applicant cannot be treated as intentionally homeless unless it would have been reasonable for them to have continued to occupy the accommodation. For further guidance on reasonable to continue to occupy see Chapter 6. It will be necessary for the housing authority to give careful consideration to the circumstances of the applicant and the household, in each case, and with particular care in cases where violence and abuse has been alleged. For further guidance on domestic violence and abuse see Chapter 21.

Act or omissions in good faith

9.23 Acts or omissions made by the applicant in good faith where they were genuinely unaware of a relevant fact must not be regarded as deliberate. Provided that the applicant has acted in good faith, there is no requirement that ignorance of the relevant fact be reasonable.

9.24 A general example of an act made in good faith would be a situation where someone gave up possession of accommodation in the belief that they had no legal right to continue to occupy the accommodation and, therefore, it would not be reasonable for them to continue to occupy it. This could apply where someone leaves rented accommodation in the private sector having received a valid notice to quit or notice that the assured shorthold tenancy has come to an end and the landlord requires possession of the property, and the former tenant was genuinely unaware that they had a right to remain until the court granted an order for possession and a warrant or writ for possession to enforce it.

9.25 Where there was dishonesty there could be no question of an act or omission having been made in good faith.

9.26 Other examples of acts or omissions that could be made in good faith might include situations where:

(a) a person gets into rent arrears, being unaware that they may be entitled to Housing Benefit, Universal Credit or other social security benefits;
(b) an owner-occupier faced with foreclosure or possession proceedings to which there is no defence, sells before the mortgagee recovers possession through the courts or surrenders the property to the lender; or,
(c) a tenant, faced with possession proceedings to which there would be no defence, and where the granting of a possession order would be mandatory, surrenders the property to the landlord.

9.27 In (c) although the housing authority may consider that it would have been reasonable for the tenant to continue to occupy the accommodation, the act should not be regarded as deliberate if the tenant made the decision to leave the accommodation in ignorance of relevant facts.

Applicant enters into an arrangement

9.28 Housing authorities will need to be alert to the possibility of collusion by which a person may claim that they are obliged to leave available accommodation that would have been reasonable for them to continue to occupy in order to take advantage of the homelessness legislation. Collusion is not confined to arrangements with friends or relatives but can also occur between landlords and tenants. Housing authorities, while relying on experience, nonetheless need to be satisfied that collusion exists, and must not rely on hearsay or unfounded suspicions in finding that an applicant became intentionally homeless under section 191(3).

9.29 For collusion to amount to intentional homelessness, section 191(3) specifies that there should be no other good reason for the applicant's homelessness. Examples of other good reasons include overcrowding or an obvious breakdown in relations between the applicant and their host or landlord. In some cases involving collusion the applicant may not actually be homeless, if there is no genuine need for the applicant to leave the accommodation. For further guidance on applicants asked to leave by family or friends see Chapter 6.
Specific guidance relating to intentional homelessness can also be found in the following chapters:

Chapter 21: domestic abuse;
Chapter 22: care leavers;
Chapter 23: people with an offending history;
Chapter 24: former members of the armed forces.

CHAPTER 10: LOCAL CONNECTION AND REFERRALS TO ANOTHER HOUSING AUTHORITY

10.1 This chapter provides guidance on the provisions relating to an applicant’s ‘local connection’ with an area and explains the conditions and procedures for referring an applicant to another housing authority. The chapter includes how local connection is assessed, particular arrangements that apply for certain groups such as care leavers and former asylum seekers, the process and conditions for referrals between authorities, cross-border referrals and dealing with disputes.

Local Authorities Agreement

10.2 Local authority bodies have together agreed guidelines for local authorities on procedures for referral between them, and for resolving disputes that arise when housing authorities are unable to agree whether conditions for a referral from one authority to another are met. Although these procedures have been adopted by local authority organisations in England, Scotland and Wales, and are now widely used, housing authorities are reminded that they should consider each case individually on its own particular facts.

Assessing local connection

10.3 When a housing authority makes inquiries to determine whether an applicant is eligible for assistance and owed a duty under Part 7, it may also make inquiries under section 184(2) to establish an applicant’s local connection.

10.4 Section 199(1) provides that a person has a local connection with the district of a housing authority if they have a connection with it because:

(a) they are, or were in the past, normally resident there, and that residence was of their own choice; or,
(b) they are employed there; or,
(c) they have family associations living there; or,
(d) of any special circumstances.

10.5 For the purposes of (a), above, ‘normal residence’ is to be understood as meaning ‘the place where at the relevant time the person in fact resides.’ Residence in temporary accommodation provided by a housing authority can constitute normal residence of choice and can contribute towards a local connection.

10.6 In the case of a person who is street homeless or insecurely accommodated (‘sofa surfing’) the housing authority will need to carry out a different type of inquiry to be satisfied as to their ‘normal residence’ than would be required for an applicant who has become homeless from more settled accommodation. If an applicant has no settled accommodation elsewhere, and from inquiries the authority is satisfied that they do in fact reside in the district, then there will be normal residence for the purposes of the 1996 Act.

10.7 The Local Authorities Agreement suggests that a working definition of normal residence sufficient to establish a local connection should be residence for at least 6 months in an area during the previous 12 months, or for three years during the previous five year period.

10.8 With regard to (b) the applicant should actually work in the district; it would not be sufficient that their employers’ head office was located there.

10.9 For the purposes of (c), where the applicant raises family associations, this may extend beyond partners, parents, adult children or siblings. They may include associations with other family members such as step-parents, grandparents, grandchildren, aunts or uncles provided there are sufficiently close links in the form of frequent contact, commitment or dependency. Family associations should be determined with regard to the fact-specific circumstances of the individual case. For example, the actual closeness of the family association may count for more than the degree of blood relation. A housing authority should not identify a local connection through family associations with an area other than the one where the applicant positively wants to live.

10.10 The Local Authorities Agreement recommends that in order to give rise to a local connection, the family members relied upon as family associations should have been resident in the district for a period of at least five years at the date of application from homelessness assistance. Housing authorities should remain cautious in applying this guideline to every case. For example, in cases of refugees or other recent arrivals to the UK, a housing authority should bear in mind that the relatives may not have had five years in which to build up a residence period in any district in the UK.

10.11 With regard to (d), special circumstances might include the need to be near special medical or support services which are available only in a particular district.

10.12 Decisions about the application of (a) to (d) must be based on the facts at the date of the decision (or review of the decision), not the date of the application.

10.13 The test regarding local connection, as set out in section 199(1) should be applied, and the additional provisions for care leavers (see paragraph 10.17) and asylum seekers (see paragraph 10.23) where relevant, in order to establish whether the applicant has the required local connection. The fact that an applicant may satisfy one of these grounds will not necessarily mean that they have been able to establish a local connection.

10.14 The overriding consideration should always be whether the applicant has a connection ‘in real terms’ with an area and the housing authority must consider the applicant’s individual circumstances, particularly any exceptional circumstances, before reaching a decision.

10.15 Housing authorities are not generally required to make any inquiries as to whether an applicant has a local connection with an area. However, by virtue of section 11 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004, housing authorities will need to consider local connection in cases where the applicant is a former asylum seeker:

(a) who was provided with accommodation in Scotland under section 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; and,

(b) whose accommodation was not provided in an accommodation centre by virtue of section 22 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002.

10.16 In such cases, by virtue of section 11(2)(d) and (3) of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004, local connection to a district in England, Wales or Scotland will be relevant to what duty is owed under section 193. (See paragraphs 10.23 – 10.29 below).

Care leavers

10.17 Section 199(8) to (11) makes specific provisions relating to local connection for care leavers.

10.18 A young person owed leaving care duties under section 23C of the Children Act 1989 will have a local connection to the area of the children services authority that owes them the duties. If the children services authority is a county council and not a housing authority, the young person will have a local connection with every housing authority district falling within the area of the children services authority.

10.19 Where a care leaver is aged under 21 and normally lives in a different area to that of a local authority that owes them leaving care duties, and has done for at least 2 years including some time before they turned 16, the young person will also have a local connection in that area.

10.20 For further guidance on assessments and provision of services for Care Leavers see Chapter 22.

Ex-service personnel

10.21 Section 315 of the Housing and Regeneration Act 2008 amended the local connection test to enable armed forces personnel to establish a local connection in an area through residing there by choice, or being employed there, in the same way as a civilian. For further guidance on former members of the armed forces see Chapter 24.

Ex-prisoners and detainees under the Mental Health Act 1983

10.22 Detention in prison (whether convicted or not) does not establish residency of choice in the district the prison is in, and so will not create a local connection with that district. The same is true of those detained under the Mental Health Act 1983. For further guidance on people with an offending history see Chapter 23.

Former asylum seekers

10.23 Sections 199(6) provides that a person has a local connection with the district of a housing authority if they were (at any time) provided with accommodation there under section 95 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (section 95 accommodation).

10.24 Under section 199(7), however, a person does not have a local connection by virtue of section 199(6):

(a) if they have been subsequently provided with section 95 accommodation in a different area. Where a former asylum seeker has been provided with section 95 accommodation in more than one area, the local connection is with the area where accommodation was last provided; or,

(b) if they have been provided with section 95 accommodation in an accommodation centre in the district by virtue of section 22 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002.

10.25 A local connection with a district by virtue of section 199(6) does not override a local connection by virtue of section 199(1). Thus, a former asylum seeker who has a local connection with a district because they were provided with accommodation there under section 95 may also have a local connection elsewhere for some other reason, for example, because of employment or family associations.

Former asylum seekers provided with section 95 accommodation in Scotland

10.26 Under Scottish legislation, a person does not establish a local connection with a district in Scotland if they are resident there in section 95 accommodation. Consequently, if such a person made a homelessness application to a housing authority in England, and did not have a local connection with the district of that authority, the fact that they had been provided with section 95 accommodation in Scotland would not establish conditions for referral to the relevant local authority in Scotland.

10.27 Sections 11(2) and (3) of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 provides that where a housing authority in England or Wales is satisfied that an applicant is eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and in priority need and:

(a) the applicant has been provided with section 95 accommodation in Scotland at any time;
(b) the section 95 accommodation was not provided in an accommodation centre by virtue of section 22 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002;

(c) the applicant does not have a local connection anywhere in England and Wales (within the meaning of section 199 of the 1996 Act); and,

(d) the applicant does not have a local connection anywhere in Scotland (within the meaning of section 27 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987); then the duty to the applicant under section 193 (the main housing duty) shall not apply.

10.28 However, the authority:

(a) may secure that accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant for a period giving them a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation for their occupation; and,

(b) may provide the applicant (or secure that they are provided with) advice and assistance in any attempts they may make to secure accommodation for their occupation.

10.29 When dealing with an applicant in these circumstances, housing authorities will need to take into account the wishes of the applicant but should consider providing such advice and assistance as would enable the applicant to make an application for housing to the Scottish authority in the district where the section 95 accommodation was last provided, or to another Scottish authority of the applicant’s choice. If they were unintentionally homeless and in priority need, it would be open to them to apply to any Scottish housing authority and they would be owed a main housing duty.

Referrals to another housing authority

10.30 If a housing authority’s inquiries under section 184(2) determine that an applicant has a local connection with the district of another housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland, section 198 allows a housing authority (‘the notifying authority’) to refer a case to another housing authority (‘the notified authority’) at the point of the relief duty or main housing duty. Before making a referral the notifying authority must decide if the conditions for referral are met (see 10.32). Referrals cannot be made to Welsh or Scottish authorities where the section 189B relief duty is owed.

10.31 The Secretary of State recommends that the notified authority should respond to a referral within 10 working days.

10.32 Referrals are discretionary only: housing authorities are not required to refer applicants to other authorities. Housing authorities may have a policy about how they exercise their discretion to refer a case. This must not, however, extend to deciding in advance that in all cases where there is a local connection to another district the case should be referred.

10.33 There may be instances where an applicant has a local connection to the district where they applied but the housing authority considers that there is a stronger local connection elsewhere. In such cases, a housing authority can not decide to transfer responsibility to another housing authority; however, they will still be able to seek assistance from the other housing authority in securing accommodation, under section 213. For further guidance on securing accommodation see Chapter 16.

10.34 Where a person has a local connection with the districts of more than one other housing authority, the notifying housing authority should take account of the applicant’s preference in deciding which housing authority to notify.

10.35 If neither an applicant, nor any person who might reasonably be expected to live with them, has a local connection with any district in Great Britain, the duty to secure accommodation or help to secure accommodation will rest with the housing authority that has received the application.

Referrals to another housing authority in England at the relief stage

10.36 Referrals cannot be made to Welsh or Scottish authorities at the relief stage - the English authority the applicant has applied to will be subject to the relief duty, if one is owed.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

10.37 Section 198(A1) enables a housing authority to refer applicants who do not have a local connection to their district to another housing authority in England where they do have such a connection. Before making a referral, the notifying authority must be satisfied that the applicant is homeless and eligible for assistance and therefore owed the (section 189B) relief duty and that the conditions for referral are met (see paragraph 10.51).

10.38 Section 189B sets out the initial duties owed to all eligible people who are homeless, that is the relief duty, unless the authority refers the application to another housing authority. Section 199A(b) states that the housing authority is not subject to the relief duty at the point that they have notified the applicant that they intend to refer or have referred their case to another housing authority. It follows that a housing authority will owe the relief duty until such time as the applicant has been issued with this notification. If the authority believes that the applicant has no local connection and may have a connection elsewhere, they should take reasonable steps to try and relieve the applicant’s homelessness until they issue the first notification as outlined in 10.39 below.

10.39 When the notifying authority intends to refer or have referred a case to another housing authority, there are two points at which applicants must be notified:

(a) when the notifying authority has decided that the conditions for referral are met and intend to notify, or have notified, another local authority of that opinion;
(b) when, following referral, it has been decided that the conditions for referral are or are not met. The notification must provide notice of the decision and the reasons for it.

10.40 From the date that the first notice is issued the authority will not be subject to the relief duty and will cease to be subject to the section 188 (interim accommodation) duty. However if they have reason to believe the applicant may be in priority need they will have a section 199A (2) duty to provide interim accommodation to the applicant whilst a decision is made on whether the conditions for referral are met.

10.41 From the date the second notice (b) is issued to the applicant, if it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, the applicant is to be treated as having made an application to the notified authority. At this point, the notifying authority’s duties under Part 7 of the 1996 Act come to an end.

10.42 If the notifying authority has made a decision as to whether the applicant is eligible for assistance, is homeless or became homeless intentionally, the notified authority may only come to a different decision if they are satisfied that the applicant’s circumstances have changed; or further information has come to light since the notifying authority made their decision, and that the changes or information warrant a different decision.

10.43 The notifying authority must give the notified authority a copy of the applicant’s section 189A(3) assessment and any revisions made to it, and should also (with the applicant’s consent) provide any personalised housing plan that has been agreed with the applicant which remains relevant. The notifying authority should provide this documentation as quickly as possible.

10.44 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met the applicant’s case will remain with the notifying authority and they will be subject to the relief duty under section 189(B)(2). The 56 day period of the relief duty will start from the date of the second notification.

Referrals to another housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland at the end of the relief duty 10.45 Section 198(1) enables a housing authority to refer an applicant who is owed the main housing duty but does not have a local connection to their district, to another housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland if it considers that the conditions for referral are met. Before making a referral, it is the responsibility of the notifying authority to determine that the applicant is unintentionally homeless, eligible for assistance and has a priority need; and is owed the main housing duty.

10.46 The notifying authority cannot issue a notice of referral under section 198(1) until their duties to the applicant under section 189B(2), the relief duty, have come to an end.

10.47 As set out in paragraph 10.38 above when the notifying authority intends to refer a case to another housing authority, there are two notification points. At the point that the housing authority issues the first notice which notifies the applicant that they have or will be referring their case to another housing authority the notifying authority will cease to be subject the section 188 duty to provide interim accommodation from the date of the notice and will not be subject to any duty under section 193. However, they will be subject to a section 200(1) duty to provide interim accommodation until a decision is reached on whether the conditions for referral are met.

10.48 From the date the second notice (b) is issued to the applicant, (which sets out the decision on whether the conditions for referral have been met), if it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, the notifying authority’s duty to provide accommodation under section 200(1) comes to an end and the notified authority will be subject to the main housing duty.

10.49 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met the applicant’s case will remain with the notifying authority and they will be subject to the main housing duty under section 193.

10.50 A notified authority which disagrees on a finding as to the application of the main housing duty (section 193) to the applicant must challenge the notifying authority’s finding (for example as to intentionality) by way of judicial review.

Conditions for referral

10.51 Sections 198(2)(2ZA) and (4) describe the conditions which must be satisfied before a referral may be made. A notifying authority may only refer an applicant to whom the relief duty or main housing duty applies to another housing authority if all of the following are met:

(a) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to live with them has a local connection with its district; and,
(b) the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to live with them has a local connection with the district of the authority to be notified; and,
(c) none of them will be at risk of domestic or other violence, or threat of domestic or other violence which is likely to be carried out, in the district of the authority to be notified.

Or:

(a) the application is made within two years of the applicants acceptance of a private rented sector offer from the other authority under section 193(7AA); and,
(b) neither the applicant or any person who might reasonably be expected to live with them will be at risk of domestic or other violence, or threat of domestic or other violence which is likely to be carried out, in the district of the authority to be notified.

For further guidance on referrals to another housing authority in this circumstance see Chapter 18 on re-applications.

Or:

(a) the applicant was placed in the authority’s district by another authority as a result of a previous homelessness application to the other authority; and,
(b) the fresh application for assistance has been made within a prescribed period of the first application.

The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Miscellaneous Provisions) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006 No. 2527) set out that the ‘prescribed period’ is the total of five years plus the period between the date of the previous application and the date the applicant was first placed in accommodation in the district of the authority to whom the application is now made.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Risk of violence

10.52 A housing authority cannot refer an applicant to another housing authority if they or anyone who might reasonably be expected to reside with them would be at risk of violence. The housing authority is under a positive duty to enquire whether the applicant would be at such a risk and, if they would, should not assume that the applicant will take steps to deal with the threat.

10.53 Section 198(3) defines violence as violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out. This is the same definition as appears in section 177 in relation to whether it is reasonable to continue to occupy accommodation and the circumstances to be considered as to whether a person runs a risk of violence are the same.

10.54 Housing authorities should be alert to the deliberate distinction which is made in section 198(3) between actual violence and threatened violence. A high standard of proof of actual violence in the past should not be imposed. The threshold is that there must be:

(a) no risk of domestic violence (actual or threatened) in the other district; and,
(b) no risk of other violence (actual or threatened) in the other district.

For further guidance on cases involving domestic abuse see Chapter 21.

Cross-border referrals

10.55 Paragraph 10.30 above sets out the circumstances under which a local housing authority can refer a case to another housing authority in Wales or Scotland, and the conditions for referral apply to all referrals. Following a referral, the Local Authorities Agreement sets out that the legislation relevant to the location of the notified authority should be applied when reaching an agreement on whether the conditions for referral are met. There are no arrangements in place to enable referrals to be made between England and Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland.

Applicants’ rights to request a review

10.56 Applicants have the right to request a review of various decisions relating to local connection and referrals. Under section 202(1)(c), an applicant is able to request a review of a housing authority’s decision to notify another housing authority that the conditions for referral are met where the main housing duty is owed (notice a – see 10.39). Applicants cannot request a review of the equivalent section 198(A1) decision at the relief stage. Applicants have a right to request a review of the decision on whether the conditions for referral are met at both the stage of the relief duty or main housing duty under section 202(1)(e) (notice b – see 10.39). For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19.

10.57 The notifying authority’s interim duty to accommodate under section 188, 199A(2) or 200(1) ends regardless of whether the applicant requests a review of a decision that the conditions for referral are met. However, where the applicant does request a review the notifying authority has powers under section 199A (6) and section 200(5) to secure that accommodation is available pending the review decision. For further guidance on powers to secure accommodation see Chapter 15.

10.58 There is no right to request a review of a decision not to refer a case, although a failure by a housing authority to consider whether it has the discretion to refer an applicant may be amenable to challenge though judicial review. The same is true of an unreasonable use of the discretion. For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19.
Disputes

10.59 The question of whether the conditions for referral are met in a particular case at the point of the relief duty or the main housing duty should be decided by agreement between the housing authorities concerned (section 198(5)).

10.60 If they cannot agree, the decision should be made in accordance with such arrangements as may be directed by order of the Secretary of State (section 198(5)). The Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No. 1578) sets out that where a decision cannot be reached by agreement between the notifying authority and the notified authority, the question shall be decided by a person appointed by those authorities.

10.61 The Order directs that the arrangements to be followed in such a dispute are the arrangements agreed between the local authority associations (i.e. the Local Government Association (LGA), the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Welsh Local Government Association and London Councils). The LGA has issued guidelines for housing authorities on invoking the disputes procedure.

10.62 If the authorities are unable to appoint a person to make this decision within 21 days from the date on which the notified authorities receives a notification, sections (2) to (4) of the Schedule to the Order set out the arrangements for appointing a person. These sections only apply where a housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland seek to refer a homelessness case under section 198(1) to another housing authority in England or Wales, at the point of the main housing duty and they are unable to agree to appoint a person to decide whether the conditions for referral are met. They do not apply where a housing authority in England seek to refer a homelessness case to another authority in England under section 198(A1) at the point of the relief duty.

10.63 The Secretary of State has issued the below guidance to set out the arrangements housing authorities should take in the event of them being unable to agree on a person to be appointed to make the decision on whether the conditions for referral of a case are met under section 198(A1) at the point of the relief duty. Housing authorities are strongly recommended to follow this guidance:

(a) if the notified and notifying authority are unable to appoint a person to make a decision on their behalf on the referral of a case within 21 days from the day on which the notified authority received a notification under section 198(A1), they should jointly request the Chair of the LGA or their nominee ('the proper officer') to appoint a person to make this decision;

(b) the Secretary of State recommends that the authorities request that the LGA appoint a person from the panel of persons they have established to decide the question of whether the conditions for a referral of a case are satisfied. The LGA are required to establish this panel under the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No. 1578) to appoint persons to make decisions on referrals of cases under section 198(1). Housing authorities are recommended to utilise this existing procedure;

(c) if within a period of six weeks from the day on which the notified authority received a notification under section 198(A1), a person still has not been appointed, the notifying authority is recommended to request the proper officer to appoint a person from the panel specified above.

10.64 Broadly speaking, both section (2) to (4) of the Schedule to the order and the guidance above provide that in the event of two housing authorities being unable to agree on a person to be appointed to make the decision for them they should agree to make a joint request to the LGA to appoint someone. If unable to agree on that the notifying housing authority must make such a request of the LGA. In all cases relating to notifications under section 198(1) the appointed person must be drawn from a panel established by the LGA for this purpose. It is recommended that for cases relating to notification under section 198(A1) the housing authorities request that the appointed person is drawn from this panel.

10.65 Section 5, 6 and 7 of the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 sets out the procedure to be followed by the appointed person when making their decision and the arrangements for meeting associated costs. These provisions apply regardless of the means by which a person has been appointed. The appointed person must invite written representations from the notifying and notified authority and shall notify their decision and their reasons for it, in writing to the notifying authority and the notified authority. The notifying and notified authority must pay their own costs incurred in connection with these arrangements.

10.66 The Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) (Scotland) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1603) applies under the Scottish homelessness legislation. The arrangements in the latter apply in cases where a housing authority in England, Wales or Scotland refers a homelessness case to a housing authority in Scotland, and they are unable to agree whether the conditions for referral are met.

10.67 Where an English or Welsh housing authority seek to refer a case to a Scottish housing authority, a request to the local authority association to appoint an arbitrator should be made to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

CHAPTER 11: ASSESSMENTS AND PERSONALISED PLANS

11.1 This chapter provides guidance on the (section 189A of the 1996 Act) assessments that housing authorities must carry out to determine the duties owed to a person applying for assistance, and the needs and circumstances of those applicants who are eligible for assistance and homeless or threatened with homelessness. It includes guidance on personalised plans and the reasonable steps applicants and housing authorities may take to prevent or relieve homelessness.

Overview: assessments and personalised plans

11.2 The section 189A duties to assess an applicant’s case and develop a personalised plan provide a framework for housing authorities and applicants to work together to identify appropriate actions to prevent or relieve the applicant’s homelessness. In performing these duties, the Secretary of State considers that housing authorities should adopt a positive and collaborative approach toward applicants, taking account of their particular needs and making all reasonable efforts to engage their cooperation. Personalised plans are more frequently referred to as ‘personalised housing plans’, and so this term is adopted throughout this guidance.

Initial assessments

11.3 Every person applying for assistance from a housing authority stating that they are or are going to be homeless will require an initial interview. If there is reason to believe that they may be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days the housing authority must carry out an assessment to determine if this is the case, and whether they are eligible for assistance. If the applicant is not eligible for assistance or if the authority is satisfied that they are not homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days, they must be given a written section 184 notification of the decision reached. For further guidance on eligibility see Chapter 7 and for further guidance on notifications see Chapter 18.

11.4 In some circumstances it will be possible to determine that an applicant is not threatened with homelessness at first approach, but in most cases further enquiries will need to be carried out to find out more about their housing circumstances before being satisfied that they are not threatened with homelessness within 56 days. If the applicant believes they are threatened with homelessness and there is reason to believe that this is the case then further investigations will be required.

11.5 Guidance on whether a person is homeless or threatened with homelessness is provided in Chapter 6. It should be noted that applicants who have been served a valid section 21 notice to end an assured shorthold tenancy of their only available home, which expires within 56 days, are threatened with homelessness.

11.6 Housing authorities are encouraged to take a flexible approach toward applications for assistance where there is an evidenced risk of homelessness, which might not necessarily result in homelessness within 56 days. Rather than advise the applicant to return when homelessness is more imminently threatened, the housing authority may wish to accept a prevention duty and begin to take reasonable steps to prevent homelessness. However, where there is no risk of homelessness in the foreseeable future the housing authority should offer advice and assistance to the applicant as appropriate.

Assessment of circumstances and needs (section 189A (2))

11.7 Applicants who are eligible and homeless or threatened with homelessness must have an assessment of their case, which includes assessing:

(a) the circumstances that have caused them to be homeless or threatened with homelessness;
(b) their housing needs, and what accommodation would be suitable for them, their household and anybody who might reasonably be expected to live with them; and,
(c) the support that would be necessary for them, and anybody who will be living with them, to have and sustain suitable accommodation.

11.8 When assessing the circumstances leading to a threat of homelessness housing authorities will need applicants to provide all relevant information to inform their assessment. This will usually include enquiring into their accommodation history at least as far back as their last settled address, and the events that led to them being threatened with or becoming homeless.

11.9 Applicants should be encouraged to share information without fear that this will reduce their chances of receiving support, and questions should be asked in a sensitive way and with an awareness that the applicant may be reluctant to disclose personal details if they lack confidence that their circumstances will be understood and considered sympathetically. Housing authorities should ensure staff have sufficient skills and training to conduct assessments of applicants who may find it difficult to disclose their circumstances, including people at risk of domestic abuse, violence or hate crime.

11.10 When assessing the housing needs of an applicant housing authorities will need to consider the individual members of the household, and all relevant needs. This should include an assessment of the size and type of accommodation required, any requirements to meet the needs of a person who is disabled or has specific medical needs, and the location of housing that is required. The applicant’s wishes and preferences should also be considered and recorded within the assessment; whether or not the housing authority believes there is a reasonable prospect of accommodation being available that will meet those wishes and preferences.

11.11 An assessment of the applicant’s and household member’s support needs should be holistic and comprehensive, and not limited to those needs which are most apparent or have been notified to the housing authority by a referral agency. Housing authorities will wish to adopt assessment tools that enable staff to tease out particular aspects of need, without appearing to take a ‘checklist’ approach using a list of possible needs. Some applicants may be reluctant to disclose their needs and will need sensitive encouragement to do so, with an assurance that the purpose of the assessment is to identify how the housing authority can best assist them to prevent or relieve homelessness.

11.12 Some applicants will identify care and support needs that cannot be met by the housing authority; or which require health or social care services to be provided alongside help to secure accommodation. Housing authorities should be mindful of duties under the Care Act 2014 including those relating to assessment and adult safeguarding; and the use of Care Act powers to meet urgent care and support needs where an assessment has not been completed.

Arrangements for carrying out assessments

11.13 Housing authorities should provide assessment services that are flexible to the needs of applicants. The Secretary of State considers an individual and interactive process will be required to fully and effectively assess circumstances and needs. Whilst advice and information services could be provided via an online process, housing authorities could not rely solely on such means to complete assessments into individual circumstances and needs for people who are homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

11.14 In most circumstances assessments will require at least one face to face interview. However, where that is not possible or does not meet the applicant’s needs, assessments could be completed on the telephone or internet or with the assistance of a partner agency. For example, an applicant who is in prison, hospital or in other circumstances where they cannot attend an interview, could have an assessment completed through a video link or with the help of a partner agency able to complete an assessment form, provide information and assist with communication where needed.

11.15 Some applicants may find it more convenient to complete an assessment through telephone or internet interviews, but there should be an opportunity for the assessment to be completed through a face to face meeting where the applicant’s needs indicate this is necessary, or if the applicant requests it.

11.16 Assessments should be specific to the applicant and the results of the assessment must be notified in writing to them.

Responding to referrals for assistance

11.17 Housing authorities will receive referrals of customers from other service providers, both statutory and non-statutory, including public authorities with a statutory duty to refer people who are homeless or threatened with homelessness. Some referring agencies will be better equipped than others to establish the threat of homelessness, or to conduct assessments of needs, and housing authorities will need to supplement the information provided within a referral with their own assessment and enquiries. For further guidance on duty to refer see Chapter 4.

Reasonable steps

11.18 Housing authorities should work alongside applicants to identify practical and reasonable steps for the housing authority and the applicant to take to help the applicant retain or secure suitable accommodation. These steps should be tailored to the household, and follow from the findings of the assessment, and must be provided to the applicant in writing as their personalised housing plan.

11.19 Housing authorities will wish to develop resources and tools that can be used regularly to address common issues, whilst also ensuring genuine personalisation in response to the wide range of circumstances and needs experienced by applicants. The Secretary of State expects this to result in significant variation in the staff time and other resources invested with each applicant in accordance with the nature and complexity of the issues they face.

11.20 Personalised housing plans should be realistic, taking account of local housing markets and the availability of relevant support services, as well as the applicant’s individual needs and wishes. For example, a plan which limited the search for accommodation to a small geographic area where the applicant would like to live would be unlikely to be reasonable if there was little prospect of finding housing there that they could afford. The plan might instead enable the applicant to review accommodation prices in their preferred areas as well as extending their home search to more affordable areas and property types. In their interactions with applicants, housing authorities are encouraged to provide sufficient information and advice to encourage informed and realistic choices to be identified and agreed for inclusion in the plan.

11.21 Through their assessments, housing authorities might identify support needs that cannot be easily met from existing service provision. Improvements in assessments and data capture will enable authorities to build up better information to assess needs and inform commissioning arrangements for the future. The Secretary of State recognises that ‘reasonable steps’ will vary between housing authority areas, and will be affected by housing markets and availability of services to support vulnerable people. However, every authority should engage in efforts to identify and measure needs and prioritise funding for the provision of services, as well as the development of partnerships, appropriately.

11.22 It would not be reasonable to agree steps for an applicant that were reliant on them engaging with a service provision that is not currently available in the district or which is unlikely to be offered to them. If the applicant is already receiving services from an agency that might contribute to preventing or relieving homelessness, the housing authority may wish to seek the applicant’s consent to involving them in developing and agreeing reasonable steps, and in delivering the personalised housing plan.

11.23 The Secretary of State expects the type of reasonable steps a housing authority might take to prevent or relieve homelessness to include but not be limited to the following, irrespective of whether the applicant may have a priority need or be homeless intentionally:

(a) attempting mediation/conciliation where an applicant is threatened with parent/family exclusion;
(b) assessing whether applicants with rent arrears might be entitled to Discretionary Housing Payment;
(c) providing support to applicants, whether financial or otherwise, to access private rented accommodation;
(d) assisting people at risk of violence and abuse wishing to stay safely in their home through provision of ‘sanctuary’ or other measures;
(e) helping to secure or securing an immediate safe place to stay for people who are sleeping rough or at high risk of sleeping rough.

Process and timing

11.24 Housing authorities are required to notify applicants of the assessments they have made, and also provide written personalised housing plans. In practice, these two notifications might be combined to provide a clearer response to applicants.

11.25 The duty to issue written notifications should not prevent a housing authority from taking immediate action to assist an applicant where necessary. An officer may, for example, contact a young applicant’s parents or carers, perhaps through a same day home visit, if they have been asked to leave, or make immediate contact with a landlord where there is an imminent threat of eviction. In these cases prevention work would begin in parallel with the assessment and planning process, having regard to initial assessment findings and with the agreement of the applicant.

11.26 Where initial prevention or relief work is undertaken in parallel with the assessment and planning process it follows that in some cases successful prevention or relief will have been largely achieved before the assessment and personalised housing plan have been completed and the applicant has been informed in writing. Where this is the case, the record of actions taken might be included in the section 189A assessment, whilst any further steps needed to sustain the accommodation arrangements are included in the personalised housing plan.

11.27 Wherever possible and appropriate, housing authorities should prioritise efforts to prevent homelessness so that households can remain in their accommodation or, helped to secure a new home rather than becoming homeless. This might include, for example, achieving agreement for a young family to remain in the parental home pending an offer of Part 6 accommodation; or agreeing steps through which the housing authority and applicant might resolve outstanding benefit difficulties to clear or reduce rent arrears.

11.28 Housing authorities must take reasonable steps to prevent homelessness whether or not the applicant has a local connection with their area. If the applicant is actually homeless the authority may refer them to another authority where they have a local connection, and must provide copies of the assessment, and any revisions to it that have been notified to the applicant, as part of the referral arrangement. If the housing authority has agreed a personalised housing plan with the applicant they should also forward the plan to the notified authority if it has relevance, and with the applicant’s consent. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

Reaching agreement and reviewing the plan (section 189A(4) to (11))

11.29 Housing authorities should make every effort to secure the agreement of applicants to their personalised housing plans. Identifying and attempting to address personal wishes and preferences will help achieve that agreement, and improve the likelihood that the plan will be successful in preventing or relieving homelessness.

11.30 If the housing authority is unable to reach an agreement with the applicant about the reasonable steps to be included in their personalised housing plan, they must record why they could not agree; and provide the written plan to the applicant indicating what steps they consider it reasonable for the applicant and the housing authority to take.

11.31 The personalised housing plan may include steps that the housing authority considers advisable for the applicant to take (‘recommended steps’), but which the applicant is not required to take if they choose not to do so (section 189A(7)), as well as steps which they are required to take (‘mandatory steps’). The relevant duty (prevention or relief) cannot be ended for failure to co-operate with recommended steps. The use of recommended steps might enable the authority to provide or refer the applicant to a broader range of advice and support, for example to address wider needs or to help increase their housing options in the future through employment support. Mandatory steps should be limited to those which the housing authority considers are required in order to prevent or relieve homelessness. The plan must set out clearly which steps are mandatory and which are recommended.

11.32 Assessments and personalised housing plans must be kept under review throughout the prevention and relief stages, and any amendments notified to the applicant. Housing authorities will wish to establish timescales for reviewing plans, and these are likely to vary according to individual needs and circumstances. Some applicants will need more intensive housing authority involvement to achieve a successful outcome than others, and the timescales for regular contact and reviews should reflect this. Personalised housing plans agreed during the prevention stage will need to be reviewed if an applicant subsequently becomes homelessness, enabling housing authorities and applicants to focus on steps required to help secure accommodation.

11.33 If the housing authority become aware that the information the applicant has provided for their assessment is inaccurate or if there is new information or a relevant change in the applicant’s circumstances and needs there will be a need to initiate a review of the assessment and plan. The housing authority should also arrange a review if they believe the applicant is not cooperating with the personalised housing plan for whatever reason.

11.34 If the housing authority considers that their assessment of the applicant’s circumstances and needs have changed, or that the agreement reached as to reasonable steps is no longer appropriate they must notify the applicant in writing. The housing authority must notify the applicant if it considers any of the agreed steps are no longer appropriate, and there will be no consequence of failure to take any of the ‘removed’ steps after written notification is given.

11.35 For practical purposes a review of the plan might be conducted by telephone, email or video-link, especially if the applicant is unable to or declining to attend office based appointments.

11.36 Applicants have a right under section 202 to request a review of the steps the housing authority is to take under sections 189B(2) and 195(2) which includes having regard to their personalised housing plan within the prevention and relief stages. Housing authorities should encourage applicants to raise any concerns they have about their plan and work to resolve disagreements to minimise the occasions on which the applicant will feel the need to request a review.
CHAPTER 12: DUTY IN CASES OF THREATENED HOMELESSNESS (THE PREVENTION DUTY)

12.1 Section 195 of the 1996 Act – the ‘prevention duty’ - places a duty on housing authorities to work with people who are threatened with homelessness within 56 days to help prevent them from becoming homeless. This chapter provides guidance on how to fulfil the prevention duty and the ways in which it can be ended.

12.2 Housing authorities may become aware of residents who are threatened with becoming homeless but not within 56 days, and possibly not within any specified time period; and are encouraged to offer assistance where possible rather than delay providing support which may be effective in preventing homelessness.

12.3 The section 195 duty applies when the housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is both threatened with homelessness and eligible for assistance. For further guidance on eligibility see Chapter 7 and for further guidance on threatened with homelessness see Chapter 6. The housing authority is obliged to take reasonable steps to help the applicant either remains in their existing accommodation or secure alternative accommodation. For further guidance on reasonable steps see Chapter 11.

12.4 The first option to be explored with the applicant should be enabling them to remain in their current home, where suitable. Where this is not possible, the focus should be on helping to secure alternative accommodation that the applicant can move into in a planned way. This will often involve taking steps to extend an applicant’s stay in their existing accommodation until they can move.

12.5 The housing authority cannot refer an applicant to another district during the prevention duty, even if the conditions for referral that would apply during the relief and main housing duties are met. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10. This means the housing authority is obliged to take reasonable steps to help the applicant retain their existing accommodation or secure alternative accommodation wherever that may be. If the applicant is living at distance from the housing authority to which they have applied, one reasonable step to be agreed with the applicant might be for the receiving authority to make contact with the housing authority where the applicant is living to request their assistance in efforts to prevent homelessness.

12.6 Housing authorities may find it helpful to establish protocols for collaboration with relevant neighbouring authorities to improve outcomes and efficiency in localities where applicants frequently seek help in a different district to the one where they live.

12.7 The reasonable steps taken by both the authority and the applicant to help prevent homelessness should be those set out in the personalised housing plan drawn up and reviewed as set out in section 189A of the 1996 Act. For further guidance on personalised housing plans see Chapter 11. The housing authority will need to have arrangements in place for accessible and timely communication with applicants to maximise the effectiveness of their joint efforts to prevent homelessness.

12.8 Housing authorities must take into account the needs and circumstances of the applicant as they work to fulfil the prevention duty, recognising that there are a range of factors that will affect an applicants’ ability to take action to help prevent their homelessness. For some more vulnerable applicants, the factors that have contributed to their being threatened with homelessness may also affect their ability to work with the housing authority to resolve that threat. The housing authority will want to seek to understand these factors and tailor the support it provides, both directly and through engaging relevant specialist services, accordingly.

12.9 Where homelessness is prevented, but an applicant’s needs may put them at risk of a further threat of homelessness, the housing authority will want to work with relevant support and specialist services to help promote sustainability.

12.10 Where an applicant has to leave their accommodation without any reasonable prospect of an imminent return, or if it otherwise ceases to be reasonable for them to occupy before a suitable alternative is available, further duties should be considered under section 189B (the relief duty).

CHAPTER 13: RELIEF DUTY

13.1 Section 189B of the 1996 Act – the ‘relief duty’ - requires housing authorities to help people who are homeless to secure accommodation. This chapter of the code provides guidance on how to fulfil the relief duty.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

13.2 The duty applies when the housing authority is satisfied that the applicant is both homeless and eligible for assistance. The housing authority is obliged to take reasonable steps to help the applicant secure suitable accommodation with a reasonable prospect that it will be available for their occupation for at least 6 months.

13.3 Where the housing authority have reason to believe that an applicant may be homeless, eligible and have a priority need they must provide interim accommodation under section 188(1) whilst fulfilling the relief duty. For further guidance on interim duties to accommodate see Chapter 15.

13.4 If the housing authority would be subject to the relief duty but consider that the conditions are met for referral to another housing authority in England (not Scotland or Wales) they have the discretion to notify that housing authority of their opinion (section 198(A1)). For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

13.5 The reasonable steps to be taken by both the housing authority and the applicant to help secure accommodation must include those set out in the personalised housing plan drawn up and reviewed as set out in section 189A. For further guidance on assessments and personalised housing plans see Chapter 11. The housing authority will need to have arrangements in place for accessible and timely communication with applicants to maximise the effectiveness of their joint efforts.

13.6 Housing authorities must take into account their assessment of the applicant’s case under section 189A (which includes consideration of an applicant’s housing needs, circumstances leading to homelessness, and support required) as they work to fulfil the relief duty, recognising that there are a range of factors that will affect an applicant’s ability to take action to secure accommodation. For some applicants, the circumstances, needs or issues that have contributed to them being homeless may also affect their ability to work with the housing authority. The housing authority’s duty to have regard to the applicant’s section 189A assessment will assist the authority with understanding the applicant’s particular situation and tailoring the support it provides under the relief duty, both directly and through engaging relevant specialist services, accordingly.

13.7 Housing authorities will want to ensure that people who are sleeping rough and eligible for assistance are supported to apply to them for housing assistance, and should seek to prevent applicants from starting to sleep rough during the course of the relief duty. For further guidance on joint working to address rough sleeping see the homelessness strategy see Chapter 2 and for further guidance on personalised plans see Chapter 11. Specific considerations in relation to applicants who are (or are at imminent risk of) sleeping rough and are or may be owed the relief duty include:

(a) working with other agencies and/or commissioned services to ensure rough sleepers are aware of, and have support to seek, housing assistance from the authority and in the provision of appropriate accommodation and/or support;

(b) if the authority does not have reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need and has not therefore provided interim accommodation under section 188(1), the use of discretionary powers to secure emergency accommodation to prevent nights on the streets, taking into account the risk of harm applicants may face. For further guidance on discretionary powers to secure emergency accommodation see Chapter 15;

(c) if using discretion to enquire into whether an applicant has a local connection, remembering that normal residence does not require a settled address and may include periods sleeping rough. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

13.8 Where homelessness is relieved, but an applicant’s needs, as set out in the personalised housing plan, may put them at risk of a further threat of homelessness, the housing authority should work with relevant support and specialist services to help promote sustainability.

13.9 Housing authorities may conduct and complete their inquiries into the duties that will be owed to an applicant under section 193(2), the main housing duty during the period in which they are attempting to relieve homelessness under the section 189B duty. However, this activity must not detract from the housing authority’s work to relieve the applicant’s homelessness. Where the housing authority considers an applicant is unlikely to be owed a section 193(2) main housing duty they must not limit or reduce the assistance they provide during the relief duty for this reason.

13.10 Housing authorities are advised against issuing a section 184 notification accepting the section 193 (main housing duty) during the relief stage. The section 193 duty cannot commence until the relief duty has come to an end and issuing notification during the relief stage might detract from activities to relieve their homelessness.

13.11 Housing authorities may issue a section 184 decision to the applicant, that when the relief duty ends they will owe them a duty under section 190 because they have a priority need but are intentionally homeless. Although the section 190 duty cannot commence until the relief duty has come to an end, the authority may wish to alert an applicant that the main housing duty will not be owed. It may be beneficial to review the personalised housing plan at this point to help maximise joint efforts to relieve homelessness.

13.12 If the authority has provided interim accommodation under section 188 and subsequently finds that the applicant does not have a priority need during the relief duty stage, a section 184 notification that neither the main housing duty nor the section 190 duty will be owed once the relief duty ends will bring the section 188 duty to an end (section 188(1ZA)(b)). The relief duty will continue to be owed until it ends in one of the circumstances in subsections (7) or (9) of section 189B. For further guidance on interim duties to accommodate see Chapter 15, and for guidance on ending the prevention and relief duty see Chapter 14.

CHAPTER 14: ENDING THE PREVENTION AND RELIEF DUTIES

14.1 This chapter provides guidance on how the (section 195) prevention and (section 189B) relief duties come to an end.

14.2 There are seven circumstances under which both the prevention and relief duties can be brought to an end. In addition to these common circumstances the prevention duty will end where the applicant has become homeless, and the relief duty will end when 56 days has passed and the housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need and is homeless unintentionally, or on refusal of a final accommodation offer or Part 6 offer.

14.3 The housing authority must give the applicant notice in order to end the duties except under section 189B (4) where 56 days have passed since the start of the relief duty and the housing authority is satisfied the applicant has a priority need and is homeless unintentionally, or on refusal of a final accommodation offer or Part 6 offer. For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19. Guidance on bringing the duties to an end under each circumstance is set out below.

14.4 Chapter 15 provides guidance on the ending of interim accommodation duties following the end of relief duties.

Circumstances in which both prevention and relief duties may end

A - the housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has suitable accommodation available for occupation and a reasonable prospect of suitable accommodation being available for at least six months from the date of the notice. Note that the Secretary of State has a power to increase this minimum period up to a maximum of 12 months (sections 195 (8) (a) and 189B (7) (a)).

14.5 Housing authorities must allow applicants a reasonable period for considering offers of accommodation that will bring the prevention and relief duties to an end. There is no set reasonable period – housing authorities must take into account the applicant’s circumstances in each case.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

14.6 Applicants should be given the opportunity to view accommodation before being required to decide whether to accept or refuse an offer, and before being required to sign any written agreement relating to the accommodation (for example, a tenancy agreement). If the accommodation is in another area and it is not practical to travel to view, sufficient information about the property and the locality should be made available to them. This may, for example, include photographs and the opportunity to ask questions of the landlord or agent.

14.7 Where new tenancies are secured housing authorities are encouraged to adopt policies favouring longer tenancies than the legal minimum where market conditions in their area allow. It is recommended that, wherever possible, minimum tenancy lengths of 12 months are secured to provide more stability to individuals and particularly to families with children.

14.8 In some circumstances, determining reasonable prospect will be less clear cut. For example, a landlord may agree to allow the applicant to stay in their accommodation having previously issued a section 21 notice. Ideally in this case they would issue a new tenancy, but they may instead choose to leave the existing tenancy running, with the section 21 notice in place until it expires.

14.9 Where this is the case it is the responsibility of the housing authority to satisfy itself that there is a reasonable prospect of the accommodation being available for at least six months. This may, for example, involve securing written confirmation from the landlord that the applicant can remain in the accommodation on condition that they comply with documented conditions, and the housing authority having a reasonable expectation that the applicant is in a position to comply.

14.10 Where an applicant has remained at or returned home or gone to stay with friends or extended family, for example, through the use of mediation or negotiation, it is the responsibility of the housing authority to satisfy itself that accommodation will be available for at least six months. There may, for example, be an open ended agreement (perhaps with reasonable conditions), or an agreement that the applicant can stay until they have secured alternative accommodation (whether that happens before or after six months).

14.11 There may be other circumstances where there is a reasonable prospect of suitable accommodation being available for at least six months, but this not necessarily being the same accommodation throughout. For example, an applicant with support needs may be placed in short term supported accommodation which forms part of a planned accommodation and support pathway overseen by the housing authority. This may meet the conditions for ending the duty under this subsection if there is a clear, documented expectation that the applicant will be supported to make a planned move directly to more settled supported or independent accommodation through the pathway service.

14.12 The housing authority should take into account the support needs and vulnerabilities of an applicant, which will have been identified during assessment, in determining whether they can reasonably expect the applicant to sustain the accommodation for at least 6 months.

B - the housing authority has complied with the prevention or relief duty and 56 days have passed (regardless of whether the applicant is still threatened with homelessness in the case of the prevention duty or whether they have secured accommodation in the case of the relief duty) (sections 195 (8)(b) and 189B (7)(b)).

14.13 Under the prevention duty (section 195(6)), the 56 day period does not apply where the applicant has been given a valid section 21 notice that will expire within 56 days or has expired and is in respect of the only accommodation that is available for the applicant’s accommodation. This is to ensure continuity of prevention services where an applicant remains in the property after the expiry of their section 21 notice or longer than 56 days from the duty starting and also remains threatened with homelessness.

14.14 Where a housing authority is satisfied that, despite the section 21 notice, the landlord has agreed not to pursue possession and there is a reasonable prospect of the accommodation being available for at least 6 months the prevention duty may be ended (section 195(8)(a)) (see paragraphs 14.7 and 14.8 above).

14.15 The housing authority can continue to deliver the prevention or relief duty with any applicant for longer than 56 days and issue a notice to end it under this subsection at any point after this date; as long as no other duties take precedence (for example, the relief duty takes precedence where an applicant previously owed the prevention duty becomes homeless).

14.16 Where the housing authority is satisfied that the applicant has a priority need and has become homeless unintentionally, the relief duty comes to an end after 56 days (section 189B (4)). Housing authorities should not delay completing their inquiries as to what further duties will be owed after the relief duty. Where the housing authority has the information it requires to make a decision as to whether the applicant is in priority need and became homeless unintentionally, it should be possible to notify the applicant on or around day 57. In cases where significant further investigations are required it is recommended that housing authorities aim to complete their inquiries and notify the applicant of their decision within a maximum of 15 working days after 56 days have passed.

14.17 Housing authorities should not have a blanket policy of ending the prevention and relief duties after 56 days where they have the discretion to continue it; instead they should in each case take the applicant’s circumstances into account.

14.18 Where the applicant remains at risk of homelessness and the housing authority considers there is still the chance that homelessness can be prevented, it will be in the interests of both the applicant and the housing authority for work to continue to help the applicant avoid homelessness, whereupon they may make a new application to the housing authority for help under the relief duty.

14.19 During the relief stage, where an applicant does not have a priority need or they have a priority need and have become homeless intentionally, the authority may want to consider continuing the relief duty for longer. Considerations may include the needs of the applicant; the risk of the applicant sleeping rough; the prospects of securing accommodation within a reasonable period; the resources available to the housing authority, and any wider implications of bringing the duty to an end (for example, in the case of an applicant who has dependent children and who became homeless intentionally where Children Act duties may apply if accommodation could not be secured).

C - an applicant who was owed the prevention duty has become homeless (section 195(8)(c)).

14.20 Where an applicant in these circumstances is owed the relief duty the housing authority will want to provide a seamless transition between the prevention and relief duties, including notifying the applicant of any further duties owed to them at the same time as issuing the notice advising that the prevention duty has ended. These notifications may be combined.

14.21 Where interim accommodation is to be provided, this should be arranged as a priority. Authorities should take the opportunity to plan interim accommodation in advance whenever it is possible to do so, in order to minimise distress and disruption for the applicant and provide maximum opportunity for planning for, for example, children’s journeys to school.

14.22 The housing authority and the applicant will then need to review the assessment and personalised plan undertaken under section 189A, devising new reasonable steps to help secure that accommodation becomes available for the applicant under the relief duty. For further guidance on assessments and personalised housing plans see Chapter 11.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

D - the applicant has refused an offer of suitable accommodation and, on the date of refusal, there was a reasonable prospect that suitable accommodation would be available for the minimum prescribed period (sections 195(8)(d) and 189B(7)(c)).

14.23 There is an important distinction between the consequences of refusal of an offer of suitable accommodation at the prevention and relief stages.

14.24 During the prevention stage the housing authority can bring the prevention duty to an end but refusal does not affect any further duties that may be owed to the applicant if they become homeless.

14.25 During the relief stage the housing authority can bring the relief duty to an end through a suitable offer of accommodation (section 189B (7)(c)) and there will be no consequences affecting any main housing duty owed to the applicant if they refuse it.

14.26 However, the housing authority can also bring the relief duty to an end through a final accommodation offer (section 189B (9) (a)) or a final Part 6 offer. Refusal of either of these types of offer will preclude the applicant from subsequently being owed the main housing duty owed to the applicant if they refuse it.

14.27 It will be up to the housing authority to decide whether or not to end the prevention or relief duty when a suitable offer, other than a final offer or Part 6 offer, is refused. In reaching their decision a housing authority should consider the applicant's circumstances, the reason for their refusal, the reasonable steps they are taking to secure accommodation that better suits their needs and preferences and, in the case of the prevention duty, the likelihood of the applicant subsequently becoming homeless and applying for help under the relief duty.

14.28 For many applicants, working with the housing authority to prevent or relieve their homelessness will provide an opportunity to explore what realistic options are available to them and consider what compromises they may wish to make in order to achieve the best option for them. The opportunity to consider more than one property can play an important part in this process.

E - the applicant has become homeless intentionally from any accommodation that has been made available to them as a result of reasonable steps taken by the housing authority during the prevention or relief duty, whichever is relevant (sections 195(8)(e) and 189B(7)(d)).

14.29 Where the prevention duty ends under this circumstance, the applicant's entitlement to the relief duty will not be affected as the relief duty applies irrespective of whether or not an applicant is considered to be intentionally homeless.

14.30 Where the applicant has a priority need and the relief duty has ended under this circumstance, the main housing duty will not apply. An applicant should only be considered intentionally homeless under this provision if they have ceased to occupy accommodation which it would have been reasonable for them to continue to occupy, and which has been provided to them within the 'reasonable steps' provisions of the Act (sections 195(2) and 189B(2)). In most cases where such accommodation has been secured the housing authority will already have notified the applicant that the prevention or relief duty has come to an end, and so there will be very limited circumstances in which the duty is brought to an end through the provision of section 195(8)(e) and 189B(7)(d). However, the provisions could apply for example, if an applicant had suitable accommodation secured as part of the housing authorities reasonable steps, and had surrendered without good reason or been excluded from that accommodation due to their actions, before the housing authority had served notice that the duty had been brought to an end under Section 195 8a or Section 189B a (suitable accommodation has been secured).

14.31 Under section 190, duties to persons becoming homeless intentionally, the housing authority will need to ensure that accommodation is available for the applicant’s occupation for long enough to give them a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation and provide advice and assistance in any attempts the applicant makes to secure accommodation. This advice must have regard to the assessment the housing authority made under section 189A, assessment and personalised plans. For further guidance on intentional homelessness see Chapter 9.

F - the applicant is no longer eligible for assistance (sections 195(8)(f) and 189B(7)(e)).

14.32 In circumstances where an applicant is found not to be eligible for assistance, the housing authority must provide, or secure the provision, of information and advice as set out in section 179. For further guidance on eligibility see Chapter 7. If (section 188) interim accommodation has been provided, notice periods should take account of the needs of the applicant and the time required for them to access assistance. For households including children or particularly vulnerable adults who are owed duties under the Children Act 1989 or Care Act 2014, local authorities should consider having arrangements in place to manage a transition in responsibilities, so that there is no break in the provision of accommodation for applicants who cease to be eligible for 1996 Act support.

G - the applicant has withdrawn their application for homelessness assistance (sections 195(8)(g) and 189B(7)(f)).

14.33 Some applicants will cease contact with the authority rather than explicitly withdraw their application. It is recommended that local authorities have procedures in place to attempt to maintain or regain contact with applicants who have ceased contact prior to deciding to end the prevention or relief duty under this subsection. These efforts should take into account the circumstances and needs of the applicant, and use varied communication channels to help prevent, for example, losing contact with someone because they have lost their mobile phone. For further guidance on losing contact with applicants see Chapter 18.

14.34 It is recommended that where the housing authority considers that the applicant has withdrawn their application because they have failed to maintain contact, the duty is ended under this subsection rather than because 56 days has passed. This will help to ensure accurate data relating to the reasons why duties end.

H - deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate (sections 195(10) and 189B(9)(b)).

14.35 The prevention and relief duties can also be brought to an end as a result of the applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate. For further guidance on non-cooperation see Chapter 14. Where the prevention duty is brought to an end due to deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate, the applicant’s entitlements under any other section of Part 7, including the relief and main housing duties, are not affected.

14.36 Where the relief duty is brought to an end as a result of the applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate the main housing duty will not apply. However, under section 193C(4) the housing authority will, be required to secure that accommodation is available for an applicant who has priority need and is unintentionally homeless, until such time as they make a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer of suitable accommodation, or the duty comes to an end for another of the reasons set out in section 193C(5).

Notification to end the prevention duty

14.37 Section 195(8) provides the circumstances in which the housing authority can give notice under section 195(5) to the applicant to bring the prevention duty to an end. For further guidance on the prevention duty see Chapter 12.

14.38 The notice must specify which of the circumstances in section 195(8) apply and inform the applicant that they have a right to request a review of the housing authority’s decision to bring the duty to an end, and of the time frame within which such a request must be made.

14.39 Section 195(6) prevents a housing authority from bringing the prevention duty to an end after 56 days if the applicant has been given a valid section 21 notice which will expire in 56 days or has expired, and is in respect of their only available accommodation. This means that the housing authority will continue to owe a prevention duty beyond the initial 56 days, until the applicant is served with a section 195(5) notice on the basis that another of the circumstance set out in section 195(8) applies.

Notification to end the relief duty (section 189B(7))

14.40 Section 189B(7) provides the circumstances in which the housing authority can give notice under section 189B(5) to the applicant bringing the relief duty under section 189B(2) to an end. For further guidance on the relief duty see Chapter 13.

14.41 The notice must specify which of the circumstances in section 189B(7) apply and inform the applicant that they have right to request a review of the authority’s decision to bring the relief duty under section 189B(2) to an end, and of the time frame within which such a request must be made.

14.42 Housing authorities may refer an applicant’s case to another housing authority in England during the relief duty if the applicant does not have a local connection with the authority to which they have applied, and does have a local connection to another district where they would not be at risk of violence. For guidance on local connection referrals see Chapter 10.

Deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate (sections 193B and 193C)

14.43 Both the prevention and relief duties can be brought to an end under section 193B and section 193C if an applicant deliberately and unreasonably refuses to take any of the steps that they agreed to take, or the housing authority set out for them to take where agreement could not be reached, in their personalised housing plan (subsections (4) and (6)(b) of section 189A).

14.44 Before bringing either duty to an end by issuing a section 193B(2) notice, the housing authority must first issue a warning letting the applicant know that if they deliberately and unreasonably refuse to take any of the steps in their personalised housing plan after receiving the warning the authority intends to issue a notice bringing the prevention or relief duty, whichever is relevant, to an end. The warning must explain the consequences of a notice being given and the housing authority must allow a reasonable period after the warning is given before issuing a notice (section 193B(4) and (5)). There is no set reasonable period, but housing authorities should ensure sufficient time is given to allow the applicant to rectify the non-co-operation and prevent a notice being issued to end the prevention or relief duty. This will vary according to the particular needs and circumstances of the applicant.

14.45 Notices issued under section 193B(2) must explain why the housing authority are giving notice and its effect, and inform the applicant of their right to request a review of the decision to issue the notice (section 202(1)) and that a request for a review must be made within 21 days of being notified of that decision, or such longer period as the housing authority may allow in writing (section 202(3)).

14.46 Regulations relating to the procedure to be followed by housing authorities in connection with notices under section 193B (section 193B(7)) are set out in The Homelessness (Review Procedure etc.) Regulations 2018 – these relate to decisions to issue a notice.

14.47 The ending of the prevention duty under sections 193B and 193C will not affect the housing authority’s assessment of what duties are owed if the applicant subsequently seeks help having become homeless.

14.48 For applicants who are eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and have a priority need, the ending of the relief duty under sections 193B and 193C will mean that section 193 (the main housing duty) will not apply. However, the housing authority must secure that accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant by making a final accommodation offer or final Part 6 offer (sections 193C(4) to (10). For further guidance on accommodation duties and powers see Chapter 15.
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

Meaning of deliberate and unreasonable refusal

14.49 Section 193B(6) provides that the housing authority must have regard to the particular circumstances and needs of the applicant, whether or not identified in the assessment under section 189A, in deciding whether refusal by the applicant is unreasonable.

14.50 Housing authorities should make reasonable efforts to obtain the co-operation of the applicant, including seeking to understand the reasons for their lack of co-operation, before invoking and during the use of section 193B. Where an applicant appears not to be co-operating the housing authority should review their assessment of the applicant's case and the appropriateness of the steps in the personalised housing plan (section 189A(9)) and explain the consequences of not co-operating before issuing a warning under section 193B(4). For further guidance on personalised housing plans see Chapter 11.

14.51 Where the applicant is receiving support from other services, for example the leaving care team, an offender management service, or a family support service, the housing authority should alert relevant service(s) to the problem as soon as possible and seek to involve them in supporting the applicant to resolve the situation. Having local information sharing arrangements in place will facilitate this.

14.52 The housing authority should take into account any particular difficulties that the applicant may have in managing communications when considering if failure to cooperate is deliberate and unreasonable, particularly if they are street homeless or moving between temporary places to stay such as the homes of different family and friends.

14.53 The housing authority should be satisfied of the following before ending the prevention or relief duty under sections 193B and 193C:

(a) the steps recorded in the applicant's personalised housing plan are reasonable in the context of the applicant's particular circumstances and needs;
(b) the applicant understands what is required of them in order to fulfil the reasonable steps, and is therefore in a position to make a deliberate refusal;
(c) the applicant is not refusing to co-operate as a result of a mental illness or other health need, for which they are not being provided with support, or because of a difficulty in communicating;
(d) the applicant's refusal to co-operate with any step was deliberate and unreasonable in the context of their particular circumstances and needs. For example, if they prioritised attending a Jobcentre or medical appointment, or fulfilling a caring responsibility, above viewing a property, this is unlikely to constitute a deliberate and unreasonable refusal to cooperate. However, if the applicant persistently failed to attend property viewings or appointments without good reason; or they actively refused to engage with activity required to help them secure accommodation, then this might be considered deliberate and unreasonable refusal to cooperate.

Please see chapters 21–24 for client group specific considerations sections.

Notices in cases of an applicant's deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate (section 193B(2))

14.54 Under section 193B(2), the housing authority may give a notice to an applicant if they consider that the applicant has deliberately and unreasonably refused to take one or more of the steps in their personalised housing plan.

14.55 Before serving this notice, the housing authority must have given a relevant warning to the applicant and a reasonable period of time has elapsed since the warning. The relevant warning must be a written notice to warn the applicant that if they deliberately and unreasonably refuse to take any step in their personalised housing plan the housing authority will issue a notice under section 193B(2), and explain the consequences of a section 193B(2) notice being served.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

14.56 A housing authority must develop a procedure to be followed when issuing notices bringing their prevention or relief duties to an end under section 193B(2)). The procedure must:

(a) be in writing;
(b) be kept under review; and,
(c) make provision for the decision to give a notice under section 193B(2) to be made by an officer of that housing authority and authorised by an appropriate person.

14.57 The original decision to issue the notice must be made by an officer of the housing authority and then receive authorisation by an appropriate person. An 'appropriate person' is someone of at least an equivalent seniority to the officer who made the original decision to issue a notice, and they must:

(a) work for the housing authority or local authority; and,
(b) not have been involved in the original decision to issue the notice.

14.58 The housing authority’s procedures may provide that second sign off of the decision to issue a notice can be given by an appropriate person from another service within the local authority (or upper tier local authority). For example, in the case of a care leaver, second sign off by an officer of at least an equivalent seniority within Children’s Services may be appropriate.

14.59 The appropriate person conducting the second sign off should give particular consideration as to whether the original decision to issue the notice had due regard to the circumstances and needs of the applicant, whether or not these were properly identified in the authority’s assessment of the applicant’s case under section 189A.

CHAPTER 15: ACCOMMODATION DUTIES AND POWERS

15.1 This chapter provides guidance on the housing authority’s duties to secure accommodation for applicants, how they arise and are brought to an end; and the powers within the 1996 Act to secure accommodation for homeless households.

15.2 The chapter includes:

(a) duties to provide interim accommodation;
(b) powers to provide accommodation pending review or appeal;
(c) duties to prevent and relieve homelessness, including a power to provide accommodation;
(d) the section 193C(4) duty to secure accommodation for applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have priority need and are not intentionally homeless but have deliberately and unreasonably refused to cooperate;
(e) the section 193(2) duty to secure accommodation for applicants who are homeless, eligible for assistance, have priority need and are not intentionally homeless (the main housing duty).

Duties to provide interim accommodation

15.3 The 1996 Act provides four circumstances in which a housing authority must secure accommodation on an interim basis until a decision or other event occurs. These are set out below.

Section 188 interim duty to accommodate 15.4 Section 188(1) requires housing authorities to secure that accommodation is available for an applicant (and their household) if they have reason to believe that the applicant may:

Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(a) be homeless;
(b) be eligible for assistance; and,
(c) have a priority need.

15.5 The threshold for triggering the section 188(1) duty is low as the housing authority only has to have a reason to believe (rather than being satisfied) that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance and have a priority need.

15.6 The section 188(1) interim accommodation duty applies even where the housing authority considers the applicant may not have a local connection with their district and may have one with the district of another housing authority giving rise to the possibility of referral (section188(2)). For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

Ending the section 188 interim duty

15.7 The section 188(1) interim duty comes to an end when applicants are notified of certain decisions in relation to their application.

15.8 Following inquiries, where the housing authority concludes that an applicant does not have a priority need, the section 188(1) duty ends when either:

(a) the housing authority notifies the applicant of the decision that they do not owe a section 189B(2) relief duty; or,
(b) the housing authority notifies them of a decision that, once the section 189B(2) relief duty comes to an end, they do not owe a duty under section 190 (duties to persons becoming homeless intentionally) or section 193(2) (the main housing duty owed to applicants with priority need who are not homeless intentionally).

15.9 So, an applicant who the housing authority has found to be not in priority need within the 56 day ‘relief stage’ will no longer be owed a section 188(1) interim duty to accommodate, but will continue to be owed a section 189B(2) relief duty until that duty ends or is found not to be owed.

15.10 For any other case (including for applicants who have a priority need, and for applicants who the housing authority have reason to believe will be owed a duty because they have reapplied within two years of accepting a private rented sector offer) (for further guidance on reapplication after a private rented sector offer see Chapter 18), the section 188(1) interim duty will end at whichever is the later of:

(a) the housing authority notifies them of what duty (if any) they are owed under Part 7 of the 1996 Act once the section 189B(2) relief duty comes to an end;
(b) the housing authority notifies them that they are not owed the section 189B(2) relief duty, or that this duty has come to an end;
(c) the housing authority notifies them of a decision following their request for a review as to the suitability of a final accommodation offer or Part 6 offer made within the section 189B relief stage.

15.11 In summary, a housing authority may bring the section 188(1) interim accommodation duty to an end within the 56 day period (the relief stage) by issuing a section 184 decision that the applicant does not have priority need; or by issuing a notification that the relief duty is not owed or has been brought to an end. If neither of these notifications is issued within the 56 day period, the section 188(1) interim accommodation duty will be brought to an end by notification of what further duties are owed, if any, under section 193 or section 190. However, in the event that the relief duty is brought to an end following refusal of a final accommodation or Part 6 offer, and the applicant requests a review as to the suitability of the accommodation offered, the section 188(1) duty will continue until a decision on the review has been notified to the applicant.

15.12 In circumstances where an applicant is found not to be eligible for assistance, the housing authority must provide, or secure the provision of, information and advice as set out in section 179. If (section 188) interim accommodation has been provided, notice periods should take account of the needs of the applicant and the time required for them to access assistance. For households including children or particularly vulnerable adults who are owed duties under the Children Act 1989 or Care Act 2014, local authorities should consider having arrangements in place to manage a transition in responsibilities, so that there is no break in the provision of accommodation for applicants who cease to be eligible for support under the 1996 Act.

Section 190(2): duty to provide accommodation to applicants who are intentionally homeless

On reaching a decision that an applicant has priority need and is intentionally homeless, the housing authority must secure accommodation for a period of time that will provide a reasonable opportunity for them to find their own accommodation.

In determining the period of time for which accommodation will be secured under section 190(2) housing authorities must consider each case on its merits. A few weeks may provide the applicant with a reasonable opportunity to secure accommodation for themselves. However, some applicants might require longer and others, particularly where the housing authority provides pro-active and effective assistance, might require less time.

Housing authorities will need to take into account:

(a) the particular needs and circumstances of the applicant and the resources available to them to secure accommodation. This might include any health or support needs that make it more difficult for the applicant to find and secure accommodation, as well as the support available from their family or social network;
(b) the housing circumstances in the local area, and the length of time it might reasonably take to secure accommodation. In assessing this the housing authority might reflect on the efforts previously made by both the housing authority and the applicant to relieve their homelessness, and why these had not proved successful;
(c) arrangements that have already been made by the applicant which are likely to be successful within a reasonable timescale. For example, if the applicant has secured accommodation that is not yet available to occupy or can demonstrate that accommodation will be so secured, the housing authority should consider providing section 190(2) accommodation until the applicant is able to take up the accommodation.

Section 199A(2) and section 200(1): duties to accommodate applicants with no local connection pending outcome of referral

If the housing authority has notified an applicant that it proposes to refer the case to another housing authority, the notifying authority has a duty under section 199A(2) (if referral is in the relief stage of an applicant who the authority has reason to believe may have a priority need) or section 200(1) (if referral is in the section 193 main housing duty stage of an applicant who has a priority need and is unintentionally homeless) to secure that accommodation is available for the applicant until they are notified of the decision whether the conditions for referral are met. At this point the duty under section 199A(2) or 200(1) will come to an end and a duty under section 189B or section 193(2) will be owed by either the notified housing authority or the notifying housing authority. For further guidance on referrals to another housing authority see Chapter 10.

Suitability of accommodation

Section 206(1) provides that all accommodation provided under Part 7 of the 1996 Act must be suitable for the applicant and their household, and the suitability requirements under section 210 apply. For further guidance on the suitability of accommodation see Chapter 17. Housing authorities may take into account the interim nature of a placement when assessing whether or not it is suitable; as accommodation may be suitable for a few days or weeks that would not be suitable for a longer term placement.

The applicant does not have the right to ask for a statutory review under section 202 of the housing authority’s decision as to the suitability of interim accommodation, but housing authorities are reminded that such decisions could be subject to judicial review.

Ending interim accommodation arrangements

15.19 When a housing authority is satisfied that they are under no further duty to secure interim accommodation or where this duty has ended, the housing authority will need to terminate the applicant’s right of occupation. In the first instance, a housing authority should look to the terms of the licence or tenancy under which interim accommodation has been provided to establish the length of the notice period required.

15.20 Interim accommodation is usually provided under licences excluded from the requirement to issue 4 weeks written notice provided by the Protection from Eviction Act 1977. The courts have applied this principle in cases where the accommodation provided was B&B accommodation in a hotel, and where it was a self-contained flat. Consequently, housing authorities are required only to provide an applicant with reasonable notice to vacate the accommodation, and do not need to apply for a possession order from the court. However, housing authorities are public bodies and so must act reasonably by giving the applicant at least some opportunity to find alternative accommodation before the interim accommodation is terminated. What is considered ‘reasonable notice’ would depend on the facts of the case, taking into account the circumstances of the applicant and allowing time for them to consider whether to request a review of the decision.

15.21 In cases involving applicants who have children under 18 where the housing authority have reason to believe that the applicant may be ineligible for assistance or may be homeless intentionally, the housing authority must, subject to the applicant’s consent, alert the children’s services authority to the case. A referral to the children’s services authority may also be made without the applicant’s consent where there are safeguarding concerns, in accordance with local procedures.

Refusal or loss of interim accommodation

15.22 Where an applicant rejects an offer of interim accommodation (or accepts and moves into the interim accommodation and then later rejects it), this will bring the housing authority’s interim accommodation duty to an end – unless it is reactivated by any change of circumstances. Note, however, that an applicant’s rejection of interim accommodation does not end other duties that the housing authority may owe under Part 7.

Discretionary powers to secure accommodation

15.23 Housing authorities have powers to secure accommodation for certain applicants who request a review of certain decisions on their case, and to certain applicants requesting accommodation pending determination of a county court appeal.

15.24 The fact that a housing authority has decided that an applicant is not eligible for housing assistance under Part 7 does not preclude it from exercising its powers to secure accommodation pending a review or appeal. However, housing authorities should note that section 54 of, and schedule 3 to, the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 prevent them from exercising their powers to accommodate an applicant pending a review or appeal to the county court, where the applicant is a person who falls within one of a number of classes of person specified in schedule 3 unless there would otherwise be a breach of the person’s rights under the European Court of Human Rights or rights under EU Treaties (see paragraph 7.22). For further guidance on eligibility see Chapter 7.

Powers to accommodate pending a review

15.25 Under section 202, applicants have the right to ask for a review of a housing authority’s decision on a number of issues relating to their case, and may also request that accommodation is secured for them pending a decision on the review. For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19. Housing authorities have powers to accommodate applicants pending a decision on reviews under section 188(3), section 199A(6) and section 200(5) of the 1996 Act.

15.26 In considering whether to secure accommodation pending review housing authorities will need to balance the objective of maintaining fairness between homeless persons in circumstances where they have decided that no duty is owed to them, against proper consideration of the possibility that the applicant might be right. Housing authorities should consider the following, along with any other relevant factors:

(a) the merits of the applicant’s case that the original decision was flawed and the extent to which it can properly be said that the decision was one which was either contrary to the apparent merits or was one which involved a very fine balance of judgment;
(b) whether any new material, information or argument has been put to them which could alter the original decision; and,
(c) the personal circumstances of the applicant and the consequences to them of a decision not to exercise the discretion to accommodate.

15.27 Where an applicant is refused accommodation pending a review, they may seek to challenge the decision through judicial review.

Power to accommodate pending an appeal to the county court

15.28 Where an applicant is dissatisfied with a housing authority’s section 202 review decision or are not notified of the review decision within the proper time limits, an applicant has the right to appeal to the county court on a point of law arising from the review decision or original homelessness decision. For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19. Under section 204(4), housing authorities have the power to accommodate certain applicants:

(a) during the period for making an appeal against their decision; and,
(b) if an appeal is brought, until it and any subsequent appeals are finally determined.

15.29 This power may be exercised where the housing authority was previously under a duty to secure accommodation for the applicant’s occupation under section 188, section 190, section 199A or section 200; and may be exercised whether or not the housing authority has exercised its powers to accommodate the applicant pending review.

15.30 In deciding whether to exercise this power, housing authorities will need to adopt the same approach, and consider the same factors, as for a decision whether to exercise their power to accommodate pending a review (see paragraph 15.26).

15.31 Under section 204A, applicants have a right to appeal to the county court against decisions on the use of the section 204(4) power to accommodate. This enables an appeal against decisions not to secure accommodation for them pending their main appeal, or to stop securing accommodation, or to secure accommodation for only a limited period before final determination of the main appeal by the county court).

15.32 In deciding a section 204A appeal, if the court quashes the decision of the housing authority, it may order the authority to accommodate the applicant, but only where it is satisfied that failure to do so would substantially prejudice the applicant’s ability to pursue the main appeal on the homelessness decision. For further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19.

Powers to secure accommodation to prevent or relieve homelessness

15.33 Housing authorities have duties to help prevent and relieve homelessness for eligible applicants who are threatened with becoming homeless within 56 days, or are homeless. The section 195(2) prevention duty requires authorities to take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that accommodation does not cease to be available to them, and the relief duty requires housing authorities to take reasonable steps to help the applicant to secure that suitable accommodation becomes available to them for at least 6 months. For further guidance on the prevention duty see Chapter 12 and for further guidance on the relief duty see Chapter 13.

15.34 Section 205(3) of the 1996 Act enables housing authorities to discharge the section 189B (2) relief and/or section 195(2) prevention duties by securing accommodation for an applicant, where it decides to do so. The power to secure accommodation to applicants to prevent or relieve homelessness, regardless of priority need status, provides more flexibility to pursue appropriate housing options for applicants.

15.35 Housing authorities might use the section 205(3) power to deliver accommodation services for groups that are at higher risk of homelessness, for example young people with low incomes. The power might also be used to provide additional help to those least able to secure accommodation directly from a private landlord, such as people with an offending history or people with a mental health problem. Housing authorities will wish to consider local priorities, needs and resources when considering how the power might best be utilised in their district.

Section 193C(4): duty to accommodate applicants who have deliberately and unreasonably refused to co-operate pending final offer 15.36 Applicants who have priority need but are no longer owed a section 189B relief duty following service of a section 193B notice due to their deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate will not be owed the section 193 main housing duty but will be owed an accommodation duty under section 193C(4).

15.37 This section 193C(4) duty ends if the applicant accepts or refuses a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer. A ‘final accommodation offer’ is an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy made by a private landlord with the approval of the housing authority, with a view to bringing the section 193C(4) duty to an end. The offer must be of a fixed term tenancy (within the meaning of Part 1 of the Housing Act 1988) of at least 6 months duration, and the accommodation must be suitable for the applicant. A ‘final Part 6 offer’ is a suitable housing allocation (under Part 6 of the 1996 Act) made in writing, and which states that it is a final offer for the purposes of this section. A housing authority must not approve a final accommodation offer or make a final Part 6 offer if the applicant has a contractual obligation in respect of their existing accommodation which they are unable to bring to an end before being required to take up the offer. For further guidance on suitability see Chapter 17.

15.38 The section 193C(4) duty will also end if the applicant:
(a) ceases to be eligible for assistance;
(b) becomes homeless intentionally from the accommodation provided under section 193C(4);
(c) accepts an offer of an assured tenancy from a private landlord; or,
(d) voluntarily ceases to occupy as their only or principal home, the accommodation provided.

Duty to secure accommodation under the section 193(2) ‘main housing duty’

15.39 Where an applicant is unintentionally homeless, eligible for assistance and has a priority need for accommodation, the housing authority has a duty under section 193(2) to secure that accommodation is available for their occupation (unless it refers the application to another housing authority under section 198). This is commonly known as ‘the main housing duty’. However, the main housing duty will not be owed to an applicant who has turned down a suitable final accommodation offer or Part 6 offer made during the section 189B(2) relief stage, or has been given notice under section 193B(2) due to their deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate. For further guidance on deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate see Chapter 14.

15.40 The accommodation secured must be available for occupation by the applicant together with any other person who normally resides with them as a member of their family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with them. It must be suitable for their occupation. For further guidance on suitability see Chapter 17.

15.41 The housing authority will cease to be subject to the duty under section 193(2) (the main housing duty) in the following circumstances:

(a) the applicant accepts a suitable offer of accommodation under Part 6 (an allocation of social housing) (section 193(6) (c)). This would include an offer of an assured tenancy of a private registered provider property via the housing authority’s allocation scheme;

(b) the applicant accepts an offer of an assured tenancy (other than an assured shorthold tenancy) from a private landlord (section 193(6) (cc)). This could include an offer of an assured tenancy made by a private registered provider;

(c) the applicant accepts or refuses a private rented sector offer - an offer of an assured shorthold tenancy of at least 12 months made by a private landlord (section 193(7AA)). For this to be the case the applicant must have been informed in writing of the possible consequences of refusing or accepting the offer, their right to request a review of the suitability of the accommodation, and the duties that would be owed to them on re-application if they became unintentionally homeless from the accommodation within two years of accepting the offer;

(d) the applicant refuses a final offer of accommodation under Part 6 (an allocation of social housing). The main housing duty does not end unless the applicant is informed of the possible consequences of refusal and of their right to ask for a review of the suitability of the accommodation (section 193(7)), the offer is made in writing and states that it is a final offer (section 193(7A)), and the housing authority is satisfied that the accommodation is suitable and that it would be reasonable for the applicant to accept it (section 193(7F));

(e) the applicant refuses an offer of temporary accommodation which the housing authority is satisfied is suitable for the applicant (section 193(5)). For this to be the case the applicant must have been informed of the possible consequences of refusal and of their right to ask for a review of the suitability of the accommodation, and have been notified by the housing authority that it regards itself as having discharged its duty.

15.42 The main housing duty will also end if the applicant:

(a) ceases to be eligible for assistance as defined in section 185 of the 1996 Act;

(b) becomes homeless intentionally from accommodation made available to them under section 193. For further guidance on intentional homelessness see Chapter 9;

(c) voluntarily ceases to occupy as their principal home the accommodation made available under section 193.

15.43 In restricted cases housing authorities should, as far as is reasonably practicable, bring the section 193(2) duty to an end through the offer of a Assured Shorthold Tenancy of at least 12 months duration with a private landlord (section 193(7AD)). The applicant will not be owed a section 195A duty if they re-apply as unintentionally homeless within two years of accepting the offer. For further guidance on restricted cases see Chapter 7.

Pre-Localism Act 2011 cases

15.44 In circumstances where the housing authority accepted a section 193(2) duty on an application made before 9 November 2012, that duty cannot be brought to an end through an offer of private rented accommodation unless that offer meets the requirements of ‘a qualifying offer’.

15.45 A qualifying offer must be of a fixed-term tenancy of at least 12 months duration and be accompanied by a written statement that states the term of the tenancy being offered and explains in ordinary language that there is no obligation on the applicant to accept the offer, but if the offer is accepted the housing authority will cease to be subject to the section 193 duty. The applicant must have signed a statement acknowledging that he or she has understood the written statement accompanying the offer.
Making suitable offers

15.46 The Secretary of State recommends that applicants are given the chance to view accommodation that is offered on anything other than an interim basis, before being required to decide whether they accept or refuse an offer, and before being required to sign any written agreement relating to the accommodation (e.g. a tenancy agreement). Where housing authorities are making offers of accommodation outside their district they should take particular care to ensure that applicants have sufficient information about the location of the accommodation and the services that would be available to them there and that applicants are given a reasonable amount of time to consider the offer made before reaching a decision. Under section 202(1A), an applicant who is offered accommodation can request a review of its suitability whether or not they have accepted the offer. For further guidance on suitability see Chapter 17 and for further guidance on reviews see Chapter 19.

15.47 Where an applicant has contractual or other obligations in respect of their existing accommodation (e.g. a tenancy agreement or lease), the housing authority can only reasonably expect an offer to be taken up if the applicant is able to bring those obligations to an end before being required to take up the offer (section 193(8)).

15.48 Housing authorities should allow applicants a reasonable period for considering offers of accommodation that will bring the main housing duty to an end whether accepted or refused. There is no set reasonable period; some applicants may require longer than others depending on their circumstances, whether they wish to seek advice in making their decision and whether they are already familiar with the property or locality in question. Longer periods may be required where the applicant is in hospital or temporarily absent from the district. In deciding what a reasonable period is, housing authorities must take into account the applicant’s circumstances.

15.49 For further guidance on accommodation arrangements see:
(a) Chapter 16: Securing accommodation;
(b) Chapter 17: Suitability of accommodation.

CHAPTER 16: SECURING ACCOMMODATION

16.1 This chapter provides guidance on the ways in which housing authorities can ensure that suitable accommodation is available for applicants.

Securing and helping to secure accommodation

16.2 Housing authorities have various duties and powers to secure accommodation for an applicant, which require them to directly let or ensure a property owned by another landlord is made available to the applicant. The Homelessness Reduction Act 2017 introduced the duty to ‘help to secure’ accommodation for all applicants who are eligible for assistance and threatened with homelessness or homeless.

16.3 ‘Helping to secure’ does not mean that the housing authority has a duty to directly find and secure the accommodation, but involves them working with applicants to agree (where possible) reasonable steps that the applicant and the housing authority can take to identify and secure suitable accommodation.

16.4 In providing ‘help to secure’, the housing authority is able to provide support and advice to households who are taking some responsibility for securing their own accommodation. This approach is intended to increase choice and control for applicants and allow the housing authority to help to resolve particular problems rather than direct resources at securing accommodation for households regardless of what assistance they need. It remains open to the housing authority to secure accommodation for eligible applicants where appropriate.

General considerations

16.5 Section 206(1) provides that a housing authority may discharge its housing functions under Part 7 in the following ways:
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(a) by securing that suitable accommodation provided by them is available for the applicant;
(b) by securing that the applicant obtains suitable accommodation from some other person; or,
(c) by giving the applicant such advice and assistance as will secure that suitable accommodation is available from some other person.

16.6 Accommodation secured must be available and suitable for occupation by the applicant and any other person who normally resides with them as a member of their family, or any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with them. Section 208(1) requires housing authorities to secure accommodation within their district, in so far as is reasonably practicable. For further guidance on suitability of accommodation see Chapter 17.

16.7 In deciding what accommodation is to be secured, housing authorities will need to consider whether the applicant has any support needs, as identified in their (section 189A) personalised housing plan, and taking into account any additional information available from health or social care services, or from other agencies providing services to them.

16.8 Where a housing authority has a duty under section 193(2) to secure accommodation for an applicant it should consider, where availability of suitable housing allows, securing settled (rather than temporary) accommodation that will bring the duty to an end in the immediate or short term.

16.9 Housing authorities may secure accommodation by giving advice and assistance to an applicant that will secure that accommodation becomes available for them from another person (section 206(1)(c)). However, where an authority has a duty to secure accommodation, they will need to ensure that the advice and assistance provided results in suitable accommodation actually being secured. Merely assisting the applicant in any efforts that they might make to find accommodation would not be sufficient if suitable accommodation did not actually become available.

Local authority owned accommodation

16.10 Housing authorities may secure temporary accommodation through its own stock (i.e. held under Part 2 of the Housing Act 1985). In considering whether to do so authorities will need to balance the requirements of applicants owed a duty under Part 7 against the need to provide accommodation for others who have reasonable preference for an allocation under Part 6 of the 1996 Act.

16.11 Paragraph 4 of Schedule 1 to the Housing Act 1985 provides that a tenancy granted by a housing authority in pursuance of any function under Part 7 is not a secure tenancy unless the housing authority notifies the tenant that it is such. Housing authorities are reminded that the allocation of secure and introductory tenancies must be made in accordance with their allocation scheme framed under the provisions of Part 6.

Private registered provider owned accommodation

16.12 Under section 213 of the 1996 Act, where requested by a housing authority, a private registered provider must assist the housing authority in carrying out their duties under the homelessness legislation by co-operating with them as far as is reasonable in the circumstances. Private registered providers have a duty under the 1996 Act to co-operate with housing authorities in exercising their homelessness functions. Private registered providers are subject to the Regulator of Social Housing’s Regulatory Standards, in particular the expectation that they will co-operate with local authorities’ strategic housing function, set out in the Tenancy and Home and Community Standards.

The regulation of social housing is the responsibility of the Regulation Committee, a statutory committee of the Homes and Communities Agency (HCA). The organisation refers to itself as the Regulator of Social Housing in undertaking the functions of the Regulation Committee.
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

References in any enactment or instrument to the Regulator of Social Housing are references to the HCA acting through the Regulation Committee. Homes England is the trading name of the HCA’s non-regulation functions.

Co-operation between social housing providers

16.13 Under section 213 other social landlords have a duty to co-operate, as far as is reasonable in the circumstances, with a housing authority in carrying out their housing functions under Part 7 of the 1996 Act, if asked to do so.

16.14 Housing authorities may be able to assist one another by providing temporary or settled accommodation for homeless applicants. Under section 213(1), where one housing authority requests another to help them discharge a function under Part 7, the other housing authority must co-operate in providing such assistance as far as is reasonable in the circumstances.

16.15 This could be particularly appropriate in the case of applicants who would be at risk of violence or serious harassment in the district of the housing authority to whom they have applied for assistance. Other housing authorities may also be able to provide accommodation in cases where the applicant has special housing needs and the other housing authority has accommodation available which is appropriate to those needs. Housing authorities are encouraged to consider entering into reciprocal and co-operative arrangements where these might prove beneficial to authorities and to applicants.

Privately owned accommodation

16.16 Housing authorities may seek the assistance of private landlords in providing suitable accommodation direct to applicants, as well as engaging them in schemes that enable applicants to find their own private rented accommodation.

16.17 A general consent under section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988 (The General Consent under Section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988 for Financial Assistance to any person 2010) allows housing authorities to provide financial assistance to private landlords in order to secure accommodation for people who are homeless or at risk of homelessness. This could involve, for example, making small one-off grants (‘finders’ fees’) to landlords to encourage them to let dwellings to households owed a homelessness duty; paying rent deposits or indemnities to ensure accommodation is secured for such households; and making one-off grant payments which would prevent an eviction. There is no limit set on the amount of financial assistance that can be provided, however housing authorities are obliged to act reasonably and in accordance with their fiduciary duty to local tax and rent payers.

Private rented sector offers

16.18 Private rented accommodation can be used to prevent or relieve homelessness, or to bring the main housing duty (section 193) to an end, but in all cases enabling the applicant to exercise some choice over the accommodation offered to them is likely to increase the acceptance rate, and engage the cooperation of both applicants and landlords.

16.19 Housing authorities are encouraged to develop a private rented sector access scheme which provides opportunities for all applicants, including those who do not have a priority need, to access private rented accommodation. The level of help and support the authority is able to provide through such a scheme will vary to reflect local housing markets and available resources, but might include offers of bonds and guarantees, as well as payments towards deposits and incentives. Housing authorities will need to be mindful of the need to identify shared housing options for younger people, and will wish to work with landlords willing to provide suitable Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs).

16.20 Whilst housing authorities must ensure any accommodation offered to homeless applicants is suitable, there are additional suitability requirements that apply to private rented accommodation offered under section 193(7)(F) to end the main housing duty, or secured for applicants in priority need to prevent or relieve their homelessness. Private rented sector accommodation must meet the requirements of Article 3 if it is to be considered suitable when offered:

(a) to bring to an end the section 193(2) main housing duty (section 193(7F));
(b) as a final accommodation offer made in the 189B relief stage (sections 193A(6) and 193C(9)); or,
(c) to an applicant who has priority need, in order to prevent or relieve their homelessness.

For further guidance on the suitability of private rented sector offers see Chapter 17.

16.21 Housing authorities may make Discretionary Housing Payments (DHP) to help an applicant secure accommodation and to meet a shortfall between the rent and the amount of Housing Benefit or Universal Credit payable to them. However, where they do this housing authorities should take into account how sustainable any arrangement will be in the longer term when considering suitability of accommodation. Payments of DHP are governed by the Discretionary Financial Assistance Regulations 2001.

16.22 Housing authorities are encouraged to secure assured shorthold tenancies of at least 12 months wherever possible, and if a private rented sector offer is being made to end the section 193 duty it must always be for a tenancy of at least 12 months and comply with other requirements of section 193(7AA).

Temporary accommodation provided by a private landlord

16.23 Section 209 governs security of tenure where a private landlord provides accommodation to assist a housing authority to discharge an interim duty. Any such accommodation is exempt from statutory security of tenure until 12 months from the date on which the applicant is notified of the authority’s decision under section 184(3) or section 198(5) or from the date on which the applicant is notified of the decision on any review under section 202 or an appeal under section 204, unless the landlord notifies the applicant that the tenancy is an assured or assured shorthold tenancy.

16.24 Where a private landlord or private registered provider lets accommodation directly to an applicant to assist a housing authority to discharge any other homelessness duty, the tenancy granted will be an assured shorthold tenancy unless the tenant is notified that it is to be regarded as an assured tenancy.

Accommodation leased from a private landlord

16.25 Accommodation leased from a private landlord can provide housing authorities with a source of good quality, self-contained accommodation which can be let to applicants. When entering into leases, as when borrowing, local authority capital finance rules require authorities to be satisfied that the associated liabilities are affordable.

16.26 Housing authorities may wish to consider contracting with private registered providers for assistance in discharging their housing functions under arrangements whereby the private registered provider leases and/or manages accommodation owned by private landlords, which can be let to households to prevent or relieve homelessness or as temporary accommodation. A general consent under section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988 (The General Consent under section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988 for Financial Assistance to Registered Social Landlords or to Private Landlords to Relieve or Prevent Homelessness 2010) allows housing authorities to provide private registered providers with financial assistance in connection with such arrangements. Housing authorities must reserve the right to terminate such agreements, without penalty, after 3 years.

16.27 Housing authorities are encouraged to test approaches that would enable temporary accommodation to become settled accommodation and so reduce the uncertainty and lack of security that households in temporary accommodation can face. This could include converting private sector leased accommodation used as temporary accommodation into settled housing when the lease comes to an end. If the accommodation is suitable for the household's needs, and the landlord would be prepared to let directly to them, the housing authority may wish to arrange for a section 193(7AA) private rented sector offer to end the section 193(2) duty. For further guidance on accommodation duties see Chapter 15. Similarly, where a private registered provider holds the lease of accommodation owned by a private sector landlord, the accommodation might also be offered to the applicant (if suitable) as a section 193(7AA) offer to end the main housing duty (section 193(2)).

16.28 When considering conversion of temporary into settled accommodation, the interests and needs of the household, and the affordability of the new letting arrangement for the applicant, should be taken into account before any offer is made.

Bed and breakfast accommodation

16.29 Bed and breakfast (B&B) is defined in the Homelessness Suitability Order 2003 as a form of privately owned accommodation in which residents share facilities such as kitchens, bathrooms and/or toilets, and is usually paid for on a nightly basis.

16.30 Housing authorities must not use B&B to accommodate families with children or pregnant women except where there is no alternative available, and then for a maximum period not exceeding 6 weeks. MHCLG and DfE guidance states that B&B type accommodation is never suitable for 16-17 year olds.

Privately owned ‘annexe’ accommodation

16.31 Some housing authorities access the private market to secure self-contained accommodation (sometimes referred to as ‘annexe’ accommodation) for households, which is typically paid for on a nightly basis and typically involves family members sharing a large room with one another. This type of accommodation is unlikely to be suitable for families on anything but a short-term basis.

Lodgings

16.32 Lodgings provided by householders may be suitable for some applicants. Housing authorities may wish to establish a network of such landlords in their district, and might consider operating supported lodgings schemes for people with support needs, for example young people needing to gain skills for living independently.

Hostels and supported housing

16.33 Hostels and supported housing schemes may be owned and managed by local authorities, private registered providers, charities or private landlords and may be available through direct access, local referral arrangements or as direct temporary accommodation placements. The quality of accommodation provided within hostels varies considerably, and authorities should be particularly careful when securing or helping to secure accommodation with non-commissioned providers of hostel places that are not monitored or quality assessed.

16.34 Hostel accommodation typically involves some sharing of facilities, and in some hostels this includes sharing bedrooms as well as kitchens and bathing facilities.

16.35 Where hostel accommodation is used to accommodate vulnerable young people or families with children, the Secretary of State considers that it would be inappropriate to accommodate these groups alongside vulnerable adults. Housing authorities should be alert to the risks that may be associated with placing families with children, and young people, in mixed hostel settings, and should avoid doing so in circumstances where the housing authority does not have control over all of the placements.

16.36 Hostels can offer short-term accommodation to people who are experiencing homelessness, and housing authorities will wish to ensure they make the most effective use of services available, and that accommodation is suitable for the applicants placed there. Hostel accommodation that involves families or pregnant women sharing facilities with other households will not be suitable for longer-term placements.

16.37 Supported housing is usually, although not exclusively, commissioned by a local authority or other public body in order to meet the accommodation and support needs of particular groups who require such assistance. It can provide a highly valuable source of accommodation particularly for young people and for adults who need a period of stability and individual support to help them to prepare to live independently.

16.38 Housing authorities that have commissioned supported housing services will wish to keep the uptake, utilisation and move-on arrangements for these services under regular review to ensure that they meet local needs and that resources are maximised. In two-tier local authority areas, housing authorities should ensure that evidence of homelessness and support needs is available and informs commissioning priorities at upper tier level, and that there is collaboration across the districts to ensure efficient referral and move on from supported housing services. For further guidance on homelessness strategies and reviews see Chapter 2.

16.39 A placement in a short-stay hostel or supported housing scheme will be only be sufficient to meet a housing authority’s duties to prevent or relieve homelessness where there is a planned pathway to ensure that accommodation will continue to be available to them for at least 6 months.

Refuges for victims of domestic abuse

16.40 Housing authorities should develop close links with refuges within their district, and neighbouring districts, to ensure they have access to emergency accommodation for applicants who are fleeing domestic or other violence or who are at risk of such violence. Refuge placements will usually require the applicant to speak directly to the service provider, and to indicate that they want and need refuge accommodation.

16.41 Housing authorities should recognise that placing an applicant in a refuge will generally be on a short-term basis, except where a longer period of support is required to enable applicants to prepare to manage independently. Housing authorities should work together with refuge providers to ensure efficient and planned move on from refugee provision, to maximise the use of refuge spaces. For further guidance on domestic abuse see Chapter 21.

Housing First accommodation

16.42 Housing First is an approach to ending long term homelessness for people with complex needs. It has been developed specifically to meet the needs of the most challenging client groups who have previously been unable to sustain housing. Although there are some variations in approach between different providers of Housing First, the central principles include providing a home without any requirement to engage with services, flexible support available for as long as needed, enabling individuals to have choice and control, and to reduce harm.

Caravans, houseboats and other moveable accommodation

16.43 Under section 175(2) applicants are homeless if the accommodation available for their occupation is a caravan, houseboat, or other movable structure and they do not have a place where they are entitled, or permitted, to put it and live in it. If a duty to secure accommodation arises in such cases, the housing authority is not required to make equivalent accommodation available (or provide a site or berth for the applicant’s own accommodation). However, the housing authority must consider whether such options are reasonably available, particularly where this would provide the most suitable solution to the applicant’s accommodation needs.

16.44 The circumstances described in paragraph 16.43 will be particularly relevant in the case of Gypsies and Travellers. Where a duty to secure accommodation arises but an appropriate site is not immediately available, the housing authority may need to provide an alternative temporary solution until a suitable site, or some other suitable option, becomes available. Some Gypsies and Travellers may have a cultural aversion to the prospect of ‘bricks and mortar’ accommodation. In such cases, the housing authority should seek to provide an alternative solution. However, where the housing authority is satisfied that there is no prospect of a suitable site for the time being, there may be no alternative solution. Housing authorities must give consideration to the needs and lifestyle of applicants who are Gypsies and Travellers when considering their application and how best to discharge a duty to secure suitable accommodation, in line with their obligations to act consistently with the Human Rights Act 1998, and in particular the right to respect for private life, family and the home; as well as their duties under section 149 of the Equality Act 2010.

16.45 Although mobile homes may sometimes provide emergency or short-term accommodation for applicants who do not usually occupy movable accommodation, housing authorities will need to be satisfied that the accommodation is suitable for the applicant and their household, paying particular regard to their needs, requirements and circumstances and the conditions and facilities on the site. Caravans designed primarily for short-term holiday use should not be regarded as suitable as temporary accommodation for applicants.

Tenancies for minors

16.46 There are legal complications associated with the grant of a tenancy to a minor because a minor cannot hold a legal estate in land. In most cases a 16-17 year old who has become homeless will be accommodated under section 20 of the Children Act 1989 and/or through provision of supported housing or supported lodgings, and will not be ready to manage their own tenancy until they reach adulthood. If housing authorities are securing accommodation for 16-17 year olds within social housing or private rented stock there will need to be sufficient support in place, and a license agreement may be more appropriate depending on the arrangements in place. Where a minor is considered able to manage a tenancy independently this could be granted to a minor and held on trust. Authorities will need to take into account how the terms of any tenancy will be enforced in the event that there is a breach in tenancy conditions.

CHAPTER 17: SUITABILITY OF ACCOMMODATION

17.1 This chapter provides guidance on the factors to be taken into account when determining the suitability of accommodation secured and helped to secure under the 1996 Act. This includes (temporary) accommodation secured under interim accommodation duties or the main housing duty as well as settled accommodation which would bring the prevention, relief or main housing duty to an end.

17.2 Section 206 provides that where a housing authority discharges its functions to secure that accommodation is available for an applicant the accommodation must be suitable. This applies in respect of all powers and duties to secure accommodation under Part 7, including interim duties. The accommodation must be suitable in relation to the applicant and to all members of their household who normally reside with them, or who might reasonably be expected to reside with them.

17.3 Section 210 of the 1996 Act sets out matters a housing authority must have regard to when determining suitability. Section 210(2) provides for the Secretary of State to specify by order the circumstances in which accommodation is or is not to be regarded as suitable for someone, and matters to be taken into account or disregarded in determining whether accommodation is suitable.

17.4 Space and arrangement will be key factors in determining the suitability of accommodation. However, consideration of whether accommodation is suitable will require an assessment of all aspects of the accommodation in the light of the relevant needs, requirements and circumstances of the homeless person and their household. The location of the accommodation will always be a relevant factor.

17.5 Housing authorities will need to consider carefully the suitability of accommodation for households with particular medical and/or physical needs. Physical access to and around the home, space, bathroom and kitchen facilities, access to a garden and

Modifications to assist people with sensory loss as well as mobility needs are all factors which might need to be taken into account.

17.6 Account will need to be taken of any social considerations relating to the applicant and their household that might affect the suitability of accommodation, including any risk of violence, racial or other harassment in a particular locality. Where domestic violence or abuse is involved and the applicant is not able to stay in the current home, housing authorities may need to consider the need for alternative accommodation whose location can be kept a secret and which has security measures and staffing to protect the occupants.

17.7 Accommodation that is suitable for a short period, for example accommodation used to discharge an interim duty pending inquiries under section 188, may not necessarily be suitable for a longer period; for example to discharge a duty under section 193(2).

17.8 Housing authorities have a continuing obligation to keep the suitability of accommodation under review, and to respond to any relevant change in circumstances which may affect suitability, until such time as the accommodation duty is brought to an end.

17.9 Housing authorities are required to assess whether accommodation is suitable for each household individually, and case records should demonstrate that they have taken the statutory requirements into account in securing the accommodation.

Standards of accommodation

17.10 Section 210(1) requires a housing authority to have regard to the following provisions when assessing the suitability of accommodation for an applicant:

(a) Parts 9 and 10 of the Housing Act 1985 (the '1985 Act') (slum clearance and overcrowding); and,

(b) Parts 1 to 4 of the Housing Act 2004 (the '2004 Act') (housing conditions, licensing of houses in multiple occupation, selective licensing of other residential accommodation, additional control provisions in relation to residential accommodation).

Suitability of private rented accommodation

17.11 Article 3 of the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2012 concerns the suitability of privately rented accommodation offered to certain applicants who are homeless or threatened with homelessness.

17.12 Private rented sector accommodation must meet the requirements of Article 3 if it is to be considered suitable when offered:

(a) to bring to an end the section 193(2) main housing duty (section 193(7F));

(b) as a final accommodation offer made in the 189B relief stage (sections 193A(6) and 193C(9)); or,

(c) to an applicant who has priority need, in order to prevent or relieve their homelessness.

17.13 A private rented property must not be regarded as suitable if the housing authority are of the view any of the following apply:

(a) it is not in a reasonable physical condition;

(b) electrical equipment supplied with the accommodation does not meet the requirements of Schedule 1 to the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 2016;

(c) the landlord has not taken reasonable fire safety precautions with the accommodation and any furnishings supplied with it;

(d) the landlord has not taken reasonable precautions to prevent the possibility of carbon monoxide poisoning in the accommodation (see 17.20 below);

(e) the landlord is not a fit and proper person to act in the capacity of landlord (see 17.21 below).
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities  A2.3

17.14 A private rented property must not be regarded as suitable if any of the following apply:

(a) it is a house in multiple occupation subject to licensing under section 55 of the Housing Act 2004 and is not licensed;
(b) it is subject to additional licensing under section 56 of the Housing Act 2004 and is not licensed;
(c) it forms part of residential property which does not have a valid Energy Performance Certificate as required by the Energy Performance of Buildings (England and Wales) Regulations 2012;
(d) it is or forms part of relevant premises which do not have a current gas safety record in accordance with regulation 36 of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1998(e);
(e) the landlord has not provided a written tenancy agreement to the housing authority which the landlord proposes to use for the purposes of a private rented sector offer, and which the housing authority considers to be adequate. It is expected that the housing authority should review the tenancy agreement to ensure that it sets out, ideally in a clear and comprehensible way, the tenant’s obligations, for example a clear statement of the rent and other charges, and the responsibilities of the landlord, but does not contain unfair or unreasonable terms, such as call-out charges for repairs or professional cleaning at the end of the tenancy.

17.15 The particular requirements of Article 3 do not apply to accommodation secured for households that do not have priority need, or to accommodation that the authority helped the applicant to secure (for example through a bond guarantee or financial assistance) but which the applicant identified themselves. However, the Secretary of State expects housing authorities to make reasonable efforts to ensure private rented accommodation secured for applicants who do not have priority need is safe, and in reasonable condition; and that all applicants looking for their own accommodation have sufficient guidance to enable them to consider standards.

17.16 To determine whether or not accommodation meets the requirements set out in Article 3 housing authorities are advised to ensure it is visited by a local authority officer or someone acting on their behalf able to carry out an inspection. Attention should be paid to signs of damp or mould and indications that the property would be cold as well as to a visual check made of electrical installations and equipment (for example; looking for loose wiring, cracked or broken electrical sockets, light switches that do not work and appliances which do not appear to have been safety tested).

Additional health and safety requirements

17.17 The Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005 applies to the common or shared parts of multi occupied residential buildings. It places a duty on landlords, owners or managing agents to carry out a fire risk assessment of the common parts and implement and maintain appropriate and adequate fire safety measures to manage the risk that lives could be lost in a fire. As part of their responsibilities, landlords should put in place appropriate management and maintenance systems to ensure any fire safety equipment or equipment which may represent a fire hazard, is maintained in good working order, and in accordance with the manufacturers instructions. Landlords are also required to ensure that furniture and furnishings supplied must comply with the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988 (as amended).

17.18 Housing authorities and fire and rescue authorities should work together to ensure the safety of domestic premises including the provision of fire safety advice to households. Housing authorities will need to satisfy themselves that these regulations have been adhered to.

17.19 Housing authorities are asked to satisfy themselves that there are reasonable precautions to prevent the possibility of carbon monoxide poisoning in the accommodation, where such a risk exists. Since 2015, private sector landlords have been required to have at least one smoke alarm installed on every storey of their properties and a carbon monoxide alarm in any room containing a solid fuel burning appliance (for example a coal fire or wood burning stove). After that, the landlord must make sure the alarms are in working order at the start of each new tenancy.

Fit and proper landlords

17.20 Housing authorities must satisfy themselves that landlords are fit and proper people to act in the capacity of a landlord. This assessment involves consideration if the landlord has:

(a) committed any offences involving fraud or other dishonesty, violence or illegal drugs, or that are listed in Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (offences attracting notification requirements);

(b) practised unlawful discrimination on grounds of sex, race, age, disability, marriage or civil partnership, pregnancy or maternity, religion or belief, sexual orientation, gender identity or gender reassignment in, or in connection with, the carrying on of any business;

(c) contravened any provision of the law relating to housing (including landlord or tenant law); or,

(d) acted otherwise than in accordance with any applicable code of practice for the management of a house in multiple occupation, approved under section 233 of the Housing Act 2004.

17.21 The Secretary of State recommends that when placing households outside of their district that the authority liaise with the receiving district to check whether that authority has taken any enforcement activity against the landlord. The Housing and Planning Act 2016 introduced a range of measures to tackle rogue landlords including a database of rogue landlords or letting agents who have been banned; convicted of certain offences; or received multiple civil penalties for housing offences. Housing authorities could check this database as part of their inquiries.

Tenancy deposit scheme

17.22 Whilst a local authority will not be able to check that a tenant’s deposit has been placed in a tenancy deposit protection scheme prior to them taking the tenancy housing authorities should remind prospective landlords and tenants of their responsibilities in this area.

Housing Health and Safety Rating System (HHSRS)

17.23 Housing authorities are obliged under section 3 of the Housing Act 2004 to keep the housing conditions in their area under review with a view to identifying any action that may need to be taken by them under the Household Health and Safety Ratings System legislation (HHSRS).

17.24 When determining the suitability of accommodation secured under the homelessness legislation, housing authorities should, as a minimum, ensure that all accommodation is free of Category 1 hazards. In the case of an out of district placement it is the responsibility of the placing authority to ensure that accommodation is free of Category 1 hazards.

Overcrowding

17.25 Part 10 of the 1985 Act is intended to tackle the problems of overcrowding in dwellings. Section 324 provides a definition of overcrowding which in turn relies on the room standard specified in section 325 and the space standard in section 326. Housing authorities must be mindful of these provisions when securing or helping to secure accommodation for homeless applicants.

17.26 A room provided within an HMO may be defined as a ‘dwelling’ under Part 10 of the 1985 Act and the room and space standards will therefore apply. Housing authorities should also note that ‘crowding and space’ is one of the hazards assessed by the HHSRS. Any breach of the room and space standards under Part 10 is likely to constitute a Category 1 hazard.
Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs)

17.27 Housing authorities must have regard to regulations governing the required standards for any Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) that may be secured or helped to secure for an applicant.

17.28 A property is an HMO if it satisfies the conditions set out in sections 254(2) to (4), has been declared an HMO under section 255 or is a converted block of flats to which section 257 applies. Privately owned bed and breakfast or hostel accommodation that is used to accommodate a household pursuant to a homelessness function, and which is the household’s main residence, will fall within this definition of an HMO.

17.29 A housing authority will have to be satisfied that an HMO is suitable for the number of households or occupants it is licensed for and meets statutory standards relating to shared amenities and facilities. These standards are set out in Schedule 3 to the Licensing and Management of Houses in Multiple Occupation and Other Houses (Miscellaneous Provisions) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI No 2006/373). These ‘amenity standards’ will run alongside the consideration of health and safety issues under HHSRS.

Bed and breakfast accommodation

17.30 Bed and breakfast (B&B) accommodation caters for very short-term stays only and affords residents only limited privacy, and may lack or require sharing of important amenities, such as cooking and laundry facilities. Wherever possible, housing authorities should avoid using B&B accommodation as accommodation for homeless applicants, unless, in the very limited circumstances where it is likely to be the case, it is the most appropriate option for the applicant.

17.31 Living in B&B accommodation can be particularly detrimental to the health and development of children. Under section 210(2), the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) (England) Order 2003 (SI 2003 No. 3326) (‘the 2003 Order’). The 2003 Order specifies that B&B accommodation is not to be regarded as suitable for applicants with family commitments provided with accommodation under Part 7.

17.32 Housing authorities should, therefore, use B&B accommodation to discharge a duty to secure accommodation for applicants with family commitments only as a last resort and then only for a maximum of six weeks. Applicants with family commitments means an applicant:

(a) who is pregnant;
(b) with whom a pregnant woman resides or might reasonably be expected to reside;
(c) with whom dependent children reside or might reasonably be expected to reside.

17.33 For the purpose of the 2003 Order, B&B accommodation means accommodation (whether or not breakfast is included):

(a) which is not separate and self-contained premises; and,
(b) in which any of the following amenities is shared by more than one household:
   (i) a toilet;
   (ii) personal washing facilities; or,
   (iii) cooking facilities.

17.34 B&B accommodation does not include accommodation which is owned or managed by a housing authority, a private registered provider or a voluntary organisation as defined in section 180(3) of the 1996 Act.

17.35 The 2003 Order provides that if no alternative accommodation is available for the applicant the housing authority may accommodate the family in B&B for a period, or periods, not exceeding six weeks in result of a single homelessness application. Where B&B accommodation is secured for an applicant with family commitments, the Secretary of State considers that the authority should notify the applicant of the effect of the 2003 Order, and, in particular, that the authority will be unable to continue to secure B&B accommodation for such applicants any longer than 6 weeks, after which the authority must secure alternative, suitable accommodation.

17.36 When determining whether accommodation other than B&B accommodation is available for use, housing authorities will need to take into account, among other things, the cost to the authority of securing the accommodation, the affordability of the accommodation for the applicant and the location of the accommodation. A housing authority is under no obligation to include in its considerations accommodation which is to be allocated in accordance with its allocation scheme, published under section 167 of the 1996 Act.

17.37 If there is a significant change in an applicant’s circumstances that would bring the applicant within the scope of the 2003 Order, the six week period should start from the date the authority was informed of the change of circumstances not the date the applicant was originally placed in B&B accommodation.

17.38 If the conditions for referring a case are met and another housing authority accepts responsibility for an applicant under section 200(4), any time spent in B&B accommodation before this acceptance should be disregarded in calculating the six week period.

17.39 B&B accommodation is not suitable for 16 and 17 year old applicants even on an emergency basis.

17.40 The Secretary of State considers that the limited circumstances in which B&B accommodation may provide suitable accommodation could include those where:

(a) emergency accommodation is required at very short notice (for example to discharge an interim duty to accommodate); or,

(b) there is simply no better alternative accommodation available and the use of B&B accommodation is necessary as a last resort.

17.41 The Secretary of State considers that where housing authorities are unable to avoid using B&B accommodation to accommodate applicants, they should ensure that such accommodation is of a good standard and is used for the shortest period possible.

Standards of B&B accommodation

17.42 Where B&B accommodation is used to accommodate an applicant and is their main residence, it falls within the definition of an HMO. Local authorities have a power under the 2004 Act to issue an HMO Declaration confirming HMO status where there is uncertainty about the status of a property.

17.43 The Government recognises that living conditions in HMOs should not only be healthy and safe but should also provide acceptable, decent standards for people who may be unrelated to each other and who are sharing basic facilities. The Government has set out in regulation the minimum ‘amenity standards’ required for a property to be granted an HMO licence. These standards will only apply to HMOs covered by mandatory licensing or those HMOs that will be subject to additional licensing, and will not apply to the majority of HMOs. However, housing authorities (or groups of authorities) can adopt their own local classification, amenity specification or minimum standards for B&B and other shared accommodation provided as temporary accommodation under Part 7.

Affordability

17.44 Under section 210(2), the Secretary of State has made the Homelessness (Suitability of Accommodation) Order 1996 (SI 1996 No. 3204). The 1996 Order specifies that in determining whether it would be, or would have been, reasonable for a person to occupy accommodation and in determining whether accommodation is suitable a housing authority must take into account whether the accommodation is affordable by them, and in particular must take account of:

(a) the financial resources available to them (i.e. all forms of income), including, but not limited to:
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(i) salary, fees and other remuneration (from such sources as investments, grants, pensions, tax credits etc.);
(ii) social security benefits
(iii) payments due under a court order for the making of periodical payments to a spouse or a former spouse, or to, or for the benefit of, a child;
(iv) payments of child support maintenance due under the Child Support Act 1991;
(v) pensions;
(vi) contributions to the costs in respect of the accommodation which are or were made or which might reasonably be expected to be, or have been, made by other members of their household (most members can be assumed to contribute, but the amount depends on various factors including their age and income);
(vii) financial assistance towards the costs in respect of the accommodation, including loans, provided by a local authority, voluntary organisation or other body;
(viii) benefits derived from a policy of insurance (such as cover against unemployment or sickness);
(b) savings and other capital sums which may be a source of income or might be available to meet accommodation expenses;
(c) the costs in respect of the accommodation, including, but not limited to:
   (i) payments of, or by way of, rent (including rent default/property damage deposits);
   (ii) payments in respect of a licence or permission to occupy the accommodation;
   (iii) mortgage costs (including an assessment of entitlement to support for mortgage interest (SMI) in income support/income-based jobseeker’s allowance/income-related employment and support allowance/universal credit);
   (iv) payments of, or by way of, service charges (e.g. maintenance or other costs required as a condition of occupation of the accommodation);
   (v) mooring charges payable for a houseboat;
   (vi) where the accommodation is a caravan or a mobile home, payments in respect of the site on which it stands;
   (vii) the amount of council tax payable in respect of the accommodation;
   (viii) payments by way of deposit or security in respect of the accommodation;
   (ix) payments required by an accommodation agency;
(d) payments which that person is required to make under a court order for the making of periodical payments to a spouse or former spouse, or to, or for the benefit of, a child and payments of child support maintenance required to be made under the Child Support Act 1991; and,
(e) other reasonable living expenses

17.45 Housing authorities will need to consider whether the applicant can afford the housing costs without being deprived of basic essentials such as food, clothing, heating, transport and other essentials specific to their circumstances. Housing costs should not be regarded as affordable if the applicant would be left with a residual income that is insufficient to meet these essential needs. Housing authorities may be guided by Universal Credit standard allowances when assessing the income that an applicant will require to meet essential needs aside from housing costs, but should ensure that the wishes, needs and circumstances of the applicant and their household are taken into account. The wider context of the applicant’s particular circumstances should be considered when considering their household expenditure especially when these are higher than might be expected. For example, an applicant with a disabled child may have higher travel costs to ensure that the child is able to access additional support or education that they require and so this should be taken into account when assessing their essential needs, and the income that they have available for accommodation costs.

Location of accommodation

17.46 The suitability of the location for all the members of the household must be considered by the authority. Section 208(1) of the 1996 Act requires that authorities shall, in discharging their housing functions under Part 7 of the 1996 Act, in so far as is reasonably practicable, secure accommodation within the authority's own district.

17.47 Where it is not reasonably practicable to secure accommodation within district and an authority has secured accommodation outside their district, the housing authority is required to take into account the distance of that accommodation from the district of the authority. Where accommodation which is otherwise suitable and affordable is available nearer to the authority’s district than the accommodation which it has secured, the accommodation which it has secured is not likely to be suitable unless the applicant has specified a preference.

17.48 Generally, where possible, housing authorities should try to secure accommodation that is as close as possible to where an applicant was previously living. Securing accommodation for an applicant in a different location can cause difficulties for some applicants. Where possible the authority should seek to retain established links with schools, doctors, social workers and other key services and support.

17.49 In assessing the significance of disruption to employment, account will need to be taken of their need to reach their normal workplace from the accommodation secured. In assessing the significance of disruption to caring responsibilities, account should be taken of the type and importance of the care household members provide and the likely impact the withdrawal would cause.

17.50 When securing accommodation for families with children housing authorities should be mindful of their duties under section 11 of the Children Act 2004 to discharge their functions with regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children. This would include minimising the disruption to the education of children and young people, particularly (but not solely) at critical points in time such as leading up to taking GCSE (or their equivalent) examinations.

17.51 Before a family that includes a school age child is placed out of district, the housing authority should liaise with the receiving authority and make every reasonable effort to ensure arrangements are or will be put in place to meet the child’s educational needs. Local authorities have a duty to ensure that school places are available for children who have moved in to their area, but particular care should be taken by housing authorities when placing families that may require more support to access school places, to ensure educational needs will be met.

17.52 Account should also be taken of medical facilities and other support currently provided for the applicant and their household. Housing authorities should consider the potential impact on the health and wellbeing of an applicant or any person reasonably expected to reside with them, were such support to be removed or medical facilities were no longer accessible. They should also consider whether similar facilities are accessible and available near the accommodation being offered and whether there would be any specific difficulties in the applicant or person residing with them using those essential facilities, compared to the support they are currently receiving.

17.53 Housing authorities should avoid placing applicants in isolated accommodation away from public transport, shops and other facilities, where possible.

17.54 In some circumstances there will be clear benefits for the applicant of being accommodated outside of the district. This could occur, for example, where the applicant, and/or a member of their household, would be at risk of domestic abuse or other violence in the district and need to be accommodated elsewhere to reduce the risk of further contact with the perpetrator(s). Another example might be where, upon the advice of the relevant provider of offender management services (Probation Service, Community Rehabilitation Company or Youth Offending Team), ex-offenders or drug/alcohol users would benefit from being accommodated outside the district to help break links with previous contacts which could exert a negative influence.

17.55 There may also be advantages in enabling some applicants to access employment opportunities outside of their current district. The availability, or otherwise, of employment opportunities in the new area may help to determine if that area is suitable for the applicant.

17.56 The Secretary of State considers that applicants whose household has a need for social services support or a need to maintain links with other essential services within the borough, for example families with children who are subject to safeguarding arrangements, should be given particular attention when temporary accommodation is allocated, to try and ensure it is located in or close to the housing authorities own district. Careful consideration should be given to applicants with a mental illness or learning disability who may have a particular need to remain in a specific area, for example to maintain links with health service professionals and/or a reliance on existing informal support networks and community links. Such applicants may be less able than others to adapt to any disruption caused by being placed in accommodation in another district.

17.57 Housing authorities, particularly those that find it necessary to make out of district placements, are advised to develop policies for the procurement and allocation of temporary accommodation which will help to ensure suitability requirements are met. This would provide helpful guidance for staff responsible for identifying and making offers of accommodation, and would make local arrangements, and the challenges involved with sourcing accommodation, clearer to applicants.

17.58 When making offers of accommodation to an applicant a housing authority should make clear in the offer letter why they consider the property to be suitable, taking into account the needs of the applicant and their household. If any members of the household have health problems the authority should state how their medical needs may be met in the district where the accommodation is located. For families with school age children, the authority should set out how the impact on their education has been assessed and what arrangements have been made for their education in the area of placement.

17.59 Where a housing authority places an applicant in accommodation outside the district under any part of the Act, section 208(2) requires them to notify the authority in whose district the accommodation is situated of the placement. The notification requirement applies to all out of district placements and not just those arranged under interim accommodation duties or the section 193(2) main housing duty. The notification must include:

(a) the name of the applicant;
(b) the number and description of other persons who normally reside with the applicant as a member of his or her family or might reasonably be expected to do so;
(c) the address of the accommodation;
(d) the date on which the accommodation was made available;
(e) which function the housing authority is discharging in securing the accommodation; and,
(f) the notice must be given in writing within 14 days of the accommodation being made available to the applicant.

17.60 Applicants should be given a reasonable amount of time to consider offers of accommodation outside their district (for further guidance see 15.46). In considering what amount of time is to be considered reasonable, housing authorities should take into account how familiar the applicant might be with the district offered, and the length of time that the household are likely to be living there.

17.61 Housing authorities should record how decisions to place an applicant out of district have been reached, taking into account the household’s collective and individual needs.

Households with pets

17.62 Housing authorities will need to be sensitive to the importance of pets to some applicants, particularly elderly people and rough sleepers who may rely on pets for companionship. Although it will not always be possible to make provision for pets, the Secretary of State recommends that housing authorities give careful consideration to this aspect when making provision for applicants who wish to retain their pet.

Right to request a review of suitability

17.63 Applicants may ask for a review on request of the housing authority’s decision that the accommodation offered to them is suitable under section 202(1)(f), although...
A2.3 England: Homelessness

this right does not apply in the case of interim accommodation secured under sections 188, 190, 200(1), 204(4). For further guidance on accommodation duties see Chapter 15. Under section 202(1A) an applicant may request a review as to suitability regardless of whether or not they accept the accommodation. This applies equally to offers of accommodation made under section 193(5) to discharge the section 193(2) main housing duty and to offers of an allocation of accommodation made under section 193(7) that would bring that duty to an end. This means that the applicant is able to ask for a review of suitability without inadvertently bringing the main housing duty to an end. Housing authorities should note that although there is no right of review of a decision on the suitability of accommodation secured under interim accommodation duties such decisions could nevertheless be subject to judicial review in the High Court. For further guidance see Chapter 19.

CHAPTER 18: APPLICATIONS, DECISIONS AND NOTIFICATIONS

18.1 This chapter provides guidance on dealing with applications for accommodation or assistance in obtaining accommodation, reaplications to a housing authority within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer and the circumstances in which an authority has a duty to notify an applicant of its decision.

Service provision

18.2 A need for accommodation, or assistance in obtaining accommodation, can arise at anytime. Housing authorities will therefore need to provide access to advice and assistance at all times during normal office hours, and have arrangements in place for 24 hour emergency cover, e.g. by enabling telephone access to an appropriate duty officer. The police and other relevant services should be provided with details of how to access the service outside normal office hours.

18.3 It is recommended that housing authorities should give proper consideration to the location of, and accessibility to, advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness, including the need to ensure privacy during interviews.

18.4 Housing authorities should publicise their opening hours, address, and the 24 hour contact details. For example, this information could be accessible on the housing authority’s website. Translated information and interpreting services should be made available to applicants for who English is not a first language, and the availability of these services publicised to residents and community organisations. For more guidance on arrangements for carrying out assessments see 11.13 to 11.16.

Form of an application

18.5 Applications can be made to any department of the local authority and expressed in any particular form; they need not be expressed as explicitly seeking assistance under Part 7. As long as the communication seeks accommodation or assistance in obtaining accommodation and includes details that give the housing authority reason to believe that they might be homeless or threatened with homelessness, this will constitute an application.

18.6 Housing authorities should take particular attention to identify instances where information on an inquiry about a social housing allocation scheme, or an application for an allocation of housing under Part 6, provides reason to believe that the applicant might be homeless or threatened with homelessness. This should be regarded as an application for homelessness assistance.

18.7 A referral of a case made by a public authority to the housing authority under section 213B of the 1996 Act, the duty to refer, will not in itself constitute an application. However, housing authorities should make contact with the person referred and determine whether they have reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless or threatened with homelessness. For further guidance on the duty to refer see Chapter 4.
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

Persons making an application

18.8 An application can be made by any individual who has the mental capacity to do so. There is no statutory minimum age, but applications from dependent children should not be considered. A child aged 16-17 may make an application in their own right, and will require a Children Act 1989 assessment to be completed if they are homeless.

Applications to more than one housing authority

18.9 In some cases applicants may apply to more than one housing authority simultaneously and housing authorities should be alert to cases where an applicant is doing this. In such cases, where a housing authority has reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, it may wish to contact the other housing authorities involved, to agree which housing authority will take responsibility for conducting inquiries. Where another housing authority has previously made decisions about an applicant’s circumstances, a housing authority considering a fresh application may wish to have regard to those decisions. However, housing authorities should not rely solely on decisions made by another housing authority and will need to make their own inquiries in order to reach an independent decision on whether any duty, and if so which duty, is owed under Part 7. Any arrangements for the discharge of any of their functions by another housing authority must comply with section 101 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Withholding or falsifying information

18.10 Under section 214, it is an offence for a person, knowingly or recklessly to make a false statement, or knowingly to withhold information, with intent to induce the housing authority to believe that they, or another person, are entitled to accommodation or assistance under Part 7. If, before the applicant receives notification of a decision, there is any change of facts material to their case, they must inform the housing authority of this as soon as possible. Housing authorities must ensure that all applicants are made aware of these obligations and that they are explained in ordinary language. Housing authorities are advised to ensure that the obligations are conveyed sensitively to avoid intimidating applicants.

Further applications

18.11 There is no period of disqualification if someone wants to make a fresh application. Where a person whose application has been previously considered and determined under Part 7 makes a fresh application, the housing authority will need to decide whether there are any new facts which render it different from the earlier application. If no new facts are revealed, or any new facts are of a trivial nature, the housing authority would not be required to consider the new application and can instead rely on its previous decision. However, where the fresh application does reveal a change in relevant facts, the housing authority must treat the fresh application in the same way as it would any other application for accommodation or assistance in obtaining accommodation under Part 7.

18.12 In the majority of re-application cases where the applicant has previously refused an offer of suitable accommodation, the housing authority will be entitled to rely on the ending of its duties following the refusal of accommodation. However, if, after the refusal of accommodation, the applicant’s factual circumstances change, the housing authority can no longer rely on the completion of the earlier duty and must consider the fresh application.

18.13 For example, if an applicant makes a further application following a relationship breakdown which has changed the membership of the household, this should be treated as a new application following a factual change of circumstances.

Withdrawn applications

18.14 It is recommended that housing authorities have procedures in place for dealing with applications that are withdrawn or where someone fails to maintain contact with the housing authority after making an application. The Secretary of State considers that it would be reasonable to consider an application closed where the applicant has not responded to any form of contact for 56 days or longer. Any further approach from the applicant after this time may need to be considered as a fresh application. Where an applicant renews contact within 56 days the housing authority will need to consider any change of circumstances that may affect the application.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

18.15 If an applicant dies before a decision is reached on their application, the housing authority can substitute another member of the late applicant’s household as applicant upon the consent of that household member.

Reapplication to a housing authority within two years of acceptance of a private rented sector offer

18.16 Under section 195A(1) (re-application after private rented sector offer), the section 193(2) duty will apply regardless of whether the applicant has a priority need where:

(a) a person makes a re-application for assistance within two years of accepting a private rented sector offer under section 193(7AA); and,
(b) the applicant is eligible for assistance and has become homeless unintentionally.

18.17 The date from which the two years begins is the date of acceptance of the private rented sector offer, not the date when the tenancy was granted or when the applicant moved in.

18.18 Housing authorities should be aware that if, following the expiry of the initial 12 month assured shorthold tenancy, an applicant secures their own accommodation and then subsequently becomes homeless within two years of the original private rented sector offer then the re-application duty will still apply.

18.19 Given the two year re-application duty, housing authorities are advised to keep the household circumstances under review as they approach the expiry of the 12 month tenancy so they can help actively prevent homelessness wherever possible.

18.20 If the applicant is found to have become homeless intentionally but does have a priority need, the housing authority must secure short-term accommodation for the applicant under section 190(2)(a) for such period as they consider will give them a reasonable opportunity of securing accommodation.

Referrals to another housing authority

18.21 Housing authorities should note that the section 193(2) duty on re-application will apply regardless of whether or not the housing authority receiving the re-application is the same housing authority that arranged the private rented sector offer. This means that the housing authority receiving the re-application cannot simply refer the applicant to the housing authority which made the private rented sector offer but must first carry out investigations to determine whether the applicant is eligible and homeless through no fault of their own, under section 195A. It is for the receiving housing authority to establish whether the applicant has become homeless unintentionally. Once established, this matter cannot be reopened.

18.22 Once the receiving housing authority has established that the applicant is unintentionally homeless and eligible for assistance, they may refer the applicant to the housing authority that made the private rented sector offer. The conditions for referral of the case to the other housing authority are met once it has been established that the re-application has been made within two years and neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant will be at risk of violence, in the district of the other housing authority. The term ‘violence’ should not be given a restrictive meaning, and ‘domestic violence’ should be understood to include physical violence, threatening or intimidating behaviour, and any other form of abuse which directly or indirectly may give rise to harm; between persons who are, or have been, intimate partners, family members or members of the same household, regardless of gender identity or sexual orientation.
18.23 The housing authority which made the private rented sector offer will owe the reapplication duty and it will be their responsibility to secure accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant. Housing authorities are expected to respond quickly to referrals and requests for information.

18.24 Housing authorities are reminded to consider the conditions for referral of a case to another housing authority as set out under section 198(2ZA). For further guidance on referrals to another housing authority see Chapter 10 and risk of domestic abuse see Chapter 21.

18.25 Referrals regarding re-applications are not subject to any consideration of local connection.

When re-application does not apply

18.26 The provisions under section 195A do not apply in a restricted case. Additionally, these provisions do not apply in a case where the applicant has previously made a re-application which resulted in their being owed the duty under section 193(2) by virtue of section 195A(1) This effectively means that an applicant can only be owed the re-application duty once following each private rented sector offer. For further guidance on restricted cases see Chapter 7.

Interim duty to accommodate

18.27 Under section 188(1A), if the housing authority have reason to believe that the re-application duty may apply, they must secure interim accommodation for the applicant regardless of whether or not they have a priority need.

18.28 Housing authorities should note that the duty under section 188(1A) will apply regardless of whether the housing authority receiving the re-application is the same authority that arranged the private rented sector offer.

Notifications to applicants

18.29 Housing authorities are required to provide written notifications to applicants of certain decisions reached in relation to their applications under Part 7. In all cases notifications should be clearly written in plain language, and include information about the right to request a review and the timescales that apply. Housing authorities might also include information about independent advice services available to the applicant. In cases where the applicant may have difficulty understanding the implications of the decision, it is recommended that housing authorities consider arranging for a member of staff to provide and explain the notification in person.

18.30 Written notification not received by the applicant can be treated as having been given to them, if it is made available at the housing authority’s office for a reasonable period that would allow it to be collected by the applicant or by someone acting on their behalf.

Combining notifications

18.31 There will be circumstances in which more than one notification will be required at the same time and it will be more practicable to combine the necessary information within one notification letter. Housing authorities will need to take particular care to ensure the information provided to the applicant is clear and comprehensive, and that they are made aware of review rights in respect of each of the decisions about which they are being notified.

Notification on decisions about duties owed section 184(3)

18.32 If a housing authority has reason to believe that a person applying for assistance may be homeless or threatened with homelessness, the housing authority must make such inquiries as are necessary to satisfy itself whether the applicant is eligible for assistance and if so, whether any duty, and if so what duty, is owed to that person under Part 7 of the 1996 Act. When a housing authority has completed its inquiries it must notify the applicant in writing of its decisions.

18.33 Where a decision is against the applicant’s interests the notification must explain clearly and fully the reasons for the decision. In cases where contradictory factual accounts are put before the housing authority, and it prefers one account to another, the decisions letter should explain why a particular account was preferred.

Notification bringing duties to an end

18.34 Housing authorities can give notice to the applicant bringing their duties to an end at each stage. The conditions and requirements for these notifications are set out separately under each provision.

18.35 A notice bringing duties to an end must explain why the housing authority are giving the notice and its effect, and inform the applicant that they have a right to request a review of the authority’s decision to give the notice and of the time within which such a request must be made. For further guidance on how and when the prevention and relief duties can be ended and on issuing notices in cases of an applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate see Chapter 14.

CHAPTER 19: REVIEW OF DECISIONS AND APPEALS TO THE COUNTY COURT

19.1 This chapter provides guidance on the procedures to be followed when an applicant requests the housing authority to review any decision on their case.

Right to request a review

19.2 Applicants have the right to request the housing authority review their decisions on homelessness cases in some circumstances. If the request is made in accordance with section 202 the housing authority, or housing authorities, concerned must review the relevant decision.

19.3 Under section 202(1) an applicant has the right to request a review of a housing authority's decision:

- (a) of their eligibility for assistance (section 202(1)(a));
- (b) what duty (if any) is owed to them in relation to the duties owed to persons found to be homeless or threatened with homelessness (section 202(1)(b));
- (c) of the steps the housing authority are to take under section 195(2) which includes having regard to their assessment of the applicants case in the personalised housing plan at the prevention duty (section 202(1)(bc)(i));
- (d) to give notice to bring the prevention duty to an end (section 202(1)(bc)(iii));
- (e) of the steps the housing authority are to take under section 189B(2) which includes having regard to their assessment of the applicant’s case in the personalised housing plan at the relief duty (section 202(1)(ba)(ii));
- (f) to give notice under section 193B(2) in cases of deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate (section 202(1)(bb));
- (h) to notify their case to another authority under section 198(1) (i.e. a decision to refer the applicant at the main housing duty, to another housing authority because they consider that the conditions for referral are met) (section 202(1)(c));
- (i) under section 198(5) as to whether the conditions are met for the referral of their case to another housing authority at the relief duty or main housing duty (including a decision reached either by agreement between the notifying and notified authority, or taken by a person appointed under the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1578) where agreement cannot be reached) (section 202(1)(d));
- (j) under section 200(3) (i.e. where a decision is made that the conditions for referral are not met and so the notifying housing authority owe the sec-

A decision 193 main housing duty) or a decision under section 200(4) (i.e., a decision that the conditions for referral to a notified authority in Wales are met and the notified authority owe the section 193 main housing duty) (section 202(1)(e));

(k) as to the suitability of accommodation offered to the applicant under any of the provisions in paragraph (b) or (j) above or the suitability of accommodation offered under section 193(7) in relation to allocations under Part 6 [section 202(1)(f)]. Applicants can request a review of the suitability of accommodation whether or not they have accepted the offer (section 202(1B));

(l) as to the suitability of accommodation offered to the applicant by way of a private rented sector offer under section 193 (section 202(1)(g)); or,

(m) as to the suitability of accommodation offered to the applicant by way of a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer under section 193A or 193C (section 202(1)(h)). Applicants can request a review of the suitability of accommodation whether or not they have accepted the offer.

19.4 An applicant must request a review before the end of the period of 21 days beginning with the day on which they are notified of the housing authority’s decision. The housing authority may specify, in writing, a longer period during which a review may be requested.

19.5 In reviewing a decision, housing authorities will need to have regard to any information relevant to the period before the decision was made (even if only obtained afterwards) as well as any new relevant information obtained since the decision.

19.6 In the case of (i) above (a decision on whether the conditions are met for the referral of the applicant’s case to another housing authority) the request for a review must be made to the notifying authority.

19.7 There is no right to request a review of a decision reached on an earlier review.

The Review Procedures Regulations

19.8 The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Review Procedures) Regulations 1999 (SI 1999 No.71) have been revoked and replaced by The Homelessness (Review Procedure etc.) Regulations 2018. These regulations set out the procedures to be followed by housing authorities in carrying out reviews under Part 7.

Who may carry out the review

19.9 A review may be carried out by the housing authority itself which made the original decision or by someone acting as an agent of the housing authority. For further guidance on contracting out homelessness functions see Chapter 5.

Where the review is to be carried out by an officer of the housing authority, the officer must not have been involved in the original decision, and they must be senior to the officer (or officers) who took that decision. Seniority for these purposes means seniority in rank or grade within the housing authority’s organisational structure. The seniority provision does not apply where a committee or sub-committee of elected members took the original decision.

19.10 The same officer is able to carry out multiple reviews relating to a single case as long as they were not involved in the original decisions.

19.11 Where the decision under review is a joint decision by a notifying housing authority and the notified housing authority as to whether the conditions of referral of a case are satisfied, section 202(4) requires that the review should be carried out jointly by the two housing authorities.

19.12 Where the decision under review was taken by a person appointed by the notifying and notified authority, the review of that decision must also be carried out by a person appointed by the two authorities (see paragraph 19.25).

Written representations

19.13 An applicant is not required to provide grounds or reasons for challenging the housing authority’s decision in their request for review, but should be invited to do so.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

The purpose of this is to invite the applicant to state their grounds for requesting a review (if they have not already done so) and to elicit any new information and particular issues that the applicant may have in relation to their request for a review.

19.14 Regulation 5 requires the housing authority to notify the applicant that they, or someone acting on their behalf, may make written representations in connection with the request for a review.

19.15 Regulation 5 also provides that the housing authority must notify the applicant that if they chose to make written representations where the request for review relates to:

(a) the steps the housing authority is to take under sections 195(2) and 189B(2) which includes having regard to their assessment of the applicants' case in the personalised housing plan (during the prevention or relief duty) (section 202(1)(ba)(i) or (bc)(i)); or,
(b) a notice bringing the prevention duty to an end (including where the reason for this is deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate) (section 202(1)(bc)(ii) and (bb));

The representations must be made to the housing authority within two weeks from the day on which the applicant requested the review. The regulations provide that this two week period is open to be extended to a longer period if the applicant and reviewing authority agree in writing.

19.16 Applicants should already have been provided with copies of their assessments and personalised housing plan which they will be able to share with any legal representatives. Housing authorities should provide further copies or any further information requested as quickly as possible to minimise delays.

19.17 Where the request for a review falls outside of the decisions listed under 19.15, written representations should be made within a reasonable period to allow sufficient time for the housing authority to respond to the review within the prescribed timeframe (see paragraph 19.23).

19.18 The housing authority must also notify the applicant of the procedure to be followed in connection with the review (if this information has not been provided earlier).

19.19 Regulation 5 also provides that:

(a) where the original decision was made jointly by the notifying and notified housing authorities under section 198(5), the notification should be made by the notifying housing authority; and,
(b) where the original decision was made by a person appointed in accordance to the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1578), the notification should be made by the person appointed to carry out the review.

Oral hearings

19.20 Regulation 7 provides that in cases where a review has been requested, if the housing authority, authorities or person carrying out the review consider that there is a deficiency or irregularity in the original decision, or in the manner in which it was made, but they are minded nonetheless to make a decision that is against the applicant's interests on one or more issues, they should notify the applicant:

(a) that they are so minded and the reasons why; and,
(b) that the applicant, or someone acting on their behalf, may, within a reasonable period, make oral representations, further written representations, or both oral and written representations.

19.21 Such deficiencies or irregularities would include:

(a) failure to take into account relevant considerations and to ignore irrelevant ones;
(b) failure to base the decision on the facts;
(c) bad faith or dishonesty;
19.22 The reviewer must consider whether there is ‘something lacking’ in the decision, i.e. were any significant issues not addressed or addressed inadequately, which could have led to unfairness. An original decision could subsequently be rendered deficient because of intervening events which occurred between the date of the original decision and the review decision.

Period during which review must be completed

19.23 Regulation 9 provides that the period within which the applicant (or the applicant’s authorised agent) must be notified of the decision on a review is:

- three weeks from the day of the request for a review, or three weeks from the day on which representations are received, where the original decision falls within section 202(1)(ba)(i), (bc), or section 202(1)(bb) and the effect of the notice is to bring the prevention duty to an end;
- eight weeks from the day of the request for a review, where the original decision falls within section 202(1)(a), (b), (ba)(ii), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), or section 202(1)(bb) and the effect of the notice is to bring the relief duty to an end;
- ten weeks, where the original decision falls within section 202(1)(d) and was made jointly by two housing authorities under section 198(5) (a decision on whether the conditions for referral are met);
- twelve weeks, where the original decision falls within section 202(1)(d) and it was taken by a person appointed by the notifying authority and the notified authority in accordance with the Schedule to the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order (SI 1998 No.1578).

The regulations provide that in all of these cases it is open to the reviewing authority to seek the applicant’s agreement to an extension of the prescribed period. Any such agreement must be given in writing.

Late representations

19.24 The regulations require the reviewer(s) to consider any written representations received subject to compliance with the requirement to notify the applicant of the decision on review within the period of the review, i.e. the period prescribed in the regulations or any extended period agreed in writing between the applicant and housing authority. It may in some circumstances be necessary to make further enquiries of the applicant about information they have provided. The reviewer(s) should be flexible about allowing such further exchanges, having regard to the time limits for reviews prescribed in the regulations. If this leads to significant delays, the applicant may be approached to agree an extension in the period for the review. Similarly, if an applicant has been invited to make oral representations and this requires additional time to arrange, the applicant should be asked to agree an appropriate extension.

Procedures for reviews of section 198(5) decisions made by an appointed person 19.25 Where the original decision under section 198(5) was made by a person appointed in accordance with the Schedule to the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1578), regulation 6 requires that a review must be carried out by a person appointed by the notifying authority and the notified authority. If the authorities are unable to reach agreement on an appointed person, and where the review is of the original decision on whether the conditions for referral of a case under section 198(1) are met, the review must be carried out by a person appointed from the panel by the chair of the Local Government Association (LGA), or their nominee.

19.26 The appointed person must not be the same person as the person who made the original decision and they must comply with the relevant procedures set out in the regulations. Specifically, they must invite written representations from the applicant and send copies of these to the two housing authorities, inviting them to respond. The reviewer is also required to notify in writing the two housing authorities of their decision on review and the reasons for it at least a week before the end of the prescribed period of twelve weeks (or of any extended period agreed with the applicant). This allows the housing authorities adequate time to notify the applicant of the decision before expiry of the period.

19.27 Paragraphs (2) – (4) of regulation 6 set out the procedure to be followed when the notifying and notified authority are unable to appoint a person to carry out a review by agreement. These provisions currently apply to decisions on notifications under section 198(1) at the point of the main housing duty. However local authorities are encouraged to also follow these arrangements in relation to the review of decisions on notifications under section 198(A1).

19.28 Paragraphs (2) – (4) of regulation 6 set out that if the two housing authorities fail to appoint a person to carry out the review within five working days of the date of the request for a review, the notifying housing authority must request the chair of the LGA or their nominee to appoint a person from the panel. The chair, in turn, must within seven days of that request appoint a person from the panel to undertake the review. The housing authorities are required to provide the reviewer with the reasons for the original decision, and the information on which that decision is based, within five working days of their appointment.

Notification of decision on review

19.29 Section 203 requires a housing authority to notify the applicant in writing of their decision on the review. The authority must also notify the applicant of the reasons for their decision where it:

(a) confirms the original decision on any issue against the interests of the applicant;
(b) confirms a previous decision to notify another housing authority under section 198(1) (referred to as the conditions for referral in section 198 (referred to as the conditions for referral in section 198) ); or,
(c) confirms a previous decision that the conditions for referral in section 198 (referred to as the conditions for referral in section 198) are met in the applicant’s case.

19.30 Where the review is carried out jointly by two housing authorities under section 198(5), or by a person appointed in accordance to the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1578), the notification may be made by either of the two housing authorities concerned.

19.31 At this stage, the housing authority making the notification must advise the applicant of their right to appeal to the County Court under section 204 against a review decision on a point of law, and of the period in which to appeal.

Powers to accommodate pending a review

19.32 Under section 188(2A), where an applicant refuses a final accommodation offer or a final Part 6 offer in the relief stage and requests a review under section 202(1)(b) of the housing authority’s decision as to the suitability of the accommodation offered, the relief duty to the applicant continues to apply despite section 193A(2), and the housing authority must continue to provide interim accommodation for applicants in priority need until the decision on the review has been notified to the applicant.

19.33 Sections 188(3), 199A(6) and 200(5) give housing authorities powers to secure accommodation for certain applicants pending the decision on a review. For further guidance on powers to secure accommodation see Chapter 15.

Prevention and relief activity following a review decision

19.34 In circumstances where the outcome of one of the following decisions are in the applicants favour, review officers are recommended to use their discretion to assess the impact of the failure across the whole period of the relevant duty and make recommendations which seek to remedy this:

(a) the decision on reasonable steps in the personalised housing plan; or,
(b) the decision to issue a notice bringing the prevention or relief duties to an end.

19.35 For example, if an applicant’s personalised housing plan was completed 3 days after the start of the prevention or relief duty and a review found that steps were unreasonable, the review officer may recommend that the authority work with the applicant to agree new steps and resume prevention or relief activity for a further 53 days.

19.36 Where an applicant requests a review of the authority’s decision as to whether the conditions are met for the referral of their case to another housing authority at the relief stage the relief duty will rest with the notified authority whilst the review is conducted. If the review officer decides that the conditions for referral were not met and that the applicant should not have been referred to another housing authority, they are encouraged to make recommendations based on the following considerations:

(a) the reasonable wishes of the applicant;
(b) the relief activity that has taken place to date by both or either authorities;
(c) how relevant this activity is in the geographical context of the notifying authority given the successful review decision; and,
(d) whether the applicant is in priority need and therefore if they should directly proceed to the main duty after the 56 day period.

Appeals to the County Court

19.37 Section 204 provides an applicant who has requested a section 202 review with the right of appeal on a point of law to the County Court if:

(a) they are dissatisfied with the decision on a review; or,
(b) they are not notified of the decision on the review within the time prescribed in regulations made under section 203.

19.38 An appeal must be brought by an applicant within 21 days of:

(a) the date on which they are notified of the decision on review; or,
(b) the date on which they should have been notified (i.e. the date marking the end of the period for the review prescribed in the regulations, or any extended period agreed in writing by the applicant).

19.39 The court may give permission for an appeal to be brought after 21 days, but only where it is satisfied that:

(a) (where permission is sought within the 21 day period), there is good reason for the applicant to be unable to bring the appeal in time; or,
(b) (where permission is sought after the 21 day period has expired), there was a good reason for the applicant’s failure to bring the appeal in time and for any delay in applying for permission.

19.40 On an appeal, the County Court is empowered to make an order confirming, quashing or varying the housing authority’s decision as it thinks fit. It is important, therefore, that housing authorities have in place review procedures that are robust, fair, and transparent.

Power to accommodate pending an appeal to the County Court

19.41 Section 204(4) gives housing authorities the power to accommodate certain applicants during the period for making an appeal, and pending determination of the appeal and any subsequent appeal. For further guidance on powers to secure accommodation see Chapter 15.

Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman

19.42 Applicants may complain to the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman if they consider that they have been caused injustice as a result of maladministra-

A2.3 England: Homelessness

tion in relation to their application for assistance under Part 7 by a housing authority. The Ombudsman may investigate the way a decision has been made, but may not question the merits of a decision properly reached. For example, maladministration would occur where a housing authority:

(a) took too long to do something;
(b) did not follow their own rules or the law;
(c) broke their promises;
(d) treated the applicant unfairly; or,
(e) gave the applicant the wrong information.

19.43 There are some matters an Ombudsman cannot investigate. These include:

(a) matters the applicant knew about more than twelve months before they wrote to the Ombudsman or to a councillor, unless the Ombudsman considers it reasonable to investigate despite the delay;
(b) matters about which the applicant has already taken court action against the housing authority, for example, an appeal to the County Court under section 204; and,
(c) matters about which the applicant could go to court, unless the Ombudsman considers there are good reasons why the applicant could not reasonably be expected to do so.

19.44 Where there is a right of review, and/or a complaints procedure within the housing authority, the Ombudsman would expect an applicant to pursue their rights through these arrangements before making a complaint. If there is any doubt about whether the Ombudsman can look into a complaint, the applicant should seek advice from the Ombudsman’s office.

CHAPTER 20: PROTECTION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

20.1 This chapter provides guidance on the duty and powers housing authorities have to protect the personal property of an applicant.

20.2 Under section 211(1) and (2), where a housing authority has become subject to a duty to an applicant under specified provisions of Part 7 and it has reason to believe that:

(a) there is a danger of loss of, or damage to, the applicant’s personal property;
(b) because the applicant is unable to protect it or deal with it; and,
(c) no other suitable arrangements have been, or are being, made, then, whether or not the housing authority is still subject to such a duty, it must take reasonable steps to prevent the loss of, or to prevent or mitigate damage to, any personal property of the applicant.

20.3 The specified provisions are:

(a) section 188 (interim duty to accommodate);
(b) section 189B (initial duty owed to all eligible persons who are homeless); and,
(c) section 190, section 193 or section 195 (duties to persons found to be homeless or threatened with homelessness); or section 200 (duties to an applicant whose case is considered for referral or is referred).

20.4 In all other circumstances, housing authorities have a power to take any steps they consider reasonable to protect in the same way, an applicant’s personal property (section 211(3)).

20.5 Section 212 makes provisions supplementing section 211. For the purposes of both section 211 and section 212, the personal property of an applicant includes the personal property of any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with them (section 211(5)) and section 212(6)).

20.6 A danger of loss or damage to personal property means that there is a likelihood of harm, not just that harm is a possibility. Applicants may be unable to protect their property if, for example, they are ill or are unable to afford to have it stored themselves.
20.7 Under section 212(1), in order to protect an applicant’s personal property, a housing authority can enter, at all reasonable times, the applicant’s current or former home, and deal with the property in any way which seems reasonably necessary.

20.8 Where a housing authority does take steps to protect personal property it must take reasonable care of it and deliver it to the owner when reasonably requested to do so. Housing authorities may find it helpful to take a log of the applicant’s personal property as part of this process.

20.9 The applicant can request the housing authority to move their property to a particular location. If the housing authority considers that the request is reasonable, they may discharge their responsibilities under section 211 by doing as the applicant asks. Where such a request is met, the housing authority will have no further duty or power to protect the applicant’s property, and it must inform the applicant of this consequence before complying with the request (section 212(2)).

20.10 Housing authorities may impose conditions on the assistance they provide (section 211(4)). Conditions may include making a reasonable charge for storage of property and reserving the right to dispose of property in certain circumstances specified by the housing authority – e.g. if the applicant loses touch with them and cannot be traced after a certain period (section 211(4)).

20.11 Where a request to move personal property to another location is either not made or not carried out, the duty or power to take any action under section 211 ends when the housing authority believes there is no longer any danger of loss or damage to the property because of the applicant’s inability to deal with or protect it (section 212(3)). This may be the case, for example, where an applicant recovers from illness or finds accommodation where they are able to place their possessions, or becomes able to afford the storage costs themselves. However, where the housing authority has discharged the duty under section 211 by placing property in storage, it has a discretionary power to continue to keep the property in storage. Where it does so, any conditions imposed by the housing authority continue to apply and may be modified as necessary.

20.12 Where the housing authority ceases to be under a duty, or ceases to have a power, to protect an applicant’s personal property under section 211, it must notify the applicant of this and give the reasons for it. The notification must be delivered to the applicant or sent to the applicant’s last known address (section 212(5)). For further guidance on notifications see Chapter 18.

CHAPTER 21: DOMESTIC ABUSE

21.1 This chapter provides guidance on providing homelessness services to people who have experienced domestic violence or abuse, or are at risk of domestic violence or abuse.

Understanding domestic violence and abuse

21.2 Domestic violence or abuse is ‘domestic’ in nature if the perpetrator is a person who is associated with the victim. It is not limited to physical violence or confined to instances within the home.

21.3 Housing authorities must take account of the cross-government definition of domestic violence and abuse when designing and delivering services. This defines domestic violence and abuse as:

21.4 Any incident or pattern of incidents of controlling, coercive, threatening behaviour, violence or abuse between those aged 16 or over who are, or have been, intimate partners or family members regardless of gender. The abuse can encompass, but is not limited to:

(a) psychological - including; intimidation, insults, isolating the person from friends and family, criticising, denying the abuse, treating the person as inferior, threatening to harm children or take them away, forced marriage;

(b) physical - this can include: shaking, smacking, punching, kicking, presence of finger or bite marks, bruising, starving, tying up, stabbing, suffocation, throwing things, using objects as weapons, female genital mutilation. Physical effects are often in areas of the body that are covered and hidden (i.e. breasts, legs and stomach);
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(c) sexual – including rape (including the threat of rape), sexual assault, forced prostitution, ignoring religious prohibitions about sex, refusal to practise safe sex, sexual insults, passing on sexually transmitted diseases, preventing breastfeeding;

(d) financial - not letting the person work, undermining efforts to find work or study, refusing to give money, asking for an explanation of how every penny is spent, making the person beg for money, gambling, not paying bills, building up debt in the other person's name;

(e) emotional -- including: swearing, undermining confidence, making racist, sexist or other derogatory remarks, making the person feel unattractive, calling the person stupid or useless, eroding the person's independence, keeping them isolated from family or friends.

21.5 Controlling behaviour is a range of acts designed to make a person subordinate and/or dependent by isolating them from sources of support, exploiting their resources and capacities for personal gain, depriving them of the means needed for independence, resistance and escape and regulating their everyday behaviour.

21.6 Coercive behaviour is an act or a pattern of acts of assault, threats, humiliation and intimidation or other abuse that is used to harm, punish, or frighten their victim.

21.7 So-called honour-based abuse is also a form of domestic abuse, explained by the perpetrator of the abuse on the grounds that it was committed as a consequence of the need to protect or defend the honour of the family; it can include all the types of abuse listed above and specific crimes such as forced marriage and female genital mutilation.

21.8 Domestic violence and abuse can affect anyone regardless of their age, gender identity or reassignment, race, religion, class, sexual orientation and marital status. Housing authorities should bear in mind that the provisions of the Equality Act 2010 for public authorities apply to policies, practice and procedures relating to homelessness and domestic violence and abuse.

21.9 An important factor in ensuring that an authority develops a strong and appropriate response to domestic abuse is understanding what domestic abuse is, the context in which it takes place in and the impacts are on victims; as well as how the impacts may be different on different groups of people. Specialist training for staff and managers will help them to provide a more sensitive response and to identify, with applicants, housing options which are safe and appropriate to their needs.

Identifying abuse and preventing homelessness

21.10 Housing authorities should have policies in place to identify and respond to domestic abuse. Alongside their role in tackling homelessness authorities should take an active role in identifying victims and referring them for help and support. They are key partners in local domestic violence partnerships and should be represented at their local multi-agency risk assessment conference (MARAC).

21.11 The MARAC leads multi-agency safety planning for high-risk victims of domestic abuse. It brings together the police, independent domestic violence advisers, children's social services, health, social landlords and other relevant agencies. They share information and write a safety plan for each victim and family, which may include actions by any agency present. The housing authority should be consistently represented at the MARAC and encourage relevant social landlords to also be represented.

21.12 Victims can experience many incidents of abuse before calling the police or reporting it to another agency. Housing providers may be able to identify abuse at earlier stages and should consider how they can best provide support to their residents. By understanding the indicators of domestic abuse through training and professional development, housing officers can increase their confidence to speak to people experiencing abuse, risk assess and safety plan alongside them.

21.13 Housing authorities should also be alert to the wider role they play in ensuring victim safety. Procedures should be in place to keep all information on victims safe and secure. In many cases, particularly where extended family members or multiple perpetrators may be involved, for example in female genital mutilation, forced marriage and so called honour based violence cases, perpetrators go to great lengths to seek information on victims.

21.14 The housing authority must be alert to the possibility of employees being, or having links to, perpetrators. Housing authorities should not disclose information about an applicant to anybody outside the organisation without consent, and should be particularly alert to the need to maintain confidentiality wherever domestic abuse is involved. In some circumstances, it may be necessary to restrict access to cases where abuse is disclosed to only named members of staff. Housing authorities should also consider how they flag case files so they can identify those victims who have been referred to the MARAC and may present as homeless.

21.15 Households at risk of domestic abuse often have to leave their homes and the area where they have lived. There is a clear need for victims of abuse and their children to be able to travel to different areas in order for them to be safe from the perpetrator, and housing authorities should extend the same level of support to those from other areas as they do to their own residents.

Duties to those homeless or threatened with homelessness

21.16 Section 177(1) of the 1996 Act provides that it is not reasonable for a person to continue to occupy accommodation if it is probable that this will lead to domestic violence or other violence against:

(a) the applicant;
(b) a person who normally resides as a member of the applicant’s family;
(c) any other person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

21.17 Section 177(1A) provides that ‘violence’ means violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out. ‘Domestic violence’ is violence or threats of violence which are likely to be carried out by a person who is associated with the victim. Domestic violence is not confined to instances within the home.

21.18 In the context of defining domestic violence, section 178 provides that, for the purposes of Part 7 of the 1996 Act, a person is associated with another if:

(a) they are, or have been, married to each other;
(b) they are, or have been civil partners of each other;
(c) they are, or have been, cohabitants;
(d) they live, or have lived, in the same household;
(e) they are relatives, i.e. father, mother, stepfather, stepmother, son, daughter, stepson, stepdaughter, grandmother, grandfather, grandson, granddaughter, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, niece or nephew (whether of full blood, or of half blood or by marriage or civil partnership) of that person or of that person’s spouse or former spouse. A person is also included if they would fall into any of these categories in relation to cohabitees or former cohabitees if they were married to each other;
(f) they have agreed to marry each other, whether or not that agreement has been terminated;
(g) they have entered into a civil partnership agreement between them, whether or not that agreement has been terminated;
(h) in relation to a child, each of them is a parent of the child or has, or has had, parental responsibility for the child (within the meaning of the Children Act 1989). A child is a person under 18 years of age;
(i) if a child has been adopted or ‘freed for adoption’ (section 18 of the Adoption Act 1996), two persons are also associated if one is the natural parent or grandparent of the child and the other is the child or a person who has become the parent by virtue of an ‘adoption order’ (section 72(1), Adoption Act 1976) or has applied for an adoption order or someone with whom the child has at any time been placed for adoption.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

21.19 The term ‘violence’ should not be given a restrictive meaning, and ‘domestic violence’ should be understood to include physical violence, threatening or intimidating behaviour, and any other form of abuse which directly or indirectly may give rise to harm; between persons who are, or have been, intimate partners, family members or members of the same household, regardless of gender identity or sexual orientation.

21.20 An assessment of the likelihood of a threat of violence or abuse being carried out should not be based on whether there has been actual violence or abuse in the past. Assessments must be based on the facts of the case and should be devoid of any value judgements about what an applicant should or should not do, or should or should not have done, to mitigate the risk of any violence and abuse.

21.21 It is essential that inquiries do not provoke further violence and abuse. Housing authorities should not approach the alleged perpetrator, since this could generate further violence and abuse. Housing authorities may, however, wish to seek information from friends and relatives of the applicant, social services, health professionals, MARACs, a domestic abuse support service or the police, as appropriate. This is not an exhaustive list and there may be other sources of evidence that would be appropriate. In some cases, corroborative evidence of actual or threatened violence may not be available, for example, because there were no adult witnesses and/or the applicant was too frightened or ashamed to report incidents to family, friend or the police. Housing authorities should not have a blanket approach toward domestic abuse which requires corroborative or police evidence to be provided.

21.22 There may be occasions where victims of abuse seek emergency assistance having left behind ID and other documentation that may be required to support their application. Housing authorities should work with police; domestic abuse agencies (as appropriate) and the applicant to ensure that essential documentation can be recovered or replaced without putting the applicant at further risk of abuse.

21.23 In many cases involving violence and abuse, the applicant may be in considerable distress and an officer trained in dealing with the particular circumstances should conduct the interview. Applicants should be given the option of being interviewed by an officer of the same sex if they so wish. Housing authorities should be aware that this may be the first time a victim has disclosed their abuse and that the period during which a victim is planning or making their exit is often the most dangerous time for them and any children they have.

21.24 The following services are among those subject to the duty to refer, meaning they are required to refer service users in England they consider may be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days to a housing authority, with the service user’s consent:

(a) emergency departments;
(b) urgent treatment centres;
(c) hospitals in their function of providing in patient care; and,
(d) adults and children’s social care services.

For further guidance on the duty to refer see Chapter 4.

Prevention and relief duties

21.25 Following an application for assistance under Part 7 of the 1996 Act, whether an applicant is threatened with homelessness or is actually homeless will be a matter for the housing authority to assess taking into account all of the relevant circumstances. For example, a person at risk of domestic violence or abuse may be threatened with homelessness because a perpetrator is soon to be released from custody (and so the person is likely to become homeless within 56 days); but would be actually homeless if the perpetrator was in the community and presented a risk to them at their home (and so it is not reasonable for the person to continue to occupy the accommodation).

21.26 When developing a personalised housing plan the housing authority should be particularly sensitive to an applicant’s wishes and respectful of their judgement about the risk of abuse, unless there is evidence to the contrary. For further guidance on assessments and personalised housing plans see Chapter 11. Victims should be allowed sufficient time and space to absorb and understand the options available to them.

21.27 The reasonable steps that a housing authority might take to help an applicant to retain or secure safe accommodation might include provision of sanctuary scheme or other security measures, assistance to find alternative accommodation, or help to access legal remedies such as injunctions where these might be effective. Single people might also be assisted to access supported housing, or helped to gain more support from family and friends through the intervention of the housing authority.

21.28 Sanctuary schemes can prevent homelessness by enabling victims to remain safely in their home where it is their choice, and it is safe to do so. A sanctuary comprises enhanced security measures in the home which delay or prevent a perpetrator from gaining entry into and within a property, and allow time for the police to arrive. Use of sanctuary is not appropriate if the perpetrator lives at, or retains a legal right to enter the home, or if the victim continues to be at risk in the vicinity around the home.

21.29 Housing authorities may wish to inform applicants of the option of seeking an injunction against the perpetrator. Where applicants wish to pursue this option, authorities should inform them that they should seek legal advice and that they may be eligible for legal aid.

21.30 Housing authorities should recognise that injunctions ordering a person not to molest (non-molestation orders), or not to live in the home or enter the surrounding area (occupation orders) may not be effective in deterring some perpetrators from carrying out further violence, abuse or incursions, and applicants may not have confidence in their effectiveness. Consequently, applicants should not be expected to return home on the strength of an injunction. To ensure applicants who have experienced actual or threatened violence get the support they need, authorities should inform them of appropriate specialist organisations in the area as well as agencies offering counselling and support.

21.31 When dealing with domestic violence and abuse within the home, where the authority is the landlord, housing authorities should consider the scope for evicting the perpetrator and allowing the victim to remain in their home. However, where there would be a probability of violence if the applicant continued to occupy their present accommodation, the housing authority must treat the applicant as homeless and should not expect them to remain in, or return to, the accommodation. In all cases involving violence the safety of the applicant and their household should be the primary consideration at all stages of decision making as to whether or not the applicant remains in their own home.

Assessing priority need

21.32 A person has a priority need if they are vulnerable as a result of having to leave accommodation because of violence from another person, or threats of violence from another person that are likely to be carried out. (Article 6, Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002).

21.33 It is not only domestic violence and abuse that is relevant, but all forms of violence, including racially motivated violence or threats of violence likely to be carried out. In assessing whether it is likely that threats of violence are likely to be carried out, a housing authority should only take into account the probability of violence, and not actions which the applicant could take (such as injunctions against the perpetrators).

21.34 In considering whether applicants are vulnerable as a result of leaving accommodation because of violence or threats of violence likely to be carried out, a housing authority may wish to take into account the following factors:

(a) the nature of the violence or threats of violence (there may have been a single but significant incident or a number of incidents over an extended period of time which have had a cumulative effect);

(b) the impact and likely effects of the violence or threats of violence on the applicant’s current and future wellbeing;

(i) whether the applicant has any existing support networks, particularly by way of family or friends; and,
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(ii) the continuing threat from the perpetrator.

For further guidance on priority need see Chapter 8.

Providing suitable accommodation

21.35 There are a number of accommodation options for victims of domestic abuse, and housing authorities will need to consider which are most appropriate for each person on a case by case basis taking into account their circumstances and needs. This may include safe temporary accommodation and/or a managed transfer. Housing authorities may, for example, provide temporary accommodation whilst action is taken to exclude or to arrest and detain a perpetrator. Opportunities to plan for victims to remain or return to their homes are much improved by housing authorities working with partners in the MARAC to reduce risk.

21.36 For victims at risk from highly dangerous perpetrators, refuges will usually be the most appropriate choice. Refuges provide key short term, intensive support for those who flee from abuse. Given the intensity of the support and the vulnerability of the victims, attention should be paid to the length of time they spend in a refuge. Refuges are not simply a substitute for other forms of temporary accommodation. The housing authority should work with the refuge provider to consider how long a person needs to stay before the provision of other accommodation (which may be temporary in the absence of settled accommodation) may be more appropriate, potentially with floating support if needed.

21.37 Account will need to be taken of any social considerations relating to the applicant and their household that might affect the suitability of accommodation offered to them to prevent or relieve homelessness, or under the main housing duty. Any risk of violence or racial harassment in a particular locality should be taken into account. Where domestic violence is involved and the applicant is not able to stay in the current home, housing authorities may need to consider the need for accommodation that would not be found by the perpetrator (which may involve an out of district placement) and which has security measures and appropriately trained staff to protect the occupants. Housing authorities may consider implementing a reciprocal agreement with other housing authorities and providers to facilitate out of area moves for victims of domestic violence and abuse.

Local connection referrals

21.38 A housing authority cannot refer an applicant to another housing authority where they have a local connection if that person or any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with them would be at risk of violence and abuse in that other district. The housing authority is under a positive duty to enquire whether the applicant would be at such a risk and, if they would, it should not be assumed that the applicant will take steps to deal with the threat. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

21.39 Section 198(3) defines violence as violence from another person or threats of violence from another person which are likely to be carried out. Housing authorities should be alert to the deliberate distinction which is made in section 198(3) between actual violence and threatened violence. A high standard of proof of actual violence in the past should not be imposed. The threshold is that there must be:

(a) no risk of domestic violence (actual or threatened) in the other district; and,
(b) no risk of non-domestic violence (actual or threatened) in the other district. Nor should ‘domestic violence’ be interpreted restrictively.

Eligibility

21.40 People who have no recourse to public funds are not generally eligible for homelessness assistance. However, the Destitute Domestic Violence Concession supports those who have entered or stayed in the UK as a spouse, unmarried partner, same-sex or civil partner of a British Citizen, or settled citizen and this relationship has permanently broken down due to domestic violence and abuse. A victim may be eligible if:
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

(a) they came to the UK or were granted leave to stay in the UK as the spouse or partner of a British Citizen or someone settled in the UK;
(b) their relationship has permanently broken down due to domestic violence and abuse.

21.41 They can then apply to the Home Office for limited leave to remain (three months) under the Destitute Domestic Violence Concession to enable them to access public funds and advice, whilst they prepare and submit an application for indefinite leave to remain (or to make alternative arrangements).

CHAPTER 22: CARE LEAVERS

22.1 This chapter provides guidance on specific duties towards care leavers who are homeless or threatened with homelessness. It covers:
(a) corporate parenting duties placed on housing authorities;
(b) joint working arrangements between housing authorities and children’s services authorities;
(c) prevention and relief of homelessness;
(d) assessing whether or not a care leaver has a priority need for accommodation; and,
(e) the provision of suitable accommodation.

Corporate parenting duties

22.2 Local authorities have duties and powers to assist young people who are leaving and have left local authority care. As a corporate parent to all children in care and care leavers all parts of a local authority, including a housing authority, must have regard to the need:
(a) to act in the best interests, and promote the physical and mental health and well-being, of those children and young people;
(b) to encourage those children and young people to express their views, wishes and feelings;
(c) to take into account the views, wishes and feelings of those children and young people;
(d) to help those children and young people gain access to, and make the best use of, services provided by the local authority and its relevant partners;
(e) to promote high aspirations, and seek to secure the best outcomes, for those children and young people;
(f) for those children and young people to be safe, and for stability in their home lives, relationships and education or work; and,
(g) to prepare those children and young people for adulthood and independent living.

Children and Social Work Act 2017 (Part 1, (1(a-g))

22.3 There is a duty on children’s services authorities to appoint a Personal Adviser to provide support to care leavers until they reach their 25th birthday (except where the young person no longer wants a Personal Adviser) (Part 1(3), Children and Social Work Act 2017). The support provided by Personal Advisers should be based on the needs of the young person as set out in their statutory Pathway Plan. This may include support from a housing authority.

22.4 Any joint working arrangements between a children’s services authority and a housing authority for care leavers’ transition to independent living should include ensuring the delivery of effective preparation for independence with planned, sustainable moves into supported or independent accommodation. Local processes and/or practices should not involve care leavers routinely being treated as homeless when care placements come to an end in order to place the housing authority under an obligation to secure accommodation under Part 7 of the 1996 Act.

1461
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Joint working arrangements

22.5 The Secretary of State for Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government and the Secretary of State for Education consider that all young people leaving care should have safe and appropriate accommodation to meet their needs. By working together, housing authorities and children’s services authorities can better ensure that as a corporate parent, the appropriate accommodation and support is available to care leavers.

22.6 Housing authorities, children’s services authorities and other relevant departments within local authorities, are advised to develop joint protocols or procedures to ensure that each department plays a full role in providing corporate parenting support to young people leaving care. In two tier areas all housing authorities in the county should be party to these arrangements.

22.7 A joint protocol should cover arrangements for achieving planned, supportive transitions to independent living; identifying homelessness risk early and acting to prevent it, and providing a quick, safe, joined up response for care leavers who do become homeless.

Advice and information

22.8 Advisory services provided by housing authorities’ under section 179 must be designed to meet the needs of care leavers in their district (section 179(2)(b)). For further guidance on the provision of advice and information on homelessness see Chapter 3. Housing authorities should work with children’s services authorities and consult with care leavers themselves to ensure the advice and information is:

(a) designed and delivered in an appropriate format for the age of the client group;
(b) available through communication channels which care leavers are most likely to access;
(c) understood by children’s services authority staff.

22.9 It is recommended that housing options advice be made available to young people preparing to leave care to help them to make informed choices and avoid becoming homeless. Housing authorities may wish to provide training and information to social workers, Personal Advisers and others who have responsibility to support looked after young people, to ensure that the most up to date and accurate information on housing options is available to them.

Prevention and relief of homelessness

22.10 There is a duty on specified public bodies to refer to a housing authority (with consent) any household which is threatened with homelessness or is homeless within 56 days to a housing authority with the service user’s consent (section 213B). The following services are among those subject to the duty to refer:

(a) social service authorities; and,
(b) custodial institutions, youth offending teams and probation services.

22.11 For further guidance on duty to refer see Chapter 4. Specific referral arrangements should be made for care leavers and set out in the joint protocol or procedures.

22.12 When a young person aged between 18 and 24 approaches directly or is referred to a housing authority, if it is known that they are a care leaver or the young person says they are a care leaver, then the children’s services authority which has responsibility for them should be informed as soon as possible, with consent from the young person.

22.13 Where there is a duty to assess a care leaver’s housing and other support needs and develop a personalised housing plan, arrangements should be in place to enable the Personal Adviser to be involved in the assessment process with the young person’s consent. For further guidance on assessments and personalised housing plans see Chapter 11. Where there is no agreed local working arrangement, or where the young person has been looked after by a children’s services authority which is not part of local
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities A2.3

22.14 Where a care leaver has a personalised housing plan this should be informed, by their Pathway Plan (section 23C(3)(b), Children Act 1989). The Secretary of State for Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government considers it appropriate for housing authorities to involve a young person’s Personal Adviser in assessing their needs and circumstances and developing a personalised housing plan that is appropriate to them. The young person’s consent must be obtained, and it would be advisable to seek their consent for the Personal Adviser to continue to be informed and involved in efforts to prevent or relieve homelessness. The Personal Adviser may also be requested to take actions to deliver the personalised housing plan.

22.15 There are specific legal requirements in relation to local connection for care leavers (section 199(8) to (11). For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

22.16 Subject to arrangements for consent, where a housing authority is concerned that a care leaver may not be co-operating with the required steps set out in the personalised housing plan this should be shared as soon as possible with the Personal Adviser to enable joint early action to remind the young person of the actions to be taken and the consequences of not doing so. For further guidance on deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate see Chapter 14. Joint working to understand mitigating factors and resolve issues should continue throughout any action related to deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate.

22.17 The Secretary of State for Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government considers that all attempts should be made by housing authorities to avoid the impact of intentionally homeless decisions in relation to care leavers aged 18 – 25. For further guidance on intentional homelessness see Chapter 9. It will be a matter for the housing authority to determine whether or not a care leaver has become homeless intentionally, taking into account all relevant facts. To inform this assessment, housing authorities should consult with the relevant children’s services authority and obtain advice and information as to the young person’s emotional and mental well-being, maturity and general ability to understand the impact of their actions.

22.18 The personalised housing plan should be reviewed and, the housing authority and Personal Adviser or other officer should work together with the young person to try and resolve the issues.

22.19 Children’s services authorities have a duty to ‘former relevant’ care leavers in terms of accommodation if there are no other options available and the welfare of the care leaver requires it (section 23C (4c) Children Act 1989).

Assessing priority need

22.20 Section 193 of the 1996 Act requires housing authorities to secure accommodation for applicants who have a priority need, and whose homelessness has not been prevented or relieved.

22.21 Categories and definitions of people who have priority need are set out in Chapter 8, and include young people under 21 who were looked after between the ages of 16 and 18; and people aged 21 or more who are vulnerable as a result of having been looked after, accommodated or fostered. Both of these categories exclude ‘relevant students’, who are owed particular accommodation and support duties under the Children (Leaving Care) Act. It should be noted that a young person who was looked after when aged 16 or 17 will be in priority need when they are 18, 19 or 20 years old, whether or not they qualify for care leaving services from a children’s services authority.

22.22 Guidance on priority need and vulnerability is contained in Chapter 8, and should be taken into account when assessing whether a person aged 21 or over is vulnerable as a result of having been looked after, accommodated or fostered. Factors that a housing authority may wish to consider include:

(a) the length of time that the applicant was looked after, accommodated or fostered;
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(b) the reasons why they were looked after, accommodated or fostered;
(c) the length of time since the applicant left care, and whether they have been able to obtain and maintain accommodation during any of that period;
(d) whether the applicant has any existing support networks, particularly including family, friends or a mentor.

22.23 Housing authorities should take particular care in assessing whether a care leaver aged 21 or over is vulnerable, and should take into account whether, if homeless, they would be at particular risk of exploitation, abuse or involvement in offending behaviour as a result of having been looked after, accommodated or fostered.

Suitable accommodation for care leavers

22.24 Housing authorities and children’s services authorities should adopt a shared strategic approach to the provision of suitable accommodation for care leavers.

22.25 In considering suitability, all authorities should bear in mind that care leavers who are homeless will be particularly vulnerable and in need of support. They may lack skills in managing their affairs and require help with managing their own accommodation and operating a household budget. Many care leavers are likely to lack the advice and support normally available to other young people from family, friends and a mentor.

22.26 There should be no blanket presumption that at 18 a young person who has left care will be ready for their own tenancy; this should be a matter of individual assessment. Options will be based on their individual preferences, needs, circumstances and the local provision available and might include, for example, supported lodgings, supported accommodation or independent accommodation with visiting support.

22.27 Bed and breakfast accommodation, including hotels and nightly let accommodation with shared facilities, is not considered suitable for care leavers aged under 25 and should only be used in exceptional circumstances and for short periods.

22.28 The specific needs and circumstances of care leavers should be taken into account in determining suitability of accommodation in relation to its location. For example, in the absence of strong family support networks they may wish to live as near as possible to another significant adult such as a friend or ex-foster carer; or need to avoid certain locations due to childhood experiences or associations.

22.29 Housing authorities may want to involve Personal Advisers in decisions about the suitability of accommodation and inform them prior to making an offer of accommodation, with the young person’s consent. For further guidance on suitability of accommodation see Chapter 17.

CHAPTER 23: PEOPLE WITH AN OFFENDING HISTORY

23.1 This chapter provides guidance on providing homelessness services to people with an offending history.

23.2 People with an offending history are over represented amongst single people who are homeless and sleep rough, and a lack of accommodation is likely to have a negative impact on prospects for successful resettlement and rehabilitation. Female offenders often have complex needs which affect their access to suitable and sustainable accommodation on release from custody.

23.3 Housing authorities will need to work in collaboration with HM Prisons providers of probation services (National Probation Service (NPS) and Community Rehabilitation Companies (CRCs)), Youth Offending Services, as well as other relevant partners to prevent people leaving custody, or living in the community, from becoming homeless. The duty to refer introduced through the 2017 Act provides an impetus to develop effective referral arrangements and accommodation pathways that involve all relevant agencies to provide appropriate jointly planned help and support to prevent homelessness.

23.4 Housing authorities should work closely with Youth Offending Services and children’s social care services to ensure joint and advanced planning around the needs of young people leaving custody. Particular care should be taken to ensure that young people aged 16-17 and care leavers aged 18-24 do not leave custody without an accommodation plan in place. This will also require cooperation between housing authorities and children’s social care services in advance of release.

23.5 Housing authorities and offender management services (i.e. prisons, youth offending services and probation providers) should work together to ensure the accommodation needs of people leaving custody and those serving their sentence in the community are met. Probation providers have a responsibility to support people under their supervision to reduce reoffending. CRCs and the NPS must provide direct support to help people find accommodation. Housing authorities should continue to work with these agencies, as well as prisons and voluntary sector organisations, to ensure their clients access suitable accommodation.

23.6 The following criminal justice services are subject to the duty to refer, meaning they are required to refer service users in England they consider may be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days to a local housing authority, with the service user’s consent:

(a) prisons (public and private);
(b) young offender institutions;
(c) secure training centres;
(d) secure colleges;
(e) youth offending teams; and,
(f) probation providers (CRCs and NPS).

For further guidance on duty to refer see Chapter 4.

Advice and information

23.7 People with an offending history generally face additional barriers in accessing housing, and therefore will need targeted advice and information to help them to secure accommodation.

23.8 Section 179(2)(a) of the 1996 Act requires authorities to provide information and advice which is designed to meet the needs of people released from prison or youth detention. Advice and information to people with an offending history may be delivered via the housing authority’s website, social media, through leaflets or through dedicated advice services, and will be most effective if developed in consultation or jointly with offender management services in the district (i.e. prisons, youth offending services and probation providers). Housing authorities may also wish to consult with prisoners or people with an offending history before developing resources tailored to their particular needs.

23.9 Advice and information should reflect local circumstances and arrangements but might include:

(a) the support available to people going in to custody which will enable them to retain a tenancy or license, or to surrender it so that rent arrears do not accrue;
(b) housing benefit or universal credit entitlement for people in custody;
(c) tenancy rights and how to protect a tenancy where it is appropriate to do so;
(d) housing options for people leaving custody, including access to the social housing register, supported housing and help available to secure private rented accommodation; and,
(e) support services for people with an offending history that might help them to secure and/or to sustain accommodation on release.

23.10 It is recommended that housing advice be made available to people whilst in custody, and that housing authorities collaborate with prisons from which offenders are released to their districts, together with probation providers, to provide accessible advice on housing options available to them. For further guidance on providing advice and information see Chapter 3.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

Prevention

23.11 Housing authorities should put in place arrangements that will help to prevent people with an offending history from becoming homeless. Policies and partnerships designed to reduce homelessness might include, but not be limited to, the areas set out in 23.12 to 23.15 below.

Preventing loss of accommodation due to offending behaviour:

23.12 Tenants may be at risk of becoming homeless because of their own or others’ anti-social or offending behaviour. Housing authorities should ensure that their housing management procedures include early contact with a tenant who they believe may be responsible for behaviour that could result in their becoming homeless, and that private landlords and private registered providers are encouraged to alert them where tenants are threatened with eviction. Where offender management services continue to be involved with the person they should be alerted of any risk of homelessness, so that joint plans may be put in place to try and prevent homelessness and provide additional support where appropriate.

23.13 Sometimes people with an offending history, and their families, become homeless because it is no longer safe for them to remain in their tenancy. Young people, who become involved in gang related activity, whether as victims or perpetrators, sometimes face particular risks. Housing authorities should work with police, offender managers and specialist services to coordinate activity to minimise risk and prevent homelessness. This will also help reduce re-offending and promote community safety.

Preventing loss of accommodation whilst a person is in custody:

23.14 Prison services and probation providers carry out assessments to identify resettlement needs, including the need for accommodation, at the start of a prisoner’s period in custody. Sentence planning arrangements require plans for resettlement to be reviewed throughout the sentence and appropriate support arranged to meet a person’s needs on leaving custody.

23.15 Assessing an offender’s housing needs at the start of a period in custody will help to identify if assistance is required to end, sustain or transfer an existing tenancy, access welfare support to meet rent costs while in prison, or close down an existing tenancy appropriately. Housing authorities are advised to assist the Prison service and probation providers in providing advice to prisoners and taking action to ensure they can sustain or surrender their accommodation while in custody.

Preventing homelessness on leaving custody:

23.16 If a prisoner is assessed as requiring assistance with accommodation on release, there will usually be sufficient time to consider their options and take action to try and prevent their homelessness. In most cases, but particularly with young people, contact should be made with family to try and support a return home (where safe to do so) if only on a temporary basis. Where a person preparing to leave custody cannot return to family or another safe address, housing authorities should work with the applicant and liaise with offender manager and support services to agree and to deliver reasonable steps to prevent them from becoming homeless on release.

Assessing priority need

23.17 Housing authorities have a duty to help secure accommodation for any applicant threatened with homelessness on leaving custody, irrespective of priority need. For further guidance on prevention duty see Chapter 12, for further guidance on the relief duty see Chapter 13 and for further guidance on assessments and plans see Chapter 11.

23.18 Where activity to prevent or relieve homelessness is unsuccessful the authority will need to assess whether the person has a priority need for accommodation and is owed the main housing duty. For further guidance on priority need see Chapter 8 and for further guidance on accommodation duties see Chapter 15. A person who is vulnerable as a result of having served a custodial sentence, been committed for...
Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities

23.19 Assessments of vulnerability should be composite, taking into account all relevant factors that might contribute to a person being significantly more vulnerable if homeless than an ordinary person would be if homeless. In determining whether applicants who fall within this category are vulnerable as a result of their period in custody a housing authority will need to take into account all of the relevant factors including:

(a) the length of time the applicant served in custody or detention (although authorities should not assume that vulnerability could not occur as a result of a short period in custody or detention);
(b) whether the applicant is receiving supervision from a criminal justice agency e.g. the providers of probation services [NPS and CRCs] or youth offending team. Housing authorities should have regard to any advice from criminal justice agency staff regarding their view of the applicant’s general vulnerability, but the final decision on the question of vulnerability for the purposes of the homelessness legislation will rest with the housing authority;
(c) the length of time since the applicant was released from custody or detention, and the extent to which the applicant has been able to obtain and/or maintain accommodation during that time;
(d) whether the applicant has any existing support networks and how much of a positive influence these networks are likely to be in the applicant’s life.

23.20 Housing authorities should take into account the assessments of housing and support needs completed by offender management services, or voluntary organisations acting on behalf of these agencies.

Intentional homelessness

23.21 People with an offending history may apply for homelessness assistance after losing their accommodation due to a period in custody. In considering whether such an applicant is homeless intentionally the housing authority will have to decide whether:

(a) there was a likelihood that ceasing to occupy the accommodation could reasonably have been regarded at the time as a likely consequence of committing the offence; and,
(b) the accommodation would have otherwise continued to be available to the person at the point in time when they applied for homelessness assistance.

23.22 Housing authorities must consider each application on a case by case basis, in the light of all the facts and circumstances, including the age and maturity of the applicant, and should discuss the matter with the relevant provider of probation services. Authorities should not adopt a blanket policy which assumes that people who have lost accommodation whilst in custody will or will not be assessed as intentionally homeless.

Local connection

23.23 Housing authorities may receive applications from people leaving custody who do not have a local connection to their district but do have a connection to another local authority area. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10. If the applicant is eligible for assistance and threatened with homelessness the housing authority taking the application will have a section 195 prevention duty, whether or not the applicant has a local connection. Detention in prison (whether convicted or not) does not establish residency of choice in the district the prison is in, and so will not create a local connection with that district.

23.24 However, if the applicant is homeless the receiving authority may, if it is satisfied that the conditions are met, make a referral to another district where the applicant has a local connection. If the notified authority accepts that the conditions for referral are met they will take on the section 189B relief duty, as well as a duty to provide accommodation if there is reason to believe the applicant may be in priority need.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

23.25 In considering whether or not a referral should be made, the authority that has taken the application should consider the particular circumstances of the applicant, and any risks involved in referring them to another local authority area. An applicant cannot be referred to another area where they would be at risk of violence. The authority will also want to take into account the considerations identified in paragraphs 23.26 and 23.27 below where relevant, before making a final decision.

Suitability of accommodation

23.26 Section 208(1) requires housing authorities to secure accommodation within their district, in so far as is reasonably practicable. There may be circumstances in which there are clear benefits for the applicant of being accommodated outside of the district. This could occur where upon the advice of the relevant provider of probation service (NPS or CRC) or through Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) it is decided that a person with an offending history should be placed outside the district to reduce risk of reoffending, or to help break links with previous contacts who could exert a negative influence.

23.27 There may also be instances where a criminal justice agency or MAPPA advise that in order to ensure appropriate distance between the applicant and their victims, the applicant should reside in a particular area, where they do not have a local connection.

23.28 When assessing the accommodation needs of a person with an offending history an authority will need to take into account their support needs, which in some cases might be complex. Young people leaving custody are likely to require accommodation with some level of support if they are to maintain their tenancy or license and avoid reoffending.

Accessing accommodation

23.29 People with an offending history face barriers to accessing accommodation across tenures. Housing authorities providing help to secure or securing accommodation should be aware of the provisions of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (as amended by the Legal Aid Sentencing and Punishing Offenders Act 2012). The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 sets out time frames for when convictions become spent, after which it is unlawful for social and private landlords to take spent convictions into account when determining whether the person is suitable for housing.

CHAPTER 24: FORMER MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

24.1 This chapter provides guidance on providing homelessness services to former members of the armed forces, who are referred to throughout as veterans.

24.2 Members of Her Majesty’s regular naval, military and air forces are generally provided with accommodation by the Ministry of Defence (MOD), but are required to leave this when they are discharged from the service.

24.3 Housing authorities that have a significant number of service personnel stationed in their area will need to work closely with relevant partners, such as the Joint Service Housing Advice Office and MOD’s resettlement services, to ascertain likely levels of need for housing assistance amongst people leaving the forces and plan their services accordingly.

24.4 The Secretary of State for Defence is subject to the duty to refer in relation to the members of the regular forces. He is required to refer members of the regular forces in England he considers may be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 56 days to a local housing authority, with the individual’s consent. For further guidance on the duty to refer see Chapter 4. The regular forces are the Royal Navy, the Royal Marines, the regular army and the Royal Air Force.

Advice and information

24.5 The principal responsibility for providing housing information and advice to Service personnel lies with the armed forces up to the point of discharge and these services are delivered through the Joint Service Housing Advice Office and through the Veterans UK Online. Some people, who have served in the armed forces for a long period, and those who are medically discharged, may be offered assistance with resettlement by the MOD’s resettlement staff.

24.6 Housing authorities have a duty (section 179) to provide advisory services free of charge to people in their district. The service must be designed to meet the needs of certain groups, which include former members of the regular armed forces. This duty will be particularly relevant for housing authorities who have armed forces stationed within their districts, and in these circumstances authorities are encouraged to consult with the services concerned about how best to deliver local housing advice to prevent veterans from becoming homeless. For further guidance on providing advice and information on homelessness and threatened with homelessness see Chapter 3.

Veterans required to leave service accommodation

24.7 The MOD recognises that housing authorities will need to be satisfied that entitlement to occupy service accommodation will end on a certain date in order to determine whether applicants who are service personnel and approaching their date of discharge may be homeless or threatened with homelessness.

24.8 For this purpose, the MOD issues a Certificate of Cessation of Entitlement to Occupy Service Accommodation six months before discharge. These certificates indicate the date on which entitlement to occupy service accommodation ends, and the Secretary of State considers that housing authorities should not insist upon a court order for possession to establish that entitlement to occupy has ended.

Priority need

24.9 A person who is vulnerable as a result of having been a member of Her Majesty’s regular armed forces (a veteran) has a priority need for accommodation. Veterans will include a person who was previously a member of the regular naval, military or air forces.

24.10 In considering whether veterans are vulnerable (as set out in paragraph 6.9 above) as a result of their time spent in the forces, a housing authority may wish to take into account the following factors:

(a) the length of time the applicant spent in the armed forces (although authorities should not assume that vulnerability could not occur as a result of a short period of service);
(b) the type of service the applicant was engaged in (those on active service may find it more difficult to cope with civilian life);
(c) whether the applicant spent any time in a military hospital (this could be an indicator of a serious health problem or of post-traumatic stress);
(d) whether HM Forces’ medical and welfare advisers have judged an individual to be particularly vulnerable in their view and have issued a Medical History Release Form giving a summary of the circumstances causing that vulnerability;
(e) the length of time since the applicant left the armed forces, and whether they have been able to obtain and/or maintain accommodation during that time; and,
(f) whether the applicant has any existing support networks, particularly by way of family or friends.

Intentional homelessness

24.11 Where service personnel are required to vacate service quarters as a result of taking up an option to give notice to leave the service, and in so doing are acting in compliance with their contractual engagement, they should not be considered to have become homeless intentionally. For further guidance on intentional homelessness see Chapter 9.

Local connection

24.12 Section 315 of the Housing and Regeneration Act 2008 amended section 199 of the 1996 Act to enable members of the armed forces to establish a local connection.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

through residence or employment in the same way as a civilian. For further guidance on local connection see Chapter 10.

CHAPTER 25: MODERN SLAVERY

25.1 This chapter provides guidance on modern slavery in relation to applicants who are threatened with homelessness or homeless.

What is modern slavery and trafficking

25.2 Modern slavery is a serious and often hidden crime in which people are exploited for criminal gain. The impact can be devastating for victims. Modern slavery comprises slavery, servitude, and forced or compulsory labour and human trafficking. The common factors are that a victim is, or is intended to be, used or exploited for someone else’s (usually financial) gain, without respect for their human rights.

25.3 Modern slavery can take many different forms. The following are types of exploitation which commonly occur in the UK and individuals may experience more than one form of abuse:

(a) sexual exploitation: victims are coerced into sex work or sexually abusive situations. This includes child sexual exploitation. Victims may be brought to the UK on the promise of legitimate employment, or moved around the UK to be sexually exploited. In some cases they may know they will be involved in sex work, but are forced into a type or frequency they did not agree to. Victims are more commonly female but can also be male;

(b) domestic servitude: domestic servitude typically involves victims working in a private family home where they are ill treated, humiliated, subjected to unbearable conditions or working hours or made to work for little or no pay. The victim could be used in this way by their own family members or partner. Again, it is very difficult for them to leave, for example because of threats, the perpetrator holding their passport, or using a position of power over the victim;

(c) labour exploitation: labour exploitation usually involves unacceptably low pay, poor working conditions or excessive wage deductions, but is not solely about this. In order to constitute modern slavery there will also be some form of coercion meaning that victims cannot freely leave for other employment or exercise choice over their own situation. Where the perpetrator is taking advantage of a child or vulnerable person, an offence can be committed without the element of coercion;

(d) criminal exploitation: criminal exploitation is the exploitation of a person to commit a crime for someone else’s gain. For example victims could be coerced into shoplifting, pick-pocketing, entering into a sham marriage, benefit fraud, begging or drug cultivation such as cannabis farming;

(e) other forms of exploitation include organ or tissue removal; forced begging and illegal adoption. For further information, see Modern Slavery Awareness & Victim Identification Guidance.

Identification

25.4 Modern slavery is a highly complex crime. There is no typical victim of slavery – victims can be men, women and children of all ages, ethnicities and nationalities (including British) and cut across the population. But it is normally more prevalent amongst the most vulnerable groups, and within minority or socially excluded groups. Child victims are victims of child abuse and should therefore be treated as such using existing child protection procedures and statutory protocols.

25.5 Victims of modern slavery can be found anywhere. There are certain industries where they are currently more prevalent, such as nail bars, car washes, agriculture and fishing, building sites and the sex industry. Other high risk situations include when there is a need for a sudden injection of workers into the work force, such as seasonal staff or construction for a major event. However victims may also pass through transport hubs, health services and other public places or be found in private homes.

25.6 In all cases decision makers should be alive to the possibility that applicants for assistance under Part 7 are victims of modern slavery, or are otherwise vulnerable. Particular care should be paid to children, especially where there are doubts about the relationship with any purported guardian. Children's social services should be alerted to any safeguarding concerns immediately.

The National Referral Mechanism

25.7 The National Referral Mechanism (NRM) is the process by which people who may be victims of modern slavery are identified and supported by the UK Government.

25.8 Local authorities, as designated first responder organisations, should refer any individual they suspect to be a victim of modern slavery to the National Referral Mechanism (NRM). Adults have to provide informed consent to be referred to the NRM, but children do not need to consent and must be referred to the NRM if there are suspicions that the child has been a victim of modern slavery.

25.9 Following the referral of an adult or child into the NRM, an initial ‘reasonable grounds’ decision will be made within 5 days. If this decision is positive, the individual will be entitled to access safe accommodation provided through a central-government funded Victim Care Contract. If the person would otherwise be destitute during that 5 day period they can access emergency accommodation by contacting the Salvation Army. However, the person may be referred to the housing authority to provide accommodation if the individual is a British citizen who is homeless, eligible and has or may have a priority need.

25.10 In some instances, the adult involved may not give consent to a referral to the NRM. In this case, instead of referring the case, the local authority has a duty to notify the Home Office under section 52 of the Modern Slavery Act 2015. For further information, see Guidance for Public Authorities on Duty to Notify.

What support is provided by the National Referral Mechanism

25.11 The provision of support through the NRM is a devolved matter in the United Kingdom and differs depending on whether the victim is an adult or child. The below information covers the support offer to adult and child victims in England and Wales.

Adult support and assistance

25.12 If an adult receives a positive ‘reasonable grounds’ decision through the NRM, they are entitled to support for a minimum period of 45 days. This is provided through a central-government funded Victim Care Contract and includes accommodation, subsistence, counselling, access to mental, physical and dental health services, and signposting to legal services.

25.13 Whilst in support, a ‘conclusive grounds’ decision will be made on their case through the NRM and they will be provided with a letter setting out whether there was enough evidence to conclude that they are indeed a victim of modern slavery. The individual will then receive a short period of move-on support focused on their transition out of central government-funded support, which may include liaising with housing authorities or local homelessness services.

Children support and assistance

25.14 Children are supported locally and are not provided with support and assistance through Victim Care Contract, unless with a parent who is a potential victim. Housing authorities should refer unaccompanied children to children’s services in line with local safeguarding procedures.

Applications and inquiries under Part 7

25.15 In many cases involving modern slavery or trafficking, the applicant may be in considerable distress and officers would benefit from appropriate training to enable them to conduct such interviews. Applicants should be given the option of being interviewed by an officer of the same sex if they wish.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

25.16 Housing authorities should refer any individual they suspect to be a victim of modern slavery to the NRM (see paragraphs 25.7 to 25.10).

25.17 A person who has been a victim of trafficking or modern slavery may have a priority need for accommodation if they are assessed as being vulnerable according to section 189(1)(c) of the 1996 Act. In assessing whether they are vulnerable a housing authority should take into account advice from specialist agencies providing services to the applicant, such as their assigned support provider under the NRM. Many victims of modern slavery suffer from poor mental health and often lack support structures in the area they are residing. If a victim of modern slavery is threatened with homelessness or is homeless this significantly increases their risk to being re-trafficked or exposed to further exploitation. For further guidance on priority need see Chapter 8.

25.18 Section 188(1) of the 1996 Act requires housing authorities to secure that accommodation is available for an applicant if they have reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless, eligible for assistance and have a priority need. If housing authorities believe an individual may be vulnerable as a result of being a victim of modern slavery following a referral to the NRM housing authorities should ensure that accommodation is available while they are waiting for an initial ‘reasonable grounds’ decision.

25.19 Housing authorities may find it helpful to establish local, joint working arrangements with NRM support providers where appropriate to help identify people at risk of homelessness as early as possible and maximise the opportunities to prevent homelessness.

Suitability of accommodation

25.20 There will be a number of accommodation options for victims of modern slavery. Housing authorities should consider which are most appropriate for each person on a case by case basis taking into account their specific circumstances and needs.

25.21 Account will need to be taken of any special considerations relating to the applicant and their household or their experiences that might affect the suitability of accommodation. Where there is no other option for applicants who have suffered modern slavery but to be accommodated in an emergency hostel or bed and breakfast accommodation, the accommodation may need to be gender-specific as well as have appropriate security measures depending on their needs and circumstances. Any risk of violence or racial harassment in a particular locality should also be taken into account, and housing authorities should be mindful that individuals who have left their traffickers remain at risk of being re-trafficked.

25.22 Whilst authorities should, as far as is practicable, aim to secure accommodation within their own district, they should also recognise that there can be benefits for some applicants to be accommodated outside of the district. This could occur in cases of modern slavery or trafficking where the applicant, and/or a member of their household, would be vulnerable to further exploitation and needs to be accommodated outside the district to reduce the risk of further contact with the perpetrator(s) and to help break links which could exert a negative influence.

ANNEX 1: THE HABITUAL RESIDENCE TEST

1 In practice, when considering housing applications from persons who are subject to the habitual residence test, it is only necessary to investigate habitual residence if the applicant has arrived or returned to live in the UK during the two year period prior to making the application.

Definition of habitually resident

2 The term ‘habitually resident’ is not defined in legislation. Local authorities should always consider the overall circumstances of a case to determine whether someone is habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland.

General principles

3 When deciding whether a person is habitually resident in a place, consideration must be given to all the facts of each case in a common sense way. It should be remembered that:

(a) the test focuses on the fact and nature of residence;
(b) a person who is not resident somewhere cannot be habitually resident there. Residence is a more settled state than mere physical presence in a country. To be resident a person must be seen to be making a home. It need not be the only home or a permanent home but it must be a genuine home for the time being. For example, a short stay visitor or a person receiving short term medical treatment is not resident;
(c) the most important factors for habitual residence are the length, continuity and general nature of actual residence rather than intention;
(d) the practicality of a person’s arrangements for residence is a necessary part of determining whether it can be described as settled and habitual;
(e) established habitual residents who have periods of temporary or occasional absence of long or short duration may still be habitually resident during such absences.

Action on receipt of an application

Applicant came to live in the UK during the previous two years

4 If it appears that the applicant came to live in the UK during the previous two years, authorities should make further enquiries to decide if the applicant is habitually resident, or can be treated as such.

Factors to consider

5 The applicant’s stated reasons and intentions for coming to the UK will be relevant to the question of whether they are habitually resident. If the applicant’s stated intention is to live in the UK, and not return to the country from which they came, that intention must be consistent with their actions.

6 To decide whether an applicant is habitually resident in the UK, authorities should consider the factors set out below. However, these do not provide an exhaustive check list of the questions or factors that need to be considered. Further enquiries may be needed. The circumstances of each case will dictate what information is needed, and all relevant factors should be taken into account.

Why has the applicant come to the UK?

7 If the applicant is returning to the UK after a period spent abroad, and it can be established that the applicant was previously habitually resident in the UK and is returning to resume their former period of habitual residence, they will be immediately habitually resident.

8 In determining whether an applicant is returning to resume a former period of habitual residence authorities should consider:

(a) when did the applicant leave the UK?
(b) how long did the applicant live in the UK before leaving?
(c) why did the applicant leave the UK?
(d) how long did the applicant intend to remain abroad?
(e) why did the applicant return?
(f) did the applicant’s partner and children, if any, also leave the UK?
(g) did the applicant keep accommodation in the UK?
A2.3 England: Homelessness

(h) if the applicant owned property, was it let, and was the lease timed to coincide with the applicant’s return to the UK?
(i) what links did the applicant keep with the UK?
(j) have there been other brief absences? If yes, obtain details
(k) why has the applicant come to the UK?

If the applicant has arrived in the UK within the previous two years and is not resuming a period of habitual residence, consideration should be given to their reasons for coming to the UK, and in particular to the factors set out below.

Applicant is joining family or friends

If the applicant has come to the UK to join or rejoin family or friends, authorities should consider:

(a) has the applicant sold or given up any property abroad?
(b) has the applicant bought or rented accommodation or are they staying with friends?
(c) is the move to the UK intended to be permanent?

Applicant’s plans

Authorities should consider the applicant’s plans, e.g.:

(a) if the applicant plans to remain in the UK, is the applicant’s stated plan consistent with their actions?
(b) were any arrangements made for employment and accommodation (even if unsuccessful) before the applicant arrived in the UK?
(c) did the applicant buy a one-way ticket?
(d) did the applicant bring all their belongings?
(e) is there any evidence of links with the UK, e.g. membership of clubs?

The fact that a person may intend to live in the UK for the foreseeable future does not, of itself, mean that habitual residence has been established. However, the applicant’s intentions along with other factors, for example the disposal of property abroad, may indicate that the applicant is habitually resident in the UK.

An applicant who intends to reside in the UK for only a short period, for example for a holiday or to visit friends is unlikely to be habitually resident in the UK.

Length of residence in the UK

To be habitually resident in a country an applicant must have actually taken up residence and lived there for a period. It is not sufficient that the applicant came to the UK voluntarily and for settled purposes. They must be resident in fact for an appropriate period of time which demonstrates that their residence has become, and is likely to remain, habitual in nature. The appropriate period of time need not be lengthy if the facts indicate that a person’s residence has become habitual in nature at an early stage. In some circumstances the period can be as little as a month, but it must be a period which is more than momentary in a claimant’s life history. A period of between one and three months is likely to be appropriate to demonstrate that a person's residence is habitual in nature.

Length of residence in another country

Authorities should consider the length and continuity of an applicant’s residence in another country:

(a) how long did the applicant live in the previous country?
(b) does the applicant have any remaining ties with their former country of residence?
(c) has the applicant stayed in different countries outside the UK?

It is possible that a person may own a property abroad but still be habitually resident in the UK. A person who has a home or close family in another country would normally retain habitual residence in that country. A person who has previously lived in several different countries but has now moved permanently to the UK may be habitually resident here.

Centre of interest

17 An applicant is likely to be habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland, despite spending time abroad, if their centre of interest is located in one of these places.

18 People who maintain their centre of interest in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland, for example a home, a job, friends, membership of clubs, are likely to be habitually resident there. People who have retained their centre of interest in another country and have no particular ties with the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland, are unlikely to be habitually resident in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland.

19 Authorities should take the following into account when deciding the centre of interest:

(a) home;
(b) family ties;
(c) club memberships;
(d) finance accounts.

20 If the centre of interest appears to be in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland but the applicant has a home somewhere else, authorities should consider the applicant's intentions regarding the property.

21 In certain cultures, e.g. the Asian culture, it is quite common for a person to live in one country but have property abroad that they do not intend to sell. Where such a person has lived in the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland for many years, the fact that they have property elsewhere does not necessarily mean that they intend to leave, or that the applicant's centre of interest is elsewhere.
A2.3 England: Homelessness

PROCEDURES FOR REFERRALS OF HOMELESS APPLICANTS TO ANOTHER LOCAL AUTHORITY

GUIDELINES FOR LOCAL AUTHORITIES ON PROCEDURES FOR REFERRAL

A2.4

AGREED BY
LOCAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION (LGA)
CONVENTION OF SCOTTISH LOCAL AUTHORITIES (COSLA)
WELSH LOCAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION (WLGA)

("the local authority associations")

These procedures and guidelines concern the situation where, under Part 7 of the Housing Act 1996, a local housing authority consider that the conditions for referral of the case to another local housing authority are met and notifies the other authority of its opinion. Referrals are discretionary only. Housing authorities are not required to make inquiries as to whether, for example, an applicant has a local connection with another district and, where they decide to do so, there is no requirement to refer applicants to another authority if the conditions for referral are met. Authorities may have a policy about how they may exercise their discretion. However, they cannot decide in advance that a referral will be made in all cases where an applicant may, for example, have a local connection with another district.

1 Scope and purpose

1.1 These procedures and guidelines mainly concern local housing authorities in England and the legal framework which applies to them, but they also cover cross-border issues in relation to Scotland and Wales. They apply following the changes made to Part 7 of the Housing Act 1996 by the Homelessness Reduction Act 2017. Authorities in England may notify another authority of their opinion that the conditions for referral are met if the notifying authority would be subject to a duty under either s 189B (the “initial” or “relief” duty) or s 193 (the “main” housing duty) of the Housing Act 1996; but referrals cannot be made to Scottish or Welsh authorities at the relief stage. Authorities should follow the relevant statutory provisions and have regard to governmental guidance when considering referrals; the information given below in relation to those provisions and guidance is by way of an overview only.

1.2 Section 198 of the Housing Act 1996 provides that:

“(5) The question whether the conditions for referral of a case which does not involve a referral to a local housing authority in Wales are satisfied shall be determined by agreement between the notifying authority and the notified authority or, in default of agreement, in accordance with such arrangements as the Secretary of State may direct by order.

(5A) The question whether the conditions for referral of a case involving a referral to a local housing authority in Wales shall be decided by agreement between the notifying authority and the notified authority or, in default of agreement, in accordance with such arrangements as the Secretary of State and the Welsh Ministers may jointly direct by order.

Procedures for Referrals of Applicants to another Local Authority A2.4

(6) An order may direct that the arrangements shall be:

(a) those agreed by any relevant authorities or associations of relevant authorities, or

(b) in default of such agreement, such arrangements as appear to the Secretary of State or, in the case of an order under subsection (5A), to the Secretary of State and the Welsh Ministers to be suitable, after consultation with such associations representing relevant authorities, and such other persons, as he thinks appropriate.

1.3 Similar provision is made in s 80(5) and (6) of the Housing (Wales) Act 2014 in relation to Wales and in s 33(4) and (5) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 in relation to Scotland. However, s 8 of the Homelessness (Scotland) Act 2003 (not yet in force) gives Scottish ministers the power to suspend or vary the circumstances under which a homeless applicant may be referred by a Scottish local authority to another authority in Scotland. Please note any future orders made will need to be taken into account.

1.4 The LGA, CoSLA and the WLGA, the local authority associations in England, Scotland and Wales, have agreed guidelines for referrals which they recommend to local housing authorities. The relevant statutory framework contains detailed provisions in relation to referrals, including where it appears that the applicant does not have a local connection with the area of the authority receiving the housing application but does have one with another area in England, Scotland or Wales. There are, however, considerable areas of possible disagreement and dispute in determining whether the conditions of referral are met in any particular case. Although, in the last resort, disagreements can only be resolved by the courts, the associations are anxious to avoid, as far as possible, legal disputes between local authorities. The associations therefore issue these agreed guidelines on the procedures and criteria to be followed, and recommend them for general adoption by all their members. These Guidelines are without prejudice to the duty of local authorities to treat each case on its merits and to take into account existing and future case law. Furthermore, these Guidelines only apply to the issues of local connection and whether the conditions for referral are met.

1.5 In R v Eastleigh BC ex p Betts [1983] 2 AC 613, the House of Lords considered the application of the referral arrangements agreed between the local authority associations. Their Lordships decided that a rigid application of the arrangements would constitute a fetter on an authority’s discretion. The agreement could be taken into account, and applied as a guideline, provided its application to each case is given individual consideration.

1.6 A previous version of this agreement was considered by the Court of Appeal in Ozbek v Ipswich BC [2006] EWCA Civ 534; [2006] HLR 41, the following being said at [37]-[38]:

"one purpose – indeed, perhaps, the principal purpose – of the Referral Guidelines and their predecessor, the Agreement on Procedures, is to facilitate agreement between authorities on the question whether the conditions for referral are met; or to provide a basis for speedy and inexpensive resolution of disputes between authorities on that question. ... [T]hat purpose is unlikely to be achieved unless authorities do follow the guidance which those guidelines provide by applying that guidance ‘generally to all applications which come before them’. ... [A]n authority is not to be criticised for following that guidance in the individual case, provided that they have not closed their mind to the possibility that the particular facts of that case may require a departure from the guidance which they would apply more generally.

"... The conditions for referral – set out in s 198(2) of the 1996 Act – include (a) that the applicant does not have a local connection with the notifying authority and (b) that the applicant does have a local connection with the notified authority. It is desirable (if the statutory scheme is to work smoothly) that both notifying authority and notified authority should be able to agree on both conditions. Or, to put the point another way, it is desirable that the notified authority – who is being asked to assume the burden of providing accommodation for the applicant in the place of the notifying authority – should be able to accept the view of the notifying authority both that the applicant has no local connection with the district of the notifying authority and that the applicant does have a local connection with their own district. Ready agreement is unlikely to be achieved on those two points unless both the notifying authority and the notified authority are able to approach the question from a common basis. It is the need for that common basis which, as it seems to me, provides the imperative for all authorities to apply the guidelines ‘generally to all applications which come before them’.

2 Definitions

2.1 For the purposes of this agreement, the relevant statutory definitions apply. All references in this agreement to an “applicant” are to be taken as references to a housing applicant to whom the relevant duty would be owed but for the decision to refer the case to another authority.

2.2 The authority to whom the applicant applies for accommodation or assistance and which decides to refer the case to another authority is the “notifying authority”.

2.3 Where the notifying authority consider that the conditions for referral are met, including where neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably reside with the applicant has a local connection with its district but does have one with another local authority district and notifies the other local authority of its opinion, the authority which they notify is known as the “notified authority”.

2.4 The principal context in which the question of referral may arise concerns “local connection”, defined as explained below, but the conditions for referral may also be met in certain other cases. These guidelines provide a framework within which the referral procedures may be applied.

3 Criteria for notification

3.1 The criteria for notification are set out in the statutory framework and are addressed in governmental guidance. The following is designed to provide merely an overview.

3.2 Before a local authority can consider referring an applicant to another local authority under s 198(A1) it must first be satisfied that the applicant is

(i) eligible for assistance and
(ii) homeless.

3.3 Before a local authority can consider referring an applicant to another local authority under s 198(1) it must be satisfied that, in addition to meeting the two criteria noted above, the applicant also:

(i) is in priority need and
(ii) did not become homeless intentionally.

3.4 Before making a referral the notifying authority must be satisfied that the conditions of referral are met. Broadly, the conditions for referral will be met if:

(a) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has a local connection with the district of the authority to which the application was originally made,
(b) either the applicant or any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has a local connection with the district of the other authority,
(c) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant would run the risk of domestic violence in that other district and
Procedures for Referrals of Applicants to another Local Authority

(d) neither the applicant nor any person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has suffered any other violence in that other district and it is not probable that returning to that district would lead to further violence of a similar kind.

3.5 The conditions for referral will also be met if the application is made within a period of two years beginning with the date on which the applicant accepted a “private rented sector” offer from the other authority under s 193(7AA), provided that (c) and (d), above, are met.

3.6 The conditions for referral will also be met if the applicant was placed in the authority’s district by another authority as a result of a previous application to that authority and the second application is made within the prescribed period (5 years) of the first.

3.7 In deciding whether or not to make a referral, authorities should also consider the Court of Appeal decision in the case of R v Newham LBC ex p Tower Hamlets LBC [1991] 1 WLR 1032. The notifying authority should have regard to any decisions made by the notified authority that may have a bearing on the case in question (e.g. a previous decision that the applicant was intentionally homeless) as well as any other material considerations, which should include the general housing circumstances prevailing in the district of the notifying authority and in the district of the notified authority. The notifying authority should also consider whether it is in the public interest to accept a duty to secure accommodation.

3.8 Should a local authority wish to accept a duty to secure accommodation for an applicant who does not have a local connection with its district, nothing in this agreement shall prevent the authority from providing such assistance. The decision to make a referral is discretionary and could be challenged if the discretion was considered to have been exercised unreasonably.

3.9 Under s 202 of the Housing Act 1996, applicants have the right to request a review of certain decisions made by the local authority about their application, including a decision to notify another authority under s 198(1) and a decision that the conditions are met for referral of the case to another authority.

Local connection

4.1 The test for establishing a local connection is set out in s 199 of the Housing Act 1996 and addressed in detail in governmental guidance. The following is designed to provide merely an overview.

4.2 The relevant date for deciding whether or not a local connection has been established is not the date when the application for housing assistance was made but the date of the decision or, if there is a review, the date of the review decision (see the House of Lords’ judgment in Mohamed v Hammersmith and Fulham LBC [2001] 1 AC 547). Moreover, if inquiries prior to a decision have been prolonged, the notifying authority should also consider whether there may have been any material change in circumstances that might affect the question of whether a local connection has been established.

4.3 A local connection may be established where the following grounds apply, subject to the exceptions below:

(i) the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant is, or in the past was, normally resident in the district. It is suggested that a working definition of “normal residence” should be residence for at least 6 months in the area during the previous 12 months, or for not less than 3 years during the previous 3-year period. The period taken into account should be up to the date of the authority’s decision. This should include any periods living in temporary accommodation secured by the authority under s 188 (interim duty pending inquiries);
A2.4 England: Homelessness

(ii) the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant is at present employed in the district. The local authority should obtain confirmation from the employer that the person is in employment and that the employment is not of a casual nature;

(iii) the applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has family associations in the district. Family associations normally arise where an applicant or a person who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant has parents, adult children or brothers or sisters who have been resident in the district for a period of at least 5 years at the date of the decision, and the applicant indicates a wish to be near them. Only in exceptional circumstances would the residence of relatives other than those listed above be taken to establish a local connection, but the circumstances may be sufficient and all cases will be fact-specific. The residence of dependent children in a different district from their parents would not be residence of their own choice and therefore would not establish a local connection with that district. However, a referral should not be made to another local authority on the grounds of a local connection because of family associations if the applicant objects to those grounds;

(iv) there are special circumstances which the authority considers establish a local connection with the district. This may be particularly relevant where the applicant has been in prison or hospital and his or her circumstances do not conform to the criteria in (i) – (iii) above. Where, for example, an applicant seeks to return to a district where he or she was brought up or lived for a considerable length of time in the past, there may be grounds for considering that the applicant has a local connection with that district because of special circumstances. An authority must exercise its discretion when considering whether special circumstances apply.

4.4 A notifying authority should not refer an applicant to another authority on grounds of a local connection because of special circumstances without the prior consent of the notified authority. Alternatively, authorities may come to an informal arrangement in such cases on a reciprocal basis, subject to the agreement of the applicants.

4.5 There are certain circumstances where the local connection provisions set out above may be modified. More detail is contained in governmental guidance. See:

(i) care leavers;
(ii) ex-service personnel;
(iii) ex-prisoners and detainees under the Mental Health Act 1983;
(iv) former asylum seekers.

5 Procedures in making a referral

5.1 If an authority considers that the conditions for referral in s 198 Housing Act 1996 are likely to be met in a particular case it should make any necessary enquiries in the area/s where there may be a local connection. These should be undertaken as soon as possible. An authority that is considering making a referral must investigate all the circumstances of the case with the same thoroughness as if it were not considering a referral.

5.2 Under s 184(4) Housing Act 1996, if a housing authority notifies or intends to notify another authority in England under s 198(A1) (i.e. at the relief duty stage) that it considers that the conditions for referral of a case are met, the authority must at the same time notify the applicant of this decision and the reasons for it. Under s 184(5) of the 1996 Act, the notice must also inform the applicant of his right, under s 202, to request a review of the decision and that any request must be made within 21 days, or such longer period as the authority allows in writing.

5.3 See further below as to the duty to ensure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant, where an authority notifies an applicant, either as above under s 198(A1) or for the purposes of s 200(1) (i.e. at the s 193 main duty stage).
5.4 In general, the notified authority is bound by any decision made by the notifying authority as to whether the applicant is eligible, homeless, unintentionally homeless, and in priority need; there is no provision for the notified authority to challenge the decision other than judicial review in the High Court. For notifications made under s 198(A1), however, where the notifying authority has made a decision as to whether the applicant is eligible, homeless or became homeless intentionally, the notified authority may come to a different decision but only if it is satisfied the applicant’s circumstances have changed or further information has come to light since the notifying authority made its decision, and that the change in circumstances or further information justifies coming to a different decision (s 199A(5)(c)).

5.5 When it has been decided whether the conditions for referral are met, the notifying authority must notify the applicant of the decision and the reason for it (s 199A(3) and s 200(2)). The applicant must also be informed of his right to ask for a review of the decision and that any request must be made within 21 days or such longer period as the authority may allow in writing.

5.6 The local authority associations’ disputes procedure should be used only where there is a disagreement over the question of whether the conditions for referral are met and not for resolving disagreement on any other matter.

6. Making the notification to the other authority

6.1 All notifications and arrangements concerning an applicant should be made by telephone and then confirmed in writing. A specimen standard notification form is attached, which authorities are advised to use. If telephone contact cannot be made, an email or fax should be sent. Where the notified authority accepts that the conditions for referral are met, it should not wait for the receipt of written confirmation of notification before making appropriate arrangements to secure accommodation for the applicant and his or her household.

6.2 Each authority should nominate an officer responsible for making decisions about applications notified by another authority. Appropriate arrangements should also be put in place to ensure cover during any absences of the designated officer.

6.3 The notified authority should normally accept the facts of the case relating to residence, employment, family associations etc., as stated by the notifying authority, unless they have clear evidence to the contrary. It is the notifying authority’s duty to make inquiries into the circumstances of homelessness with the same degree of care and thoroughness before referring a case to another authority as it would for any other case.

6.4 Local authorities should try to avoid causing undue disruption to the applicant which could arise from the operation of the criteria and procedures set out above. For instance, where it is agreed that the conditions for referral are met, the two authorities involved could agree, subject to the applicants’ consent, to enter into a reciprocal arrangement so as to avoid having to move a household which may already have made arrangements within the notifying authority’s area for schooling, medical treatment etc. Such arrangements could involve provision via nominations to other social housing providers such as registered social landlords. Authorities are reminded that there is no requirement to refer applicants to another authority even where it is agreed that the conditions for referral are met.

6.5 Once written confirmation of notification has been received the notified authority should, within 10 days, reply to the notifying authority. If, despite reminders, there is an unreasonable delay by the notified authority in formally responding to the notification, the notifying authority may ask its local authority association to intercede on its behalf.
A2.4 England: Homelessness

Arrangements for securing accommodation

7.1 Where an authority notifies an applicant that it intends to notify or has notified another authority of their opinion that the conditions for referral are met at the s 193 main duty stage, it has a duty under s 200(1) to ensure that suitable accommodation is available for occupation by the applicant until s/he is notified of the decision whether the conditions for referral are met. A similar duty arises under s 199A(2) where the notifying authority similarly notifies an applicant in relation to a s 198(A1) referral at the s 189B relief duty stage, but only if it has reason to believe that the applicant may have a priority need. The notifying authority may also have a duty (under s 211) to take reasonable steps for the protection of property belonging to the applicant or anyone who might reasonably be expected to reside with the applicant.

7.2 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are not met, the notifying authority will be subject to either the s 189B relief duty (see s199A(4)(a)) or the s 193 main duty (see s 200(3)), depending on whether the referral arose under s 198(A1) or s 198(1).

7.3 If it is decided that the conditions for referral are met, then either
(i) under s 199A(5)(a), the applicant is treated as having made an application to the notified authority on the date on which the applicant is given notice that the referral conditions are met, or
(ii) under s 200(4), the notified authority will be subject to the s 193 main duty and must ensure that suitable accommodation is available for the applicant, as the case may be.

7.4 The local authority associations recommend that once a notified authority has accepted that the conditions of referral are met it shall reimburse the notifying authority for any expenses which may reasonably have been incurred in providing temporary accommodation, including protection of property. If the notifying authority delays unduly before advising an authority of its intention to refer an applicant then the notified authority shall only be responsible for expenses incurred after the receipt of notification. In normal circumstances a period of more than 30 working days, commencing from the date when the notifying authority had reason to believe that the applicant may be homeless or threatened with homelessness and commenced inquiries under s 184, should be considered as constituting undue delay.

8 Right of review of referral decisions

8.1 Under s 202(1)(c), Housing Act 1996, applicants have the right to request a review of a decision by the authority under s 198(1) to notify another authority of its opinion that the conditions for referral are met.

8.2 Further, under s 202(1)(d), applicants have the right to request a review of any decision whether the conditions for referral are met (whether the notification was made under s 198(A1) or s 198(1)).

9 Statutory procedure on review

9.1 The procedural requirements for a review are set out in the Homelessness (Review Procedure etc) Regulations 2018 (SI 2018 No.223). There is some overlap between the requirements for reviews in general, considered here so far as they are relevant to referrals, and the requirements for reviews of a referee’s decision under the Disputes Procedure, considered below.

9.2 The notifying authority must notify the applicant:
Procedures for Referrals of Applicants to another Local Authority

(i) that the applicant, or someone acting on the applicant’s behalf, may make written representations; and
(ii) of the review procedures.

9.3 If the reviewer acting for the notifying authority considers that there is an irregularity in the original decision, or in the manner in which it was made, but is minded nonetheless to make a decision which is against the interests of the applicant, the reviewer must notify the applicant:
(i) that the reviewer is so minded, and the reasons why; and
(ii) that the applicant, or someone acting on the applicant’s behalf, may make further written and/or oral representations.

9.4 In carrying out a review the reviewer must:
(i) consider any representations made by, or on behalf of, the applicant;
(ii) consider any further written and/or oral representations made by, or on behalf of, the applicant in response to a notification referred to in paragraph 9.3(ii) above; and
(iii) make a decision on the basis of the facts known at the date of the review.

9.5 In general, the applicant must be notified of the decision on a review within:
(i) eight weeks from the date on which a request for review was made, or
(ii) such longer period as the applicant may agree in writing.

9.6 Where the decision under review is a joint decision by the notifying housing authority and the notified housing authority, s 202(4) requires that the review be carried out jointly by the two housing authorities. In that situation, the applicant must be notified of the decision on a review within:
(i) ten weeks from the date on which a request for review was made, or
(ii) such longer period as the applicant may agree in writing.

9.7 Where the decision under s 198(5) was taken by a referee, the procedure is described in the Guidelines for Invoking the Disputes Procedure, below.

9.8 Section 204 gives applicants the right to appeal to the county court on a point of law if dissatisfied with the decision on the review (or the initial decision, if a review decision is not made within the relevant prescribed time limit).

Disputes between authorities

10.1 Where a notified authority considers the conditions for referral are not met it should write to the notifying authority giving its reasons in full, within 10 days. The letter should contain all the reasons for its opinion, to avoid delay and minimise any inconvenience for the applicant.

10.2 The Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No.1578) sets out the arrangements for determining whether the conditions for referral are met, should the notifying and the notified authority fail to agree.

10.3 Where two authorities cannot reach agreement on whether the conditions for referral are met they must seek to agree on a referee who will make the decision. The LGA has established an independent panel of referees for this purpose. A referee should be appointed within 21 days of the notified authority receiving the notification.

10.4 Authorities invoking the disputes procedure should, having first agreed on the proposed referee, establish that he or she is available and willing to accept the case. Each authority is then responsible for providing the referee with such information as he or she requires to reach a decision, making copies of the submission available to the applicant and ensuring prompt payment of fees and expenses. The Guidelines for Invoking the Disputes Procedure set out in greater detail the requirements and timescale for the disputes procedure.
10.5 If the authorities are unable to agree on the choice of a referee, they must jointly request that the LGA appoint a referee on their behalf from the independent panel.

10.6 If a referee has still not been appointed within six weeks of the notified authority receiving the referral, the notifying authority must request the LGA to appoint a referee.

10.7 The local authority associations should only be involved in the direct appointment of referees as a last resort. Under normal circumstances authorities should jointly agree the arrangements between themselves in accordance with the Guidelines for Invoking the Disputes Procedure.

10.8 Authorities invoking the disputes procedure should be bound by the decision of the referee, including the apportionment of fees and expenses, subject to a further decision by a referee where the applicant asks for a review of the initial decision.

11 Cross-border disputes

11.1 In Scotland, the main homelessness law is the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, while in Wales it is the Housing (Wales) Act 2014. Both make similar provision to s 198 of the Housing Act 1996: s 33 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 and s 80 of the Housing (Wales) Act 2014. Where relevant, regard should be had to the appropriate national governmental guidance. Note that the position of former asylum seekers with regard to local connection may be quite different in Scotland from England and Wales.

11.2 Where there is a cross-border dispute, it is the legislation relevant to the location of the notified authority which should be applied in determining whether the conditions for referral are met.

11.3 The review procedure in Scotland and Wales respectively is governed by ss 35A and 35B of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 and the Homelessness (Review Procedure) (Wales) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015 No. 1266).

11.4 The Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals (Scotland) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No. 1603) sets out the arrangements for determining whether the conditions for referral are met, should the notifying and the notified authority fail to agree, where the notifying authority is in Scotland. These are in the same terms as for England, but the referee is appointed through CoSLA.

AGREED BY
LOCAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION (LGA)

WELSH LOCAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION (WLGA)
“the local authority associations”

12 Determining disputes

12.1 The local authority associations have been concerned to establish an inexpensive, simple, speedy, fair and consistent way of resolving disputes between authorities arising from the referral of homeless applicants.

12.2 For the purpose of this Disputes Procedure, arbitrators are referred to as “referees”. Referees will not normally be entitled to apply the criteria set out in this agreed procedure without the consent of the local authorities involved in the dispute.
Procedures for Referrals of Applicants to another Local Authority A2.4

Where the issues in the case are evenly balanced, referees may have regard to the wishes of the applicant.

12.3 In determining disputes referees will need to apply the relevant statutory framework and have regard to the appropriate national governmental guidance.

Arrangements for appointing referees

13.1 Referees will be approached by the authorities in dispute, both of which must agree that the referee should be invited to accept the appointment, to establish whether they are willing and able to act in a particular dispute. The referee should be appointed within 21 days of the notified authority receiving the referral. If the local authorities are unable to agree on the choice of referee they should contact the LGA in accordance with section 10 of the Guidelines for Local Authorities on Procedures for Referral.

13.2 A referee will be given an initial indication of the reason for the dispute by the relevant authorities or the local authority association. The referee’s jurisdiction is limited to the issue of whether the conditions for referral are met.

13.3 A referee must not have any personal interest in the outcome of the dispute and should not accept the appointment if he or she is, or was, employed by, or is a council tax payer in, one of the disputing local authorities, or if he or she has any connection with the applicant.

Procedures for determining the dispute

14.1 The general procedures to be followed by a referee in determining a dispute are outlined in the Schedule to the Homelessness (Decisions on Referrals) Order 1998 (SI 1998 No. 1578). It is recommended that the following, more detailed, procedures are applied to all cases.

14.2 Following appointment, the referee shall invite the notifying and notified authorities to submit written representations within a period of fourteen working days, specifying the closing date, and requiring them to send copies of their submission to the applicant and to the other authority involved in the dispute. Authorities must have the opportunity to see each other’s written statements, and should be allowed a further period of ten working days to comment thereon before the referee proceeds to determine the issue. The referee may also invite further written representations from the authorities, if considered necessary.

14.3 The homeless applicant to whom the dispute relates is not a direct party to the dispute but the referee may invite written or oral representations from the applicant, or any other person, which is proper and relevant to the issue. Where the referee invites representations from a person they may be made by another person acting on the person’s behalf, whether or not the other person is legally qualified.

14.4 The disputing authorities should make copies of their submissions available to the applicant. The authorities should have the opportunity to comment on any information from the applicant (or any other source) upon which the referee intends to rely in reaching his/her decision.

14.5 Since the applicant’s place of abode is in question, and temporary accommodation and property storage charges may be involved, it is important that a decision should be reached as quickly as possible – normally within a month of the receipt of the written representations and comments from the notifying and notified authority. This period will commence at the end of the process described in paragraph 14.2. In the last resort, a referee may determine a dispute on the facts before him/her if one authority has, after reminders, failed to present its case without reasonable cause.
A2.4 England: Homelessness

Oral hearings

15.1 Where an oral hearing is necessary or more convenient (e.g. where the applicant is illiterate, English is not his/her first language or further information is necessary to resolve issues in dispute), it is suggested that the notifying authority should be invited to present its case first, followed by the notified authority and any other persons whom the referee wishes to hear. The applicant may be invited to provide information on relevant matters. The authorities should then be given a right to reply to earlier submissions.

15.2 The referee will have to arrange the venue for the hearing and it is suggested that the offices of the notifying authority would often be the most convenient location.

15.3 Where a person has made oral representations the referee may direct either or both authorities to pay reasonable travelling expenses. The notifying and notified authorities will pay their own costs.

15.4 The referee’s determination must be in writing even when there is an oral hearing.

16

Notification of determination

16.1 The written decision of the referee should set out:

(a) the issue(s) which s/he has been asked to determine
(b) the findings of fact which are relevant to the question(s) in issue
(c) the decision
(d) the reasons for the decision.

The referee’s determination is binding upon the participating local authorities, subject to the applicant’s right to ask for a review of the decision under s 202 of the Housing Act 1996 (and possible right of appeal to the county court on a point of law under s 204).

Costs of determination

17.1 Referees will be expected to provide their own secretarial services and to obtain their own advice on points of law. The cost of so doing, however, will be costs of the determination and recoverable as such.

18

Circulation of determination

18.1 Referees should send copies of the determination to both disputing authorities and to the LGA. The LGA will circulate copies to other members of the Panel of Referees as an aid to settling future disputes and promoting consistency in decisions.

18.2 The notifying authority should inform the applicant of the outcome promptly.

Payment of fees and costs

19.1 The local authority associations recommend a flat rate fee of £500 per determination (including determinations made on a review) which should be paid in full.
Procedures for Referrals of Applicants to another Local Authority A2.4

and as speedily as possible after the determination has been received. However, in exceptional cases where a dispute takes a disproportionate time to resolve, a referee may negotiate a higher fee. In addition, the referee may claim the actual cost of any travelling, secretarial or other incidental expenses which s/he has incurred, including any additional costs arising from the right of review or the right of appeal to a county court on a point of law.

19.2 The LGA will determine such additional fees as may be appropriate for any additional work which may subsequently arise should there be a further dispute or appeal after the initial determination has been made or should a referee be party to an appeal, under s 204 Housing Act 1996, to the county court on a point of law.

19.3 The referee’s fees and expenses, and any third party costs, would normally be recovered from the unsuccessful party to the dispute, although a referee may choose to apportion expenses between the disputing authorities if s/he considers it warranted. Referees are advised, when issuing invoices to local authorities, to stipulate that payment must be made within 28 days.

Reopening a dispute

20.1 Once a determination on a dispute is made, a referee is not permitted to reopen the case, even though new facts may be presented to him or her, unless a fresh determination is required to rectify an error arising from a mistake or omission.

Review of referee’s decision

21.1 Section 202(1)(d) Housing Act 1996 gives an applicant the right to request a review of any decision made under this Dispute Procedure. The procedural requirements for a review are set out in the Homelessness (Review Procedure etc) Regulations 2018 (SI 2018 No.223). There is some overlap between the requirements for reviews of a referee’s decision under the Disputes Procedure, considered here, and the requirements for reviews in general, considered above so far as they are relevant to referrals.

21.2 If an applicant asks for a review of a referee’s decision the notifying and notified authority must, within five working days, appoint another referee (“the reviewer”) from the panel. This applies even if the original referee was appointed by the LGA. The reviewer must be a different referee from the referee who made the initial decision. If the two authorities fail to appoint a reviewer within this period then the notifying authority must, within five working days, request the LGA to appoint a reviewer and the LGA must do so within seven days of the request.

21.3 The authorities are required to provide the reviewer with the reasons for the initial decision, and the information on which the decision is based, within five working days of his or her appointment. The two authorities should decide between them who will be responsible for notifying the applicant of the reviewer’s decision, once received.

21.4 The reviewer is required to:

(i) notify the applicant that he or she, or someone acting on his or her behalf, may make written representations,
(ii) notify the applicant of the review procedures, and
(iii) send copies of the applicant’s representations to the two authorities and invite them to respond.

21.5 If the reviewer considers that there is an irregularity in the original decision, or in the manner in which it was made, but is minded nonetheless to make a decision which is against the interests of the applicant on one or more issues, the reviewer must notify the applicant:

(a) that the reviewer is so minded and the reasons why, and 21.6 In carrying out a review, the reviewer is required to:

(i) consider any representations made by, or on behalf of, the applicant,

(ii) consider any responses to (i) above,

(iii) consider any further written and/or oral representations made by, or on behalf of, the applicant in response to a notification referred to in paragraph 21.5(b), and

(iv) make a decision on the basis of the facts known at the date of the review.

21.7 The applicant must be notified of the decision on a review within twelve weeks from the date on which the request for the review was made, or such longer period as the applicant may agree in writing. The two authorities must be advised in writing of the decision on the review, and the reasons for it, at least a week before the end of the period in order to allow them adequate time to notify the applicant. Copies of the decision should also be sent to the LGA.

(b) a deportation or exclusion order is made in relation to a person; or
(c) a person is removed from the United Kingdom under these Regulations.
(4) Paragraph (3)(a) applies, in principle, to an EEA national who has resided in the United Kingdom for at least ten years, but it does not apply where the Secretary of State considers that—
(a) prior to serving a sentence of imprisonment, the EEA national had forged integrating links with the United Kingdom;

   (iii) has assured the Secretary of State, by means of a declaration, or by such equivalent means as the person may choose, that the person has sufficient resources not to become a burden on the social assistance system of the United Kingdom during the person’s intended period of residence.

(2) For the purposes of paragraphs (3) and (4) below, “relevant family member” means a family member of a self-sufficient person or student who is residing in the United Kingdom and whose right to reside is dependent upon being the family member of that student or self-sufficient person.

(3) In sub-paragraphs (1)(c) and (d)—
   (a) the requirement for the self-sufficient person or student to have sufficient resources not to become a burden on the social assistance system of the United Kingdom during the intended period of residence is only satisfied if the resources available to the student or self-sufficient person and any of their relevant family members are sufficient to avoid the self-sufficient person or student and all their relevant family members from becoming such a burden; and
   (b) the requirement for the student or self-sufficient person to have comprehensive sickness insurance cover in the United Kingdom is only satisfied if such cover extends to cover both the student or self-sufficient person and all their relevant family members.

(4) In paragraph (1)(c) and (d) and paragraph (3), the resources of the student or self-sufficient person and, where applicable, any of their relevant family members, are to be regarded as sufficient if—

   (b) paragraph (a) does not apply but, taking into account the personal circumstances of the person concerned and, where applicable, all their relevant family members, it appears to the decision maker that the resources of the person or persons concerned should be regarded as sufficient.

(5) For the purposes of regulation 16(2) (criteria for having a derivative right to reside), references in this regulation to “family members” includes a “primary carer” as defined in regulation 16(8).

5 “Worker or self-employed person who has ceased activity”

(1) In these Regulations, “worker or self-employed person who has ceased activity” means an EEA national who satisfies a condition in paragraph (2), (3), (4) or (5).

(a) is active as a worker or self-employed person in an EEA State but retains a place of residence in the United Kingdom and returns, as a rule, to that place at least once a week; and

(6) The conditions in paragraphs (2) and (3) as to length of residence and activity as a worker or self-employed person do not apply in relation to a person whose spouse or civil partner is a British citizen.

(7) Subject to regulation 6(2), periods of—
(a) inactivity for reasons not of the person’s own making;
(b) inactivity due to illness or accident; and

   (ii) satisfies conditions A and B;
(d) is involuntarily unemployed and has embarked on vocational training; or
(e) has voluntarily ceased working and has embarked on vocational training that is related to the person's previous employment.

(3) A person to whom paragraph (2)(c) applies may only retain worker status for a maximum of six months.

(4) A person who is no longer in self-employment continues to be treated as a self-employed person if that person is temporarily unable to engage in activities as a self-employed person as the result of an illness or accident.

(5) Condition A is that the person—

(a) entered the United Kingdom in order to seek employment; or
(b) is present in the United Kingdom seeking employment, immediately after enjoying a right to reside under sub-paragraphs (b) to (e) of the definition of qualified person in paragraph (1) (disregarding any period during which worker status was retained pursuant to paragraph (2)(b) or (c)).

(6) Condition B is that the person provides evidence of seeking employment and having a genuine chance of being engaged.

(7) A person may not retain the status of—

(a) a worker under paragraph (2)(b); or
(b) a jobseeker;

for longer than the relevant period without providing compelling evidence of continuing to seek employment and having a genuine chance of being engaged.

(8) Condition C applies where the person concerned has, previously, enjoyed a right to reside under this regulation as a result of satisfying conditions A and B—
Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2016 A2.14

(a) in the case of a person to whom paragraph (2)(b) or (c) applied, for at least six months; or
(b) in the case of a jobseeker, for at least 91 days in total, unless the person concerned has, since enjoying the above right to reside, been continuously absent from the United Kingdom for at least 12 months.

(9) Condition C is that the person has had a period of absence from the United Kingdom.

(10) Where condition C applies—
(a) paragraph (7) does not apply; and
(b) condition B has effect as if “compelling” were inserted before “evidence”.

7 “Family member”

(1) In these Regulations, “family member” means, in relation to a person (“A”)—
(a) A’s spouse or civil partner;
(b) A’s direct descendants, or the direct descendants of A’s spouse or civil partner who are either—
   (i) aged under 21; or
   (ii) dependants of A, or of A’s spouse or civil partner;
(c) dependent direct relatives in A’s ascending line, or in that of A’s spouse or civil partner.

(2) Where A is a student residing in the United Kingdom otherwise than under regulation 13 (initial right of residence), a person is not a family member of A under paragraph (1)(b) or (c) unless—
(a) in the case of paragraph (1)(b), the person is the dependent child of A or of A’s spouse or civil partner; or
(b) A also falls within one of the other categories of qualified person mentioned in regulation 6(1).

(3) A person (“B”) who is an extended family member and has been issued with an EEA family permit, a registration certificate or a residence card must be treated as a family member of A, provided—
(a) B continues to satisfy the conditions in regulation 8(2), (3), (4) or (5); and
(b) the EEA family permit, registration certificate or residence card remains in force.

(4) A must be an EEA national unless regulation 9 applies (family members of British citizens).

8 “Extended family member”

(1) In these Regulations “extended family member” means a person who is not a family member of an EEA national under regulation 7(1)(a), (b) or (c) and who satisfies a condition in paragraph (2), (3), (4) or (5).

(2) The condition in this paragraph is that the person is—
(a) a relative of an EEA national; and
(b) residing in a country other than the United Kingdom and is dependent upon the EEA national or is a member of the EEA national’s household; and either—
   (i) is accompanying the EEA national to the United Kingdom or wants to join the EEA national in the United Kingdom; or
   (ii) has joined the EEA national in the United Kingdom and continues to be dependent upon the EEA national, or to be a member of the EEA national’s household.

(3) The condition in this paragraph is that the person is a relative of an EEA national and on serious health grounds, strictly requires the personal care of the EEA national.

(4) The condition in this paragraph is that the person is a relative of an EEA national and would meet the requirements in the immigration rules (other than those relating to entry clearance) for indefinite leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom as a dependent relative of the EEA national.
A2.14 England: Homelessness

(5) The condition in this paragraph is that the person is the partner (other than a civil partner) of, and in a durable relationship with, an EEA national, and is able to prove this to the decision maker.

(6) In these Regulations, “relevant EEA national” means, in relation to an extended family member—

(a) referred to in paragraph (2), (3) or (4), the EEA national to whom the extended family member is related;

(b) referred to in paragraph (5), the EEA national who is the durable partner of the extended family member.

(7) In paragraphs (2) and (3), “relative of an EEA national” includes a relative of the spouse or civil partner of an EEA national where on the basis of being an extended family member a person—

(a) has prior to the 1st February 2017 been issued with—

(i) an EEA family permit;

(ii) a registration certificate; or

(iii) a residence card; and

(b) has since the most recent issue of a document satisfying sub-paragraph (a) been continuously resident in the United Kingdom.

9 Family members of British citizens

(1) If the conditions in paragraph (2) are satisfied, these Regulations apply to a person who is the family member (“F”) of a British citizen (“BC”) as though the BC were an EEA national.

(2) The conditions are that—

(a) BC—

(i) is residing in an EEA State as a worker, self-employed person, self-sufficient person or a student, or so resided immediately before returning to the United Kingdom; or

(ii) has acquired the right of permanent residence in an EEA State;

(b) F and BC resided together in the EEA State; and

(c) F and BC’s residence in the EEA State was genuine.

(3) Factors relevant to whether residence in the EEA State is or was genuine include—

(a) whether the centre of BC’s life transferred to the EEA State;

(b) the length of F and BC’s joint residence in the EEA State;

(c) the nature and quality of the F and BC’s accommodation in the EEA State, and whether it is or was BC’s principal residence;

(d) the degree of F and BC’s integration in the EEA State;

(e) whether F’s first lawful residence in the EU with BC was in the EEA State.

(4) This regulation does not apply—

(a) where the purpose of the residence in the EEA State was as a means for circumventing any immigration laws applying to non-EEA nationals to which F would otherwise be subject (such as any applicable requirement under the 1971 Act to have leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom); or

(b) to a person who is only eligible to be treated as a family member as a result of regulation 7(3) (extended family members treated as family members).

(5) Where these Regulations apply to F, BC is to be treated as holding a valid passport issued by an EEA State for the purposes of the application of these Regulations to F.
In paragraph (2)(a)(ii), BC is only to be treated as having acquired the right of permanent residence in the EEA State if such residence would have led to the acquisition of that right under regulation 15, had it taken place in the United Kingdom.

For the purposes of determining whether, when treating the BC as an EEA national under these Regulations in accordance with paragraph (1), BC would be a qualified person—

(a) any requirement to have comprehensive sickness insurance cover in the United Kingdom still applies, save that it does not require the cover to extend to BC;

(b) in assessing whether BC can continue to be treated as a worker under regulation 6(2)(b) or (c), BC is not required to satisfy condition A;

(c) in assessing whether BC can be treated as a jobseeker as defined in regulation 6(1), BC is not required to satisfy conditions A and, where it would otherwise be relevant, condition C.

“Family member who has retained the right of residence”

In these Regulations, “family member who has retained the right of residence” means, subject to paragraphs (8) and (9), a person who satisfies a condition in paragraph (2), (3), (4) or (5).

The condition in this paragraph is that the person—

(a) was a family member of a qualified person or of an EEA national with a right of permanent residence when the qualified person or the EEA national with the right of permanent residence died;

(b) resided in the United Kingdom in accordance with these Regulations for at least the year immediately before the death of the qualified person or the EEA national with a right of permanent residence; and

(c) satisfies the condition in paragraph (6).

The condition in this paragraph is that the person—

(iii) the spouse or civil partner of the qualified person or EEA national described in sub-paragraph (i) immediately preceding that qualified person or EEA national’s death; or

(iv) the spouse or civil partner of the person described in sub-paragraph (ii); and

(b) was attending an educational course in the United Kingdom immediately before the qualified person or the EEA national with a right of permanent residence died, or ceased to be a qualified person, and continues to attend such a course.

The condition in this paragraph is that the person is the parent with actual custody of a child who satisfies the condition in paragraph (3).

The condition in this paragraph is that the person (“A”—

(a) ceased to be a family member of a qualified person or an EEA national with a right of permanent residence on the termination of the marriage or civil partnership of A;

(b) was residing in the United Kingdom in accordance with these Regulations at the date of the termination;

(c) satisfies the condition in paragraph (6); and

(d) either—
A2.14 England: Homelessness

(iii) the former spouse or civil partner of the qualified person or the EEA national with a right of permanent residence has the right of access to a child of that qualified person or EEA national, where the child is under the age of 18 and where a court has ordered that such access must take place in the United Kingdom; or

(iv) the continued right of residence in the United Kingdom of A is warranted by particularly difficult circumstances, such as where A or another family member has been a victim of domestic violence whilst the marriage or civil partnership was subsisting.

(6) The condition in this paragraph is that the person—

(a) is not an EEA national but would, if the person were an EEA national, be a worker, a self-employed person or a self-sufficient person under regulation 6; or

(b) is the family member of a person who falls within paragraph (a).

(7) In this regulation, “educational course” means a course within the scope of Article 10 of Council Regulation (EU) No 492/2011.

(8) A person ("P") does not satisfy a condition in paragraph (2), (3), (4) or (5) if, at the first time P would otherwise have satisfied the relevant condition, P had a right of permanent residence under regulation 15.

(9) A family member who has retained the right of residence ceases to enjoy that status on acquiring a right of permanent residence under regulation 15.

PART 2

EEA RIGHTS

11 Right of admission to the United Kingdom

(1) An EEA national must be admitted to the United Kingdom on arrival if the EEA national produces a valid national identity card or passport issued by an EEA State.

(2) A person who is not an EEA national must be admitted to the United Kingdom if that person is—

(a) a family member of an EEA national and produces on arrival a valid passport and qualifying EEA State residence card, provided the conditions in regulation 23(4) (family member of EEA national must accompany or join EEA national with right to reside) are met; or

(b) a family member of an EEA national, a family member who has retained the right of residence, a person who meets the criteria in paragraph (5) or a person with a right of permanent residence under regulation 15 and produces on arrival—

(ii) a valid EEA family permit, residence card, derivative residence card or permanent residence card.

(3) An immigration officer must not place a stamp in the passport of a person admitted to the United Kingdom under this regulation who is not an EEA national if the person produces a residence card, a derivative residence card, a permanent residence card or a qualifying EEA State residence card.

(4) Before an immigration officer refuses admission to the United Kingdom to a person under this regulation because the person does not produce on arrival a document mentioned in paragraph (1) or (2), the immigration officer must provide every reasonable opportunity for the document to be obtained by, or brought to, the person or allow the person to prove by other means that the person is—
(a) an EEA national;
(b) a family member of an EEA national with a right to accompany that EEA national or join that EEA national in the United Kingdom;
(c) a person who meets the criteria in paragraph (5); or
(d) a family member who has retained the right of residence or a person with a right of permanent residence under regulation 15.

(a) previously resided in the United Kingdom under regulation 16(3) and would be entitled to reside in the United Kingdom under that regulation were P in the country;
(b) is accompanying an EEA national to, or joining an EEA national in, the United Kingdom and P would be entitled to reside in the United Kingdom under regulation 16(2) were P and the EEA national both in the United Kingdom;

(i) the relevant person is residing, or has resided, in the United Kingdom under regulation 16(3); and

(d) is accompanying a person who meets the criteria in sub-paragraph (b) or (c) ("the relevant person") to the United Kingdom and—
(i) P and the relevant person are both—
(aa) seeking admission to the United Kingdom in reliance on this paragraph for the first time; or
(bb) returning to the United Kingdom having previously resided there pursuant to the same provisions of regulation 16 in reliance on which they now base their claim to admission; and

(e) is accompanying a British citizen to, or joining a British citizen in, the United Kingdom and P would be entitled to reside in the United Kingdom under regulation 16(5) were P and the British citizen both in the United Kingdom.

(6) Paragraph (7) applies where—
(a) a person ("P") seeks admission to the United Kingdom in reliance on paragraph (5)(b), (c) or (e); and
(b) if P were in the United Kingdom, P would have a derived right to reside under regulation 16(8)(b)(ii).

(7) Where this paragraph applies a person ("P") must only be regarded as meeting the criteria in paragraph (5)(b), (c) or (e) where P—
(a) is accompanying the person with whom P would on admission to the United Kingdom jointly share care responsibility for the purpose of regulation 16(8)(b)(ii); or
(b) has previously resided in the United Kingdom pursuant to regulation 16(2), (4) or (5) as a joint primary carer and seeks admission to the United Kingdom in order to reside there again on the same basis.

(b) the family member will be accompanying the EEA national to the United Kingdom or joining the EEA national there.

(2) An entry clearance officer must issue an EEA family permit to a person who applies and provides evidence demonstrating that, at the time at which the person first intends to use the EEA family permit, the person—

(a) would be entitled to be admitted to the United Kingdom because that person would meet the criteria in regulation 11(5); and

(b) will (save in the case of a person who would be entitled to be admitted to the United Kingdom because that person would meet the criteria for admission in regulation 11(5)(a)) be accompanying to, or joining in, the United Kingdom any person from whom the right to be admitted to the United Kingdom under the criteria in regulation 11(5) is derived.

(6) An EEA family permit issued under this regulation must be issued free of charge and as soon as possible.

(7) But an EEA family permit must not be issued under this regulation if the applicant or the EEA national concerned is not entitled to be admitted to the United Kingdom as a result of regulation 23(1), (2) or (3) or falls to be excluded in accordance with regulation 23(5).

(8) An EEA family permit must not be issued under this regulation to a person (“A”) who is the spouse, civil partner or durable partner of a person (“B”) where a spouse, civil partner or durable partner of A or B holds a valid EEA family permit.

13 Initial right of residence

(1) An EEA national is entitled to reside in the United Kingdom for a period not exceeding three months beginning on the date of admission to the United Kingdom provided the EEA national holds a valid national identity card or passport issued by an EEA State.
(2) A person who is not an EEA national but is a family member who has retained the right of residence or the family member of an EEA national residing in the United Kingdom under paragraph (1) is entitled to reside in the United Kingdom provided that person holds a valid passport.

(3) An EEA national or the family member of an EEA national who is an unreasonable burden on the social assistance system of the United Kingdom does not have a right to reside under this regulation.

(4) A person who otherwise satisfies the criteria in this regulation is not entitled to a right to reside under this regulation where the Secretary of State or an immigration officer has made a decision under regulation 23(6)(b) (decision to remove on grounds of public policy, public security or public health), 24(1) (refusal to issue residence documentation etc), 25(1) (cancellation of a right of residence), 26(3) (misuse of right to reside) or 31(1) (revocation of admission), unless that decision is set aside or otherwise no longer has effect.

14 Extended right of residence

(1) A qualified person is entitled to reside in the United Kingdom for as long as that person remains a qualified person.

(2) A person ("P") who is a family member of a qualified person residing in the United Kingdom under paragraph (1) or of an EEA national with a right of permanent residence under regulation 15 is entitled to remain in the United Kingdom for so long as P remains the family member of that person or EEA national.

(3) A family member who has retained the right of residence is entitled to reside in the United Kingdom for so long as that person remains a family member who has retained the right of residence.

(4) A person who otherwise satisfies the criteria in this regulation is not entitled to a right to reside in the United Kingdom under this regulation where the Secretary of State or an immigration officer has made a decision under regulation 23(6)(b), 24(1), 25(1), 26(3) or 31(1), unless that decision is set aside or otherwise no longer has effect.

(3) The right of permanent residence under this regulation is lost through absence from the United Kingdom for a period exceeding two years.

(4) A person who satisfies the criteria in this regulation is not entitled to a right to permanent residence in the United Kingdom where the Secretary of State or an immigration officer has made a decision under regulation 23(6)(b), 24(1), 25(1), 26(3) or 31(1), unless that decision is set aside or otherwise no longer has effect.

16 Derivative right to reside

   (c) the person is in education in the United Kingdom.

(4) The criteria in this paragraph are that—

NOTICES IN CASES OF APPLICANT’S DELIBERATE AND UNREASONABLE REFUSAL TO CO-OPERATE

2 Notice procedure

A local housing authority must ensure that its procedure in connection with notices under section 193B(2) (Notices in cases of applicant’s deliberate and unreasonable refusal to co-operate)—

(a) is in writing,

(b) is kept under review, and

(c) makes provision which complies with regulation 3.

(1) A local housing authority may not give a notice under section 193B(2) unless the decision to give the notice—

(a) is made by an officer of that local housing authority, and

(b) is authorised by an appropriate person.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(b)—

(a) “appropriate person” means a person who—

25 March 2003

Dear Colleague,

ELIGIBILITY FOR HOUSING ALLOCATION AND HOMELESSNESS ASSISTANCE: NEW CATEGORIES OF LEAVE FOR PERSONS SUBJECT TO IMMIGRATION CONTROL

Please ensure that this letter is drawn to the attention of all staff dealing with applications for housing allocation and applications for homelessness assistance as soon as possible.

This letter notifies of a change to the categories of person subject to immigration control who are eligible for local authority housing with effect from 1 April 2003.

Home Office Minister Beverley Hughes announced on Friday 29 November that the policy of granting exceptional leave to enter or remain in the UK policy was to be abolished. It will be replaced by a new policy under which a new category of leave known as humanitarian protection will be granted to people who have international protection needs. Home Office Ministers will also retain a discretion to grant discretionary leave on an exceptional basis to people who do not have international protection needs but where there are other reasons for allowing them to stay in the UK, for example, strong compassionate grounds.

The policy change will take effect from Tuesday 1 April 2003.

Local housing authorities should note:

a) that people with exceptional leave to enter or remain in the UK granted prior to 1 April 2003 (and whose leave is not subject to a condition requiring them to maintain and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds) continue to be eligible for an allocation of housing under Part 6 of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act) and eligible for homelessness assistance under Part 7 of the 1996 Act; and

b) that people granted humanitarian protection or discretionary leave (and whose leave is not subject to a condition requiring them to maintain and accommodate themselves...
Letter from the Homelessness Directorate A2.17

without recourse to public funds) will be eligible for an allocation of housing under Part 6 of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act) and eligible for homelessness assistance under Part 7 of the 1996 Act.

People who fall in category (a), above, are eligible for an allocation of housing by virtue of Class B of Regulation 4 of the Allocation of Housing (England) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002 No. 3264), and are eligible for homelessness assistance by virtue of Class B of Regulation 3 of the Homelessness (England) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000 No. 701).

People who fall in category (b), above, also come within the scope of Class B of Regulation 4 of the Allocation of Housing (England) Regulations 2002 and Class B of Regulation 3 of the Homelessness (England) Regulations 2000. This is because exceptional leave, humanitarian protection and discretionary leave are all forms of limited leave to enter or remain in the UK granted exceptionally outside the provisions of the Immigration Rules to a person who does not qualify for leave under the Immigration Rules.

People with exceptional leave, humanitarian protection or discretionary leave (and whose leave is not subject to a condition requiring them to maintain and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds) will also be eligible for housing benefit.

People granted humanitarian protection or discretionary leave will be issued a standard format letter by the Immigration, and Nationality Directorate (IND) at the Home Office that makes clear that they have been granted leave under one of other of these policies. The letter will be similar in format to the standard letter previously issued to people granted exceptional leave, and it will show the date on which leave to enter or remain will expire.

Authorities should note that humanitarian protection and discretionary leave will be granted for a period of up to 3 years. Towards the end of this period, leave holders will have the opportunity to apply for further leave, although there will be no presumption that such applications will be successful. If their application for an extension is made within the relevant time limits the conditions of their former leave will continue to apply until a decision is made on their application. Where authorities have allocated a secure tenancy to, or are providing temporary accommodation for, a person with humanitarian protection or discretionary leave they will need to monitor the outcome of any application to extend the period of leave. If the application is refused, and the person is not removed from the country by IND, it is possible that the person could remain in the UK unlawfully. A duty to secure accommodation under section 193 of the homelessness legislation would come to an end if the applicant ceased to be eligible for assistance. Eligibility for housing benefit would also end if their application for further leave was refused.

Authorities are urged to ensure that their partner RSLs are made aware of these changes.

Detailed information about the new Home Office policies of Humanitarian Protection and Discretionary Leave are attached at Annex B.

We regret that we have been unable to provide more notice of the effect of this policy change. This is because it has only recently become clear that the new categories of leave (HP and DL) will fall within the existing provisions that relate to ELR.

Yours faithfully,
A2.17  England: Homelessness

ANNEX A

In order to take advantage of the service, local housing authorities first need to register with the Evidence and Enquiries Unit, Immigration and Nationality Directorate, C Block 3rd Floor, Whitgift Centre, Wellesley Road, Croydon, CR9 2AT either by letter or Fax: 020 8604 5783.

ANNEX B

HUMANITARIAN PROTECTION

Definition

Humanitarian Protection will be granted to anyone who would, if removed, face in the country of return a serious risk to life or person arising from:

- The death penalty
- Unlawful killing; or
- Torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Not all Article 3 ECHR cases will fall to be granted Humanitarian Protection: for example a person with a serious medical condition whose removal could amount to a breach of Article 3 because of that condition is not in need of international protection and so would not qualify for Humanitarian Protection. Individuals who cannot be removed for this reason may qualify for Discretionary Leave. Also ‘excluded persons’ would not get Humanitarian Protection (see below)

Terms and Conditions of leave

A person who qualifies for Humanitarian Protection would normally be granted leave for 3 years. However, the possibility is left open for grants of leave for shorter periods, in defined category of cases where such instructions have been issued. For example where the situation in a country is fluid. It will also be possible for instructions to be issued which provide that decisions in a defined category of cases are to be suspended for a period of time.

Anyone granted Humanitarian Protection will have full access to mainstream benefits and employment. As with the current exceptional leave system, they will not have a right to automatic family reunion.
Letter from the Homelessness Directorate A2.17

Review
There will be an avenue to apply for settlement (ILR) after 3 years if the reasons which give rise to the need for protection continue to exist.
There will be an active review at the 3 year stage. Extensions or ILR will not be granted automatically but only where the circumstances continue to justify such extensions or ILR.

Exclusions
Exclusion criteria will be applied to the Humanitarian Protection procedures, which will include, but go wider than those that apply in the 1951 Refugee Convention.
Under these exclusion criteria, we will exclude from the Humanitarian Protection procedures anyone:
• Who has committed a crime against peace, a war crime, or a crime against humanity
• Who has committed a serious crime in the UK or overseas
• Who has been guilty of acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations
• Who is a danger to national security
• Where exclusion is considered appropriate in light of their character, conduct or associations

Revocation of leave
A grant of leave would be reviewed as a result of an individual’s own actions, for example where a crime has been committed, or evidence of deception comes to light or where they have demonstrated that they are no longer in need of protection.
The grant of leave would not normally be reviewed during its currency if country conditions change unless there was a separate instruction.

DISCRETIONARY LEAVE
The Home Secretary will retain the ability to allow some of those who fall outside the Humanitarian Protection Policy to stay on a discretionary basis.
This category of leave will be termed ‘Discretionary Leave’. In asylum casework, Discretionary Leave will only be considered by caseworkers once a decision has been made on whether the applicant qualifies for asylum or Humanitarian Protection.
Discretionary Leave will only be granted in a number of limited circumstances:
• Cases where removal would breach Article 8 of the ECHR in the UK
• Article 3 cases where Humanitarian Protection is not granted (medical cases and certain other severe humanitarian cases)
• Unaccompanied asylum seeking children for whom no adequate reception arrangements are in place
• Other cases - where the individual circumstances are so compelling that this it is considered appropriate to grant some form of leave
• People who are excluded from being granted Humanitarian Protection but where removal is not possible, usually because of Article 3 ECHR reasons.
Anyone who does not qualify under these criteria will not be granted Discretionary Leave.
A2.17 England: Homelessness

The period of leave granted will vary depending on the basis on which Discretionary Leave is granted. An initial grant of leave will be no longer than 3 years, and may sometimes be less for example unaccompanied asylum seeking children will be granted leave for three years or until their 18th birthday.

Where an extension of leave is sought after a period of Discretionary Leave the request will be subject to an active review. A person will not become eligible for settlement until they have completed 6 years on Discretionary Leave. A person who comes within the exclusion criteria would not be considered for ILR until they have spent 10 years on Discretionary Leave.

Anyone who has been refused asylum and Humanitarian Protection but granted Discretionary Leave will have full access to mainstream benefits and employment. There will be no automatic right to family reunion.

To: Chief Housing Officers of Local Authorities in England

Dear Chief Housing Officer

This letter notifies local housing authorities that The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/2588) will come into force on 8 November 2012.

These regulations (the Eligibility Amendment Regulations) are made by the Secretary of State under sections 160ZA(4), 172(4), 185(3) and 215(2) of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act) and were laid in Parliament today.

They amend regulations 4 and 6 of The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006 No. 1294) (the Eligibility Regulations). Regulations 4 and 6 prescribe the classes of persons who are not subject to immigration control but who are to be treated as persons from abroad who are ineligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or for homelessness assistance under Parts 6 and 7 of the 1996 Act respectively.

Specifically, the Eligibility Amendment Regulations amend regulations 4 and 6 of the Eligibility Regulations to provide that the following persons are ineligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or homelessness assistance:

- Persons who have rights of residence in the UK as a result of regulation 15A(1) and (4A) of the Immigration (European Economic Area) (Amendment) (No 2) Regulations 2012 (the EEA Amendment Regulations)
- Persons who have a right derived from Article 20 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, in a case where rights of residence arise because a British citizen would otherwise be deprived of the genuine enjoyment of the substance of their rights as a European Union citizen.

The Eligibility Amendment Regulations also make provision for persons who have equivalent rights of residence in the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland (the Common Travel Area).

The Government is making these amendments to the Eligibility Regulations following the ruling of the Court of Justice of the European Union in the case known as Zambrano (C-34/09 Gerardo Ruiz Zambrano v Office national de l’emploi (ONEm)). In that case, the Court ruled that a third country national (Mr Zambrano), who had been living and working in Belgium without a work permit, had a right of residence and right to work so that his Belgian national children were not forced to leave the EU and thereby prevented from exercising their rights as EU citizens.

Regulation 15A(1) and (4A) of the EEA Amending Regulations give effect to the Zambrano right by providing for a national from a non EEA country, who is resident in the UK and is the primary carer of a British citizen, to be granted a right of residence in the UK where not doing so would mean that the British citizen would have to leave the European Union.

The effect of the Eligibility Amendment Regulations is to maintain the Government’s policy that non EEA nationals who are normally subject to immigration control...
A2.18 England: Homelessness

should only have access to social housing or homelessness assistance if it accords with the Government’s immigration and asylum policy, which broadly means only if they have been granted leave to enter or remain in the UK and this leave is not conditional on the person having no recourse to public funds.

The Department for Work and Pensions and HM Revenue and Customs are making similar amendments to regulations governing income-related benefits and tax credits which also come into force on 8 November.

The Eligibility Amendment Regulations are published by the Stationery Office and are available on the OPSI website at: http://www.legislation.gov.uk/2012/2588

Inquiries about the Eligibility Amendment Regulations should be addressed to Frances Walker, by telephone on 0303 444 3655 or by e-mail to: frances.walker@communities.
gsi.gov.uk

A copy of this letter and the draft regulations is also being sent, by e-mail, to the homelessness strategy contact in each authority.

Yours sincerely,
Dear Chief Housing Officer

This letter notifies local housing authorities that The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/435) will come into force on 31 March 2014.

These regulations (the Eligibility Amendment Regulations) are made by the Secretary of State under sections 160ZA (2) and (4), 172(4), 185 (2) and (3) and 215(2) of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act) and were laid before Parliament today.

They amend regulations 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006 No. 1294) (the Eligibility Regulations).

Regulations 3 and 5 of the Eligibility Regulations prescribe the classes of persons subject to immigration control who are to be treated as persons from abroad who are eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or for homelessness assistance respectively.

The Eligibility Amendment Regulations amend regulations 3 and 5 to provide that the following persons are eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or homelessness assistance: namely, certain Afghan nationals granted leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom under paragraph 276BA1 of the Immigration Rules, provided they are habitually resident in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland (the Common Travel Area).

The Government has decided to offer the opportunity to resettle in the United Kingdom to those locally engaged staff in Afghanistan who have worked in particularly dangerous and challenging roles in Helmand.

It is estimated that about 600 Afghan nationals will be eligible for resettlement under the scheme (together with their spouse or partner and dependent children, where relevant). Arrivals to the United Kingdom will be phased throughout 2014 and 2015.

In order to assist those relocating to adjust to life in the United Kingdom, the Government is liaising with local authorities to provide them with accommodation and support for the first three months, funded by central Government.

The Home Office has made changes to the Immigration Rules to provide for eligible applicants to be granted five years limited leave with recourse to public funds. The effect of the Eligibility Amendment Regulations is to ensure that those Afghan citizens who have the relevant form of leave are also eligible for social housing and homelessness assistance once they are considered to be habitually resident, which is generally after three months. This is in line with existing rules for Housing Benefit.

Regulations 4 and 6 of the Eligibility Regulations prescribe the classes of persons who are not subject to immigration control but who are to be treated as persons from abroad who are ineligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or for homelessness assistance under Parts 6 and 7 of the 1996 Act respectively.

They provide that such persons should only be eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or homelessness assistance if they are habitually resident in the Common Travel Area. However, certain categories of person are exempted from this requirement set out at regulations 4(2) and 6(2).
A2.19 England: Homelessness

The Eligibility Amendment Regulations make minor changes to regulations 4 and 6 in order to remove a number of redundant and outdated provisions which dis-apply the habitual residence test in certain specific cases.

The first change relates to nationals of Bulgaria and Romania required to be authorised to work by the Home Office under the Accession (Immigration and Worker Authorisation) Regulations 2006. The worker authorisation requirements ceased to apply from 1 January 2014 when the transitional controls regulating access to the UK labour market by nationals of Bulgaria and Romania came to an end.

The second relates to persons who left Montserrat after 1st November 1995 because of the volcanic eruption there. Given the length of time that has elapsed since the volcanic eruption, it is considered that this exemption from the habitual residence test is no longer necessary to deliver the Government’s policy.

The third relates to people who left the Lebanon on or after 25 July 2006 to escape the armed conflict there. This exemption was time limited and came to an end in January 2007.

The last relates to people who left Zimbabwe and arrived in Great Britain between February 2009 and March 2011 under a Government scheme open to those over 70 years of age or with health or social care needs. This provision is now redundant.

LETTER FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNITIES AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT TO CHIEF EXECUTIVES AND CHIEF HOUSING OFFICERS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND (OCTOBER 2016)

A2.20

Dear Chief Executive and Chief Housing Officer

This letter notifies local housing authorities that The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2016 (SI 2016/965) will come into force on 30 October 2016.

These regulations (the Amendment Regulations) are made by the Secretary of State under sections 160ZA(2), 172(4), 185(2) and 215(2) of the Housing Act 1996 (the 1996 Act) and were laid before Parliament on 3 October.

They amend regulations 2, 3 and 5 of The Allocation of Housing and Homelessness (Eligibility) (England) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006 No. 1294) (the Eligibility Regulations).

Regulations 3 and 5 of the Eligibility Regulations prescribe the classes of persons subject to immigration control who are to be treated as persons from abroad who are eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or for homelessness assistance respectively.

The Amendment Regulations amend regulations 3 and 5 to provide that the following persons are eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation or homelessness assistance: namely, persons who have leave to enter or remain in the UK on family or private life grounds under Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights, granted under paragraph 276 BE(1) or 276DG of, or under Appendix FM to, the Immigration Rules, where this leave is not subject to a condition of ‘no recourse to public funds’.

Before 9 July 2012 leave on family or private life grounds was one of the forms of Discretionary Leave granted outside the provisions of the Immigration Rules. Persons with this form of leave were eligible for an allocation of housing accommodation and for homelessness assistance by virtue of regulations 3(b) and 5(1)(b) of the Eligibility Regulations respectively. However, under changes made to the Immigration Rules from 9 July 2012, leave on family or private life grounds has largely been granted under the Immigration Rules. These Regulations amend the Eligibility Regulations to restore the previous position, and ensure that persons granted leave under the Immigration Rules on the grounds of family or private life are eligible for social housing and homelessness assistance, provided their leave is granted with recourse to public funds.

The Amendment Regulations also amend regulation 5 to remove redundant provisions relating to certain categories of asylum seekers whose claim for asylum was made before 3 April 2000.

Generally speaking asylum seekers are not eligible for social housing or homelessness assistance in line with the Government’s wider immigration policy. Instead they are accommodated by the Home Office under the arrangements provided for in Part 6 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. For a period after Part 6 of the 1999 Act came into force, transitional provisions allowed for certain categories of asylum seekers already accommodated by local authorities to continue to be supported by their local authority. These transitional provisions ceased to apply from April 2006 and, as a result, the provisions in regulation 5 are no longer required.
